

---

This is a reproduction of a library book that was digitized by Google as part of an ongoing effort to preserve the information in books and make it universally accessible.

Google<sup>TM</sup> books

<https://books.google.com>

---

This is a reproduction of a library book that was digitized by Google as part of an ongoing effort to preserve the information in books and make it universally accessible.

Google<sup>TM</sup> books

<https://books.google.com>

36145-

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

---

J U L Y — D E C E M B E R, 1890.

---

VOLUME XXXVIII.

PUBLISHING OFFICE: 27, CHANCERY LANE, LONDON, W.C.
—
1890.

LONDON:
PRINTED BY ALEXANDER AND SHEPHEARD, LONSDALE BUILDINGS, CHANCERY LANE, W.C.

CONTENTS OF VOLUME XXXVIII.

LITERATURE.

REVIEWS.

	PAGE
Alexandrenko's (V.) Angliiski Tuini	337
Soviet i ego Istoriya	337
Altamira y Crevea's (R.) Historia de la Propiedad Comunal	289
Arbutnot's (F. F.) Arabic Authors	215
Ashton's (J.) Social England under the Regency	359
Austin's (A.) English Lyrics	264
Bacon's Essays , edited by S. H. Reynolds	333
Bagwell's (R.) Ireland under the Tudors	213
Baker's (Sir S. W.) Wild Beasts and their Ways	380
Barrie's (J. M.) My Lady Nicotino	64
Bartolot's (W. G.) Life of Edmund Musgrave Bartolot	412
Bashkirtseff, Marie, the Journal of	5
Bell's (Clara) translation of Jaeger's Life of Ibsen	414
Blind's (Miss) translation of The Journal of Marie Bashkirtseff	5
Böhm-Bawerk's (Prof.) Capital and Interest	335
Bridges, Robert, the Shorter Poems of	496
Brown's (P. H.) George Buchanan, Humanist and Reformer	43
Brown's (J.) Vulgar Verses	607
Campbell's (L.) Aeschylus	558
Caravelli's (V.) Pirro Schettini e l'Antimarismo	313
Carpenter's (J. E.) The First Three Gospels	146
Child's (G. W.) Church and State under the Tudors	191
Civil War in Cheshire, Memorials of the	104
Clark & Hughes's Life and Letters of the Rev. Adam Sedgwick	124
Conway's (M. D.) Life of Nathaniel Hawthorne	285
Corbett's (Col. E.) An Old Coachman's Chatter	499
Cotton's (R. W.) Barnstaple and the Northern Part of Devonshire during the Great Civil War	265
Coupland's (W. C.) The Gain of Life, and other Essays	310
Crawford's (O.) Round the Calendar in Portugal	559
Dante's Treatise "De Vulgari Eloquentia"	144
De la Saussaye's (Prof.) Lehrbuch der Religions-geschichte	102
Delitzsch's (F.) Biblical Commentary on the Prophecies of Isaiah	287
Dennis's (J.) edition of Aubrey De Vere's Poems	523
Dobson's (G.) Russia's Railway Advance into Central Asia	8
Dobson's (A.) Selected Poems of Matthew Prior	214
Döllinger's (Dr.) Studies in European History	467
Driver's (Prof. S. R.) Notes on the Hebrew Text of the Books of Samuel	65
Dufferin's (Lord) Speeches delivered in India	264
Duffield's (S. W.) The Latin Hymn-Writers and their Hymns	46
Duffy's (Sir C.) Thomas Davis	103
Dundonald's (Earl of) Autobiography of a Seaman	263
Dunoyer, Mme., Correspondence of	83
Field's (M.) The Tragic Mary	123
Forrest's (G. W.) Selections from State Papers in the Foreign Department of the Government of India	85
Fraser's (Prof. A. C.) Locke	587
Froude's (J. A.) Lord Beaconsfield	605

REVIEWS—continued.

	PAGE
Gladstone's (Right Hon. W. E.) Landmarks of Homeric Study	411
Goethe's Reineke Fuchs, West-Eastern Divan, and Achilleid , translated	86
Gosse's (E.) On Viol and Flute	287
Grot's (C.) Hungary and the Slaves in the Twelfth Century	126
Guinness's (Mrs. H. G.) The New World of Central Africa	167
Hall's (J.) Memorials of the Civil War in Cheshire	104
Hare's (A. J. C.) North-Eastern France; South-Eastern France; South-Western France	386
Hatch's (E.) The Influence of Greek Ideas and Usages upon the Christian Church	555
Haureau's (B.) Des Poemes Latins attribues a Saint Bernard	217
Henley's (W. E.) Views and Reviews	312
Herford's (R. T.) The Prophecies of the Captivity	287
Hosie's (A.) Three Years in Western China	127
Hoskier's (H. C.) Collation of Cod. Ec. 604, and Essays in New Testament Criticism	105
Howell's (A. G. F.) translation of Dante's De Vulgari Eloquentia	144
Hubert's (Ph. G.) Liberty and a Living Hunt, Leigh, Tales by	596
Hutton's (R. H.) Cardinal Newman	413
Irving & Marshall's Works of William Shakespeare	445
Jaeger's (H.) Life of Henrik Ibsen	414
Jenkins's (R. C.) Ignatian Difficulties and Historic Doubts	170
Junker's (Dr. W.) Travels in Africa	311
Keane's (A. H.) translation of Junker's Travels in Africa	311
Kraushaar's (A.) Sprawa Zygmuntowa	240
Lang's (A.) Life, Letters, and Diaries of Sir Stafford Northcote, First Earl of Iddesleigh	383
Latham's (Rev. H.) Pastor Pastorum	522
Layard's (Miss) translation of The Correspondence of Madame Dunoyer	83
Lecky's (W. E. H.) History of England in the Eighteenth Century	441
Leslie's (R. C.) Old Sea Wings, Ways, and Words in the Days of Oak and Hemp	288
Lightfoot's (Bishop) Sermons and Addresses	470
Loewe's (Dr. L.) Diaries of Sir Moses and Lady Montefiore	215
Mackall's (J. W.) Select Epigrams from the Greek Anthology	409
MacKay's (E. J. G.) Sketch of the History of Fife and Kinross	309
Mackenzie's (J. S.) Introduction to Social Philosophy	497
Mahaffy's (J. P.) The Greek World under Roman Sway	405
Mahan's (Capt. A. T.) The Influence of Sea-Power upon History	63
Malleon's (Col.) Dupleix	239
The Indian Mutiny of 1857	584
Malory's (Sir T.) Le Morte Darthur	237
Marshall's (Prof. A.) Principles of Economics	165
McCarthy's (J. H.) The French Revolution	21, 147
McIntock's (R.) Heine as Novelist and Dramatist	66
Myers's (E.) Lord Althorp	27
Montefiore, Sir M. and Lady, Diaries of	215

REVIEWS—continued.

	PAGE
Moore's (Dr. E.) Dante, and his Early Biographers	583
Morfill's (W. R.) Russia	44
Noel's (Hon. R.) Lord Byron	180
Poor People's Christmas	585
Oliver's (E. E.) Across the Border, or Pathan and Biloch	145
Patmore's (O.) The Unknown Eros	358
Pendleton's (J.) Newspaper Reporting in Olden Time and To-day	193
Primavera . By Four Authors	104
Prudentius, Translations from	84
Reynolds's (S. H.) edition of Bacon's Essays	333
Rodwell's (Rev. W. M.) The Mosaic Sacrifices in Leviticus	240
Rogers's (A.) translation of Goethe's Reineke Fuchs, West Eastern Divan, and Achilleid	86
Russell's (W. H.) Visit to Chili and the Nitrate Fields of Tarapacá	334
Salt's (H. S.) Life of Henry David Thoreau	357 edition of Thoreau's Anti-Slavery and Reform Papers	357
Sare Coburg-Gotha, Memoirs of Ernest II., Duke of	143
Scott, Sir Walter, the Journal of	521
Shelley, Mary Wollstonecraft, Tales and Stories by	586
Skinner's (Maj. T.) Fifty Years in Ceylon	609
Smalley's (G. W.) London Letters and some Others	557
Smart's (Prof. W.) translation of Prof. Böhm-Bawerk's Capital and Interest	335
Sommer's (H. O.) edition of Sir T. Malory's Le Morte Darthur	237
Spalding's (Lieut.-Col.) Suvoroff	499
Stanley's (H. M.) In Darkest Africa	23
Stevenson's (E.) Early Reviews of Great Writers	216
Stockton's (F. R.) Ting-a-Ling Tales	387
Stokes's (W.) Lives of Saints from the Book of Lismore	606
Stubbs's (Dr. J. W.) History of the University of Dublin	5
Symonds's (J. A.) Essays Speculative and Suggestive	166
Tennyson's (F.) The Isles of Greece	385
Thackeray's (F. St. J.) Translations from Prudentius	84
Thielton-Dyer's (T. F.) The Loves and Marriages of some Eminent Persons	242
Thompson's (Prof. R. E.) edition of Duffield's Latin Hymn-Writers and their Hymns	46
Thoreau's (H. D.) Anti-Slavery and Reform Papers	357
Thorneby's (J. L.) Stanley: a Drama	192
Thornton's (P. M.) The Stuart Dynasty	385
Tovey's (D. C.) Gray and his Friends	309
Trotter's (Capt. L. J.) Warren Hastings	471
Wakeman's (H. O.) Life of Charles James Fox	169
Walford's (E.) William Pitt	336
Ward's (H.) Five Years with the Congo Cannibals	442
Warner's (F.) Mental Faculty	45
(G. F.) The Buks of John Mandevill	189
Warre's (Miss) translation of Döllinger's Studies in European History	467
Warren Hastings in the Indian State Papers	85
Watkins's (H. W.) Modern Criticism in its relation to the Fourth Gospel	444
Watson's (W.) edition of Alfred Austin's English Lyrics	264

REVIEWS—continued.

	PAGE
Wilde's (Lady) Ancient Cures, Charms, and Usages of Ireland	206
Wood's (Rev. T.) The Rev. J. G. Wood	67
Woodbury's (C. J.) Talks with Ralph Waldo Emerson	26
Wood-Martin's (W. G.) History of Sligo, County and Town	86
Wright's (Rev. A.) The Composition of the Four Gospels	25
Yacoub Artin Pasha's L'Instruction Publique en Egypte	414

NOVELS.

Albert's (Mary) Behind the Kafes	389
Alexander's (Mrs.) Forging the Fetters	48
Blind Fate	446
Allen's (F. M.) Brayhard	148
An Australian Girl	107
Armstrong's (Florence C.) Sisters of Phœton	526
Atkinson's (Blanche) They Have Their Reward	87
Bain's (F. W.) Dmitri	28
Baring-Gould's (S.) Jacquetta	68
Barrett's (F.) Between Life and Death	587
Bennett-Edwards's (Mrs.) Saint Monica	68
Beresford's (Max) Honnie Dundee	388
Berris's (B.) Lady Brough	588
Berry's (E. P.) Leah of Jerusalem	349
Björnson's (B.) In God's Way	108
Black's (Margaret M.) Between the Ferries	243
Brandon's (Margaret) Hypnotized; or, The Doctor's Confession	339
Brooks's (E. S.) A Son of Isachar	362
Broughton's (Rhoda) Alas!	500
Brown's (R.) Jack's Abbott's Log	116
Buchanan's (R.) The Moment After	349
Burchett's (G.) One of the Wicked	48
Caffin's (M.) A Poppy's Tears	315
Cambridge's (Ada) A Marked Man	314
Cameron's (Mrs. L.) Ja-k's Secret	687
Canning's (Hon. A. S. G.) Heir and No Heir	171
Carey's (Rosa N.) Lover or Friend?	315
Clark's (Kate E.) The Dominant Seventh	339
Clarke's (C.) Love's Loyalty	48
Clifton's (Alice) An Unwilling Wife	48
Cobb's (T.) For Value Received	171
Coleridge and Bramston's Truth with Honour	48
Collins's (Mabel) Ida	48
Compton's (H.) The Dead Man's Gift	171
(C. G.) Scot Free	610
Corbet's (R. St. J.) The Handsome Examiner	68
Corelli's (Marie) Wormwood	500
Crane's (Lillie) Zebel	171
Crawford's (F. M.) A Cigarette Maker's Romance	472
Cresswell's (H.) Sliding Sands	291
Crewe's (Beyton) Nemesis	194
Croker's (B. M.) Two Masters	314
Cromie's (R.) A Plunge into Space	217
Crommelin's (May) Midge	9
Cross's (Margaret B.) Thyme and Rue	68
Curtis's (M. A.) Jenny: a Village Idyl	526
Davidson's (J.) Perteroid	268
Decline and Fall of the British Empire, the...	501
Deland's (Margaret) Sidney	472
De Maupassant's (Guy) The Odd Number	107
Pierre et Jean	362

NOVELS—continued.

Derwent's (L.) A Daughter of the Pyramids .....	525
D'Esterre's (G.) Pickle Phyllis .....	561
Dickens and Collins's The Lazy Tour of Two Idle Apprentices, and other Stories .....	148
Donovan's (Dick) Who Poisoned Hetty Duncan? .....	611
Downe's (H.) Innocent Victims .....	123
D'Oyle's (L. C.) Notches on the Rough Edge of Life .....	339
Doyle's (A. C.) The Sign of Four .....	561
Edwards's (Mrs. A.) Pearl Powder .....	128
Edwards's (M. Betham) Love and Mirages .....	290
Belser's (E. R.) The Way of Transgression .....	47
Eve's (Mrs.) translation of Paul Heyse's Incurable .....	148
Falconer's (L.) Mademoiselle Ice .....	561
Farjeon's (B. L.) The Mystery of M. Félix .....	47
————— A Very Young Cousin .....	417
————— Basil and Annette .....	567
Farmer's (Lucy) The Chronicles of Cardeve Manor .....	129
Farrington's (Mrs.) Fra Lippo Lippi .....	609
Fenn's (G. M.) Princess Pedro's Pledge, and other Stories .....	107
————— Lady Maude's Mania .....	472
Fetherstonhaugh's (Hon. Mrs.) Laying Down the Cards .....	48
Findlay's (Jessie F.) Norman Reid, M. A. .....	417
Fletcher's (J. S.) The Winding Way .....	473
Ford's (Miss) Miss Blake of Monkshallow .....	561
Frederick's (H.) In the Valley .....	528
Fry's (E. N. L.) Shreds and Patches .....	389
Gerard's (Dorothea) Eocha .....	107
Gerrard's (W. E.) Enfin's Legacy .....	528
Gibson's (C.) A Strange Wooing .....	610
Gift's (Theod.) Dishonoured .....	29
Gilchrist's (R. M.) Passion the Playing-thing .....	129
Gissing's (A.) A Village Hampden .....	87
Glaister's (Eliz.) Two and Two: a Tale of Four .....	88
Gordon-Stables's The Mystery of a Millionaire's Grave .....	10
Greenwood's (Jessie E.) Nelly Blythe .....	194
Haggard-Rider & Lang's The World's Desire .....	600
Haigh's (R.) Idolaters .....	501
Harris's (Emily M.) Lady Dobbs .....	9
Harrison, Captain, the Tragedy of .....	68
Hart's (Mabel) Two English Girls .....	148
Harte's (Bret) A Ward of the Golden Gate .....	472
Heart Wins, and other Stories. By several Authors .....	218
Hetherington & Burton's Paul Nugent, Materialist .....	87
Heyse's (P.) Incurable .....	148
Hocking's (J.) Jabez Easterbrook .....	208
Hogan's (J. F.) The Lost Explorer .....	417
Hollis's (Margaret) Audrey .....	194
Howells's (W. D.) The Shadow of a Dream .....	27
Hullah's (Mary E.) As the Tide Turns .....	218
Hume's (F.) The Man with a Secret .....	67
————— The Gentleman who Vanished .....	268
Hungerford's (Mrs.) Her Last Throw .....	9
————— A Born Coquette .....	416
Ireland's (W. W.) Golden Bullets .....	588
James's (H.) The Tragic Muse .....	148
Janvier's (T. A.) The Astec Treasure-House .....	217
Jocelyn's (Mrs. R.) The Criton Hunt Mystery .....	267
Johnston's (A. St.) A South Sea Lover .....	107
Keith's (Leslie) A List Illusion .....	472
Kennard's (Mrs. E.) The Mystery of a Woman's Heart .....	68
Korolenko's (V.) translation of Stepaniak's Blind Musician .....	27
Lee's (Tom) Stephanie .....	194
Lemore's (Clara) A Harvest of Weeds .....	338
Lester & Sergeant's Name and Fame .....	291
Litchfield's (Grace D.) Little Venice .....	611
Lodwick's (R. W.) John Bolt .....	194
Lorne's (Marquis of), Alexander's, and Hardy's Three Notable Stories .....	88
Macmaster's (M.) Our Pleasant Vices .....	447
Maitreijho's (L.) A Phonographic Mystery .....	9
Manners's (M.) Three Beauties .....	417
Marryat's (Florence) Mount Eden .....	315
Meade's (L. T.) A Girl of the People .....	447
————— Just a Love Story .....	528
————— The Honourable Miss .....	5-0
Milford's (F. C.) In Crime's Disguise .....	268
Modern Milkmaid, A. By the Author of "Commonplace Sinners" .....	388
Mulholland's (Rosa) The Haunted Organist of Hurly Burly, and other Stories .....	89
Nisbet's (H.) Ashes .....	128
————— Bail Up .....	610
Norris's (W. E.) The Baffled Conspirators .....	87
Ohnet's (G.) A Weird Gift .....	588
Oliphant's (E. H. C.) The Mesmerist .....	243

NOVELS—continued.

Oliphant's (Mrs.) The Mystery of Mrs. Blencarrow .....	148
————— Sons and Daughters .....	290
————— Kirsteen .....	416
Ouita's Ruffino, &amp;c. .....	501
Overton's (R.) and Others' Wedding .....	473
Panton's (J. E.) Having and Holding .....	218
Paterson's (A.) The Better Man .....	243
Payn's (J.) The Word and the Will .....	387
Pearce's (J. H.) Ether Pentreath .....	610
Peard's (Frances M.) Mademoiselle .....	561
Pender-Cudlip's (Miss) The Love of a Lady .....	171
Penny's (Mrs. F.) Caste and Creed .....	171
Phelps & Ward's The Master of the Magicians .....	9
————— Come Forth! .....	388
Phillips & Willis's The Scudamores .....	47
————— & Fendall's Margaret Byng .....	362
Phillips-Wolley's (C.) Snap .....	128
Philosopher Dick. By "Chamier" .....	610
Pinkerton's (T. A.) The Last Master of Carnarvon .....	148
Præd's (Mrs. C.) Under the Gum Tree .....	303
Raffalovich's (M. A.) A Willing Erile .....	290
Randolph's (Lieut.-Col. G.) Aunt Abigail Dyke .....	416
Reade's (Mrs. C.) Monsieur .....	48
Rita's The Doctor's Secret .....	105
————— Edelweiss .....	315
Roberts's (M.) In Low Relief .....	338
Robinson's (F. W.) The Keeper of the Keys .....	128
Russell's (W. C.) My Shipmate Louise .....	473
————— (Dora) The Secret of the River .....	501
Rutherford's (M.) Miriam's Schooling, and other Papers .....	88
Selby's (Angelica) In the Sunlight .....	68
Shipton's (Helen) The Last of the Fenwickes .....	417
Sienkiewicz's (H.) With Fire and Sword .....	108
————— Silken Threads . By the author of "Mr. and Mrs. Morton" .....	128
Sime's (W.) The Rajah and the Rosebud .....	243
Sims's (G. R.) The Case of George Camdemas .....	195
————— Dramas of Life .....	447
Smart's (H.) A Black Business .....	10
Smith's (Constance) The Riddle of Lawrence Haviland .....	242
Spender's (Mrs.) Lady Hasleton's Confession .....	501
St. Aubyn & Wheeler's A Fellow of Trinity .....	338
Stepniak's The Blind Musician .....	28
Stewart's (J. A.) Kilgroom .....	561
Stockton's (F. R.) Three Burglars .....	472
————— Ardis Claerden .....	29
Stracey's (R.) Hidden in the Light .....	528
Stuart's (Esme) Kestell of Greystone .....	528
Sturges's (J.) translation of Guy de Maupassant's The Odd Number .....	108
Swan's (Annie S.) Maitland of Lauriston .....	528
Taylor's (J. A.) Vice Valentine .....	389
Thanet's (Octave) Expiation .....	88
Thomas's (Bertha) The House on the Scar .....	48
————— Sundorne .....	560
————— (Annie) The Love of a Lady .....	171
————— The Sloane Square Scandal .....	243
Thorburn's (C. H.) The Mysterious Stranger .....	171
Tiddeman's (L. E.) Dr. Rollison's Dilemma .....	268
Torax. By the author of "Thoth" .....	68
————— Tragedy of Captain Harrison, The . By R. C. J. .....	68
Tristram's (W. O.) Locusta .....	447
Trollope's (Mrs. F. E.) Madame Leroux .....	362
Turgeneff's (I.) Senilia .....	472
Tytler's (Sarah) Sapphira .....	268
Underhill's (G. F.) The Hand of Vengeance .....	315
Veva & Collis Karsland's The Witness Box .....	268
Walford's (L. B.) The Harrow of a Smile .....	196
Wallace-Goodbody's (F. G.) Rosalba .....	447
Warden's (Florence) City and Suburb .....	218
Wat-on's (Jessie) Ko Méri .....	243
Wells's (E. H.) Saved by a Looking-Glass .....	48
Westall's (W.) Strange Crimes .....	171
Wicks's (F.) Golden Lives .....	598
Williams's (J. L.) Amoy Drecht .....	148
Willis's (C. J.) The Great Doré .....	339
Winder's (F. H.) Fair Castaways .....	588
Winter's (J. S.) Ferrers Court .....	120
————— He went for a Soldier .....	473
Wood's (H.) Edward Burton .....	20
————— (Mrs. H.) The House of Halliwell .....	361
————— William's (W.) All for Naught .....	291
Wyde's (Katherine) Mr. Bryant's Mistake .....	28
Zeno. By a Lady .....	501

MINOR NOTICES.

Allen's (H. N.) Korean Tales .....	29
Arna-Magnac's Haandskrift samling, Katalog over den .....	89
Atkinson's (E.) The Industrial Progress of the Nation .....	218
Bain's (P. W.) Ocam's Razor .....	219
Bismarck Intime . By a Fellow Student .....	149
Bolte's (Dr. J.) Acolastus of "Gulielmus Gnapheus" .....	502
Bridgett's (Rev. T. E.) Blunders and Foggyries .....	69
Brightwell's (Mrs.) Wild Nature Won by Kindness .....	150
Bugge's (Sophus) Studier over de nordiske Gudog Heltesagne oprindelse .....	89
Chasseresse's (Diane) Sporting Sketches .....	243
Daniell's (C. J.) The Industrial Competition of Asia .....	220
DeGarmo's translation of Dr. Lindner's Manual of Empirical Psychology .....	300
Doutreput's (A.) La Claf d'Amors .....	502
Erdmann's (J. E.) History of Philosophy .....	389
Ferguson's (R. S.) Cumberland .....	69
Fichte's (J. G.) The Science of Knowledge and The Science of Rights .....	389
Fiske's (Prof. W.) supplement to Liddell's Catalogue of the Books printed in Iceland in the British Museum Library .....	89
Fitch's (J. G.) Notes on American Schools and Colleges .....	105
Fleming's (Dr. S.) Expeditions to the Pacific .....	244
Fletcher's (J. S.) Short Life of Cardinal Newman .....	417
Forster's (J.) Four Great Preachers .....	149
Garnett's (Miss) The Women of Turkey and their Folk-lore .....	244
Gordon's (A.) What Cheer (1) .....	150
Görres's (G.) Studien zur Griechischen Mythologie .....	29
Green's (Mrs. E.) Calendar of the Proceedings of the Committee for Compounding .....	70
Greenwood's (T.) Public Libraries .....	149
Hardy's (E. G.) Plutarch's Lives of Galba and Otho .....	339
Hayward's (H.) translation of Bismarck Intime .....	149
Holden's (H. A.) edition of Plutarch's Life of Timoleon .....	339
Kroeger's (A. E.) translation of Fichte's Science of Knowledge and Science of Rights .....	389
Lambakes's Χριστιανική Αρχαιολογία .....	362
Lauchert's (Dr. F.) Geschichte des "Physiologie" .....	29
Laurie's (S. B.) Lectures on Linguistic Method .....	195
Le Brton's (A.) Le Roman au Dis-septieme Siècle .....	501
Lincolnshire, Handbook to .....	149
Lindner's (Dr. G. A.) Manual of Empirical Psychology as an Inductive Science .....	390
Mackonochie, Alexander Heriot. By E. A. T. .....	448
Malleson's (Col.) Akbar .....	70
————— (Rev. F. A.) Holiday Studies of Wordsworth .....	244
Marx's (A.) Griechische Märchen von Dankbaren Tieren und Verwandtes .....	29
Marzials' (F. T.) Leon Gambetta .....	418
Maur's (G. B.) G. A. Bürger et les Origines Anglaises de la Ballade Littéraire en Allemagne .....	502
Meyer's (E. H.) Vilupa .....	89
More's (Sir T.) translation of Giovanni Pico della Mirandola .....	417
Murray's Handbook to Lincolnshire .....	149
Nettleship's (H.) Influence of Literature and Classical Education .....	140
Newman's (F. W.) Political Economy .....	219
Pellissier's (G.) Le Mouvement Littéraire au Dis-neuvième Siècle .....	501
Plutarch's Lives of Galba and Otho , edited by E. G. Hardy .....	339
Plutarch's Life of Timoleon , edited by H. A. Holden .....	339
Politos' (Prof. N. G.) Αεζίδης έγκυκλιος .....	363
Pollard's (A. W.) English Miracle Plays, Moralities, and Interludes .....	417
Psichari's Essais de Grammaire Historique Neo-grecque .....	362
Biggs's (J. M.) edition of Sir Thomas More's translation of Giovanni Pico della Mirandola .....	417
Rossetti's (Mrs.) Mrs. Shelley .....	418
Rossi-Casé's (Dr.) monograph on Maestro Benvenuto da Imola .....	502
Russell's (E. F.) Alexander Heriot Mackonochie .....	448
Sakkellion's Πατριακή Βιβλιοθήκη .....	362
Schiernberg's (G. A. B.) Der Ariadnefaden für des Labyrinth der Edla .....	89
Scott's (Clement) Blossom-Land .....	418

MINOR NOTICES—continued.

Shipp, John, Memoirs of the Extraordinary Military Career of .....	243
Walker's (F. A.) First Lessons in Political Economy .....	219
Watson's (J.) The Confessions of a Poacher .....	418
Windelband's (W.) Geschichte der Philosophie .....	390
Youngusband's (Capt. G. J.) Prays and Forays .....	243

SCHOOL BOOKS.

Allen's (W. F.) The Annals of Tacitus, I-VI .....	196
Blandford's (H. F.) Elementary Geography of India, Burma, and Ceylon .....	292
Christ's (A. Th.) Platon's Gorgias .....	196
Gardiner's (S. E.) Student's History of England .....	291
Marquard-Sauer & Corkran's Spanish Dialogues .....	292
Ryland's (F.) Chronological Outlines of English Literature .....	292
Stock's (St. G.) Cicero pro Roscio .....	196
Vanhook's (Dr.) Practical and Easy Method of Learning the Modern Greek Language .....	292
Warren's (F. M.) Primer of French Literature .....	292

THEOLOGICAL LITERATURE.

Biblical Atlas and Scripture Gazetteer .....	316
Boys's (Rev. T.) A Key to the Psalms .....	316
Brace's (C. L.) The Unknown God .....	10
Chadwick's (G. A.) The Book of Exodus .....	11
Couner's (J.) The Faith of a Realist .....	11
Eyton's (Rev. R.) The True Life and other Sermons .....	315
Farrar's (Archdeacon) The Minor Prophets .....	88
Iverach's (J.) St. Paul: his Life and Times .....	88
James's (Rev. H.) The Country Clergyman and his Work .....	316
Koelling's (H.) Der erste Brief Pauli an Timotheus .....	260
Laidlaw's (J.) The Miracles of Our Lord .....	10
Lefroy's (Dean) The Christian Ministry .....	10
Mackintosh's (B.) Essays towards a New Theology .....	11
Perowne's (Archdeacon) Malachi .....	89
Poole's (Rev. G. A.) The Life and Times of St. Cyprian .....	89
Rawlinson's (G.) Isaac and Jacob: Their Lives and Times .....	88
Richmond's (Rev. W.) Economic Morals .....	315
Row's (G. A.) Christian Theism .....	10
Smyth's (J. P.) The Old Documents and the New Bible .....	316
St. Augustine's The City of God .....	89
Steck's (R.) Der Galatierbrief nach seiner Echtheit .....	269
Steinmeyer's (F. L.) Die Geschichte der Aufdeckung des Lazarus .....	269
Stubbs's (Rev. C. W.) For Christ and City .....	315

MINOR POETRY.

Buchheim's (C. A.) Schiller's Jungfrau von Orleans .....	172
Commedia di Dante Alighieri, La .....	171
Elegies and Memorials . By A. and L. .....	49
Hatton's (J. L. S.) translation of The Odes of Horace .....	172
Kersley's (G. H.) A Little Book: Poems .....	49
Platt's (J. J.) A Dream of Church Windows, &amp;c. .....	40
————— A Book of Gold and other Sonnets .....	40
Story's (J. A.) Carmina Silvas .....	40
Tollemache's (Hon. Mrs. L.) Engelberg, and other Verses .....	48
Tyndall's (M. C.) Rhymes: Real and Romantic .....	49

GIFT BOOKS.

Allen's (Phoebe) Match-Box Phil .....	474
————— (Grant) The Great Taboo .....	561
Armitage's (L.) The Blue Mountains .....	474
Austin's (Stella) The Little Princess Angel .....	589
————— (Caroline) Unlucky .....	612

GIFT-BOOKS—continued.

Ballantyne's (R.M.) Charlie to the Rescue	527
The Garret and the Garden	589
Jeff Benson	589
Beale's (Anne) The Farm on the Down	590
Blacksmith of Boniface Lane, The. By A. L. O. E.	563
Bramston's (M.) Dangerous Jewels	563
Wanted a Sphere	591
Browne & Farniss's Wanted, a King	473
Burrow's (J. H.) Adventures of Alfian	562
Child's (T.) Young People and Old Pictures	589
Children's Treasury for 1890	591
Chiswell's (Archdeacon) The Slave Prince	590
Christie's (Maud) A Boy's Honour	591
Church's (Rev. A. J.) A Young Macedonian	562
Clare's (A.) A Pearl in the Shell	563
Clark's (Kate M.) A Southern Cross Fairy Tale	536
Clarke's (Sarah M. S.) The Duke's Page	563
Coleridge's (C. R.) The Green Girls of Greythorpe	474
Corrie's (Theodora) In Scorn of Consequence	527
Cox's (Rev. W. M.) The Baronets and their Brides	612
Cresswell's (Beatrice F.) Alexis and his Flowers	473
Cutts's (E. L.) Amina	612
Dale's (D.) Noah's Ark	474
Davidson's (Mrs.) A Story of Stops	473
De Amicis's (E.) Holland and its People	612
Debenham's (Mary H.) A Little Candle	473
Didbin's (M. A.) Starting in Life	473
(Emily) The Spoilt Twins	590
Doveston's (F. B.) Maggie in Mythica	611
Doyle's Fairy Book, The	527
Drury's (Anna H.) In the Enemy's Country	527
Dunboyne's (Lady) The Young Squire	590
Eubule-Evans's (A.) A Message from the Sea	591
Everett-Green's (E.) The Secret of the Old House	563
Fenn's (G. M.) Syd Bolton	562
Missa George	563
The Flattered Dovecote	588
Culland and Cudgel	611
Freeman's (R. M.) Steady and Strong	590
Frith's (H.) The Triumphs of Modern Engineering	528
The Log of the Bombastes	589
Gladden's (W.) Santa Claus on a Lark	590
Goddard's (Julia) The Golden Weathercock	590
Goldsmith's (O.) The Vicar of Wakefield	611
Gordon's (W. J.) How London Lives	528
Green's (Prof. A. H.) The Birth and Growth of Worlds	474
(E. E.) The Stronger Will	589
Loyal Hearts	590
(E. M.) When we were Children	590
Hamer's (Sarah S.) An Old Chronicle of Leighton	563
Harrison's (F. B.) True Stories from Italian History	612
Henty's (G. A.) By Right of Conquest	473
A Chapter of Adventures	474
Maori and Settler	587
By England's Aid	611
Hoare's (E. N.) Leonard's Leader	563
Hocking's (J. K.) Rir Kaynor, Artist	527
Hutchinson's (J. R.) Hal Hungerford	474
Igdrazil	528
Inglew's (J.) Very Young, and Quite Another Story	611
Jackson's (Bishop) Sermons on The Christian Character	473
Jacobs & Batten's English Fairy Tales	474
Jenner's (A.) Half-hour Plays	590
Jones's (O. A.) Little Sir Nicholas	562
Ker's (D.) The Rajah's Legacy	612
Kerr's (Eliza) Bollicha Reed	527
Lang & Speed's The Red Fairy Book	473
Laurier's (A.) New York to Brest in Seven Hours	589
Lee's (M. & C.) The Family Coach	583
Leslie's (Emma) The Seed he Sowed	474
Liston's (A.) Very much in Earnest	612
Lowndes (Cecilia S.) A Ravin Promise	527
Lyster's (Annette) Dorothy the Dictator	590
Mabel's Holiday . By K. M. and A. H.	612
Macauley's (Dr.) From Middy to Admiral of the Fleet	527
Macdonald's (G.) The Light Princess	589
Marshall's (Mrs.) Winchester Meads	588
Eastward Ho!	611
Martin's (Mrs. H.) Claude and Claudius	612
McClatchie's (T. R. H.) Japanese Play, &amp;c.	474
Meade's (L. T.) Heart of Gold	590
Miles's (A. H.) Fifty-two more Stories for Boys	589
Miles's (A. H.) Fifty-two more Stories for Girls	592
Milman's (Helen) The Little Ladies	590
Molesworth's (Mrs.) The Children of the Castle	561

GIFT-BOOKS—continued.

Moore's (F. F.) Coral and Cocoa-Nut	527
My Grandfather and His Parishioners	612
By P. M. W.	612
Norway's (G.) Hussein the Hostage	562
Parr's (Mrs.) Dumps and I	611
Peard's (Frances M.) The Locked Desk	563
Peckover's Mill . By the author of "Starwood Hall"	474
Peckover's (A.) Life of Joseph Sturge	528
Pictures and Stories from English History	591
Poor and Plain . By the author of "Dethroned"	612
Power's (P. B.) The Heart of Tommy Titt	474
Pyle's (H.) The Buccaneers and Marooners of America	611
Rand's (E. A.) Up North in a Whaler	527
Reade's (F. E.) Seven Idols	528
(C. E.) Lucy Winter	612
Reid's (Capt. Mayne) Stories of Strange Adventures	563
Russell's (W. C.) Master Rockefeller's Voyage	563
Shipton's (Helen) Duty's Bondman	590
Love and Justice	612
Spens's (K.) True of Heart	527
Stables's (G.) Rocked in the Cradle of the Deep	527
By Sea and Land	589
Twist School and College	611
St. Nicholas	563
Stuart's (Esmé) The Vicar's Trio	474
In the Days of Luther	563
Taylor's (Lucy) "Frits" of Prussia	589
Timbs's Book of Wonders, Events, and Discoveries	474
Verne's (J.) The Purchase of the North Pole	589
A Family without a Name	589
Ward's (E.) Fresh from the Fens	589
Wells's (H. F.) City Boys in the Woods	590
Wilson's (E. C.) La Rochelle	589
Wright's (E. J. D.) Sunbeams on my Path	527
Yongre's (Miss) The Slaves of Sabirus	562
Yoxall's (J. H.) Nut-brown Roger and I	474

ORIGINAL VERSE.

A Child's Fancy	151
Anemones	109
A Stony Way	221
"By the Waters of Babylon"	613
Elf; that is "White"	476
Faun's Punishment, The	293
Florence, Notes at	71
From Paul Verlaine	31
Greek Garlands, On some Remains of, in the British Museum	341
Ingemann, After the Danish of	91
In the Cloisters	173
Joy Cometh in the Morning	502
Leaving Home	51
L'Indifferent—Watteau	130
Marradi, Giovanni, From the Italian of Michel Angelo's Sonnet, "Se un casto amor"	529
Neckerei und Reue	12
Notes at Florence	71
November Note, A	449
Oberon's Last Council	419
Silence in Valhalla	317
Spring, The Secret of the	364
St. Martin's Summer	391
Summer	245
Sundown	197
Verlaine, Paul, from	31
Winter	603

ORIGINAL ARTICLES.

Ballads, Old English, A Catalogue of	318
"Conference du Livre," International, at Antwerp	131
Craik, Mrs., Memorial to	72
Lincoln Registers, Notes from the	199, 247
Mulock, Dinah Maria (Mrs. Craik), Memorial to	72
Newman, Cardinal, Some Letters from	173
Old English Ballads, Catalogue of	318
Pali Address to an English Governor	31
Pepys, Samuel, Letters (in part unpublished) of	109, 152, 173, 200
Shakespeare's Sonnets in Italy	72
Stanley, Mr., at Cambridge	392
Tennyson, An Italian Translation from	111
Tolstoi, Lyof, Two Letters of	273
Turgenev and Tolstoi, Quarrel between	392
Tyndale's New Testament, An Unknown Edition of	51
University Jottings	12, 50, 197, 271, 317, 341, 364, 391, 419, 439, 476, 503, 529, 564, 592

CORRESPONDENCE.

Alphabet, Superstitious Use of the	594
"A Midsummer Night's Dream"	613
Arabian Poetry for English Readers	274
Aristides, The Apology of	366
"As Just as a Squire"	394
Avignon, Printing at, in 1444	83
Bacon and Wotton	367
Bacon's Essays	451, 478
Ballaquency Inscription, The	201
"Bathybius," in the Newbury House Magazine	225, 275
Bellesheim's History of the Catholic Church in Ireland	153
"Bishop-Designate"	565
Blasphemy Case in Poland	296, 319
"Blunt," The etymology of	344
Bogus Old English Word, A	52
"Bondman, The," An Icelandic upon	32, 52, 74
Byron, Lord, The Life of	320
Carlsruhe Bede, The	176
"Cathedral"	504, 531, 565
Chaldean Epic, The Hero of the	421
Chaucer's "Priores's Nun-Chaplain"	152
Chaucer Simile, The source of a	507, 531
"Cockney"	12, 52, 73, 92, 367, 452
"Cross" and "Crozier"	477
Dante's De Vulgari Eloquentia	202
"David," Etymology of	13
De Quincey's alleged Untruthfulness	32
Earle's (J.) English Prose	504, 531, 565
Elementary Schools, Inspection of	240
Elsevir Virgil (1636) Undescribed (?)	296
Impression of the	73, 91
"Encrement"—"La Goule d'Aoust" (Old French)	73, 91
Exmoor and Ballaquesny Inscriptions, The	201
Fitzgerald's "Omar Khayyam"	52, 73
Folk-Lore, Poetry and Science in	320, 344
Fragment of a Lost Greek Poet	311
Franks Casket, The	119
Freiburg in Baden, Restoration of the Minister of	14
"Goule d'Aoust, La"	73, 91, 176
Greek Texts of the Third Century, B.C., Discovery of	201
Poet, Lost, Fragment of a	319
Harl. MS. 2252, Proposed Emendations in	450, 479
"Hetman" and "Hauptmann"	73, 92, 111, 134
Homer and Odysseus	614
Hoskier's (Mr.) MS. of the Gospels	344
"Hyperion," The Etymology of	394
"Il Semplice Lombardo" in Purg. xvi.	394
Inspection of Elementary Schools	240
"Invelgie," The Etymology of	112
Irish Annals, Old-Norse Names in the	249
Jerusalem, Richard, A Memorial to	72
Jerusalem in the Tablets of Tel el-Amarna	306
Junius's Transcripts of Old English Texts	274, 319, 343, 366
"Kalendar of Shepherdes," Original French Editions of the	153, 176, 593
"Louke," The Substantive, in Chaucer	32, 112
Madhava and Sayana	134
Micmac Indians, The Language of the	421
Milton and Vondel	613
Monarchical Spirit in France, The	531, 594
"Morte Darthur," The, and English Scholars	273, 296
New Testament, The MSS. of the	153, 176, 225, 249
Noel's (R.) Life of Byron	296
Norfolk Manor Court Rolls (The Barwick MS.)	451, 507, 614
Notary's (Juryan) edition of "The Kalendar of Shepherdes"	593
Odysseus and Helen	667
Ogam Stones in the Isle of Man	154, 201, 343, 421
Old English Word, A Bogus	52
Old-Norse Names in the Irish Annals	218
"Otaman," "Ataman," "Hetman," and "Hauptmann"	92, 111, 134
Paris and Tristram in the "Inferno"	224
"Pearl, The," An Obscure Passage in	201, 223, 240
Philo, The Lost Works of	32
Poetry and Science in Folk-Lore	320, 344
Poland, A Blasphemy Case in the	296, 319
"Pound of Flesh" in the "Merchant of Venice"	224, 367
Printing at Avignon in 1444	83
Rennes, Notes from	706
Rhampinitus, King, The Treasury of	603
"Romant of the Rose, The"	51
Runic "Futhork," The Order of the Letters in the	477, 505, 530, 566
Sagas, The	92
Spelling, The, in American Reprints of English Books	225
"St. Edmundsbury, The Memorials of"	154, 478
Taylor the Platonist	154
Tel el-Amarna, The Tablets of	306
"Toboggan," The word	421
Warsaw, The Imperial University of	319
Wynkyn de Worde's Morte Darthur	91, 112
"Yes Tor," The derivation of	367

OBITUARY.

Ackermann, Madame	109
Bell, George	590
Burton, Sir Richard, K.C.M.G.	365, 391
Church, Dean	565
Davis, Sir John Francis, Bart.	475
Ellis, Alexander John, Litt.D., F.R.S.	419
Harrison, General Plantagenet	71
Mudie, Charles Edward	391
Newman, Cardinal	130
O'Hagan, Mr. Justice	476
Rogers, James Edwin Thorold	341
Scott, William Bell, L.L.D., H.R.S.A.	529
Sellar, William Young	341
Smith, Charles Roach	130
Tudor, John Robert	503
Von Bauernfeld, Edward	129

NOTES.

Abelard's treatise De Unitate et Trinitate Divina	475
American Library Association	90
Anglo-Saxon Inscription discovered at Brussels	150
Babylonian Creation story, New version of the	474
Columbus's log-book	474
Corporation records of the City of London	151
Cosens (F. W.) Sale of the Library of	419
De Quincey's Collected Writings	91, 317
Drummond, William, Memorial to	601
Fitzgerald, Edward, Reprint from the Collected Works of	30
Franks Casket, Discovery of the lost fragments of the	90
Hampshire Newspapers, Past and present	30
Indian Civil Service, Native candidates for the	90
Mutiny, The services of civil officers during the	130
Jacobs's (J.) reprint of Painter's Palace of Pleasures	40
"Japanese Library" of Messrs. Cassell	90
Kaluza's (Dr.) parallel text of the Romant of the Rose	11
Lancashire Folk-speech	107
Lesser's (Henri) theological writings	130
Libraries with more than 50,000 volumes	151
Masonic reprints of the Lodge Quatuor Coronati	70
Mendelssohn's letters to Julius Schuberger	501
Möller's (Prof.) Lehrbuch der Kirchengeschichte	474
Newman, Cardinal, proposed memorial to Orientalists, Ninth international congress of	391
Painter's (W.) Palace of Pleasure , Reprint of	49
Palestine, Mr. G. Armstrong's new Map of	90
Price's (Rev. E. D.) Hasell's Annual	529
Printing, 450th Anniversary of, at Cologne	30
Quaritch's (B.) Dictionary of English Book-collectors	363
"Quatuor Coronatorum Antigrapha"	70
Registers of Bishops Chedworth, Kotherham, Russell, Smyth, and Longland	150
Romant of the Rose , Dr. Kaluza's parallel text of the	11
Rosenkranz and Guldenstern, Autograph of	12
Stanhoë, Court rolls of the Manor of	390
St. Paul's School	30
Tel el-Amarna, Tablets from	340
"University Extension Manuals"	30
University Hall lectures	129
Urusalima, or Jerusalem, Tablets sent from, to the Egyptian kings	340
Victor's (Prof.) parallel text of "Hamlet"	613
Wagner's (A.) edition of "Macbeth"	503
Wordsworth, National memorial of	418

CONTENTS OF THE MAGAZINES.

Altpreussische Monatsschrift	109
American Journal of Psychology	592
Antiquary	31, 131, 197, 318, 476, 565, 592
Art Journal	340
Asiatic Quarterly Review	71, 245, 270, 503, 564, 592, 613
Atalanta	271
Babylonian and Oriental Record	131
Berkshire Notes and Queries	31
Boletín of the Real Academia de la Historia	31, 420
Bookworm	173, 363, 592
Cassell's Family Magazine	475
Century	71, 340, 475, 592

CONTENTS OF MAGAZINES—con.

	PAGE
Child-Life .....	564
Contemporary Review .....	151, 245, 361
Critical Review of Theological and Philosophical Literature .....	450
English Historical Review .....	340
English Illustrated Magazine .....	71, 270, 361, 475
Euskal-erria .....	293
Expositor .....	12, 91, 107, 293, 392, 530
Folk-Lore .....	271

CONTENTS OF MAGAZINES—con.

	PAGE
Fortnightly Review .....	151
Gentlemen's Magazine Library .....	131
Good Words .....	364
Gray's (J.) Electrical Influence .....	271, 364
Illustrated Naval and Military Magazine .....	245
Indian Antiquary .....	131
International Journal of Ethics .....	476
Jewish Quarterly Review .....	91, 392
Leisure Hour .....	71, 151, 271
Le Livre Moderne .....	109, 245, 420

CONTENTS OF MAGAZINES—con.

	PAGE
Lippincott's .....	151, 564
Literarisches Centralblatt .....	51
Macmillan's Magazine .....	364
Merry England .....	364
Mind .....	270, 365
Monist .....	410
Monthly Packet .....	564
Newbury House Magazine .....	151, 503
New Review .....	173
Nineteenth Century .....	340

CONTENTS OF MAGAZINES—con.

	PAGE
Quiver .....	364
Reliquary .....	564
Scribner's Magazine .....	71, 151, 475
Scottish Review .....	364
St. Nicholas .....	475
Sun .....	271
Theologisch Tijdschrift .....	91, 245
Time .....	31
Torch .....	51
United Service Magazine .....	71, 151, 340

SCIENCE.

REVIEWS.

	PAGE
Adamson & Jevons's edition of W. Stanley Jevons's Pure Logic, and other Minor Works .....	92
Brugmann's (K.) Grundriss der vergleichenden Grammatik der indo-germanischen Sprachen .....	479
Dana's (J. D.) Characteristics of Volcanoes .....	368
Darmesteter's (J.) Chants populaires des Afghans .....	202
Dixon's (C.) Annals of Bird Life .....	275
Ellis's (Havelock) The Criminal .....	250
Glaser's (E.) Skizze der Geschichte Arabiens .....	615
Glaser's (E.) Skizze der Geschichte und Geographie Arabiens .....	615
Hale's (H.) An International Idiom .....	225
Jevons's (W. S.) Pure Logic, and other Minor Works .....	92
Lilly's (W. S.) On Right and Wrong .....	33
Lobley's (J. L.) Mount Vesuvius .....	364
Luniak's (J.) Quaestiones Sapphicæ .....	53
Münsterberg's (Dr. H.) Beiträge zur Experimentellen Psychologie .....	134
Petschenig's (M.) Maximiani Elegiae .....	532
Preston's (T. A.) The Flowering Plants of Wilts .....	297
Prou's (M.) Manuel de Paléographie, et Dictionnaire des Abréviations .....	112
Salmon's (H. A.) Arabic English Dictionary on a New System .....	74
Schmidt's (J.) Die Pluralbildungen der Indogermanischen Neutra .....	320
Schrader's (Prof. E.) Keilinschriftliche Bibliothek .....	297
Schrader's (Prof. E.) Zur Geographie des assyrischen Reichs .....	297
Studemund's (W.) The Apographon of the Amorosan Palimpsest of Plautus .....	178
Taylor's (I.) The Origin of the Aryans .....	14
Trimen & Bowker's South-African Butterflies .....	344
Wright's (W.) Lectures on the Comparative Grammar of the Semitic Languages .....	421

MINOR NOTICES.

	PAGE
American Journal of Mathematics .....	321
Ballard's (Julia F.) Among the Moths and Butterflies .....	594
Beard's (W. S.) Junior School Algebra .....	321
Becker's (G. F.) Geology of the Quick-silver Deposits of the Pacific Slope .....	154
Blyth's (A. W.) Manual of Public Health .....	594
Brooksmith's (E. J.) Sandhurst Mathematical Papers .....	321
Bunge's (Dr. G.) Text-Book of Physiological and Pathological Chemistry .....	113
Burgess's Modern Fish Culture .....	594
Bywater's (L.) Aristotelis Ethica Nicomachea .....	508
Carnot's (N. L. S.) Reflections on the Motive Power of Heat .....	452
Cooke's (M. C.) Introduction to Fresh-water Algae .....	93
Dawson's (Sir J. W.) Handbook of Geology for the Use of Canadian Students .....	155
Deighton's (H.) Elements of Euclid .....	568
Fisher's (Mrs.) Through Magic Glasses .....	594
Forsyth's (Dr. A. R.) Theory of Differential Equations .....	321

MINOR NOTICES—continued.

	PAGE
Garnsey's (H. E. F.) translation of Julius von Sachs's Geschichte der Botanik .....	93
Goodale's (G. L.) Physiological Botany .....	93
Gray's (J.) Electrical Influence Machines .....	75
Griffiths's (J.) Notes on the Theory of Elliptic Transformation .....	321
Handbuch der Physik .....	453
Hayward's (R. B.) Elements of Solid Geometry .....	568
Hicks's (W. M.) Elementary Dynamics of Particles and Solids .....	75
Ladenburg's (Dr. A.) Handwörterbuch der Chemie .....	113
Langley & Phillips's The Harpur Euclid .....	568
Lock's (Rev. J. B.) Arithmetic for Elementary Schools .....	321
Macwell, James Clerk, The Scientific Papers of .....	394
Miall's (Prof.) Object Lessons from Nature .....	594
Milne & Davis's Geometrical Conics .....	568
Mineral Resources of Ontario, Report of Royal Commission on the .....	155
Niven's (W. D.) The Scientific Papers of James Clerk Maxwell .....	394
Peiser's (F. E.) Jurisprudential Baby-lonians quæ supersunt .....	395
Pendlebury & Beard's Elementary Arithmetic .....	321
Pinches' (T. G.) Babylonian and Assyrian Cylinder-Seals and Signets in the possession of Sir H. Peek .....	395
Powell's (J. W.) Seventh Annual Report of the United States Geological Survey .....	155
Preston's (T.) The Theory of Light .....	452
Schenck's Handbuch der Botanik .....	93
Stocker's (W. N.) Syllabus of Elementary Dynamics .....	75
Tallqvist's (K. L.) Die Sprache der Contracte Nabu-Naids .....	396
Taylor's (H. M.) Euclid's Elements of Geometry .....	568
Thomson's (Sir W.) Elasticity, Heat, Electro-Magnetism .....	394
Thorpe's (T. E.) Dictionary of Applied Chemistry .....	113
Thurston's (H. R.) edition of Carnot's Reflexions sur la puissance motrice du Feu .....	452
Ure's (G.) Our Fancy Pigeons, and Rambling Notes of a Naturalist .....	594
Von Sachs's (J.) History of Botany .....	93
Ward's (G. H.) Examination Papers in Trigonometry .....	321
Woodbridge's (R. C.) translation of Dr. Bunge's Text Book of Physiological and Pathological Chemistry .....	113

ORIGINAL ARTICLES.

	PAGE
American Oriental Society .....	479
Old Saxon Texts .....	54
Oriental Congress, The Ninth .....	453

CORRESPONDENCE.

	PAGE
Aryans, The .....	204, 226
Asoka Inscriptions, Pāli "Asuropa" and "Asu-lopa" of the .....	208, 322
Asoka Inscriptions, Some Words in the .....	480
Babylonian Zodiac and Cycles and their Chinese Derivatives .....	321
Babylonian and Assyrian Names in Pāli Literature .....	344
Creation Story, New Babylonian version of the .....	508
Eurasian Mediterranean, The, and Aryan Origins .....	569
Hebrew Inscriptions of the Pre-Exilic Epoch .....	94
Ἰσῳότης—Vis'pati .....	208
Kadesh, the Goddess, and the Semitism of the Hittites .....	203
Pāli Lexicography, Contributions to .....	34, 177, 275, 422
Pāli Literature, Babylonian or Assyrian Names in .....	344
Pāli and Prakrit, Notes on .....	389
"Satellite" .....	113
School Books and the University Presses .....	595
Schrumpff's First Aryan Reader .....	178
Semitism of the Hittites, The .....	203
Toramāna Shāha, The Inscription of .....	453
Yenisei Inscriptions, The .....	251
Zodiacal Crab, The .....	532
Zur and Ben-Hadad, The Gods .....	155

OBITUARY.

	PAGE
Croll, James, LL.D., F.R.S. .....	594
Fraser, A. Y. .....	480

SCIENCE NOTES.

	PAGE
Asbanti Negro, Facial muscles of the .....	114
Banda-san, The Eruption of .....	75
Berlin Medical Congress .....	114
Bertana's (E.) L'Arcadia della Scienza; Castone della Torre di Rezzonico .....	136
Blanford's (W. T.) Fauna of British India .....	227, 616
British Association, Money voted by, for scientific purposes .....	252
Darwin medal of the Royal Society .....	595
Geologists' Association "long excursion" .....	35
Gould's "Birds," Sale of a set of .....	54
Huxley (Prof.) on the Aryan Question .....	509
Light, The cheapest form of .....	423
Morgan's (Prof. L.) Animal Life and Intelligence .....	277
Popovski (Dr.) on facial muscles .....	114
Sapphire Mines of Kashmir .....	15
Science Scholarships, Establishment of .....	156
Sidgwick's (Prof. H.) Methods of Ethics .....	35
United States Geological Survey .....	509

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

	PAGE
Baber, Emperor, Inscription relating to .....	178
Balari y Jovany's (Dr. J.) Poesia Fosil—Estudios etimológicos .....	114
Christ's (W.) Geschichte der Griechischen Literatur bis auf die Zeit Justinians .....	114

PHILOLOGY NOTES—continued.

	PAGE
Cust's (Dr. R. N.) Bible Translations .....	424
Darmesteter (Prof. J.) on Oriental learning in France .....	454
English Dialect Society's publications .....	204
Etruscan and Latin alphabets, Connection between the .....	369
Hatzfeld's (Prof. A.) French Dictionary .....	75
Herzfeld's (G.) Die Rätsel des Exeterbuches und ihr Verfasser .....	208
Hind's (A.) "Timaeus" .....	345
Hultzsch (Dr.) on the inscriptions of Southern India .....	396
Manchu literature .....	76
Müller's (Prof. F. Max) lectures on the Science of Language .....	156
Orientalists, International Congress of .....	322, 345, 396
Rhys's (Prof.) lectures on the early ethnology of the British Isles .....	75
Sanskrit MSS. in India .....	227
Schrumpff's (Dr. G. A.) First Aryan Reader .....	136
Steinthal's (Prof.) Geschichte des Sprachwissens bei den Griechen und Römern .....	370
Temple, Ancient Buddhist, on the Ganges .....	178
Torp's (Dr. A.) Den Graeske Nominal-flexion .....	136
Wright's (Prof. W.) Comparative Grammar of Hebrew, Syriac, and Arabic .....	94

MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES.

	PAGE
Archaeological Institute .....	454
Aristotelian Society .....	454, 510, 599
British School at Athens .....	54
Cambridge Antiquarian Society .....	424, 533
Philosophical Society .....	509, 569
Philological Society .....	595
Clifton Shakspeare Society .....	424, 533
Edinburgh Mathematical Society .....	510
Elizabethan Society .....	481, 616
Hellenic Society .....	396
Historical Society .....	510
New Shakspeare Society .....	454, 510
Philological Society .....	481, 614
Ruskin Society .....	510
Shelley Society .....	396, 482

CONTENTS OF THE JOURNALS.

	PAGE
Archiv für Geschichte der Philosophie .....	345
Babylonian and Oriental Record .....	424
Berliner Philologische Wochenschrift .....	345
Classical Review .....	345, 481
Epigraphia Indica .....	396
Journal of the China Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society .....	75
— of the Anthropological Institute .....	94
— of Philology .....	454
— of the Asiatic Society of Bengal .....	322
— of the Straits Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society .....	369
Mineralogical Magazine .....	481
Revue Critique .....	94, 227
Scottish Review .....	75
Transactions of the Philological Society .....	322
Trübner's Oriental Record .....	454
Zeitschrift für Assyriologie .....	227

FINE ART.

REVIEWS.

	PAGE
Bowes' (J. L.) Japanese Pottery ...	138
Conway's (W. M.) Literary Remains of Albrecht Dürer ...	227
De Cara's (Rev. C. A.) Gli Hyksos ...	253
De Nolhac's (Pierre) La Reine Marie Antoinette ...	76
Grébaud's forthcoming Work on the National Egyptian Museum ...	277
Macklin's (Rev. H. W.) Monumental Brasen ...	482
Maspero's (G.) Lectures Historiques ...	510
Millar's (A. H.) Historical Castles and Mansions of Scotland—Perthshire and Forfarshire ...	35
Petit's (Rev. J. L.) Architectural Studies in France ...	569
Petrie's (W. M. F.) Historical Scarabs ...	54
— Kahun, Gurob, and Hawara ...	397
Schmarsow's (A.) S. Martin von Lucca ...	178
Turner, J. M. W., Selection from the Liber Studiorum of ...	156

MINOR NOTICES.

Argnani's (Prof. F.) Le Ceramiche e Maioliche Faentine ...	114
Jacob's (Col.) Portfolio of architectural details from Indian buildings in Rajputana ...	54, 511
Kinch's (K. F.) L'Arc de Triomphe de Salonique ...	534
Petersen's (H.) Hypotesen om Eelgjøse Offer og Støttestund fra Danmarks forhistoriske Tid ...	596
Rajputana, Portfolios of architectural details from Indian buildings in ...	54, 511
Reinach's (S.) Lecture upon "The Arch of Titus and the Spoils of the Temple of Jerusalem" ...	534
Reventlow's (C. D.) Yzformar fra Stenalder i Ringe-syden ...	596

MINOR NOTICES—continued.

	PAGE
Tamm's (F.) Etymologisk Svensk Ordbog ...	596
Uzielli's (G.) Leonardo da Vinci e le Alpi ...	94
Zinck's (L.) Nordisk Archaeologi ...	596

ORIGINAL ARTICLES.

American Journal of Archaeology, the ...	298
Arts and Crafts Exhibition ...	425
Burmese Coinage and Currency 322, 346, ...	426
Dansart Rembrandt, The ...	95
David Cox Exhibition at Birmingham ...	370
Excavations by Mr. Petrie in Palestine ...	78
Exhibitions, Minor ...	15
Farnley Turner drawings, Sale of the ...	15
Hunt's (Mr. Holman) new picture ...	204
Luther Relic, A ...	617
Maioica, Italian works on ...	114
Paints at the Grosvenor Gallery ...	370
Petrie's (Mr. Flinders) Excavations in Palestine ...	78
Salonica, Fire at ...	482
South Kensington Museum, Recent additions to the ...	426
Wild Animals in Vigo Street ...	455
Winter Exhibitions ...	455

CORRESPONDENCE.

Art, Irish and Eastern ...	253
— Early Irish ...	323
Beni Hassan Cartouches, The ...	157
Burmese Leadens Coins ...	371
Chaldean Epic, The Hero of the ...	570
Dahr-el-Bahari Mummies, The ...	157, 178
Egyptian Jottings ...	77
Exmoor, An Ancient Inscribed Stone on ...	179
Faenza and Cafaggiolo ...	206
Irish and Eastern Art ...	253
— Art, Early ...	323

CORRESPONDENCE—continued.

	PAGE
Longhouse Cromlech, The ...	226, 253
Mesopotamia, Sculptured Slabs from, found in Egypt ...	77, 117
Pembrokeshire, Vandalism in ...	229
Perrot & Chipiez's Art of Judaea ...	16
Piauvonius, Emperor, Inscriptions of ...	206
Sculptured Slabs from Mesopotamia found in Egypt ...	77, 117
Vandalism in Pembrokeshire ...	229, 253
Victorinus, Emperor, British Inscriptions of the ...	95

OBITUARY.

Butin, Ulysse ...	137
Dubois-Pillet, Louis-Auguste-Albert ...	205
Fisher, Richard ...	596
Fraser, Patrick Allan ...	278
Rose, James Anderson ...	324
Smith, Robert Henry Soden ...	16

NOTES.

Apt, Ulrich, An Altar-Piece by ...	158
Archaeological Institute of America ...	371
Arts and Crafts Exhibition Society ...	180
Brighton Prints, Mr. C. Pocock's Collection of ...	483
Cook's (E. T.) Popular Handbook to the National Gallery ...	36
Dresden, Exhibition of Water-colour Paintings at ...	299
"Ecce Homo" from the Perkins Collection ...	77
Egyptian Monuments, Protection of 137, 398
Embroideries, Antique, Exhibition of ...	483
Goodwin's (Mr. A.) Drawings, Exhibition of ...	617
Grosvenor Gallery Art Exhibitions, Loss entailed by ...	399
Hanover Exhibition, Proposed ...	229
Howell, (Mr. C.), The Collections of ...	483

NOTES—continued.

	PAGE
Inscriptions, Series of, Discovered at Rome ...	596
James's (Mr. F.), Drawings, Exhibition of ...	617
Leland Club, The ...	229
Macbeth-Baeburn, Mr., Etching by ...	399
Molenaar, Jan, Article on ...	137
Monuments in Ireland, Ancient ...	56
Munich art exhibition awards ...	98
National Portrait Gallery, Report of Trustees of ...	158
Olympia, The excavations at ...	427
Paton's (Sir N.) "Beati Mundo Corde" ...	534
Polynesian architecture ...	253
Prix de Rome, Recipients of the ...	117
Pyramids, Blocks of stone taken from the ...	346
Ravasson's memoir on the Venus of Milo ...	206
Sabatier Collection, Sale of the ...	56
Sancho el Fuerte, Statue of ...	77
Sculptures, Mutilation of, in the Valley of the Nile ...	3
Silchester, Excavation of the site of 206, 299
South London Fine Art Gallery ...	180
Statues hidden by the Ancients ...	399
Strang, Mr. W., the etched work of ...	399
Troad, Excavations in the ...	206
Turner Room at the National Gallery ...	371
University Extension Society ...	138

CONTENTS OF THE JOURNALS.

Archäologisch-Epigraphische Mittheilungen aus Oesterreich-Ungarn ...	95
Archaeologia Aeliana ...	299
Archaeologia Journal ...	425
Art Journal ...	16, 138, 425, 617
Asiatic Quarterly Review ...	253
Contemporary Review ...	229
Journal of Indian Art ...	180
L'Art ...	95
Magazine of Art ...	138, 278, 324, 596
Portfolio ...	138, 617
Repertorium für Kunstwissenschaft ...	95

THE STAGE AND MUSIC.

THE STAGE.

REVIEW.

	PAGE
Archer's (W.) William Charles Macready ...	96

ORIGINAL ARTICLES.

"All for Her," at Manchester ...	229
"Antigone," The, at Bradford ...	17
Barrett, Wilson, and the New Olympic ...	597
"Beau Austin," at the Haymarket ...	427
"Called Back," at the Haymarket ...	535
Conservatoire, The, and the Français ...	324
"Great Unknown," The, at the Lyceum ...	118
"Illusions," at the Strand ...	36
"Ion," The, at Cambridge ...	535
Kendal, Mrs., in "All for Her" ...	229
"People's Idol," The, at the Olympic ...	597
"Ravenswood," at the Lyceum ...	346
"Struggle for Life," The, at the Avenue ...	299
"Sunshine and Shadow," at the Comedy ...	483

OBITUARY.

	PAGE
Boucicault, Dion ...	278
Samary, Mme. Jeanne ...	278

NOTES.

Adams's (Mr. D.) paper, "Recollections and Reflections," ...	346
"As You Like It," at the Lyceum ...	78
Bernhardt, Mme. Sarah, as Cleopatra ...	399
"Cabinet Minister," The, at the Court ...	56
"Cigale," The, at the Lyric ...	617
"Fazio," of Dean Milman ...	18
French plays at the St. James's ...	399
Ibsen, The gospel of, Mr. G. B. Shaw on ...	371
"Monsieur Moulon," at the Shaftesbury ...	399
"Sixth Commandment," at the Shaftesbury ...	347
"Taming of the Shrew," at the Lyceum ...	37

MUSIC.

REVIEWS.

	PAGE
Bach's (A. B.) The Art Ballad ...	230
Coward's (J. M.) Britain's Defence ...	118
Crowest's (F. J.) Musical Groundwork ...	97
Mackenzie's (A. C.) Spring Songs ...	118
Metzler's Red Album ...	118
Prosser's (A.) Compendium der Musikgeschichte ...	158
Prout's (E.) Counterpoint: Strict and Free ...	138
Rudall's (H. A.) Beethoven ...	158
Taylor's (S.) System of Sight-Singing ...	618
— (J.) How to Teach Sight-Singing ...	618
Wagner's Letters to his Dresden Friends ...	399
Walker's (Bettina) My Musical Experiences ...	300
Wodehouse's (Mrs. E. R.) Index to Grove's Dictionary of Music and Musicians ...	158

ORIGINAL ARTICLES.

	PAGE
Berlioz' "Les Troyens," at Carlsruhe ...	571
Gluck's "Orfeo" at Covent Garden ...	456
Musical Publications ...	190, 206, 253, 278
Norwich Festival, The ...	346, 371

NOTES.

CONCERTS:
Philharmonic ...	18
Richter ...	18, 37, 57
Welsh Choir ...	18
Ludwig & Whitehouse ...	37
Crystal Palace ...	348, 372, 400, 428, 456, 484, 512, 536, 572, 598
Monday Popular ...	372, 428, 466, 512, 536
Sarasate's ...	372, 428
Albeniz ...	456, 512
Albert Hall Choral Society ...	456
Halle's ...	484, 536, 598
London Symphony ...	512, 572
Gade, Niels, death of ...	618
Hamborough, Master Max ...	56, 78
"Hamlet," Ambroise Thomas's, at Covent Garden ...	78
Royal College of Music ...	37
Schubert, supposed lost symphony of ...	138
"Tannhäuser" at Covent Garden ...	484

[SUPPLEMENT TO THE ACADEMY
Jan. 24, 1901.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 948.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, JULY 5, 1890.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

SWAN SONNENSCHN & Co.'s LIST.

THE MOST INTERESTING BOOK AT THE LIBRARIES.
Prof. Herkomer's & Prof. Huxley's Autobiographies.

These are contained, the former at great length, in "FROM HANDEL TO HALL," a new volume of Musical Biographies, by L. EXORD. Demy 8vo., 12s. Edition de Luxe, with 18 Engravings and Engraved Portraits by Professor HILKOMER and others, uniquely bound, 42s.

DE QUINCEY'S WORKS. Owners of the 16-Vol. Edition can now complete their Sets by purchasing Mr. Hogg's "Uncollected Writings of De Quincey," 2 vols., 12s., uniform with the 16-Vol. Edition, and consisting entirely of Essays not included therein, each being duly authenticated in Mr. Hogg's Introduction. "A Supplement to the Standard English Edition."—Literary World. "Mr. Hogg has placed all lovers of De Quincey under an obligation."—Academy.

THE RUSSIAN PEASANTRY: their Agrarian Condition, Social Life, and Religion. By STEPNIAK. 3rd Edition, thick 8vo., 10s. 6d. "The whole treatise is one of extreme interest, as upon the issues of the next few years depend the future happiness, prosperity, and even existence of the Russian peasantry, of whose condition Stepniak gives so sympathetic and stirring an account."—Morning Post.

CIVILISATION OF THE RENAISSANCE IN ITALY. By JACOB BURCKHARDT. Edited by S. G. C. MIDDLEMORE. New Edition, in 1 vol., 18s. "It already has a European reputation. The translation is admirable, and has, moreover, Dr. Geiger's notes to both text and notes."—Bookeller.

THROUGH THE WORDSWORTH COUNTRY. By Prof. W. KNIGHT. With 86 Original Illustrations of Lake Scenery by HARRY GOODWIN. 8s. India paper (50 copies only), 7s. 6d. "The illustrations are charming, and admirably characteristic of the scenery."—Times. "This handsome and seductive volume. Nothing could be better than Professor Knight's commentary."—Saturday Review.

COURT LIFE UNDER THE PLANTAGENETS. By HUBERT HALL, F.S.A., of H.M. Public Record Office. "Really a delightful book. It contains the results of a close study of the administrative, judicial, and social institutions of England at a most critical period, lucidly and admirably illustrated."—Journal of Education. "A surprisingly successful reproduction of life in the reign of Henry of Anjou."—Scotsman.

OFFICIAL TOUR THROUGH BOSNIA AND HERZEGOVINA. By J. DE ASBOTH. With very large number of Plates and Cuts. Imperial 8vo., 21s. "A most valuable work.... Profusely illustrated."—Athenaeum.

SOCIAL SCIENCE SERIES.

Scarlet cloth, each 2s. 6d.

1. Work and Wages ... Prof. J. E. THOROLD ROGERS. 1s.
2. Civilisation: its Cause and Cure ... E. CARPENTER. 1s.
3. Quintessence of Socialism ... Dr. SCHAFFLE. 1s.
4. Darwinism and Politics ... D. G. RITCHIE, M.A. 1s.
5. Religion of Socialism ... E. BELFORT BAX. 1s.
6. Ethics of Socialism ... E. BELFORT BAX. 1s.
7. Drink Question ... Dr. KATE MITCHELL. 1s.
8. Promotion of General Happiness ... Prof. MACMILLAN. 1s.
9. England's Ideal, &c. ... EDW. CARPENTER. 1s.
10. Socialism in England ... SIDNEY WEBB, LL.B. 1s.
11. Bismarck and State Socialism ... W. H. DAWSON. 1s.
12. Godwin's Political Justice ... ED. H. S. SALT. 1s.
13. The French Revolution ... E. BELFORT BAX. 1s.
14. The Co-operative Commonwealth ... L. GRONLAND. 1s.
15. Essays and Addresses ... BERNARD BOSANQUET. 1s.
16. Charity Organisation ... C. S. LOCH, Sec. Char. Org. Soc. 1s.

YOUNG COLLECTOR SERIES.

Each volume very fully illustrated. Strong cloth extra, 1s. each.

1. Butterflies, Moths, Beetles ... W. F. KIRBY. 1s.
2. Crustaceans and Spiders ... F. A. SKUSE. 1s.
3. Fungi, Lichens, &c. ... PETER GRAY. 1s.
4. Mosses ... JAMES E. BAGNALL. 1s.
5. Pond Life: Insects ... E. A. BUTLER, F.Z.S. 1s.
6. Seaweeds, Shells, and Fossils ... P. GRAY. 1s.
7. Ants, Bees, Dragon Flies ... W. H. BATH. 1s.
8. Coins ... LL. JEWITT, F.S.A., and B. V. HEAD. 1s.
9. Reptiles ... CATHERINE HOPLEY. 1s.
10. British Birds ... 1s.
11. Silkworms ... E. A. BUTLER, F.Z.S. 1s.
12. Land and Freshwater Shells ... Dr. WILLIAMS. 1s.
13. Fossils ... Dr. J. W. WILLIAMS. 1s.
14. Colonial Coins ... D. F. HOWARTH. 1s.
15. Pond Life: Algae, Diatoms, &c. ... T. S. SMITHSON. 1s.
22. Chess Problems ... JAS. RAYNER. 128 Diagrams. 1s.

SCHOPENHAUER'S WORKS.

Edited by T. BAILEY SAUNDERS, M.A. (Oxon). Each 2s. 6d.
A Counterpart to Sir John Lubbock's "Pleasures of Life."

1. THE WISDOM OF LIFE. With an Introductory Essay. "Schopenhauer was more than a merely abstract thinker; he was a practical moralist. Mr. Saunders's introductory essay adds much to the value and interest of this singularly suggestive volume."—Manchester Examiner.
2. COUNSELS AND MAXIMS.
3. RELIGION: A Dialogue; and other Essays. (From the "Parerga and Paralipomena.") Second Edition. "A vigorous translation of Schopenhauer's minor, but at the same time most popular, writings. Excellent and suggestive."—Scotsman.

SWAN SONNENSCHN & CO., PATERNOSTER SQUARE, E.C.

WARD & DOWNEY'S NEW LIST.

TWO NEW BOOKS ILLUSTRATED BY HARRY FURNISS.

BRAYHARD: the Strange Adventures of One Ass and Seven Champions.

By F. M. ALLEN,

Author of "Through Green Glasses," "The Voyage of the Ark," &c.

Crown 8vo., cloth gilt, gilt top, 6s.

[In a few days.]

PERFERVID: the Career of Ninian Jamieson.

By JOHN DAVIDSON.

Crown 8vo., cloth gilt, gilt top, 6s.

[This day.]

"One admirable piece of fooling from beginning to end—all the more admirable because its folly, like the folly of Shakespeare's Touchstone or Feste, comes every now and then very close to wisdom..... Anyone who reads the first chapter will read on to the end without skipping a line."—Manchester Examiner.

"In this particular description of fantastic comedy, Mr. Davidson's book stands almost alone. So far as we can recollect the only book of a kindred spirit bears the well-known name of 'The Shaving of Shagpat.'"—Glasgow Herald.

Crown 8vo., with a Portrait, 6s.

MAYNE REID: a Memoir of his Life. By his Widow.

"Will be read with interest..... His life was an adventurous one—in its earlier stages, at least—and its various incidents are told with spirit and effect."—Scotsman.

Crown 8vo., 6s.

PAPER and PARCHMENT: Historical Sketches By A. C. Ewald.

"His essays are scholarly."—Times.

Crown 8vo., 5s.

STRANGE CRIMES. By William Westall.

"A fine store of entertainment..... The book has a strong interest."—Scotsman.

Crown 8vo., 3s. 6d.

THE GOLDEN SOUTH: Memories of Home Life in Australia. By "Lyth."

"A pleasant volume of personal recollections, very interesting at this time when we are all interested in Australia."—Literary World.

Royal 8vo., with 32 Whole-page Illustrations, 21s.

AN ARTIST'S TOUR IN NORTH and CENTRAL AMERICA and the SANDWICH ISLANDS. By B. KROUPA.

"A graphic and interesting record of a prolonged tour..... A decidedly entertaining volume."—Daily Telegraph.

Demy 8vo., with 29 Illustrations, 10s. 6d.

UP and DOWN: Sketches of Travel. By Gilbert Macquoid.

"The record of travel is brightly written, and rendered admirably attractive by Mr. T. R. Macquoid's drawings."—Saturday Review.

NEW NOVELS.

FOR VALUE RECEIVED. By Thomas Cobb. 3 vols.

[Just ready.]

ONE of the WICKED. By Godfrey Burchett. 2 vols.

THE BLIND MUSICIAN. Adapted from the Russian of Korolenko by

S. STEPNIAK and W. WESTALL. 2s. 6d.

"A delightful study..... It is hard to imagine anything more charming than its freshness and delicate skill."—Scotsman.

LUCINDA. By Major White. 3 vols.

"Full of animal spirits."—Academy.

THE NUGENTS of CARICONNA. By Tighe Hopkins. 3 vols.

"Quite delightful..... Humour, truth, kindness of feeling, and good taste are the principal ingredients..... The people of the story are human, natural, and individual to an uncommon degree."—Athenaeum.

A BRUMMAGEM BARON. By John Bridges, Author of "Idylls of a Lost Village." 2 vols.

"A vigorous story."—Spectator.

"Full of common sense, shrewd insight, and quiet natural humour."—Guardian.

THE NEW FAITH and WHAT CAME of IT. By Charles T. C. James, Author of "The Blindness of Memory Earle," "An Early Frost," &c. 3 vols.

"The literary quality of the story is exceptionally good. Mr. James writes with ease and brilliancy, and when to these merits of style is added that of thoughtfulness on the matters of the book, it is obvious the result must be satisfactory."—Academy.

AN UNFORTUNATE ARRANGEMENT. By John Hill. 2 vols.

"Replete with epigram and sparkling dialogue."—Vanity Fair.

"A very clever book indeed."—Academy.

WARD & DOWNEY, 12, YORK STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

	PAGE
THE JOURNAL OF MARIE BASHKIRTSEFF, by ARTHUR SYMONS . . . . .	5
STUBBS'S HISTORY OF THE UNIVERSITY OF DUBLIN, by the Rev. PERCY MYLES . . . . .	5
DORSON'S RUSSIAN RAILWAYS IN CENTRAL ASIA, by STEPHEN WHEELER . . . . .	8
NEW NOVELS, by WILLIAM WALLACE . . . . .	8
RECENT THEOLOGY . . . . .	10
NOTES AND NEWS . . . . .	11
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS . . . . .	12
ORIGINAL VERSE: "NECKEREI UND REUE," by F. T. LAWRENCE . . . . .	12
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS . . . . .	12
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS . . . . .	13
CORRESPONDENCE:— The Etymology of "David," by Prof. Skeat; "Cockney," by Dr. F. Chance; Restoration of the Minister of Freiburg in Baden, by H. Krebs . . . . .	13
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK . . . . .	14
STUDERMUND'S APOGRAPHON OF THE AMBROSIAN PALIMPSEST OF PLAUTUS, by PROF. SONNENSCHEIN . . . . .	14
SCIENCE NOTES . . . . .	15
THE SALE OF THE FARNLEY TURNERS . . . . .	15
SOME MINOR EXHIBITIONS . . . . .	15
OBITUARY: ROBERT HENRY SODEN SMITH, by A. . . . .	16
CORRESPONDENCE:— "The Art of Judaea" by W. M. Flinders Petrie . . . . .	16
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY . . . . .	16
THE "ANTIGONE" AT BRADFELD, by Dr. J. E. SANDYS and Miss AMELIA B. EDWARDS . . . . .	17
STAGE NOTES . . . . .	18
RECENT CONCERTS . . . . .	18
MUSIC NOTES . . . . .	18

THE LECTURE AGENCY LIMITED (late of Birmingham), 3, GEORGE YARD, LOMBARD STREET, LONDON, E.C., act as AGENTS for the most distinguished Lecturers and Entertainers in Great Britain.

H. R. H. the PRINCE of WALES is the subject of the ESSAY for which prizes of TWENTY GUINEAS are offered by the LECTURE AGENCY, LIMITED, of 3, George Yard, Lombard Street, London, E.C. Conditions forwarded upon receipt of a stamp for postage.

THE GIRTON GOVERNESS and SCHOOL AGENCY.—MADAME AUBREY introduces English and Foreign Governesses, Governess Pupils, Visiting Teachers, Companions, and recommends Schools and Educational Homes; Schools transferred, Partnerships arranged.—27, Regent Street, S.W.

CATALOGUES.

BAEDEKER'S & BADDELEY'S GUIDE-BOOKS.
New Detailed CATALOGUE, now ready, sent post free on application.
DULAU & Co., 37, Soho Square, London.

LUZAC &amp; CO.,

Foreign and Oriental Booksellers and Publishers,
46, GREAT RUSSELL STREET, W.C.
(Opposite the British Museum).

NOW READY.

LUZAC &amp; CO.'S MONTHLY LIST.

No. IV., JUNE, 1890.

CONTENTS:—1. New Oriental Books, published in England. 2. New Oriental Books, published on the Continent. 3. New Books, published in the East. 4. Recent Continental Importations. (a) Miscellaneous, (b) Archaeology, (c) Belles-Lettres, (d) Chemistry and Physics, (e) Educational, (f) History, Geography, (g) Medicine, (h) Novels, (i) Philosophy and Theology. 5. A choice collection of New and Second Hand Books.

To be had, post free, on application.
Messrs. LUZAC & Co. will have constantly on hand a large choice collection of works in all branches of Literature in Europe and the Orient.

TO AUTHORS.

MESSRS. DIGBY & LONG,
PUBLISHERS.

18, BOUVERIE STREET, FLEET STREET, LONDON, E.C.
Are prepared to receive and give careful consideration to all MSS. and arrange terms for their PUBLICATION. Messrs. DIGBY & LONG have also every convenience and ample facilities for the Publication of Magazines. Editorial offices if required. Newest Catalogue post free.

NOW READY (free)—worthy of careful preservation: send for splendidly illustrated four-page quarto prospectus of "LONDON CITY," a choice Art book of unusually important size which will have at least 250 beautiful and original illustrations teeming with London's life and bustle. To subscribers, 21s.; to non-subscribers, 42s.; Subscription List will shortly close.—THE LEADENHALL PRESS, 50, Leadenhall Street, E.C.

HOLIDAYS in NORMANDY.—M. BARBIER, French Master, Glasgow Athenaeum, Examiner to the Intermediate Education Board for Ireland, RECEIVES at his Country Residence in Normandy, for JULY and AUGUST, a few GENTLEMEN desirous of improving their FRENCH by a stay in France. Beautiful country. Every comfort. Tennis. Backward Candidates Coached for Examinations. Highest references.—Particulars, M. BARBIER, Ecosville, par Louviers, Eure, France.

TYPE-WRITING.

TYPE-WRITING.—MSS., Scientific, and of all descriptions, Legal Documents, Specifications, Plays, &c., copied with speed and accuracy. Dictations taken in shorthand or equipping delicacy and care. Highest testimonials. Pupils taught. Misses E. B. & I. FARRAN, 4, Southampton Street, Strand, London.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY,

SUBSCRIPTIONS from ONE GUINEA per Annum.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

Books can be exchanged at the residences of Subscribers in London, by the Library Messengers.

SUBSCRIPTIONS from TWO GUINEAS per Annum.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from TWO GUINEAS per Annum.

A Large Number of Copies of the Best and most Popular Books of the Season are now in Circulation at MUDIE'S LIBRARY.

All Works of General Interest are freely added immediately on publication.

Library Catalogue for 1890, 1s. 6d. Prospectuses and Clearance List of Books on Sale, postage free.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY (Limited), 30 to 34, New Oxford Street.

BRANCH OFFICES: 241, BROMPTON ROAD, and 2, KING STREET, CHEAPSIDE.

SCHOOLS, COLLEGES, &amp;c.

QUEEN'S SERVICE ACADEMY, 3 and 4, ELY PLACE, DUBLIN.—The oldest, and among the most successful in the United Kingdom: over 2,000 have passed.

- I. All Army Examinations.
- II. Civil Service of India, Universities, &c.
- III. R. I. Constabulary Cadetships.

There is not a Corps in the Services or a Department under Government that does not owe some of its Officers to the QUEEN'S SERVICE ACADEMY, DUBLIN. No attempt at cramming; unsurpassed staff of Specialists under personal direction of W. J. CRETWODE CRAWLEY, LL.D., D.C.L., F.R.G.S., F.G.S., F.R.Hist.Soc., &c.

TO PARENTS AND GUARDIANS.

MR. W. S. LOGEMAN, Principal of Newton School, Rock Ferry, is FORMING a small PARTY of BOYS to spend the SUMMER HOLIDAYS at some healthy seaside place for recreation and study. Instruction in Modern Languages, Classics, or Mathematics as required. References given and required. Inclusive terms, £3 3s. a week, or £10 10s. for four weeks.—Particulars on application.

SIR JOHN SOANE'S MUSEUM,
13, LINCOLN'S INN FIELDS.

ANTIQUITIES, PICTURES, AND SCULPTURE.

OPEN FREE, from 11 to 5, on TUESDAYS, WEDNESDAYS, THURSDAYS, and SATURDAYS in JULY and AUGUST.
Cards for Private Days and for Students to be obtained of the Curator, at the Museum.

ROYAL SOCIETY OF PAINTERS in WATER COLOURS.

The One Hundred and Thirtieth EXHIBITION is now open, 5, Pall Mall East, from 10 till 6. Admission 1s. Catalogue 1s.
ALFRED D. FRIPP, R.W.S., Secretary.

MESSRS. DRUMMOND & CO., 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C. are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HAUFSTAENGL, of Munich, the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHURE. There is a steadily increasing demand for reproductions by this justly celebrated process for large plates and editions de luxe. For ordinary Book Illustrations, Catalogues, Advertisements, &c., Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. have the latest and most improved processes. Specimens on view. Prices on application.

NEW REALISTIC NOVEL BY EUGENE STRACEY.

Picture boards, 2s.; cloth extra, 3s. 6d. at all Booksellers and Libraries.

HIDDEN in the LIGHT.
By EUGENE STRACEY.

DIGBY & LONG, Publishers, 18, Bouverie Street, Fleet Street, E.C.

THE NEW REVIEW.

JULY.—Price Sixpence.

A RADICAL PROGRAMME.—Part I. By the Right Hon. Sir C. W. DILKE, Bart.

THINKING FOR OURSELVES. By the Lord Chief Justice of England.

NEWFOUNDLAND and the FRENCH.—I. By Sir JAMES WINSTON, P. J. SCOTT, A. B. MORINE (Delegates from Newfoundland).

II. By EMILE FLOURENS (Member of the French Chamber).

THE SALON and the ROYAL ACADEMY. By the Duke of MARLBOROUGH.

STUDIES in CHARACTER.—No. 4. The Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, M.P.

THE FIRST GENERAL ELECTION in JAPAN. By H. M. MOORE.

THE ETHICS OF FIRE INSURANCE. By Captain SHAW, C.B.

THE WORLD'S DESIRE. Book II. Chaps. I, II. By H. RIDER HAGGARD and ANDREW LANG.

London: LONGMANS, GREEN, & Co.

PHENIX FIRE OFFICE,
19, LOMBARD STREET, E.C., and 57, CHARING CROSS, S.W.

Established 1782.

Moderate Rates. Absolute Security.

Liberal Loss Settlements.

Prompt Payment of Claims.

Joint Secretaries—W. C. MACDONALD and F. B. MACDONALD.

LOSSES PAID OVER £17,000,000.

Ready immediately, at all the Libraries, handsomely bound in cloth gilt, crown 8vo, price 6s.

BISMARCK INTIME.

BY A FELLOW STUDENT.

This attractive and well-illustrated volume bristles with most interesting and characteristic anecdotes of the private life of the great Ex-Chancellor.

Just ready, at all the Libraries, crown 8vo, handsomely bound, cloth 10s. 6d.

INTIMATE RECOLLECTIONS OF THE COURT OF THE TUILERIES.

THE EVE OF AN EMPIRE'S FALL.

Before the Franco-German War. By Madame CARETTE, Authoress of "My Mistress, the Empress Eugénie."

Third Edition, crown 8vo, handsomely bound, 6s. Authorised Translation.

MY MISTRESS, THE EMPRESS

EUGENIE; or, Court Life at the Tuilleries. By her Private Reader, Madame CARETTE (née BOUVET).

"We recommend every one who admires good work to buy and read it."—Morning Post.

Cloth gilt, crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.; post free, 2s. 8d.

STANLEY; AND HIS HEROIC

BELIEF OF EMIN PACHA. By E. P. SCOTT.

With Map, 14 Portraits, and other Illustrations.

"Mr. E. P. Scott, himself an African traveller, gives a clear, readable, and interesting narrative of the rescue Expedition, to which he has prefixed an account of Stanley's early career."—Vanity Fair.

London: DEAN & SON, 160a, Fleet Street, E.C.

WILL BE PUBLISHED NEXT WEEK.

SECOND EDITION.

Crown 8vo. Cloth. 150 pp. 2s. 6d.

FOUR YEARS in PARLIAMENT WITH HARD LABOUR.

By C. W. RADCLIFFE COOKE, M.P.

WHAT MR. GLADSTONE SAYS:—

"My only complaint is that, once opened, it difficult to close the volume. I recognise in it an enviable union of fancy, humour, and good sense." The Right Hon. W. E. GLADSTONE.

WHAT "TRUTH" SAYS:—

"The handsome praise awarded by Mr. Gladstone to Mr. Radcliffe Cooke's book on the House of Commons is thoroughly well deserved, and I should advise anyone desirous to gain an insight into the every-day life of an M.P. to read it. The banter is kindly, and the wit is considerable."—Truth.

"A very charming book. It is something more than readable—it is positively fascinating."—South London Press.

AND

1 vol., demy 8vo, 28s.

HAYDN'S BOOK OF DIGNITIES.

REVISED AND ENLARGED.

By HORACE OCKERBY.

W. H. ALLEN & CO., 13, WATERLOO PLACE, S.W.; AND AT CALCUTTA.

A NEW MANUAL of BOOK-KEEPING for Wholesale and Retail Traders. By PHILIP CRELLIN. Chartered Accountant. Price 3s. 6d.

G. BELL & SONS, York Street, W.C., and the AUTHOR, 33, Chancery Lane, W.C.

THE ACADEMY:

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

VOL. XXXVIII.

Edited by J. S. COTTON.

Among the Contributors to THE ACADEMY are:

- |                          |                          |                          |                          |                           |
|--------------------------|--------------------------|--------------------------|--------------------------|---------------------------|
| Acton, Lord              | Dobson, Austin           | Hodgetts, E. A. Brayley  | Murray, George           | Simcox, G. A.             |
| Aitken, G. A.            | Dore, J. R.              | Hodgkin, Dr. T.          | Murray, Dr. J. A. H.     | Simcox, Miss Edith        |
| Alexander, S.            | Douglas, Prof. R. K.     | Hodgson, Shadworth H.    | Myers, Ernest            | Simpson, W.               |
| Allen, Grant             | Dow, J. G.               | Houghton, Rev. W.        | Myles, Rev. W. Percy     | Skeat, Prof. W. W.        |
| Allen, J. B.             | Dowden, Prof. E.         | Howlett, R.              | Napier, Prof. A. S.      | Smith, G. Barnett         |
| Arnold, Arthur           | Doyle, J. A.             | Howorth, H. H.           | Nettleship, Prof. H.     | Smith, Miss L. Toulmin    |
| Axon, W. E. A.           | Driver, Prof. S. R.      | Hunter, Sir W. W.        | Nettleship, J. T.        | Sommer, H. Oskar          |
| Bain, R. Nisbet          | Drummond, Rev. R. B.     | Ingram, J. H.            | Neubauer, Dr. A.         | Sonnenschein, Prof. E. A. |
| Ball, Rev. C. J.         | Dryden, Sir Henry        | Ingram, Prof. J. K.      | Newton, Sir C. T.        | Stephens, H. Morse        |
| Balzani, Count Ugo       | Duff, E. Gordon          | Jacobs, Joseph           | Nicholson, Dr. E.        | Stephens, Prof. G.        |
| Barnett, P. A.           | Dunlop, R.               | Jevons, F. B.            | Nicholson, E. B.         | Stevenson, W. H.          |
| Bayne, Rev. Ronald       | Earle, Prof. J.          | Jolly, Prof. J.          | Noble, J. A.             | Stewart, J. A.            |
| Beazeley, M.             | Ebers, Prof. G.          | Jones, Rev. W. H.        | Noel, Hon. Roden         | Stokes, Whitley           |
| Beeching, Rev. H. C.     | Edgeworth, Prof. F. Y.   | Keane, Prof. A. H.       | O'Grady, Standish H.     | Strachey, G.              |
| Bell, H. T. Mackenzie    | Edinburgh, The Bishop of | Keene, H. G.             | Oman, C. W. C.           | Strong, S. Arthur         |
| Benn, A. W.              | Edwards, Miss Amelia B.  | Kingsford, C. L.         | Owen, Rev. J.            | Sully, James              |
| Bennett, A. W.           | Ellis, A. J.             | Kirkup, T.               | Paul, C. Kegan           | Sweet, H.                 |
| Bensley, Prof. R. L.     | Ellis, Robinson          | Lang, Andrew             | Peacock, E.              | Swinburne, A. C.          |
| Bezold, Prof. C.         | Elton, C. I.             | Lankester, Prof. E. Ray  | Pearson, Prof. Karl      | Symonds, J. A.            |
| Blind, Karl              | Elton, Oliver            | Leach, A. F.             | Pelham, Prof. H. F.      | Symons, Arthur            |
| Boase, Rev. C. W.        | Ely, Talfourd            | Lee, Miss Jane           | Peterson, Prof.          | Taylor, Canon Isaac       |
| Bonaparte, Prince Louis- | Evans, Arthur            | Lee, S. L.               | Phillips, Claude         | Temple, Capt. R. C.       |
| Bourget, Paul [Lucien    | Field, Michael           | Lee, Vernon              | Pinkerton, Percy E.      | Temple, G. T. [Prof.      |
| Bradley, Henry           | Firth, C. H.             | Le Gallienne, R.         | Pollard, A. W.           | Terrien de Lacouperie,    |
| Bradley, J. W.           | Fita, Padre F.           | Legge, Prof. J.          | Poole, R. S.             | Thompson, E. Maunde       |
| Brown, Dr. Robert        | Fitch, J. G.             | Lewin, Walter            | Postgate, Prof. J. P.    | Toynbee, Paget            |
| Brown, H. F.             | Fortnum, C. Drury E.     | Lewis, Prof. W. J.       | Powell, F. York          | Tozer, Rev. H. F.         |
| Browne, E. G.            | Fowler, Prof. T.         | Lindsay, W. M.           | Raine, Canon J.          | Tucker, R.                |
| Browne, J. W.            | Fowler, Rev. J. T.       | Lyall, C. J.             | Ramsay, Prof. W. M.      | Twiss, Sir Travers        |
| Browne, Prof. G. F.      | Frazer, J. G.            | Lyster, T. W.            | Rashdall, Rev. H.        | Tyler, Thomas             |
| Browne, R. C.            | Freeman, Prof. E. A.     | Macdonell, Prof. A. A.   | Reid, J. S.              | Tylor, E. B.              |
| Bryce, Prof. J.          | Freshfield, Douglas W.   | Macdonell, G. P.         | Rhys, Prof. John         | Vambéry, Prof. A.         |
| Buchanan, Robert         | Friedländer, Dr. M.      | McGrigor, Dr. A. B.      | Rhys-Davids, Prof. T. W. | Venables, Precentor       |
| Bühler, Prof. G.         | Furnivall, Dr. F. J.     | Mackay, J. S.            | Richards, F. T.          | Villari, Linda            |
| Burton, Sir Richard      | Gaidoz, H.               | Mahaffy, Prof. J. P.     | Richards, H. P.          | Vinson, Prof. Julien      |
| Bywater, I.              | Gairdner, J.             | Mann, J. S.              | Richter, Dr. J.-P.       | Wallace, Prof. W.         |
| Caine, Hall              | Galton, Arthur           | Margoliouth, Prof. D. S. | Robertson, Prof. Edmund  | Wallace, W.               |
| Campbell, Prof. Lewis    | Gardiner, S. R.          | Markham, Clements R.     | Robertson, Prof. Eric    | Waters, E. Chester        |
| Canton, W.               | Gardiner, Mrs. S. R.     | Markheim, W.             | Robinson, Rev. C. J.     | Watkins, Rev. M. G.       |
| Capes, Rev. W. W.        | Garnett, R.              | Martin, C. Trice         | Roby, H. J.              | Watts, Theodore           |
| Cheetham, Archdeacon     | Garrod, H. B.            | Marzials, F. T.          | Rolph, J. F.             | Wayte, Rev. W. W.         |
| Chester, Greville J.     | Gonner, E. C. K.         | Mayhew, Rev. A. L.       | Rolleston, T. W.         | Weale, W. H. James        |
| Cheyne, Prof. T. K.      | Grant, Col. F.           | Merk, Rev. C.            | Rudler, F. W.            | Webster, Rev. Wentworth   |
| Church, Prof. A. H.      | Gray, J. M.              | Merry, G. R.             | Rye, Walter              | Wedgwood, H.              |
| Clouston, W. A.          | Grey, William E.         | Minchin, J. G. C.        | Ryland, F.               | Wedmore, Frederick        |
| Collins, J. C.           | Groome, F. H.            | Minchin, James Innes     | Saintsbury, G.           | West, Dr. E. W.           |
| Conway, W. Martin        | Hager, Dr. H.            | Minto, Prof. W.          | Salmon, Prof. G.         | Westlake, Prof. John      |
| Cotterell, G.            | Hamerton, P. G.          | Monkhouse, Cosmo         | Salmoné, Prof. H. A.     | Westwood, Prof. J. O.     |
| Cotton, H. J. S.         | Hamilton, J. A.          | Moore, Rev. Dr. E.       | Sanday, Prof. W.         | Wharton, E. R.            |
| Courtney, W. P.          | Hardy, W. J.             | Morfill, W. R.           | Sandys, Dr. J. E.        | Wharton, H. T.            |
| Crawford, O.             | Haverfield, F.           | Morris, Rev. Dr. R.      | Sargent, Rev. H.         | Wheeler, Stephen          |
| Creighton, Prof. M.      | Hawkins, F.              | Morris, Judge O'Connor   | Sayce, Prof. A. H.       | Wickham, W.               |
| Davidson, John           | Herford, Prof. C. H.     | Morshead, E. D. A.       | Sayle, C.                | Wicksteed, Rev. P. H.     |
| Dawkins, C. E.           | Hessels, J. H.           | Muir, Dr. Thomas         | Seeley, Prof. J. R.      | Wilkins, Prof. A. S.      |
| De Vere, Aubrey          | Hewlett, H. G.           | Müller, Prof. F. Max     | Sharp, William           | Wilson, C. E.             |
| Dickins, F. V.           | Hicks, Rev. E. L.        | Murray, A. S.            | Shedlock, J. S.          | Wollaston, A. N.          |
| Doble, C. E.             |                          |                          |                          |                           |

PUBLISHED AT THE OFFICE, 27, CHANCERY LANE, W.C.

To be had at all Railway Stations, and of all Newsvendors in Town and Country.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

Now ready, price One Shilling.

THE

TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE

For JULY, 1890, contains among other articles of interest: ALAS! By RHODA BROUGHTON. Part I. Chaps. XXIV.-XXVI.—THE ROMANCE OF HISTORY—X. Vidocq.—THE MEMOIRS OF PRINCE TALLEYRAND.—A MANY-SIDED MAN.—NAPOLEON DESCRIBED by his VALET.—AN IDYL OF CLODS.—SOME FLORENTINE MOSAICS.—CHRISTMASTIDE at TANGIER.—PEARL-POWDER. Chaps. XXIX.-XXXIII., &c.

POPULAR NOVELS.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "OUGHT WE TO VISIT HER!"

PEARL POWDER. By Mrs.

ANNIE EDWARDES, Author of "Leah: a Woman of Fashion," &c. In 2 vols., crown 8vo.

STORIES by Mrs. ANNIE EDWARDES.

In uniform binding, crown 8vo, price 6s. each.

LEAH: a Woman of Fashion.

OUGHT WE TO VISIT HER?

A BALL-ROOM REPENTANCE.

A GIRTON GIRL.

Also, in small crown 8vo, price Half-a-Crown each.

A VAGABOND HEROINE.

A BLUE STOCKING.

SECOND EDITION OF

ACTE. By Hugh Westbury,

Author of "Frederick Hazleden." In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"One of the best historical novels since 'The Last of the Barons,' and 'The Last Days of Pompeii.'"

Saturday Review.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THAT UNFORTUNATE MARRIAGE."

MADAME LEROUX. By

FRANCES ELEANOR TROLLOPE, Author of "Black Spirits and White," &c. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"It is satisfactory to possess now-a-days an author who reminds us so often and so pleasantly of the best achievements of the great writers, and who never lapses into dulness or tediousness."—Manchester Examiner.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "A DREAMER."

MR. BRYANT'S MISTAKE.

By KATHARINE WYLDE, Author of "An Ill-Regulated Mind," &c. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"To say that in this novel the characters and results of their actions are traced out step by step in the incidents and the plot of her story, and that they teach in this way an interesting legend, is only to give the author the praise which her skilful workmanship unquestionably deserves. The merits of this story are indisputable."—Athenaeum.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "MY LITTLE LADY."

The FAILURE OF ELIZABETH.

By E. FRANCES POYNTER, Author of "Among the Hills," &c. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"The heroine is drawn with all the kindly knowledge and gentle experience which characterise Miss POYNTER's art, and who, 'failure' though she be, yet carries the sympathy of her reader with her to the end."—World.

A NEW EDITION, in 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

SIR CHARLES DANVERS.

By the Author of "The Danvers Jewels." Now ready, forming the latest addition to "Bentley's Favourite Novels."

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street,
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

Cassell & Company's Announcements.

THIRD EDITION.

Now ready, in 2 vols., price 24s.

THE JOURNAL OF MARIE BASHKIRTSEFF.

Translated from the French, with an Introduction,

By MATHILDE BLIND.

WITH TWO PORTRAITS and an AUTOGRAPH LETTER.

READY SHORTLY. Crown 8vo, 192 pages, 2s. 6d.

The Verdict: a Tract on the Political Significance of the Report of the Farnell Commission. By Prof. A. V. DICEY, Q.C.

JUST READY. Price 7s. 6d.

Scouting for Stanley in East

AFRICA. By THOMAS STEVENS, Author of "Around the World on a Bicycle," &c. With 14 Illustrations.

SECOND EDITION, now ready, price 10s. 6d.

The Life of the Rev. J. G. Wood.

By his Son, the Rev. THEODORE WOOD.

NOW READY, price 6s., Vol. V. of

English Writers. By Henry

MORLEY, LL.D., Emeritus Professor of English Literature, University College, London. Vol. V. The LITERATURE of the FOURTEENTH CENTURY. Book II.

PROF. MORLEY'S SHAKESPEARE.

NOW READY. Complete in 13 vols., cloth, 21s.

The Plays of Shakespeare. Edited

by Prof. HENRY MORLEY.

READY SHORTLY, price 3s. 6d.

The Art of Cooking by Gas. By

Mrs. SUGG. Illustrated. Cloth.

NOW READY, boards, price 3s. 6d.; cloth, gilt edges, 6s.

"Little Folks" Midsummer

VOLUME. Containing 432 pages of Letterpress, with Illustrations on nearly every page, Two Pictures in several Colours, and Four Plates in Colour.

READY SHORTLY. Price 5s.

Strange Doings in Strange Places.

Complete Sensational Stories by FRANK BARRETT, MAXWELL GRAY, JOHN BERWICK HARWOOD, Q. R. E. FRANCELLO, G. MANVILLE FENN, F. W. ROBINSON, FITZGERALD MOLLOY, CHAS. GIBBON, FLORENCE WARDEN, RICHARD DOWLING, THEO. GIFT, Mrs. EDWARD KENNARD, M. BETHAM EDWARDS, J. K. LEYS, HENRY FRITH, MAY CROMMELIN, and Major ARTHUR GRIFFITHS. Crown 8vo.

"A STORY OF REAL LIFE."

Pactolus Prime: a Novel. By

ALBION W. TOURGEE, Author of "A Fool's Errand," "Figs and Thistles," "Bricks Without Straw," &c., &c. 1 vol., ready shortly, price 5s.

Metzerott, Shoemaker. Ready

shortly, price 5s.

"A book which has created an interest analogous to Bellamy's 'Looking Backward.'"—American Bookseller.

David Todd: the Romance of his Life and Loving. By DAVID MACLURE, Author of "Thoughts of Life," &c. Ready shortly, price 5s.

CASSELL & COMPANY, Limited, Ludgate Hill, London.

AT ALL THE LIBRARIES.

Henry M. Stanley's Great Book.

In Darkest Africa.

Being the Official Publication, recording the

QUEST, RESCUE, AND RETREAT OF EMIN, GOVERNOR OF EQUATORIA.

The Illustrations, numbering over 150, have all been made from Mr. Stanley's own Notes, Sketches, and Photographs, by some of the best English and French draughtsmen, amongst whom are Mr. Sydney P. Hall, M. Montbard, M. Riou, Mr. Forrester, and others. The Engraving is from the competent hands of Mr. J. D. Cooper and M. Barbant (of Paris). There are three large Maps and fourteen smaller ones.

ORDINARY EDITION, 2 vols., demy 8vo, of over 500 pages each, in handsome cloth binding, price TWO GUINEAS.

[Second Edition now in the press.

EDITION DE LUXE of 250 Copies ALL SOLD.

SOME OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

The TIMES.—"Mr. Stanley's narrative of his adventures, privations, sufferings, trials, dangers and discoveries during his heroic quest and rescue of Emin Pasha is as moving and enthralling a tale as ever told by man. It is, moreover, told with so genuine a modesty of temper, so transparent a fidelity to act, so generous and eager a desire on the part of the leader of the expedition to give their due meed of praise and recognition to each and all of his subordinates, not excepting the humblest of his African followers, that the critic's task becomes merely one of unstinted admiration of the almost unexampled greatness of the deeds accomplished, and the profound ethical interest of the narrative which describes them. Nor does the interest of the book depend only on the thrilling nature of its subject matter: of its purely literary merits we can speak in terms of high commendation. The style of the narrative is direct, vigorous, and incisive, as becometh one who is a man of action rather than a man of letters; but in many of the descriptive parts Mr. Stanley shows that, consummate man of action as he is, he is a born man of letters as well."

The STANDARD.—"Since the end of January last the demands upon the time and energy of the writer have been unprecedented in urgency and importance, and yet here in the month of June we have the finished work. The 'mandate' of the Leader obviously did not expire with the formal disbandment of the company with which he had passed through so many perils and so much suffering. Restored to civilisation, he enlisted a fresh band of fellow-labourers, and made the same imperious demands on the energy and resource of artists, map-makers, printers, and publishers that he had made on Zanzibari porters and English officers in the gloomy wilds of the mid-African forest. Let us add that the appeal met with a no less loyal response. To the draughtsmen and engravers who have co-operated especial recognition is due. There is no sign of haste about the illustrations, which are profusely scattered through the two volumes, and which give vivid embodiment to the scenes of that marvellous progress. Every phase of travel, every aspect of Nature, is delineated with a touch so firm and persuasive that it is difficult to believe that the pictures are not exact transcripts from sketches taken on the spot. The maps are in their way admirable. The cartographer may, indeed, be complimented on having achieved an imaginative triumph in the device by which he impresses, even on the careless eye, a sense of the vastness and the loneliness of the unbroken forest region. The precision with which every halting-place, every Arab station, every clearance along the line of march is marked, emphasises the mysterious isolation of the as yet untrudged tracts to North and South. We have come across hardly a misprint in the thousand pages of which the work consists, and the index to each volume will satisfy the most exacting student. Mr. Stanley's animated pages; and will continue to be read as long as there remains amongst Englishmen any taste for adventure, and any honour for manliness."

The DAILY NEWS.—"The first line was written at Cairo on the 25th January. The author thereafter worked continuously for fifty days, averaging over twenty printed pages a day. This of course is all true, yet no doubt it would be truer still to say that the book has been in preparation ever since Mr. Stanley set foot at Zanzibar, and that he has written it during nearly three years of the most terrible perils, hardships, and trials, of every description, that ever fell to the lot of mortal man. This consideration only enhances the wonder of its strength, its vigour, and its felicity of touch, and furnishes abundant excuse for its occasional blemishes of style. It is a great performance, alike in what it relates, and in the manner of the relation, and it will constitute an enduring monument to its author's fame."

&c. &c. &c.

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, SEARLE, and RIVINGTON, Limited, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, Fleet Street, E.C.

SATURDAY, JULY 5, 1890.

No. 948, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

The Journal of Marie Bashkirtseff. Translated, with an Introduction, by Mathilde Blind. In 2 vols. (Cassell.)

FOR the translation of a book like Marie Bashkirtseff's Journal a special talent is required, and it is a talent which Miss Blind unquestionably possesses. The book is really a journal, written currently, heedlessly, in a rapid and expressive language which is not by any means classical French. Style there is none—only words, words which a flying pen dashes violently upon paper, where they keep the heat of their course. Sentences begin, ending in dots. There are sentences which end without beginning, all but the really vital part being resolutely flung away. To translate into another language this vibrating, abrupt, picturesque idiom, so sheerly personal, so miraculously impromptu, one requires a like fever and haste of work, a like capacity for being carried away with one's subject, and a like disregard of the minor correctnesses. Miss Blind's original work has just these characteristics. It is deeply felt, sincerely and spontaneously rendered, with all the virtues of a strong impulsion, none of the felicities of a careful art. Her translation, which bears signs of extreme haste—a haste which is here good speed—is almost as living as the original. It is warm where most translations are cold; it is rapid where most translations halt. For the most part it reads like a book originally written in English. Comparing it line by line with the French, one finds slight inaccuracies here and there—of small moment, the result of that swiftness of rendering which has made it what it is. One finds, also, angularities of expression for which the writer is not responsible—an occasional failure to find the required idiom. But when all has been said, the translation remains a genuine triumph over difficulties—an achievement. Thanks to Miss Blind, English literature is now the richer by one of those rare and priceless Confessions of which the world never tires, and perhaps the most fascinating of all the Confessions.

It is not six years since Marie Bashkirtseff died. A few years ago one only knew of two or three people here and there who had ever heard of the Journal—to-day everyone has read it or is reading it. No doubt this is to a large extent the result of Mr. Gladstone's article. For some reason people like to read what Mr. Gladstone likes to read. Since the appearance of that article numerous little articles have appeared in English and American periodicals. Those who knew Marie Bashkirtseff have recalled their impressions of her. Others have merely given us their impression of her book. And in the society that talks literature, those who have a moment to spare from Mr. Rudyard Kipling devote it to Marie Bashkirtseff. In Paris this kind of fame had no need to wait for Mr. Gladstone. Everyone has read the Journal and seen some of the pictures. Many of those one meets can say: "I knew her; she was this or that; had just such hair and such complexion; she was indeed the woman of her book." Marie Bashkirtseff is no longer the "jeune fille de talent, qui vient de mourir" of the newspapers commenting on her death. She has attained, now that she can never thrill with it, that which she sought so hungrily while she was living, with that "impatience de la gloire" of which M. Coppée speaks in his beautiful and touching preface to the Catalogue of her works. "If I do not die young, I hope to survive as a great artist; but if I do, I will have my journal published, which cannot fail to be interesting." This is how she writes in the preface—that marvellous preface which gathers up in one supreme expression all her passionate clinging to life, her desperate recoil from death, from being forgotten. "To live, to have so much ambition, to suffer, weep, struggle—and then oblivion! . . . oblivion . . . as if I had never been." Well, after all, the world has "found her interesting."

Interesting, supremely interesting, the book is—to me certainly the most fascinating of all the Confessions—for the reason, perhaps, that they are the confessions of a woman, a woman who was young, beautiful, a genius, and so near to us that one might have seen her, as indeed one's friends have done. I am told that some find the character of Marie Bashkirtseff repellent. It is not a "perfect" character—far more interesting, more attractive, than that! To those who cannot get beyond the Bouguereau ideal of woman it must indeed be a sad revelation of the possibilities of feminine perversity. There are others to whom it reveals the possibilities of a somewhat sharp and acid feminine charm, which can have infinite attractiveness. Had she lived, Marie Bashkirtseff would have been a great painter; dying when she did, she has left us a revelation of herself which is more precious than even great pictures. It is indeed a "human document," this book in which a woman lives from day to day; no, not a document—human as we who read it.

ARTHUR SYMONS.

The History of the University of Dublin, from its Foundation to the End of the Eighteenth Century. With an Appendix of Original Documents which, for the most part, are preserved in the College. By John William Stubbs, D.D. (Longmans.)

WE are often told that nowadays, since Englishmen have taken up the study of Irish history, they know much more about it than the Irish themselves. This knowledge cannot be very widely spread, and cannot extend to an acquaintance with Irish bibliography, if we are to judge by the comments which have been made in England upon this recent production of the Dublin

University Press. In almost every notice which has appeared of Dr. J. W. Stubbs's book, whatever may be said as to its merits or demerits, it has had assigned to it the honour of being the first work in its own peculiar field. The English journal from which we might expect most light and leading on Irish matters is very bold in asserting a negative on this point. "No such work," we are told, "has hitherto been attempted, and extremely little exact information has in consequence been available concerning the chief seat of learning in Ireland." It would be hard to make a more inaccurate statement. No such work hitherto attempted! There is one Dublin man who seems to remember, on the first day of his residence in the historic Quad of "Botany Bay," going in the earliest fervour of undergraduate bibliomania to the old bookshop of Patrick Kennedy in Anglesea Street, and there securing as a foundation stone for his extra-scholastic library the History of the University of Dublin, by Dr. W. B. S. Taylor, then an old book clad in faded morocco, but once glorious with blazonry of the college arms, for it had been a prize awarded to some unknown predecessor. Surely one cannot have dreamt all this. No; there on the table is the very book, and there side by side with it is the Constitutional History of the University of Dublin, by Denis Caulfield Heron, published in 1847. It is true that neither of these works is all that a history ought to be. Dr. Taylor's book is pompous, pedantic, and ill-arranged; but a large number of facts are given as correctly as one could expect in a first attempt of the kind. D. C. Heron's treatise is the able and lucid work of a clever lawyer; but it does not pretend to be a complete history, dealing mainly with a particular topic, the status of Roman Catholics in the university and their right of admission to all its honours. But the fact of a book not attaining a very high standard does not necessarily make it non-existent; indeed, were it so, it is to be feared that the work of Dr. J. W. Stubbs would not be available for the purpose of review, or any other purpose. It is not so large a work as Dr. Taylor's, and it covers a considerably shorter space of time; it is distinctly less brilliant than Heron's Constitutional History. If they can hardly claim to be called in the highest sense histories, neither can it.

Not only has more than one formal history of the university appeared before this by Dr. Stubbs, but a very considerable amount of exact information has been available in various other quarters concerning the chief seat of learning in Ireland. Dr. James Henthorn Todd, an archaeologist of the first rank, published in the Dublin Calendar of 1833 a masterly introduction to the history of the university; and in the preface to the Catalogue of the Graduates of the University of Dublin (1869) he threw much additional light on the subject, and cleared up several difficult problems connected with it. A much less valuable but by no means despicable writer on the same subject was Mr. Oliver J. Burke, who compiled for successive volumes of the Dublin University Magazine, a history of the Priory of All Hallows, and of the University of Dublin from 1591, which does not appear to have ever been published as a separate treatise.

In truth, Dr. J. W. Stubbs is himself to a great extent responsible for the mistake which has been made as to his priority. He makes comparatively brief reference to the works of Dr. Todd, and he does not seem to make any allusion whatever to the published works of his other predecessors. The words with which he begins his preface—"The history of the University of Dublin, compiled from the original documents belonging to Trinity College, has hitherto never been written"—are not unlikely to mislead his readers, although taken literally they are fairly accurate. He is not the first who has written the history of the university, but he is the first who has compiled such a history "from the original documents belonging to Trinity College." It is true that the MS. sources had not been by any means neglected before. Taylor professed to have received much assistance with regard to the history of the university from the erudite and eccentric Dr. Barrett, who had amassed a large collection of MSS. O. J. Burke also made use of some of Dr. Barrett's MSS. Dr. Todd, who had mastered the subject as no one had done before—and, one is compelled to add, no one has done since—had, of course, full access to all the original documents preserved belonging to Trinity College, and drew upon them largely for the purpose of his admirable writings; but they were never thoroughly examined for the purpose of a definite history until the present undertaking of Dr. J. W. Stubbs. It is in the superiority of his MS. authorities, and the conscientious accuracy with which he appears to have used them, that the real value of his work consists. When he wanders outside the College muniment room he ceases to speak with any authority, and often seems to ignore sources of information which would be most helpful if used aright. Had he had recourse, for example, to Mr. J. Bass Mullinger's University of Cambridge he would have found a section headed "Foundation of Trinity College, Dublin," which would have assisted him considerably in his task.

There is hardly anything connected with Dublin University more interesting than the history of those universities which preceded the present foundation. From the beginning of the fourteenth century attempts more or less successful were constantly being made to found an Irish university. "Across the sanguinary scenes of war and turbulence and bloodshed," said Mr. Gladstone in a famous speech, "flits from time to time this graceful vision of a university, appearing to-day, disappearing to-morrow, reappearing on an after-day—Par levibus ventis, volucrique simillima somno." Influenced by this graceful vision, Mr. Gladstone was led to assert that the university of Dublin did not by any means, as was generally supposed, originally date from the reign of Elizabeth—a position which was severely handled by many of his opponents. One naturally turns to Dr. Stubbs's work for information on this point, and finds a very meagre statement of what had been more fully set forth by Dr. Todd and others. With regard to the various efforts made to found a university which should represent the principles of the Reformation, Dr. Stubbs not only adds nothing to what was previously known, but omits some very interesting facts which he might have ascertained from readily accessible sources. Before the scheme of Sir John Perrot to found two colleges with the revenues of S. Patrick's, which was to be dissolved on account of its "superstitious reputation," there were two other suggestions of which an interesting account is given in the sketch by Mr. Mullinger above-mentioned. George Browne, Archbishop of Dublin in the reign of Edward VI., was anxious to found "Christ's College" in Dublin, to the end that the students might "call that barbarous nation from evil to good." Again, John Case, in the first production of the Earl of Leicester's press at Oxford, makes a strenuous appeal to the chancellors of Oxford and Cambridge to do something for the advancement of education in Ireland, where he says:

"sunt feracissima quidem ingenia; ferocissima tamen in nonnullis partibus facta, ea potissimum causa quod in tam beato solo nullum Musarum collegium nullum Philosophiae seminarium floreat: Arte enim non Marte emolliuntur mores."

Mr. Mullinger rightly attaches much importance to these schemes, but Dr. Stubbs omits all mention of them. He gives, however, a full account of the actual foundation in 1591 of the College of the Holy and Undivided Trinity by Archbishop Loftus, on the site of the Augustine Monastery of All Hallows in the suburbs of Dublin. Here again the point on which one would most wish for instruction is passed over without comment. Upon the famous phrase in the charter of Elizabeth, "Unum Collegium mater Universitatis," a lengthy controversy has raged. It is not unusual for Englishmen to deny that Dublin possesses any university. To them a university so invariably suggests the idea of a group of separate colleges that they not unnaturally suppose this plurality of colleges to be essential to a true university. Dr. Todd clearly demonstrated how mistaken it is to suppose that any such notion was involved in the old Studium generale or Universitas Studiorum, from which came in after time the name "university." It is curious to note that Irishmen and Scotchmen fall into exactly the opposite mistake, and speak as if a college and a university were absolutely convertible terms. Scotchmen have been often heard to speak of "Oxford college"; and the Irish confusion is shown even in the title of Dr. Stubbs's work, as one sees at once by substituting another name for that of Dublin: "A History of Oxford University, with an Appendix of Original Documents preserved in the College," would certainly excite the mirth and wonder of every Oxonian. The truth is that Trinity College was the Mater Universitatis, the nucleus around which other colleges were to group themselves, the first nursing mother who was to nourish in sound learning the children who were hereafter to become graduates and members of the university. The various attempts to constitute additional colleges from the beginning of the seventeenth century to our own times form one of the most interesting chapters in the history of the university. Dr. Stubbs does not seem to attach much importance to it, and gives only scattered notices of such foundations as Trinity Hall, Kildare Hall, and St. Stephen's Hall. Of what importance they appeared to a contemporary may be gathered from Fuller's quaint saying on these "emissary hostels":

"The whole species of the University of Dublin was for many years preserved in the individuum of this one college. But since this instrument hath made better music, when what was but a monochord before hath got two other smaller strings unto it—the addition of New College and Kildare Hall."

The mention of Fuller reminds one of the strong opinion which he held as to the great part which Trinity College, Cambridge, took in the formation of her Irish namesake:

"Dublin University was a colonia deducta from Cambridge, and particularly from Trinity College therein (one motive perchance to the name of it). . . . Know also that this University did so Cantabrizize, that she imitated her in the successive choice of her chancellors; the daughter dutifully approving and following the judgment of her mother therein."

This part of the subject does not seem to have so much attraction for Dr. Stubbs as some less important topics. Many pages are filled with extracts from account-books, which show the early income of the college and the sources whence it came. Some slight account of the state of Ireland at this time would have added much interest to the financial statements, which they lack in their bare simplicity of transcription. When we find Sir Thomas Norreys, Vice-President of Munster, complaining that "devotion is cold" in that province, although the county of Limerick had promised three-fourths out of every plough-land as a subscription, it is easier to understand the lack of warmth in devotion when we remember Mr. Lecky's description of the state of the county at that time:

"Year after year over a great part of Ireland all means of human subsistence were destroyed, no quarter was given to prisoners who surrendered, and the whole population was skillfully and steadily starved to death. The pictures of the condition of Ireland at this time were as terrible as anything in human history."

And this was especially the case in the province of which Sir Francis Norreys was vice-president. "From Dingle to the Rock of Cashel," say the Annals of the Four Masters, "not the lowing of a cow nor the voice of the ploughman was to be heard." The three-fourths from every plough-land in Limerick was not perhaps so bad after all, when these circumstances were taken into account; but Dr. Stubbs does not give us a hint that Kerry and Limerick were not as prosperous and happy as Middlesex and Surrey.

In addition to the large number of extracts dealing with the receipts and expenditure, we are presented with a number of quotations concerning the discipline of the college and the punishments inflicted for trivial offences. The most interesting of these were noted by Heron in his History, and full details have been accessible for almost half a century in Monck Mason's Life of Bishop Bedell. There is a remarkable discrepancy between the extracts given by Mason and those we find in the present volume. It would almost seem that either the quotations of Dr. Stubbs were mutilated and incorrect, or that Mason had employed his inventive faculty in embellishing the words of Bedell. It is to be presumed, of course, that the fault is with the older writer.

When Dr. Stubbs leaves these comparatively trivial details, and comes to the real stuff of which history is made, we are struck by his want of skill in grouping his facts, estimating their comparative importance, or bringing them into relief by connecting them with contemporary history. The squabbles of obscure college Dons have as much space given to them as has the history of the men who have made the university famous; and one has to search, and sometimes search in vain, in various quarters of the book for the links which bind the scattered notices into a continuous account of university history. This may be seen markedly in the case of the great divines who were connected with the university in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. Dublin had Ussher for her first scholar, Laud as her chancellor and the reviser of her statutes, Jeremy Taylor as vice-chancellor; Bishop Berkeley was a fellow, Bishop Wilson a scholar, Dean Swift a Bachelor of Arts after an undistinguished, if not ignominious, career. All these facts may be gleaned in odd holes and corners of Dr. Stubbs's book; but one longs for some such comprehensive sketch as that of John Mitchell, the felon rebel. Speaking of the Irish Protestant clergy and their opposition to the spirit of nationality, he refuses to surrender the claim which Ireland has upon them:

"Their stories are twined with our history; their dust is Irish earth; and their memories are Ireland's for ever. In the little church of Dromore, hard by the murmuring Lagan, lie buried the bones of Jeremy Taylor—would Ireland be richer without that grave? In any gallery of illustrious Irishmen Ussher and Swift shall not be forgotten; Derry and Cloyne will not soon let the name of Berkeley die; and the lonely tower of Clough Oughter is hardly more interesting to an Irishman as the place where Owen Roe breathed his last sigh, than by the imprisonment within its walls of the mild and excellent Bishop of Kilmore. Sit mea anima cum Bedello!" *

One great merit of Dr. Stubbs deserves especial mention, he displays rigid impartiality in matters religious and political. The contest between Laud and the Puritans, and the attack made upon the university by James II., are described with the greatest fairness. Those who know how Irish history is usually written will recognise the high praise which is implied in the statement that it would be hard to tell from the course of the narrative what views in religion or politics are held by the author. This appears very clearly in his history of the splendid library of Trinity College. The nucleus of this library was founded by the English army in Munster in the year 1601, who subscribed out of their pay £700 to buy theological books for the newly founded college, showing for military men an unusual interest in religion and learning. A strange contrast with their action in this respect is what we learn from Mr. Lecky concerning the doings of this same Munster army: "Not only the men, but even the women and children, who fell into the hands of the English were deliberately and systematically butchered. Bands of soldiers traversed great tracts of country slaying every living thing they met." A still more liberal benefaction was made from a similar source not many years later. The soldiers and officers of Cromwell's army in Ireland, "out of emulation to the former noble action of Queen Elizabeth's army, were incited by some men of public spirit to a like performance," and purchased the magnificent library of Archbishop Ussher, which he would have presented to the university if he had not fallen upon evil days in the calamities of the Great Rebellion. With these two instances in mind, we can hardly admit the universal applicability of Case's saying, "Arte non Marte emolliuntur mores." In the time of the attack of James II. upon the university in 1689, the library was saved from destruction by the efforts of two Roman Catholics, Dr. Michael Moore, whom James had appointed provost, and Father McCarthy, chaplain to the king. Full credit is given to these theological opponents by Dr. Stubbs, whose account of the library and the buildings of the university is one of the most valuable portions of the present book.

* It would have been worth while to point out what is probably known to few, that the hymodists Tate, Brady, and Toplady, the dramatists Congreve, Farquhar, and Southern, were Dublin men. Sheridan, the typical Irishman, was not a member of an Irish university.

In dealing with the history of the eighteenth century, the author had the great advantage of being able to use the MSS. of Provost Hutchinson; and he paints for us a more favourable picture than would have been expected of that able, insolent, and overbearing politician, whose appointment to the provostship of a great university was one of the grossest political jobs ever perpetrated even by the Irish government. It would be an interesting task to trace the history of the university through the eighteenth century. We should find that, although professedly founded as an engine of proselytism and a promoter of the reign of law and order, it became infected with the spirit of Irish nationality, and finally opened wide its gates to the members of that religion which it was designed to extinguish. From it came the first leader of constitutional opposition in Molyneux, member for the university; and the most powerful in Swift. From it came some of the most dangerous enemies of English rule that Ireland has ever produced. In the early years of the century, when the spirit of the Irish Catholics was so utterly cowed that not a pike was raised or a shot fired from Cape Clear to the Giant's Causeway in the cause of the Catholic kings, there was, as Archbishop King puts it, a strong "nest of Jacobites" in the Protestant university. And in the century's closing years the last event described in the history before us is the famous Visitation of Lord Clare to inquire into the existence of treasonable associations within the university, in which the honoured name of Whitley Stokes, fellow of Trinity College, occurs with those of Wolfe Tone, the Emmets, and Thomas Moore. One more important omission in the volume before us must be noticed. Dr. Stubbs purports to bring his work down to 1800; and yet we find no mention of the principal event in that year bearing on the fortunes of the university. By the Act of Union its political fidelity was rewarded by a summary disfranchisement. It was robbed of one of its two members by its Tory friends, and its full representation was only restored by the Reform Bill of 1832.

Enough has been said to show that those who know anything of the works which have been already published on the subject treated in the present volume cannot fail to be disappointed at the comparative small amount of additional information which it gives, and the entire lack of the higher qualities of history which it displays. The story of the university from its foundation to the Union contains in it all the elements of an eventful drama. It is interwoven by a thousand threads with the story of the Irish Church and the story of the Irish nation. It has to tell of some of the noblest Churchmen, the wildest wits, the most eloquent orators, and the most implacable rebels that any country has ever had to show. And, as Dr. Stubbs intimates in his preface, there would be wanting to complete the story a second volume reaching from the Union to the present day, a volume which would tell how the national university could not be forced to separate herself entirely from the national life, how she has continued the fruitful mother of rebels—as she had produced Wolfe Tone and Robert Emmett, so she has sheltered within her portals the Young Irelanders, Davis and Dillon, and their successors the Fenians, Luby and O'Leary—how she has cast aside her exclusiveness and offered her honours alike to the representatives of all creeds, becoming instead of the monopoly of a sect the intellectual nurse of a nation; how she has won fame not only for intellectual power, but for literary production, so that there has been removed, one hopes for ever, all excuse for the taunting title of the "Silent Sister."

There have been three histories written of the University of Dublin, and yet still caret vate sacro. The ideal historian would be one who united the nervous eloquence of John Mitchel with the faculty for calm historical research possessed by James Henthorn Todd. Failing that almost unattainable ideal, one would be well contented if Mr. Lecky would undertake the task. But whenever the historian does arise who will tell the story of the great Irish university as it deserves to be told, he will find ready to his hand what will relieve him from much dry drudgery, and render his task comparatively light, in the carefully compiled collection of facts and documents which we owe to the industry of Dr. J. W. Stubbs.

PERCY MYLES.

Russia's Railway Advance into Central Asia.
Notes of a Journey from St. Petersburg to Samarkand. By George Dobson.
(W. H. Allen.)

MR. DOBSON, Times correspondent at St. Petersburg, was the first Englishman to travel by railway to Samarkand. Colonel le Mesurier went only as far as Bokhara, and had to drive to that city from the Oxus in a carriage and pair, the line beyond Charjui being still under construction. The Hon. George Curzon took his ticket for Samarkand some few months after Mr. Dobson's visit, but was the first of the three travellers to write a book on Central Asia and to tell us how the journey

"Past Taurus, past the Caspian, past the groves Of Samarcand, thrilling with Persian song" is performed now that the steam whistle, as well as the watch-song of the owl, may be heard from the towers of Afrasiab. Mr. Curzon, however, held that the personal adventures of a tourist would be less interesting than a politician's estimate of the situation; and his Russians in Central Asia is for the most part a disquisition on the Central Asian question from a political point of view. Mr. Dobson, on the other hand, is of opinion "that prejudice and confusion of ideas about Russia are due in very great measure to this purely political treatment"; and he has accordingly aimed at writing "an impartial book of a general character," which shall supersede Mr. Eugene Schuyler's Turkestan. He has re-written and emended his letters on the Central Asian Railway published by the Times in August and September, 1888, and has added several new chapters on later events—the result being a volume which, if it does not quite realise the author's ideal, is a useful and timely addition to our knowledge of the subject. But it must not be allowed to pass without a word of comment on one or two startling and mischievous errors into which the author has fallen, owing to a strange unfamiliarity with the writings of other authorities.

For instance, we read:

"Last year another Russian explorer, Captain Pokotilo, asserted that the Eastern frontier of Bokhara extended beyond the stream of the Upper Amu Darya or Pianja, which I believe is not the opinion of political geographers in England or India."

This is apparently based on information also to be found in a special telegram from St. Petersburg published by the Times in December last, which said "Captain Pokotilo has discovered that the Bokharan frontier, contrary to the received belief, extends over the left bank of the Pianja, and that the Pianja is not the absolute frontier as marked on ordinary maps." But there is no novelty in the so-called discovery. The main fact that Bokharan territory stretches over to the left bank of the Pianja, or Panja river, has been acknowledged by English geographers for the last six years or more. In 1884, Sir Henry Rawlinson pointed out at a meeting of the Royal Geographical Society that the claims of the Bokharians to territory on the left bank of the Panja from Roshan to Kolab were incontestable. Our political geographers are not so hopelessly in the dark as Mr. Dobson seems to imagine. Perhaps a more vital error may be detected in his remark that England has plainly no control over Amir Abdur Rahman. We only profess to control the Amir's foreign policy, and in this respect he has certainly been guided by us. This was manifest during the boundary negotiation; though it is not to be supposed, of course, that the Indian Government should endeavour to let the whole world into the secret of its relations with the Amir. Surely Mr. Dobson must see that, if the Amir had been left wholly to his own devices all this time, the Russians would have had a pretext for crossing the frontier long ago.

Perhaps the book is chiefly useful for the account it gives of the staff of the Russian administration, and for the insight it affords into the rivalries and intrigues of Russian officials, which must always be reckoned with when dealing with Central Asian politics. The extent to which the meanest intrigues and the lowest ambitions affect every aspect of the situation, so far as Russia is concerned, is almost incredible. We may form some idea of the state of things by imagining that Lord Harris had accused the Marquis of Lansdowne of taking bribes from the Nizam, that Lord Wolseley was moving heaven and earth and the India Office to get Sir Frederick Roberts recalled and himself appointed Commander-in-Chief; and that the Commissioner of Peshawur had been reduced at the instance of an assistant commissioner whose wife happened to be the sister of a popular aide-de-camp at Government House, on the pretext that he had horsewhipped a native gentleman, but really ob sprete injuriam formae. This is the kind of scandal Mr. Dobson has to tell of; and though his disclosures are unedifying to the last degree, they enable one to understand much that would otherwise be mysterious. They serve to indicate, also, the element of weakness and instability in Russia's position in Asia. Succeeding to the greater part of the empire of Timur,—

"The mighty Tamurlane,
That was lord of all the land Between Thrace and Samarcand"—

the Russians exercise a dominion which has many of the worst vices of Asiatic rule. Corruption and intrigue undermine the whole fabric of the Russian power; so that when calculating the strength of our rivals and the advantages they have gained by the subjugation of the Turkomans, by the occupation of Merv and by the opening of railway communications from the Caspian to Sogdiana, we must always allow for this ever-growing evil of official depravity. Mr. Curzon not long ago spoke of the evil tempers and ill-regulated habits which prevail in Russian military circles in Central Asia, expressing a doubt whether a power so represented was likely to remain long in the ascendant. Mr. Dobson declares that there has been a regular epidemic of intrigue among Russian officials in Central Asia. It has led to the retirement of Gen. Rosenbach, the Governor-General of Turkestan, to the supersession of Gen. Komaroff, Governor of the Trans-Caspian district, by Gen. Kuropatkin, and to the disgrace of Col. Alikhan-off. Gen. Kolpakofsky, the Governor-General of Semiretchia—of whom Mr. Schuyler wrote: "If anyone can put down corruption in Turkestan, restore to the Russians the confidence of the natives, and diminish the great expenditure of men and money, it is he"—is another victim of the delatores; and even Gen. Annenkoff, the constructor of the railway, seems to have had a narrow escape. Prof. Vambery, it will be remembered, has offered a very different explanation of the displacement of Generals Rosenbach and Komaroff; but there is little doubt that Mr. Dobson's is the right one.

In his account of the Merv Turkomans Mr. Dobson quotes some curious local traditions which he learnt from a Russian resident in those parts; but it might have been as well to test their accuracy by what we know of the history of Central Asia. It is hardly enough to say that "very little of an authentic nature has hitherto transpired concerning the origin of the Tekkes." A good deal has transpired, and is still transpiring, as Mr. Dobson would know if he took the trouble to consult recognised authorities. The Turkoman tradition which makes the Tekkes leave their home near Marghilan, in Ferghanah, some two centuries ago, and emigrate to Bokhara, is incompatible with what the Khivan historian, Abul Ghazi Khan, tells us of the tribe, which about the year 1640 was encamped near the Balkhan mountains, on the east shores of the Caspian. Nor need we attach any significance to the statement that the Tekkes are the direct descendants of the Seljuk Turks; though both the Seljuks and the Turkomans, as well as the Ottoman Turks, are descended, as Sir Henry Rawlinson says, from the Guz Turks. On the other hand, the "native legend" which Mr. Dobson heard about the destruction of Merv by Shah Murad of Bokhara refers to an historical incident, told in Mr. Howorth's History of the Mongols on the authority of Abdul Kerim, and also referred to by Sir John Malcolm.

The chapter on trade is really valuable, though Mr. Dobson carefully warns his readers against putting complete faith in Russian statistics. He does not share the belief that English and Indian wares are being driven out of the Central Asian markets. He suggests that the Russian Government should be asked to let one or two English consuls reside in the Trans-Caspian and Bokhara; but it seems very unlikely that the concession would be given.

The usefulness of the book would have been greatly augmented by the addition of an index.

STEPHEN WHEELER.

NEW NOVELS.

Lady Dobbs. By Emily Marion Harris. In 2 vols. (Kegan Paul & Co.)

Midge. By May Crommelin. (Trischler.)

Mumford Manor. By John Adamson. (Fisher Unwin.)

The Master of the Magicians. By Elizabeth Stuart Phelps and Herbert D. Ward. (Heinemann.)

A Phonographic Mystery. By L. Madreyhijo. (Remington.)

Her Last Throw. By Mrs. Hungerford. (White.)

The Mystery of a Millionaire's Grave. By Gordon-Stables. (Remington.)

A Black Business. By Hawley Smart. (White.)

THERE is an old-fashioned air about Lady Dobbs which gives it a certain attractiveness, in spite of the entire absence of modern literary "effects." It is the old but now-days somewhat unfamiliar story of a man's patience, magnanimity, and ultimate moral triumph, and of a woman's selfishness, caprice, and humiliation. In this case the man and the woman are husband and wife, and not, as usual, lovers. This fact, however, contributes piquancy rather than dullness to the plot. One can see, nevertheless, from the first that Sir Marmaduke Dobbs, the self-made man or "citizen-knight," as he is rather curiously styled, has his thoughtless wife entirely in his power, in virtue of his large-headedness and large-heartedness. At the same time, Helen Dobbs's passion for Basil Emnesco is rather too violent and pronounced. We are presented with too many of her selfish, if not positively sensual, dreams; and the avowal of her own weakness, in the presence of the man who is worse than rude to her, is as improbable as it is degrading. The poetical justice, too, which enables Emnesco to punish Helen by marrying the girl whom she has slighted is juvenile. Some of the characters in Lady Dobbs are successfully sketched—in particular Helen's friend and confidante, Violet Maynard, and the mother of Marmaduke.

The author of Queenie has undoubtedly a vein of her own in fiction—a vein which resembles in some respects however that of the author of Molly Bawn; and she works it in Midge with quite her usual amount of success and even more than her usual amount of gusto. She plants a simple-hearted girl and her helpless and blind artist father in a rural district, and lets them work out their destiny as best they can. There seems, indeed, no particular reason why Marjorie Honey should not get engaged to Oliver Baldock in the second and not in the last chapter; for the Oxley episode in her life is unreal, and that in which the Rev. Madox Brown figures is little better than farcical. But this would have hardly allowed Miss Crommelin to fill a volume with the sights and the sounds of the country—the flowers, the fruits, the trout-fishing, the hay-making, and the clack of the farmyard. It is all very pretty and natural, if a trifle girlish; nor does the comedy which is provided by the careful Tryphena Baldock, who conveniently marries Marjorie's helpless father out of hand, seem misplaced in such surroundings. Experienced novel readers will say, and with a considerable amount of truth, that there is not enough of "heart" in Midge; and certainly the lovers in it indulge—for lovers—to a most preposterous extent in "chaff." But it is none the less enjoyable on that account, more especially as Miss Crommelin's dialect is perfect.

There is a good deal of fresh humour in Mumford Manor which looks like the first effort of a new writer. The style, too, has a good deal to recommend it, even although one comes too often on passages of Madame D'Arblayesque English, such as "In the spring the nightingale and blackcap compete for musical honours, and then Stephen and Chloe on Sundays plight their troth," and "In winter the note of the hound and the huntsman's cheer awake the hybernating nymphs, and volleys of musketry record the death or escape of the hand-reared pheasant." Certainly no fault can be found with the plot as being too conventional; on the contrary, it is grotesquely original. Both ventriloquism and dynamite have no doubt been pressed into the service of fiction ere now; but surely never before to kill one brother in the interest of a mother who drops her h's and has a turn for Roman Catholicism, and to drive another into madness by way of revenge for ruining a girl who oscillates in the most remarkable fashion between the Salvation Army and the Church of Rome. Even recent fiction, moreover, has hardly produced a more extraordinary character than the priest O'Brien, who is a first-rate cricketer and conspirator and a second-rate half-brother, and whose life is quite as mysterious as his death is improbable. The weak feature of Mumford Manor is that there is hardly one of the characters in it—from Daisy St. Denys, the heroine, to that marvellous specimen of a patrician, her guardian, who is not only a caricature, but who looks as if he or she knew it. There is one exception, however, to this rule—Harry Overton, the saner of Daisy's two lovers. He acquits himself, on the whole, like a matter-of-fact well-groomed, well-intentioned, courageous, and modern Englishman. It is evident that Mr. Adamson can draw successful naughty boys like Tommy Walker and parsons like Mr. Claybrook, and he should give freer rein to his faculty.

There is no question as to the ability of either of the writers who, working together, have produced The Master of the Magicians. In phrase-making they are perhaps a trifle too ingenious. But it is difficult to get rid of the popular prejudice which hitherto has to all intents and purposes closed the door of Biblical narrative against the romancist. He cannot move freely without offending many, perhaps the majority, of ordinary readers of novels; and they are quite as conscious of the fact as he is himself. Nor can it be said that Mrs. Phelps and Mr. Ward have succeeded in getting rid of this prejudice, although they have striven hard. In dealing with Babylon during the time of Daniel, they "have not thought it urgent," they tell us, "strictly to follow the Biblical chronology, for reasons obvious to any Oriental student and important to the movement of the narrative." We are also informed that as modern Assyriology has become a rapid and complex series of discoveries, "to dogmatise is to be unscientific," because "the enthusiastic research of to-morrow may overthrow the theory of to-day." That may be, but the authors of The Master of the Magicians have fallen between two stools. In some portions of their "novel," as they persist in regarding their work, they are almost too rationalistic and modern, while in others they are not rationalistic enough. Thus Amytis, the Babylonian wife of Nebuchadnezzar—sensual and cruel, generally half tipsy and half draped, practising upon Daniel the arts of a Potiphar's wife—is quite as real in the French sense as Nana or Emma Bovary; and Allit the soldier and ladies' man is also as real after his fashion as the barbarian who loved Pelagia the wanton. But then when they come to Daniel's feats of thaumaturgy and Nebuchadnezzar's extraordinary madness, Mrs. Phelps and Mr. Ward seem compelled, although with evident reluctance, to confine themselves within the fetters of Biblical miracle. The effect of all this is by no means satisfactory. The story of the Jewish maiden—somehow it is impossible to speak of her as a Jewish girl—who, with the help of the Jewish governor of Babylon, escapes from the clutches of Amytis and attracts Allit from sensual to pure love, is told with spirit. Yet, taken as a whole, The Master of the Magicians is a clever, ambitious, and interesting failure.

There is juvenile freshness in the story told in A Phonographic Mystery, but that is in effect all that can be placed to its credit. It is a queer combination of modern slang, mystery, science and "Ora pro nobis," all located in the west of Scotland, within an easily measurable distance of that "awful hole" Glasgow, living in which (it seems) teaches one that "half the asperities of the Scotch character are due to the national cookery." The idea of utilising Edison's phonograph in such a way as to discover the lingual secret of a poor, apparently idiotic, boy, and to secure ancient treasure, is precisely of the kind to fascinate a beginner in fiction. It is, however, rather clumsily worked out; and the drifting into love of the sister and the friend of Gavin Cunningham ending in "Hal and I understand one another; but he knows that I will never leave you and Hugo alone" is tame and conventional in the last degree. Yet when all this is allowed, it must be confessed that A Phonographic Mystery, being full of "go," is provokingly readable.

Her Last Throw is one of the few but exasperating efforts which the author of Molly Bawn—who now stands confessed as Mrs. Hungerford—has made, in the course of her career as a novelist, to prove that when she is so minded she can plan and execute a tragedy as well as a comedy of calf-love and nun's veiling. Mrs. Hungerford does not, of course, quite fail—for she never fails in drawing an attractive woman; and poor quasi Mrs. Barrington is undoubtedly an attractive woman, in spite (in a sense, rather in virtue) of the misery which has entered into her life, before she comes across Pasco Severne. But then she seems more at home in the company of Fay and Ernest, and the young folks of her ordinary kind, whose chief business it is to make themselves and others happy, and who emphasise most of their sentiments much as their author italicises all the words which she considers of importance. The poor creature who has been mistress to a peer, but who is so little of an adventuress that Mrs. Hungerford's title of Her Last Throw involves an injustice, is virtually a stranger and an alien to those among whom her lot is cast in these pages. Altogether, the wonder is that the author of Molly Bawn has not made a miserable failure with her latest book, even as a tour de force. Still, she had better in future let the shade of human life alone, and play in the sun.

Dr. Gordon-Stables seems, in The Mystery of a Millionaire's Grave, to be, if not precisely a fish out of water, an actor that has for a good number of years figured with success as a rollicking sailor, attempting by way of change to do justice in the rôle of the melodramatic villain. No doubt the mystery of the stealing and the restoration some ten or twelve years ago of the body of Mr. A. T. Stewart is a curiously interesting one; and Dr. Gordon-Stables labours hard, with the help of Romaine's manuscript, to solve the problem somewhat after the fashion of Mr. Rider Haggard. But except in one particular his effort is a ponderous and in every sense dismal fiasco. The attempt to show how the body was actually stolen may be admitted to be cleverly managed, but nothing else is. The facilis descensus Averni of the hero-villain of the story from poet and dreamer to sot, murderer, and body-snatcher, by means of an unhealthy passion, drink, and bad company, is in truth very familiar. The degradation of Lissa to be the consumer of chloral, and, as a consequence, the murderess of her own husband, is however a piece of violent improbability for which there cannot be said to be any excuse. There is the artist Welda, indeed, with her unrequited love and all the rest of it; but the photograph of her in the second last page making porridge, with her sleeves tucked up and her "shapely arms mealy," somehow recalls the picture of Charlotte cutting bread and butter. The poor French girl Ninette is the best sketch in the book, but then Dr. Gordon-Stables has not had the courage to make her French enough. He has struggled conscientiously to make a new departure in fiction for himself, but his success is not such as to induce friendly critics to recommend him to continue in it.

Mr. Hawley Smart has taken almost as kindly to sensationalism, pure and simple, as he in earlier days took to sporting and the aristocracy that are fond of horses and races. If any proof of this was necessary, it has been supplied by A Black Business, in which Mr. Smart works revenge and hypnotism as if he were to the manner born, like Mr. Conan Doyle. He certainly makes a sufficiently interesting and intricate plot out of the misfortunes of a man that is skilfully and slowly tortured into his grave by the brother of the girl whose death he was instrumental in bringing about, and by an Indian juggler of the cold-blooded, diabolic sort. Dormer or Crofton, who is assassinated by pages, and whose character is such that the unregenerate reader of a A Black Business will be certain to declare that he deserves his fate, has indeed two friends, in the shape of doctors who more than smell a rat, and who set themselves to expel one delusion out of their patient's head by means of another.

But they are a day or two too late. Dormer, though mentally comforted by these good spirits, is too much exhausted physically to profit by the sham discoveries they have made. So much for the plot; and in A Black Business the plot is really everything, although the two medical detectives, Goddon and Jansy, are good portraits. A Black Business is, in short, a surprisingly successful story of its kind.

WILLIAM WALLACE.

RECENT THEOLOGY.

THE DONNELLAN LECTURES, 1887-8.—The Christian Ministry. By William Lefroy. (Hodder & Stoughton.) To the works of Dr. Hatch and Mr. Gore on the organisation and ministry of the early Christian Church Dean Lefroy has now added his volume of Donnellan Lectures on the same subject. His book may be succinctly defined as the treatment of the question from the standpoint of Evangelicalism, so that each of the chief parties in the Church may now claim to possess its own exposition of this important subject. Under the circumstances, comparisons, however invidious, are inevitable; and it involves no immeasurable derogation from the substantial merits of Dean Lefroy and Mr. Gore, considered as ecclesiastical partisans, to say that in point of learning, clear insight into the conditions of early Christianity, and a still rarer attribute which may best be described as ecclesiastical statesmanship—the faculty, i.e., of discriminating justly the mutual relations of religious institutions and the reasonable needs of those whom they subserve—Dr. Hatch completely distances his rivals. Add to which that he manifests a power of rising above the tainted atmosphere of party theology of which both Dean Lefroy and Mr. Gore are almost wholly destitute. Probably the point of all others in Dean Lefroy's work which will excite most attention is his treatment of apostolical succession. But his deliverances on this question are neither consistent in themselves nor in harmony with the best traditions of evangelical orthodoxy. Thus he says: "I do not believe the grace of God is limited to Episcopacy," and enforces this perfectly tenable position by supposing that "through some terrible accident . . . all the bishops in the world died," in which dire event he does not think that "the Church would thereby come to an end." But, on the other hand, he holds the Divine origin of the Christian ministry as a ministry of order and of authority, and adds: "No man may reject its message or derange its executive without sin." It would be interesting to learn what this new ecclesiastical offence, "deranging the church's executive," might be. Apparently this "nice derangement of epitaphs" seems intended as an equivalent for the old-fashioned "Schism," and it is the Nonconformist who is most inculcated in this alleged "derangement." However this may be, Dean Lefroy's method of transferring the authority of the church from the individuals to the corporate body or "the executive" is practically fallacious; and it has the further demerit that, by restricting the operations of Divine grace to particular and official channels, it runs counter to the best traditions of Evangelicalism. One of the most noteworthy features of that movement, as set forth by Simeon, Wilberforce, &c., was its democratic tendency—the equality of all men as possible recipients of Divine favour or inspiration. Are we to take this defective recognition of one of the fundamentals of the older creed as a token that current Evangelicalism has been affected by "the wash of the Tractarian wave," as Dean Lefroy puts it? This is, indeed, not the only point of his book which seems to show that the Dean of Norwich is but a weak-kneed Evangelical. So far as it is the most important literary outcome of the school in recent times, we may accept his book as one of many proofs that as a distinctive belief Evangelicalism is on the wane. It is becoming hopelessly out of touch with modern instincts and feelings. The spirituality, vis viva, pietistic unction of the movement has gone, and the hybrid product which now bears the name has little vitality or independence.

The Unknown God. By C. Loring Brace. (Hodder & Stoughton.) The author of Gesta Christi comes before the public with undeniable credentials as a thoughtful and philosophical writer on religious subjects. In his present work, to quote his own words:—

"The writer has taken for his special theme the words used by St. Paul in his sermon on Mars Hill 'The Unknown God,' words which the great Apostle applied also to the spiritual Zeus of the ancient Greeks. The effort of the writer is to show the ancient belief of mankind in the unknown God, and that the greater Father of all has granted his inspirations to many of very different countries and tribes and races. This volume is in some respects a search for the footprints of the Divine Being on the shifting sands of remote history" (p. vi.).

This design has, on the whole, been very ably carried out, though to term it, as Mr. Loring Brace does, "a field not hitherto much traversed," is in curious conflict with the facts of the case. As the pages of the ACADEMY for the last ten years will abundantly testify, there is scarcely a department of theological thought which has been so often and so ably treated. So far as modern research has attained its object, "the Unknown God" of pre-Christian Gentilism has ceased to be unknown. All that is discoverable, together with a not inconsiderable moiety of what must always remain undiscoverable, on this interesting theme has been manifoldly submitted to the judgment of the reading world. But, although it cannot be said that this work fills a gap in theological research, yet its method is so clear, its illustrations so well chosen, and its conclusions, on the whole, so valid and trustworthy, as to entitle it to the attention of every student of the subject. Certain incidental points and questions may, no doubt, be open to criticism, as, e.g., the author's definition of the Buddhist Nirvana, which, in contradistinction from some of the best authorities, he does not conceive to mean the extinction of consciousness; but such disputable points are rare. The work is a meritorious production both in spirit and method, and altogether worthy of the author of Gesta Christi.

Christian Theism. By G. A. Row. (Hodder & Stoughton.) Prebendary Row is so well known as a writer on Christian Evidences that a new work of his on that theme does not seem to need formal introduction. More or less, it appears to be an expansion of his smaller treatise called The Manual of Christian Evidences. His design has been to set forth in a popular form the chief reasons on which the belief in the being of a God, who possesses the attributes which the Christian revelation attributes to Him, is founded. The book is not, therefore, addressed to the scientist or philosophical doubter, but only to the Christian waverer, and its object is to provide him with the ratiocinative aliment suited to his case. It seems to us that the work is well adapted to subserve this special purpose.

The Miracles of our Lord. By John Laidlaw. (Hodder & Stoughton.) Dr. Laidlaw is aware that any work on the Miracles must necessarily challenge comparison with the well-known treatises of Archbishop Trench and Prof. Bruce; but he thinks there is a lack of any work which treats of the didactic aspect of the Miracles. We cannot profess to share this opinion. It seems to us that the didactic and homiletic aspects of the Miracles have been treated in various works to the extremest limits of exhaustiveness. Dr. Laidlaw's method may be defined as the intensification, wherever possible, of the thaumaturgic elements to the neglect of the moral significance of the Miracles. His book is well intended, pious, and sincere; but this does not prevent its being utterly unphilosophical. The mental attitude which the book is calculated to produce is that condition of passive receptivity which would render even the Acta Sanctorum a profitable object of study.

"THE EXPOSITOR'S BIBLE."—The Book of Exodus. By G. A. Chadwick. (Hodder & Stoughton). This seems a fairly adequate contribution to "The Expositor's Bible." Like the other volumes of the series it does not aim at controversy, or criticism even of the most elementary kind. Dean Chadwick passes sicco pede over the many difficulties, historical and other, with which the Book of Exodus abounds. Except by occasional and partial allusions, the reader of this volume might be unaware that every main narrative—nay, almost every passage—in Exodus has been the battlefield of contending theories. On the other hand, assuming the historical veracity and unquestionable authenticity of the book, Dean Chadwick offers many reflections of an improving kind and of various degrees of appropriateness, so that his work may claim to fulfil the cause of its existence.

Essays Towards a New Theology. By Robert Mackintosh. (Glasgow: Maclehose). Some two or three years ago we called the attention of our readers to two remarkable pamphlets by Mr. Mackintosh, entitled The Obsolescence of the Westminster Confession of Faith and The Insufficiency of Revivalism as a Religious System. The essays above named are to be regarded, we are told, as a continuation of the argument begun in those pamphlets. But they have a further significance and a more important opportuneness. They are to be taken in close relation with the liberalising movements now agitating the Established and Free Churches of Scotland. The author justifies his book in these words: "When the Church is preparing to undertake Creed revision, it is the right and duty of students to offer such help as they can to the Christian thought of their time." Mr. Mackintosh's help may be described as a vigorous and thoughtful polemic against Calvinism. But he must pardon us for saying that his essays suffer from overmuch elaboration. He does not seem able to extricate himself from the ponderous systematisation of the school in which he was nurtured. If anything of especial probability can be predicated of the new theology, to which all thoughtful Christians are looking, it is that its teachings will be marked by simplicity. The days of recondite complicated and involved schemes of Christian doctrine are numbered.

The Faith of a Realist. By James Copner. (Williams & Norgate). Mr. Copner takes Realism in the old Scholastic sense of a belief in real existences underlying all phenomena, and makes it the starting point and guiding principle of what he terms Philosophical Religion. His book is divided into a number of separate essays or chapters, in which the difficulties and consecutive stages, &c., of this Philosophical Religion are treated in a clear, unpretentious, and eminently thoughtful manner. Thus, he discusses "The Relation of Philosophy to Science," "God and Providence," "Good in Things Evil," "The Reign of Law," &c., and other similar questions and problems of our time. Among the many books continually issuing from the press and sharing the common design of reconciling science with traditional theology, Mr. Copner's book takes a foremost place for thoughtfulness, sound common sense, and general utility. We have no hesitation in strongly commending it to our readers.

NOTES AND NEWS.

MESSRS. FIELD & TIER announce a companion volume to Picturesque Kensington, treating of the City of London, its people, streets, traffic, buildings, and history. The text has been written by the Rev. W. J. Loftie, who has already tried his hand at the history of the City, and who is certainly master of a picturesque style. The illustrations, numbering at least two hundred and fifty, will be engraved in Paris from original drawings by Mr. William Luker, junior. The work, which will form a handsome quarto, is promised to subscribers on favourable terms; and the publishers have secured their proposed title, "City London," by registering a farthing pamphlet of the same name at Stationers' Hall. Finally, the Queen has been pleased to accept the dedication.

MESSRS. BENTLEY & SON will shortly publish Wayfaring in France, by Mr. Edward Harrison Barker. The work will be descriptive of the highways and byways, the natural scenery, the country inns, and buildings of archaeological interest, together with the customs and character of the people in various districts of Gascony, Dauphiné, Languedoc, Brittany, and Alsace, which the author has traversed on foot. It will contain numerous illustrations.

READERS of Walden and the Week on the Concord and Merrimac Rivers, will be interested to hear that a considerable addition to Thoreau literature may be expected in the autumn. Mr. H. S. Salt's Life of Thoreau, in one volume, will be published by Messrs. Bentley; and the same writer will edit a volume of selected essays from the "Anti-Slavery and Reform Papers," which Messrs. Sonnenschein will include in their "Social Science Series." At the same time Messrs. Houghton, Mifflin, & Co., of Boston, will issue a volume of selections from Thoreau's writings, edited by Mr. Harrison Blake; and we understand that Mr. David Douglas, of Edinburgh, has a similar work in preparation.

MR. REGINALD DICKINSON, one of the Committee Clerks in the House of Commons, has now ready for issue a new edition of his Summary of the Constitution and Procedure of Foreign Parliaments, of which the first edition appeared eight years ago. Mr. Dickinson has now included in his comparative survey the rules of the parliaments of fourteen countries, including Japan. These rules are explained and discussed in eight chapters, which deal with such subjects as the opening of the session, the election of the presidents and other officers, the procedure on bills and motions, &c. As a point of special interest at the present time, Mr. Dickinson shows that the practice of taking up unfinished business in the next session already exists in the following countries:—Belgium, Denmark, France, Greece, the Netherlands, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, and Norway. The book will be published next week by Messrs. Vacher & Sons, of Parliament-street.

THE next volume in Mr. Walter Scott's series of "Canterbury Poets"—which is not, however, to be published until September—will be The Painter-Poets, including poems by Rossetti, Mr. William Morris, Mr. W. Bell Scott, Mr. Thomas Woolner, &c. The editor is Mr. Kington Parkes.

SIR EDWIN ARNOLD, who has been spending many months in Japan, and is at present keeping house with his daughter at Tokyo, has promised to write for Scribner's Magazine three articles upon Japan and Japanese life. Mr.

Robert Blum, who was sent out by the magazine to Japan, is now making the drawings to illustrate these articles, under the guidance and suggestion of the author.

AN item of artistic interest in the forthcoming number of the Universal Review is an article on "Bernadino Luini," by Archdeacon Farrar, who places the Italian painter in a high rank among the Old Masters. The paper is illustrated by reproductions from the works of Luini, notably the "Vierge au Fleur de Lys" in the Albani Palace at Rome. The political article will be supplied by Prof. Freeman, who writes on the "Referendum."

MR. KARL BLIND will have an article in the forthcoming number of the Scottish Review on "Luther Monuments and the German Revolution of 1525."

MR. J. A. STEUART, author of "Letters to Living Authors," which attracted some attention when appearing serially in a magazine, has been appointed editor of the Publishers' Circular from July 1. The "Letters" will be published in volume form, in the autumn, by Messrs. Sampson Low, who also have in the press a novel by the same author.

THE July number of Education contains a report of an interview with Mr. H. Weston Eve, headmaster of University College School, illustrated with an excellent portrait; and also a discussion on "The Ideal Education of a Girl," by Miss Sara A. Burstall, of the North London Collegiate School, Miss Elizabeth A. S. Dawes, and Miss A. A. O'Connor, headmistress of the Clapham High School.

MESSRS. CASSELL will publish immediately, in pamphlet form, the first charge delivered by Archdeacon Sinclair, on "The Condition of the People."

A NEW edition (making the fourth), with considerable additions and an entirely new index, of The Denominational Reason Why, giving the origin, history, and tenets of the Christian sects, with the reasons assigned by themselves for their specialities of faith and forms of worship, will be issued immediately by Messrs. Houlston & Sons.

M. DZIEWICKI, has found in the Prag MS. of Wyclif's Continuatio Logice a large third part of the treatise unknown to Shirley. He thinks it likely to prove highly interesting.

DR. MAX KALUZA, of Königsberg, having now prepared his parallel text of the English Romaunt of the Rose with the portions of the French original from which it was translated, has come to the conclusion that nearly half of the version we have in the unique Glasgow MS. and Thynne's edition of 1532 is really Chaucer's. Out of 7694 lines he gives 3584 to our old poet. Dr. Kaluza thus states his results in a letter to Dr. Furnivall:

"(1) The fragments of the Romaunt of the Rose in the Glasgow MS. are by two different men; lines 1-1704 (or 1768 ?) and lines 5814-7694 are fragments of Chaucer's translation, but the middle part (lines 1705-5813) is another man's.

"(2) Chaucer's translation (1-1704 and 5814 to end) follows the original (as his Boece does) almost word for word and line for line, while the other man paraphrases rather than translates, omits long passages, and inserts others. The difference between the two translations in this respect is at once evident, if you cast a glance at the Parallel Text.

"(3) In lines 1-1704, and 5814-7694, all the phrases and rimes, all the metrical and dialectal peculiarities, are quite the same as in Chaucer's genuine works; while, with a few exceptions, all the non-Chaucerian rimes and forms pointed out by Prof. Skeat in his Essay I.-VI. occur only in the middle part, lines 1705-5813. There is, moreover, the difference between Chaucer's English name Faire-welcomyng (l. 7526, ed. Morris), and the other man's French-following Bialacoi (3573, &c., &c.) for the same woman.

"(4) So, also, the French bouton, the object of the lover's ardent desire, is called knop by Chaucer in line 1702—knoppes, lines 1675, 1683, 1685, 1691—but always botheum, bothon, by the other man, in the middle part. (See lines 1721, 1761, 1770, 1786, 1790, &c.)

"I shall discuss this question at large as soon as I am at leisure."

MR. FREDERICK WEDMORE—who has been obliged to decline an offer from the United States—is, we understand, in the hands of the Lecture Agency (Limited) for the delivery of a few lectures in England and Scotland during the coming autumn.

DR. FREDERIC JOHN MOWAT has been elected president of the Statistical Society for the coming year, in succession to Dr. T. Graham Balfour. The annual report states that the library of the society, which is unique in some respects, is increasing rapidly, and is also more used than formerly.

THE following form the provisional committee of the recently established Philosophy Club, 26, Suffolk-street, Pall Mall:—Canon Bagot, Canon Boger, Prof. Brough, Prof. Herschel, Mr. William Knighton, Dr. R. A. Douglas Lithgow, Prof. Salmoné, Mr. R. Wynne Simpson, and Mr. S. Arthur Strong.

THE third International Shorthand Congress will take place this year at Munich, from August 7 to 17; and the centenary of the birth of F. X. Gabelsberger, the founder of German shorthand, will be celebrated in conjunction with it by the unveiling of a bronze statue. The German system, it may be remarked, is based upon a totally different plan from those generally used in this country, its characters being derived from ordinary current writing instead of forming geometrical strokes. There will also be an international shorthand exhibition. England will be represented by its leading shorthand men, the venerable Mr. Isaac Pitman, accompanied by his wife, at the head. The official representative of the congress in England is Mr. Henry Richter, 52, Leadenhall-street, who is also the president elect of the Shorthand Society in London for the ensuing session.

MR. F. A. LEO has reprinted from the Jahrbuch of the German Shakspeare Society a curious paper entitled "The Autograph of Rosenkranz and Guldenstern." There is preserved in the Royal Library at Stuttgart an Autograph-Book which the librarian thinks may possibly have belonged to Duke Frederick I. of Württemberg. It is a copy of a book of emblems, printed by Christopher Plantin (Antwerp, 1571), interleaved with blank pages, on which are written autographs, each with the date and a motto. The two first are those of the Emperor Maximilian II. and King Frederick II. of Denmark. Besides many other royal and noble personages, the name of Tycho Brahe is included; and it is abundantly evident that the owner of the book had been at Copenhagen. On p. 70 the two following signatures (here reproduced in a zincographic facsimile) are found in immediate juxtaposition:

"1577

"In utraque fortuna ipsius fortune esto memor
"Jörgen Rosenkranz.

"1577

"Ferendum et sperandum
"P. Guldenstern."

The interesting question remains—how could Shakspeare have heard of these two Danish courtiers?

THE ninth volume of the new edition of the Collected Writings of De Quincey (Edinburgh: A. & C. Black) contains his series of papers on political economy, from which not a few readers must have gained their first notions of that science. As these papers mainly consist of a popular exposition of the Ricardian theory, a portrait of Ricardo is appropriately prefixed to the volume. To make up the full tale, the editor has added some articles on English politics, and the translation of Kant's "Idea of a Universal History on the Cosmopolitical Plan."

Selections from Robert Browning, made by Mrs. Albert Nelson Bullens, is the title of a volume of 350 pages, just published at Boston by Messrs. Lea & Shepard. It includes some of the poet's latest works.

MISS F. MARY WILSON writes to us contradicting the statement which appeared in the ACADEMY of June 21, that she has undertaken to write a shilling Browning Primer for the Browning Society.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

MR. E. RAY LANKESTER—who at present occupies the Jodrell chair of zoology and comparative anatomy at University College, London—has been elected deputy professor of human and comparative anatomy on the Linacre foundation at Oxford. The vacancy was caused by the permanent incapacity of Prof. H. N. Moseley.

MR. SOLOMON SCHECHTER has been appointed to the readership in Talmudic at Cambridge, vacant by the death of Dr. Schiller-Szinessy.

THE special board for divinity at Cambridge have appointed Canon Leake, of Lincoln, to be lecturer in pastoral theology for the year 1891.

THE Duke of Devonshire, as chancellor of the university, has given a formal opinion that the professorship of mechanism and applied mechanics at Cambridge does not terminate on the resignation of Prof. Stuart.

THE Fitzwilliam syndicate at Cambridge have granted the use of the theatre of the museum of archaeology to Miss Jane Harrison, for a course of public lectures next term.

THE Cambridge University Reporter for June 24 prints the report of the library syndicate for 1889, together with a list of donations received during the year. About 1200 volumes were presented from the duplicates of the British Museum; and the only known perfect copy of the first edition of the Sarum Hymn (cum notis (Paris, 1518) was purchased at the Burton-Constable sale.

THE Oxford Historical Society has just issued to subscribers its second volume for 1890. This is Vol. II. of Anthony Wood's Survey of the Antiquities of the City of Oxford, dealing with Churches and Religious Houses, edited by the society's most active member, the Rev. Andrew Clark. Prefixed is a coloured map, designed to show what academical and ecclesiastical buildings are definitely known to have existed in Oxford in 1440; and at the end is a diagram, prepared from one of Wood's own, showing the interments in the Cathedral from 1639 to 1670. Needless to say that the editor has not only enriched the volume by abundant notes, but has also added a very full index.

DUBLIN UNIVERSITY, following the example of Cambridge, has instituted the new degrees of Doctor of Literature and Doctor of Science, which are to be conferred only as a mark of distinction. The recipients of honorary degrees at the commencement are the Rev. R. P. Graves (the biographer of Rowan Hamilton), Dr. Richard Marshall, Dr. John Quain, and Mir Aulad Ali, who has been for nearly thirty years lecturer in Arabic at Trinity College.

MR. J. LAWRENCE LAUGHLIN, author of The History of Bimetallism in the United States, &c., has been elected professor of political economy at Cornell University.

THE Sargent prize at Harvard University, for a metrical version of Horace Car. iii., 29, has been awarded to a lady student at the Harvard Annex.

A LATIN performance of the "Menaechmi" of Plautus was given at Chicago on June 6 by students of the University of Michigan.

THE new volume of "Johns Hopkins University Studies in Historical and Political Science" consists of a translation by Miss Henrietta Leonard (of Smith College, Philadelphia), of Prof. Frédéric's interesting paper on "The Study of History in Germany and France," forming a continuation of his former report on historical teaching in England.

THE May number of the Harvard University Bulletin—besides the usual catalogue of accessions to the library, numbering more than forty pages—contains the first instalment of a bibliography of Beaumont and Fletcher, compiled by Mr. Alfred Claghorn Potter. The Boston Public Library seems to have a very good collection of separate plays, as well as of the complete works.

As an indication of the growing popularity of Oriental studies in the United States, it may be noticed that the May number of the Johns Hopkins University Circulars prints a list of books relating to the East in the Enoch Pratt Free Library of Baltimore, compiled by Dr. Cyrus Adler.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

NECKEREI UND REUE.

Wie lieb war sonst die Kleine!
Wie gern umschlang sie mich!
Sie ist noch voller Liebe—
Für sich—ach! nur für sich!

Wie keusch war sonst die Kleine!
Wie edel hielt sie sich!
Sie ist noch voller Keuschheit—
Für mich—ach! nur für mich!

Doch, keusche liebe Kleine,
Nur ich schätz' Deinen Werth.
Von dem, der Dich ganz kennt,
Bist Du, Kind, ganz verehrt.

FRANK T. LAWRENCE.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE June and July numbers of the Expositor are both excellent. The former is the lighter, containing as it does Dr. Plummer's notes of conversations with Dollinger on English topics, and Graf Baudissin's memorial sketch of Delitzsch (already referred to in the ACADEMY). But Canon Hicks's "Ephesian Study" on Acts xix., in which he "submits to public judgment a discovery which is of interest to New Testament students," is enough by itself to dignify this number with the title of "critical." Prof. Lumby's article on the Book of Proverbs gives welcome aid to those who would introduce a freer study of the Biblical writings. Much is said of the later dates of certain Psalms. Biblical theology is represented by Dr. Bruce, who brings to an end his exposition of the doctrinal part of Hebrews. In the July number Prof. Ramsay at great length criticises, partly favourably, partly unfavourably, the brilliant article of Canon Hicks. Neither paper can be here summarised; suffice it to say that the tendency of Prof. Ramsay, even more than of Canon Hicks, is to admit the complete verisimilitude of the narratives of St. Paul's missions in the Acts. Mr. Gibson, of Wells, discusses, with full knowledge and in a historical spirit, the relation of Christian to Jewish worship. He holds that the Missa Catechumenorum, of which the Anglican anti-communion office is "the lineal descendant," is derived from the service of the Jewish synagogue. Prof. Marshall gives an able essay, which deserves to be well criticised, on the question, "Did St. Paul use a Semitic Gospel?" Prof. Milligan concludes his study of St. Paul's statements on the Resurrection of the Dead; and Prof. Cheyne gives a homiletic study on the Sixty-third Psalm, assuming a critical view of its origin and meaning.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- CERREGHIO, G. V., u. J. V. CHOMA. Alte Grabdenkmäler aus Ungarn. Budapest: Kilian. 5 M.
 DIRHL, Ch. Excursions archéologiques en Grèce. Paris: Colin. 4 fr.
 FOURNEL, V. Les hommes du 14 Juillet: gardes-françaises et vainqueurs de la Bastille. Paris: Calmann Lévy. 3 fr. 50 c.
 LAVISSE, E. La vie politique à l'étranger, 1889. Paris: Charpentier. 3 fr. 50 c.
 MATSUJIMA, Y. Die völkerrechtlichen Verträge d. Kaiserth. Japan in wirtschaftlicher, rechtlicher u. politischer Bedeutung. Stuttgart: Deutsche Verlagsanstalt. 12 M.
 MULLER-WALDE, P. Leonardo da Vinci. 3. Lfg. 1. Hälfte. Leonardo als Kriegskünstler. I. München: Hirth. 4 M. 50 Pf.
 PONTMARTIN, A. de. Episodes littéraires. Paris: Calmann Lévy. 3 fr. 50 c.
 RILJEVI, I. delle urne etrusche. Vol. III. parte 1. Pubblicata da G. Körte. Berlin: Reimer. 40 M.
 RUPIN, E. L'Œuvre de Limoges. Paris: Picard. 50 fr.
 STRACK, H. Baudenkmäler Roms d. 15.—19. Jahrh. 2. Lfg. Berlin: Wasmuth. 25 M.

THEOLOGY.

- FEILICHENFELD, W. Die jüdischen Gegner der Heimkehr u. des Tempelbaus unter Cyrus. Eine exeget. Studie üb. Jesaias Kap. 65 u. 66. Frankfurt-a.-M.: Kaufmann. 1 M. 20 Pf.

HISTORY, ETC.

- CLEMEN, P. Die Porträt Darstellungen Karls d. Grossen. Aachen: Cremer. 6 M.
 DE LA BARRIE DUPARCO, E. Nouveaux portraits militaires. Paris: Baudoin. 7 fr. 50 c.
 HORN, A. Die Verwaltung Ostpreussens seit der Säkularisation. 1525—1875. Königsberg: Teichert. 15 M.
 RHORN, C. Die römischen Thermen zu Aachen. Aachen: Cremer. 1 M. 20 Pf.
 SCHMIDT, J. Die Urheimath der Indogermanen u. das europäische Zahlensystem. Berlin: Reimer. 2 M. 50 Pf.
 SEYBOTH, A. Das alte Strassburg vom 13. Jahrh. bis zum J. 1870. Strassburg: Heitz. 15 M.
 THORL, E. La Vie privée d'autrefois. Comment on devenait patron. Paris: Plon. 3 fr. 50 c.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- D'ENGELHARDT, B. Observations astronomiques, faites dans son observatoire à Dresde. 2e partie. Dresden: Baensch. 25 M.
 ETTINGHAUSEN, C. Frhr. v. Die fossile Flora v. Schoenegg bei Wies in Steiermark. 1. Thl. Leipzig: Freytag. 4 M. 40 Pf.
 HEYMANN, G. Die Gesetze u. Elemente d. wissenschaftlichen Denkens. 1. Bd. Leipzig: Harrassowitz. 6 M.
 PLASSMANN, J. Beobachtungen veränderlicher Sterne. 2. Thl. Köln: Bachem. 2 M.
 SCHLOSSER, M. Die Affen, Lemuren, Chiropteren, Insectivoren, Marsupialier, Creodonten u. Carnivoren d. europäischen Tertiärs u. deren Beziehungen zu ihren lebenden u. fossilen aussereuropäischen Verwandten. 3. Thl. Wien: Holder. 8 M.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- ABEL, L., u. H. WINCKLER. Keilschrifttexte zum Gebrauch bei Vorlesungen. Berlin: Spemann. 15 M.
 GOMPERZ, Th. Die Apologie der Heilkunst, e. griech. Sophistenrede d. 5. vorchristl. Jahrh., bearb., übers., erläutert u. eingeleitet. Leipzig: Freytag. 3 M. 60 Pf.
 KAHLE, B. Die altnordische Sprache im Dienste d. Christentums. 1. Thl. Die Prosa. Berlin: Mayer & Müller. 4 M.
 LIENIG, P. Die Grammatik der provenzalischen Lays d'amors, verglichen m. der Sprache der Troubadours. 1. Thl. Phonetik. Breslau: Koberner. 2 M. 80 Pf.
 MIKLOSICH, F. Die türkischen Elemente in den südost- u. osteuropäischen Sprachen. Nachtrag. 2. Hälfte. Leipzig: Freytag. 10 M.
 POLLIO, C. A. Bericht üb. die spanischen Unruhen d. J. 48 v. Chr. auf Grund d. codex Ashburnhamensis neu hrsg. v. G. Landgraf. Leipzig: Deichert. 1 M.
 WEINWEILER, J. Das lateinische participium futuri passivi in seiner Bedeutung u. syntactischen Verwendung. Paderborn: Schöningh. 2 M. 80 Pf.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE ETYMOLOGY OF "DAVIT."

Cambridge: June 28, 1890.

This word is one of which the etymology has never been discovered. Till now, the earliest mention of it has commonly been supposed to be in A.D. 1626, when it was spelt "Dauid" by Captain Smith (Works, ed. Arber, p. 793), as if it were a man's name.

We have overlooked the fact that Mr. Riley discovered a mention of it in Anglo-French three centuries earlier—viz., in 1373. We find "one cable for the boat, thirty ores, one daviot, for the same boat," Memorials of London, by H. T. Riley, p. 370. The etymology is from O.F. daviot, explained by Godefroy as "davier." One sense of davier was "cramp-iron," see Cotgrave. Much the same word is the O.F. daviot, an instrument for forcing a lock (Godefroy). And Rabelais has the form davied, see Littré.

It is thus clear that the E. "davit" and the F. davier are really connected, though we cannot get the E. form out of this late F. one, as proposed in my Dictionary. Both alike go back to O.F. forms, daviot, daviot, of unknown origin. Perhaps Littré is right in proposing to see in them diminutives of the name "David," just as "jacket" is due to the name "Jacob."

WALTER W. SKEAT.

"COCKNEY."

Sydenham Hill: June 23, 1890.

The meaning of "cock's egg" is certainly found in Halliwell (s.v. cockney), but I do not know whether he was the first to make the suggestion. At all events, he did not attempt to explain the connexion between "cock's egg" and the other meanings of "cockney." This was left for Dr. Murray, and he has now made two attempts to explain the connexion. His first view was that a "cock's egg" was an ordinary hen's egg, and that (as far as I understand him) every ordinary hen's egg became in some way or other, for a considerable period of time, the darling, or "nest-egg," as he puts it, of its mother; and that in this way the term "cock's egg" was transferred to a petted and cockered child, to the effeminate man into which such a child would grow, and hence to the inhabitants of large towns generally, and to those of London in particular.

Now I was not aware, although in my childhood and boyhood I took a great interest in fowls (of which my parents kept a large number), that a hen ever, in the way described by Dr. Murray, made a darling of any one of her eggs, let alone all of them; and most certainly I never heard the term "nest-egg" used of an egg to which a hen was supposed to have given her preference. A "nest-egg," which is very commonly a piece of chalk shaped like an egg, is put into a hen's nest simply for the purpose of making the hen think she is going to sit, and so of inducing her to lay other eggs to it, instead of laying them elsewhere. But for such a nest-egg a hen can scarcely be said to entertain any particular affection.

Dr. Murray's second view, which seems to have been suggested to him by the quotation by Mr. H. F. Heath of Grimm's account of the German word Hahnenei, is that a "cock's egg" is a small or misshapen egg, and with this I agree to a certain extent. My own experience in Warwickshire tells me that there at any rate a "cock's egg" is used of an egg without a germ, and I have more or less the support of Halliwell, who tells us (s.v. cockney) that, according to Forby, a "cock's egg" is an abortive egg without a yolk. On the other hand, a native of Aberdeenshire, who is now in my service, declares it to be a very small egg, much rounder than usual, but not otherwise misshapen; while, according to Littré (s.v. Œuf), an "œuf de coq" is nothing more nor less than an "œuf avorté de poule," or a prematurely laid hen's egg. These differences are, after all, but small, and we are therefore, I should say, entitled to conclude that at the present time a "cock's egg" has more or less the meaning of an unusually small, abnormally shaped, and probably abortive egg, which is very much the meaning now claimed for it by Dr. Murray. But the connexion between this and "a child that sucketh long," a "nestle-cock," a "milksoy," seems to him, unfortunately, so very obvious that he does not think it worth his while to explain it, though I very much doubt whether this connexion is quite so obvious to the world in general. I can well conceive that such a term would be readily applied by lusty country-folk to the puny, weakly offspring of too many of the inhabitants of large towns, just as now we might call such children "little abortions." But I fail to see why such a term should be applied to a child whose only failing is that it clings to the apron-strings of its mother, by whom it has been petted and cockered, for such a child might be, and often is, a fine and vigorous child, and is not found in large towns only. At the same time, many of the puny, weakly children of large towns certainly do become their mother's darlings, especially in the middle and upper classes, on account of this delicacy of theirs. And so I can imagine that the term "cock's egg," after first meaning "little abortion," might later on come to be applied to cockered and pampered children, and thus to effeminate men (and perhaps, to women also, see coquine in Cotgrave), to the inhabitants of large towns, and especially to those of London. But perhaps this view is at variance with the history of the word.

Or, again, a "cock's egg" may have been called the darling of a hen, on account of its weeness, just as in Berkshire, so I am told, the inevitable little pig of a large litter is called the "darling."

But is it after all quite certain that cokeney or cokenay does mean a "cock's egg," as this is now understood? I ask this question because both by Halliwell and by Dr. Murray this meaning of "cock's egg" was derived from or supported by a quotation from Florio's Italian Dict., ed. 1611—viz., "caccherelli, hens'-cackling; also egges, as we say, cockanegs"; and this word "cockaneg" has been taken by Dr. Murray to be another form of cokeney or cokenay. But, unfortunately, in a later edition of Florio's dictionary—viz., that by Torriano (London, 1688) this same word caccherelli is defined "Hens-cacklings; by met. new-laid eggs." So that, unless caccherelli had changed its meaning between 1611 and 1688, cockaneg must have meant "new-laid egg," a meaning which I do not see how to get out of "cock's egg." At the same time, a new-laid egg is, to judge from the hen's peacocks of triumph when she has laid it, for the time being the darling of its mother; and I should, therefore, be glad if the cockan of cockaneg (which can scarcely be connected with cackling) could be made out to mean new-laid. I do not, however, find caccherelli in any other Italian dictionary which I have.

In conclusion, it seems to me very doubtful whether Hahnenei does not mean "cock's egg" rather than "cocks' egg," for, if Grimm's dictionary be consulted, it will be found that the gen. sing. of Hahn, as well as the plural, was in old and even in comparatively modern times Hahnen, and that the present gen. Hahns did not come into exclusive use until after the end of the eighteenth century. And in English, at the present time,

"cock's egg" is certainly much more usual than "cocks' egg."

F. CHANCE.

July 2, 1890.

P.S.—The above was written and sent off before the publication of Dr. Murray's last letter (June 28). Till the appearance of that letter I had not been able to make out how a "cock's egg" could at any time have meant a "new laid egg." But Dr. Murray's quotations from Florio—viz., "Cocco . . . delight or glee . . . ; also a cocks egge," and from Baretti, "Cocco, an egg (a word of children); cocco, a darling"—have gone far, so it seems to me, towards solving the difficulty. The French word coco had long been familiar to me, and I had often thought that its childish meaning of "egg" must have been derived from the noise made by a hen after laying an egg; but I had no evidence in support of this view. But on looking for the Ital. cocco in Zambaldi's Vocabolario Etimologico Italiano (Città di Castello, 1889) I found "Cocò [sic] uovo, voce infantile, dal canto della gallina quando ha fatto l'uovo," so that my surmise was confirmed; and, in fact, cocco or coco (or better, the syllable co repeated as long as the breath will hold out, and until a slight crow is heard in consequence of the long inspiration which is required to make up for the loss of breath) is quite as fair a rendering of the cackling of a hen as "cuckoo" is of the cuckoo's note, though in neither of them is there really a hard c or k articulated. And this noise is quite sufficiently similar to the crowing of a cock for a young child to mistake the two, or to regard them as proceeding from the same bird, and so to imagine that a cock had laid the egg. Compare the Piedmontese côca (in Sant Albino's Dictionary), a word used by children and also by grown-up peasant women when calling to a hen. Compare also the modern Provençal coco and cocoto=hen and darling. In neither of these languages or dialects is there any similar word meaning cock (which is gal in Piedmontese and gau in Provençal), so that the words given above were evidently formed in imitation of the cackling of a hen. Compare again the French verb coqueter, which Littré tells us was used in olden time, and that by adults, both of the crowing of a cock and of the cackling of a hen, so little was the difference between them noticed. The "delight or glee" mentioned by Florio, s.v. cocco, was, in the first instance, therefore, the delight or glee manifested by a hen on laying an egg.

In conclusion, Florio, when using cockaneg=caccherelli seems so much to have had the idea in his head that "cockaneg" conveyed in some way the cackling contained in caccherelli that I cannot help asking whether it is possible that "cockaneg" may have meant "cooking egg," that is, an egg over which a hen played the cock by imitating, more or less, his crow. Or did "cooking" ever mean cackling?

F. C.

RESTORATION OF THE MINSTER OF FREIBURG IN BADEN.

Taylor Institution, Oxford: June 28, 1890.

Some readers of the ACADEMY may, perhaps, feel interested in learning that a "Dombau-Verein" has been started at Freiburg in Baden for the purpose of restoring and preserving the noble spire of its minster, which is reported to be in a dilapidated condition. This magnificent cathedral was the pious work of many generations, like the sister cathedrals of Strassburg and Cologne, or of Winchester, Salisbury, and York at home, having been building during a period of nearly four centuries, from A.D. 1152-1513. It is estimated that the cost of restoring the spire and minster generally will amount to about £25,000. An annual subscription of three marks entitles to the membership of the "Dombau-Verein;" but larger donations are, of course, gratefully accepted. One of the members of the committee, Prof. F. Xaver Kraus, of Freiburg, an eminent writer on Christian archaeology, will be glad to receive contributions from English friends desirous of seeing the Freiburg minster preserved in its ancient beauty and glory.

H. KREBS.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

MONDAY, July 7, 5 p.m. Royal Institution: General Monthly Meeting.
WEDNESDAY, July 9, 5 p.m. Society for the Preservation of the Monuments of Ancient Egypt: Annual General Meeting.
SATURDAY, July 12, 3.45 p.m. Botanic: General Fortnightly Meeting.

SCIENCE.

The Apographon of the Ambrosian Palimpsest of Plautus. Edited by W. Studemund. (Leipzig: Weidmann.)

The Ambrosian palimpsest of Plautus is a MS. of the third or fourth century of our era, which in the eighth century was scraped and washed in order to receive a coarsely executed copy of part of the Books of Kings in Latin. If the barbarian who, in order to save a piece of parchment, defaced one of the most valuable and ancient codices of any Latin author had written across the pages or between the letters of the words which form the text of Plautus, he would have earned only half of our imprecations. Instead of that, he preferred to write as far as possible on the top of the text, as though desirous of preserving future generations from the contamination of the heathen comedian. But this was not the end of the misfortunes from which our MS. suffered. A new offender against it arose in the person of Cardinal Mai, whom we must, however, forgive in part, because we owe the discovery of it to him. In 1815 he published his M. Acci Plauti fragmenta inedita—a very insufficient collation, vitiated by the sins of arbitrary omissions and hasty readings; and, in order to secure this poor result, he almost destroyed the parchment by the use of improper chemicals. Ritschl, who collated the MS. afterwards with far greater care, described its piteous state in a letter to Hermann, afterwards published; and he mentioned that the chemical which he himself used in restoring those passages not yet maltreated by Mai brought out the original text far better, and had no bad effect upon the parchment. Mould and damp have also done their work; and the MS. as it now is, perforated with holes caused by the ink of the later scribe and the re-agents of Mai, might have elicited from Plautus the sigh which Daemones utters about his dismantled villa in the "Rudens"—"perlucet ea quam cribrum crebrius." In many pages scarcely more than the frame of the borders remains.

In spite of the enormous difficulties of the task, several modern scholars have attacked the problem of collation, and with ever increasing success; for, after all, many pages are legible with care and patience, supported by an intimate knowledge of the hand of the scribe and of the text of Plautus. Ritschl, who described the work as far the most laborious that he had ever undertaken, was followed by Schwarzmann and Geppert; in recent years Loewe has published his readings in certain plays. But of all collators Studemund was the most laborious; his superiority was generously recognised by Ritschl, who said that for every week he had been able to devote to the work Studemund had devoted a month or more. And since then Studemund—who commenced his collation in 1864, when a young man fresh from the university—continued to pay repeated visits to Milan until the year of his death (1889). The result of his labours is given to the world in the present volume, edited by Prof. O. Leyffert, of Berlin, whose previous services to Plautine criticism are well known to scholars. There can be no doubt that Studemund's apographon—the only complete collation—will take rank as representing to the world the Codex Ambrosianus, and will therefore be indispensable to every Plautine scholar. Where he has not been able to decipher it, others will hardly be likely to succeed; and it will be difficult for any future collator to make good his title to differ from his specially qualified predecessor. One great danger Studemund set himself strenuously to guard against—the temptation of reading into the MS. what he wished to find there; every page of the apographon bears evidence to his scrupulous care and self-restraint.

The extent of the progress which has been affected by successive collators in certain passages may be exhibited by a single instance. In the fragments of the "Vidularia," III., 36 ff., Mai read as follows:

1. Nequ . . . non . . . o domum
2. . . . sororem gorginem
3. Vicinus igitur est . . .
4. Seu quem . . . hunc nouit cum
5. Hic . . . his . . . ego adducito
6. . . . arcam . . . probe
7. . . . quam hic . . .
8. . . . quæram postquam
9. . . . erit . . .
10. Tam scio quam . . . stare
11. Nisi quod ego meis . . .
12. (Hic) astabo atque obseruabo siquem am(cum) . . .

Ritschl read, in lines 1, 2, 3, 6, 11, as follows:

- neq . cenam—non cenabis—immoibodomum ubikabitas—kicapud . . . oremgorginem uicinusigituresmikiuttupraedicas
ategoidulumintrocondaminarcamatq . occludamprobe
nisiquidegometsimilealiquidcontraconsilium . . .

(—denotes a change of speaker; . . . a lacuna. The MS. is in capitals; k = h.) Studemund's apographon gives 16 lines:

1. neq . cenam — non cenabis — immoibodomum
2. ubikabitas — kicapud piscatorem gorginem
3. uicinusigituresmikiuttupraedicas
4. iboetquaeramsiquempossimsociorumnancisci
5. seuquemnorinquiaduocatusadsitiamkunc - nouilocum
6. kicineuskabitis — kiscinaedibuskucadducito
7. ategoidulumintrocondaminarcamatq . occludamprobe
8. tusiquemuisinueniretibipatronumquaerita
9. perfidiesumquamquicquamkicageredecretustmiki

10. qurmalumpatro *numquaserampos-tquamlitemperdidi
11. ne . . . komomipere . . . . .
q . infelixfui
12. uidulumq . . . ubiu . . . inonmecircumspexicentiens
13. uerberoillicintermo . . . locustin . . insidiasedit
14. tamacioquammekicstarecaptampraedam-perdidi
15. nisqueidegoeismilecaliquidcontraconciliumparo
16. kicastaboatq . obseruabosiquemamicumconspicer

Here at last we have a sound basis for restoration. But it must not be supposed that the gain is everywhere proportionately great; on the contrary, it is abundantly proved that in many loci desperati we must definitely abandon the hope of any help from the Ambrosian.

E. A. SONNENSCHN.

SCIENCE NOTES.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & Co. will shortly issue, in a convenient volume, the short treatises on General Ornithology and Field Ornithology which were prefixed to Dr. Elliot Coues's Key to the North American Birds. The matter has been carefully revised, and it is hoped that in this more accessible form it will prove of great value to the ever-increasing number of students of this fascinating branch of natural history.

A NEW work on the Scientific and Scriptural Aspects of Creation, by the Rev. Alfred Kennion, entitled Principia, or the Three Octaves of Creation, is announced for immediate publication by Mr. Elliot Stock.

PRINCE KROPOTKIN is to lecture on "Siberia," on Wednesday next, July 9, at the Portman Rooms, Mr. J. Allanson Picton in the chair. The lecture will be partly geographical.

In the last part of the Records of the Geological Survey of India, Mr. La Touche publishes a report of his official visit to the sapphire mines of Kashmir. About eight or nine years ago sapphires were first brought into Simla by traders from Lahol, and it became known that the stones had been discovered in considerable quantity in the north-western Himalayas. They occur at Padar in the Chinab Valley, and not at Zanskar, as originally reported. The sapphires, associated with coarse corundum, are washed from detrital matter derived from gneissose rocks, in which is intercalated a bed of crystalline siliceous limestone. Considering the inaccessible character of the locality and the difficulty of obtaining labour and preventing smuggling, Mr. La Touche does not believe that the workings are likely to prove very profitable.

FINE ART.

THE SALE OF THE FARNLEY TURNERS.

THE dispersion of the Farnley Turners by Messrs. Christie on Friday in last week drew together an extraordinary group of connoisseurs, dealers, and fashionable or curious loungers, attracted by the fame of the collection which since Turner's own day had remained in the country house which he most frequented. Those who knew the collection well, however, took note of the fact that Mr. Ayscough Fawkes has retained some few of even the finest drawings. Of these, some are in good and some possibly in undesirable condition. And that indeed was the case with those that were sold last week; certain drawings having suffered greatly, and others being absolutely intact. To the latter class belong, we may here say, the series of drawings—most of them rapid drawings in body colour—which Turner made during a brief tour on the Rhine, just seventy years ago, and which Mr. Walter Fawkes, the original collector, forthwith bought. Mr. Walter Fawkes, an entirely liberal art-patron and a friend for whom the painter cherished a genuine affection, paid five hundred pounds for the sketches for which his descendant has just received about five thousand. It is thus clear that even over a very long series of years a Turner drawing is as good an investment as Consols or the debentures of that English railway whose stock is known as "the Consols of the Railway Market." But—remarking this by the way—let us pass on to chronicle in a little more detail the prices of Friday week. Even the second lot in the sale—at a period of its progress when prices generally "rule low"—reached over 400 guineas (Agnew); while immediately after it the exquisite and desirable drawings of "Biebrich Palace" and "Rudesheim" sold for 260 and 200 guineas (Pyke Thompson). "Oberwesel" fetched 310 guineas (Curtis and Henson), and "Cologne" 280 guineas (Agnew). Later in the sale—when there were offered those pure water-colours of the middle period, which at all events when in their pristine beauty witness best to Turner's genius for aerial effects—the "Windermere" reached the astonishing price of 1,200 guineas (Agnew); the "Ullswater" 305; the "Loch Fyne" 690 (Agnew); while for the apparently adequate yet not overwhelming price of 950 guineas, there was sold what had been described as a "Divine Dream of Vevay," a blue and white vision of exceeding radiance and serenity. "Sallenches" fetched 400 guineas; "The Valley of Chamounix" 800 (Agnew); the stately composition of "Lausanne," with the cathedral, meadows, town, and lake, 700 guineas. The two Roman drawings rightly went for somewhat smaller prices; while—happily for its purchaser—only 205 guineas were found needed to ransom the "Source of the Arveron." "Venice from Fusina," realised 630 guineas, being bought by Mr. Vokins. There followed soon after what we may call the sensational prices of the afternoon. "The Lake of Lucerne from Fluelen"—a drawing among those exhibited at Burlington House four years ago, and which Mr. Woods, speaking with all the authority of the rostrum, declared almost unique for importance and excellence, touched the figure of 2,200 guineas; while "Mont Blanc from the Val d'Aosta" realised 1,000 guineas. There were but four oil-pictures. The Turner fever—which seemed to have abated for a moment, when the "Lake of Geneva" crept but slowly up to 2,500 guineas—never raged more highly than when over 2,000 pounds were given for the "Victory returning from Trafalgar," fine as the condition of that canvas undoubtedly was. A small replica of "The Sun rising in a Mist" was bought by Mr. Maclean for 1,000 guineas. And thus came to an end the already historic sale, which has despoiled a country-house of half the treasures which for years had made it memorable and important.

SOME MINOR EXHIBITIONS.

AT the Royal Society of British Artists in Suffolk-street, there is open an exhibition which is in most respects more interesting than any of the recent ones in the same rooms. This is certainly not due to the presence of what are known as "important" pictures; which indeed are conspicuously absent. Nor is it due to the presence of certain decorative designs by Mr. Burne Jones and Mr. Walter Crane and others of that school. It arises rather from the presence of an unusual number of brilliant and engaging sketches by younger and less known men, and of many fine studies of line in black-and-white by Sir Frederick Leighton and Mr. Herkomer. These studies are very instructive, and reveal with particular happiness the individuality of the artists. We shall not be expected, however, to criticise them in detail. Of the works in colour, which attract attention justifiably, we may mention at least one broadly treated church-interior by Mr. Wyke Bayliss, the president of the society; and a curious vision of childhood by Mr. Shepard, which recalls the Italian Segantini, by its apparent naïveté and intensity; and the atmospheric studies or colour studies, it may be, of Mr. Ollson and Mr. Ygylisias; and the several contributions of Mr. Nesbitt and Mr. Breakspear. Mr. Nesbitt is an "impressionist" in the very best sense of a much-abused word—a man, that is, whose impressions of Nature are vivid and poetic, and are, therefore, worthy of preservation. And he knows perfectly how to record them with rich and harmonious colour, with breadth, with subtlety, and with unfailing sense of style, as his two wonderful drawings, "Between the Showers" and "Gullane Common," most particularly show. Mr. Nesbitt, we understand, is a Scotchman of much repute in the North. Here, like Mr. Guthrie at the Grosvenor Gallery, he is a revelation of the present season—another water colour of his exhibited at the Royal Academy having been purchased, we hear, out of the Chantrey Fund. Mr. Breakspear—of whom, for at least one work, we would speak hardly less favourably—is already better known in London. His "Anita," though pleasant, is not the work which we would especially mention. The picture to be most praised is a very complete study of the nude, of equal grace and frankness. Its name matters little. What is clear is that, having possessed himself of a fine model, Mr. Breakspear succeeded in chronicling her beauties with the brush of an observant and an opulent colourist.

Mr. Aubrey Hunt's new pictures, on view at the Goupil Gallery, fully bear out the extremely favourable impression which his art has already created upon the mind of the connoisseur. The subjects of the group now shown are very varied: the Thames below bridge and the lagoons of Venice and the white walls of Tangiers, having alike served the painter and enabled him to display his delicate mastery over effects of light and colour. The most important picture—like that which has been admired this season in the large room at the Royal Academy—is unquestionably that one which is devoted to a record of the River. But while the Academy picture deals with the clashing and contrast of artificial and natural light—the lamps at mast-head of the "last boat up" showing golden or red against the grey of the West—the present canvas is of day-light light alone; and while a part of its charm is dependent on the force and richness and refinement of its colour, it owes something likewise to fortunate composition—to interesting and intricate line. In the centre of the stream a group of barges slung together under escort of a puffing and panting river-tug, are leaving the narrower for the broader waters. To the right, above the low coast-line of warehouse, crane, and dry-dock, the tower of a church that is presumably that of Rotherhithe lifts itself white against a defiled sky. Less conventionally than by Mr. Vicat Cole, and more artistically even than by Mr. Wyllie, the River, in one of the most characteristic of its aspects, has been here painted. Of Mr. Aubrey Hunt's smaller pictures it may be enough to say that there is not one of them which is not a witness to his delicacy of vision, and that nearly all appear to be devoted to an object which they entirely fulfil—that of seizing the most transient, the most baffling, and some of the most delightful effects of illumination and hue. In the lagoon subject, the rapid massing of skies which will almost instantly disperse is perhaps peculiarly noticeable.

* "Fenestra quae post 13<sup>am</sup> litteram hiat ipsi membranario debetur."—STUDERMUND.

OBITUARY.

ROBERT HENRY SODEN SMITH.

ON the twenty-fourth of last month, the earth closed over one whose solid but unobtrusive life-work has been too little known and less recognized—the organiser, though not absolutely the founder, of the Art Library at the South Kensington Museum, now one of the most important of its class.

Robert Henry Soden Smith was born on February, 25, 1822, and died in London on June 20, 1890. His father, the late Captain R. Smith, of Dirleton, in the county of Haddington, served some years in India with his regiment, the 44th, and subsequently settled in Dublin, having been appointed to the office of Athlone Pursuivant-at-arms under Sir B. Burke. He was a man of remarkable physical and mental power, a keen observer and an admirable draughtsman, all which qualities, more or less, were inherited by the subject of this notice. His son, Mr. R. H. Soden Smith, brought up in Scotland when a boy, was afterwards educated at Trinity College, Dublin; and although not a native of Ireland, he never lost certain slight intonations and that turn of words which told of his early days in the Emerald Isle. He was a born teacher, that faculty showing itself at every period of his life; and, although originally educated for the Church, an equally if not more genial field was opened for his high classical and general acquirements, by his becoming tutor to the late Lord Camden. That duty was so well performed that a friendship, ending only in death, was formed with every member of the Pratt family. An elder child with children, but ever their "teacher, guide, philosopher, and friend"; a boy with boys in all their games and jollity, his genial heart pulsated to every other, young and old.

Mr. Soden Smith was appointed subsequently on the staff of the South Kensington Museum. The writer well recollects finding him busily engaged assisting Mr. (now Sir Chas.) Robinson in the arrangement of a series of painted tiles in proper sequence of subject. Here his acquirements soon showed his value, by the assistance he gave in the preparation of the Catalogue of the Special Loans Collection of 1862. The library was yet in embryo when Mr. Smith was made its provisional keeper in 1857; and so keen an observer as the late Sir Henry Cole did not fail to see how well that office might be permanently filled by the provisional keeper. Notwithstanding certain counter influences, Mr. Smith became permanent librarian about 1868, and retained that office till his death. As Sir J. C. Robinson was practically the organiser of the Art Museum, so Mr. Soden Smith was really the organiser of the Art Library. At the same time, he was frequently occupied in aiding the preparation of special catalogues, reports, &c., and in contributions to magazines on his then favourite subject, the fresh-water Mollusca of the British Isles. As juror he drew up the report on Porcelain at the Exhibition of 1871. He was likewise special juror to the great American Exhibition at Philadelphia. He was appointed to accompany Sir Philip C. Owen to Russia. He also prepared the Catalogue of Jewellery exhibited at South Kensington in 1872.

A collector born, this instinct was keenly and judiciously applied in the acquisition of desiderata for the Art Library, which rapidly grew under his direction—a work in which he might have been more ably assisted. For the use of students, he compiled valuable classified lists of books on the various arts and art industries, which, like many others of the printed productions of the Department, are too little known, from their not being made public in the usual way through the agency of the trade.

A lover of nature in every form, and an ardent collector, one special study was of the fresh-water shells, while in antiquarian pursuits he was equally interested in English and Oriental pottery, of both of which he made a large collection—in especial, in the history and forms of finger rings, of which he formed an important Dactylitheca. Enthusiastic in each direction, his delight would show itself as much in the discovery of a rare tiny shell among the slime and duck-weed of a dirty pond as in the acquisition of a fourteenth-century iconographic signet found in England. A lover of the higher literature, he was a clear and careful writer, and not devoid of the poetic fire. This last is shown in the small volume prepared between him and his old friend Prof. A. H. Church, and lately brought out under the title of Flower and Bird Posies. He never married. Simple and inexpensive in his habits of life, he devoted a great part of his income to forming an extensive mixed collection of English and Oriental pottery, bronzes, plate, and rings. To house these rather than himself, he lately purchased a residence in Hammersmith, the enlargement and alteration of which were hardly completed when he died.

His fine tall form and easy bearing, when in the prime of life; his perfect courtesy and unruffled temper; the bright genial expression of that handsome face; the sincerity of that kindly glance and the warm clasp of that honest hand, can never be forgotten by those who knew him well and mourn his loss—not least by him who writes these lines.

Δ.

CORRESPONDENCE.

"THE ART OF JUDAEA."

Bromley, Kent, June 30, 1890.

ON returning to England, I find Prof. Perrot's letter in the ACADEMY of June 14, which seems to require a few words from me. As he has entered on the personalities of attributing "mauvaise humeur et quelque précipitation" to my remarks, in connexion with the temperature at which they were written, allow me to first state that I write this at 62° Fah., and that I see no cause to regret any of the observations that I have made.

As to the omission of the principal decorative examples—the Tombs of the Kings and of the Judges—on account of their Greek age, I will only remark that the very reason assigned for showing the coins and buildings of Justinian—that they illustrate the ideas of previous periods—applies with greater force to the far more important examples which are omitted. The column at the Russian church is almost certainly Solomonic, as the dressing of the stone agrees with that of early Jewish date at Lachish, and entirely differs from the Herodian stone-dressing at Jerusalem. The stela of Mesha, it is true, has no decoration; but even the outline of its sloping sides and rounded top has a decided value in estimating a lost architecture. As to the tomb-restorations of Cassas, they are impossible; for rough solid rock projects where he depicts smooth wrought pilasters. They cannot represent what he saw a century ago, but what he unveraciously imagined.

Prof. Perrot's ingenious emendation of supposing that I have confounded the description of Seid el Ghazi with Gaza is out of court.

The account given in the English version of his work joins the Gaza country and Esdraclon with the Jordan valley in the gushing description of its natural beauties (the French version I have not here to refer to). I pointed the passage out to Count D'Hulst, who was as much amused as myself.

Now, allow me to assure Prof. Perrot that my sole wish is to see archaeology thoroughly treated; and nothing will give me greater pleasure than to afford him every information and facility for reproducing in his volumes on Greek art the primitive Aegean pottery of the XIIth and XVIIIth Dynasties, which I shall shortly exhibit in London. If he would favour London with a visit this summer, and see the things, this would be best of all.

W. M. FLINDERS PETRIE.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

WE understand that Messrs. Macmillan & Co. have undertaken to publish a translation, by Miss Eugenie Sellers, of Dr. Schuchhardt's popular account of the excavations carried out by Dr. Schliemann on the site of Troy, at Mycenae, Tiryns, and elsewhere. It is believed that the book will be of value even to those who possess Dr. Schliemann's own works, not only as bringing them up to date, but as showing the connecting links between the several discoveries. As a text-book for the use of students of archaeology, the volume, with its abundant illustrations, cannot fail to be welcome.

THE annual general meeting of the Society for the Preservation of the Monuments of Ancient Egypt will be held in the rooms of the Society of Antiquaries, Burlington House, on Wednesday next, July 9, at 5 p.m. The Earl of Wharfedale will preside.

THE Royal Society of Antiquaries of Ireland will hold a meeting at Athlone on Tuesday next, July 8. For Wednesday a visit is arranged to the islands in Lough Ree, which contain many memorials of early Irish ecclesiastical history; and for Thursday an excursion to Clonfert and Clonmacnois, famous for its seven churches, round towers, and cemetery with inscribed gravestones. An interesting programme has been prepared by the Rev. Prof. Stokes, of Dublin, who will himself read a paper on "Athlone in the Seventeenth Century." Mr. T. J. Westropp has also promised a paper on "The Normans in Thomond."

THE twelfth annual ecclesiastical art exhibition, which has of late years proved such an important adjunct to the Church Congress, will this year be held in the Drill Hall of the Artillery Barracks at Hull. It will include every article used in the building and decoration of churches, and space will also be reserved for educational books and appliances. The loan department will include old plate, embroidery, wood and ivory carvings, paintings, and photographs.

It is not often that we get such a sympathetic piece of art biography as that of Mr. W. B. Richmond, by Mr. Alfred Higgins, in the Art Journal for July. We all know the style and refinement of Mr. Richmond's work, and can judge of the sources of his ideal of form; but it throws a good deal of light on the peculiar colour and texture of his work to know that he has deliberately aimed at the effects of tempera rather than oil painting, even while employing the latter medium. As one of the most accomplished and elegant draughtsmen of the day, he needs no interpreter but the illustrations to the article; but why drawing in red chalk and pencil should be changed to blue, and why one in silverpoint should be printed in red, we are at a loss to understand. While the illustrations of the Art Journal in recent numbers have kept at about their usual level, the literary matter has, if anything, improved. Mr. Claude Phillips's summary of the exhibitions of the season (including the Salon) is far above the average of current criticism.

THE STAGE.

THE "ANTIGONE" AT BRADFIELD.

THE recent representation of the "Antigone" of Sophocles by the masters and boys of Bradfield College deserves a distinguished place among those revivals of the Attic drama which have given to many a fresh interest in Greek literature, and have repeatedly enabled a modern audience to appreciate the permanent value of a Greek play, not in its narrower aspect as a theme for verbal criticism, but in its broader outlines as a work of art.

The representation at Bradfield differs from all the rest in the fact that the theatre, like that of classic times, was in the open air. There were three performances—on June 24, 26, and 28. Invitations had been sent by the Warden, the Rev. H. B. Gray, to the universities of Oxford and Cambridge, the Hellenic Society, and many of the public schools; and all who responded to the invitation had good reason to be gratified with the result. My own visit was on the first day. On this, as on the other days, a goodly number of visitors were driven over in well-appointed brakes from Reading, Pangbourne, and other places in the neighbourhood. They assembled in the beautiful hall of the College, where they were welcomed and entertained by Mrs. Gray and the Masters, until the sound of the trumpet apprised them of the approach of the hour fixed for the performance—five in the afternoon. They then made their way along a road strewn with straw to deaden the sound of any passing conveyance, and soon descended by sloping paths among trees down into the spacious chalkpit which had been skilfully converted into a theatre for the present occasion. Inscriptions in Greek pointed out the way to the theatre, and also drew attention to the cushions which had been provided, and were now presented to every visitor, with a thoughtfulness which reminded one of the scene in the "Knights" of Aristophanes, where Demos is duly grateful for a similar mark of attention. The seats were formed of hard and solid concrete, and were arranged in concentric rows and divided off into separate blocks like those of an ancient theatre. On taking one's place, there was time to notice the square altar of Dionysus in the centre of the Orchestra, as well as the substantial stage-buildings, all of them designed and erected by the public spirit of the Warden. The buildings resembled the façade of a Greek temple; and on the pediment, and elsewhere, were appropriate mottoes painted in bold characters. The first is the couplet by Simonides:

ἐσβέσθης, γῆραι ᾠδοῦν, ἄσθως αἰδοῦν,
οἰκωπὸν Βάκχου βότρυν ἐρεπτόμενος.

Anth. Pal. vii. 20.

Below this was one of the most memorable lines in the play:

οὗτοι συνέχθην, ἀλλὰ συμφιλεῖν ἔφυν.

L. 523.

Then followed the first line of the closing couplet of an epigram by Dioscorides:

εἴτε σοὶ Ἀντιγόνην εἰπεῖν φίλον, οὐκ ἂν ἀμάρτοι, εἴτε καὶ Ἥλεκτραν· ἀμφοτέραι γὰρ ἄκρον

Anth. Pal., vii. 37-9.

Lastly, on the hyposcenum, we had a dedicatory inscription, inspired doubtless by that of Phaedrus found in a similar position at Athens, and allusively referring to the name of the Warden and the College:

σοὶ τῷδε Γλαῦκος ἔτευξε, φίλῳργε, θῆμα θεάτρου τῆσδ' Ἀκαδημίας εὐρυχόρου φύλαξ.

The trumpet sounds again, and silence has already fallen on the assembly, when the Warden, robed as Leader of the Chorus, advances from the palace-door in the centre of the stage, and makes the thrice-repeated proclamation—εὐφημεῖτε δὲ πολῖται. He then withdraws; and the play begins with the dialogue at daybreak between Antigone and Ismene (Mr. C. M. Blagden and Mr. C. K. Maconochie). The Chorus of fifteen Theban Senators then approach by a passage to the right of the stage, with the Warden as Coryphaeus at their head, singing in unison the splendid ode to the "Beam of the Sun," which (at the first representation) was happily sung under a cloudless sky. The music of the choral odes had been composed by the Rev. J. Powley, Precentor of the College. It was effective, and apparently simple in itself, though doubtless difficult to learn by heart in consequence of its general uniformity. It had the great advantage of allowing the words to be more distinctly heard than is usual in Greek plays set to modern music. The accompaniment was duly subordinated to the voices; as in the ancient drama, it consisted of a flute alone. The flute-player was draped in a white chiton and soft-green himation, and looked exactly as if he had come out of a picture by Mr. Alma Tadema. During the choruses he was seated towards the right end of the Hyposcenum on an antique chair as of white marble, with a low music-stand of the same colour in front of him: The dresses of the Chorus were admirable in their varied and harmonious hues; and the general effect was very striking while they were going through their evolutions, and, perhaps, still more so when they fell into groups in different parts of the orchestra while the dialogue was proceeding on the stage. But, at the beginning of the first Stasimon (πολλὰ γὰρ δεῖν, κ.τ.λ.), it was a little peculiar to find the whole of the chorus close under the Hyposcenum with their backs to the audience, looking towards an empty stage. This, however, continued for a short time only. Again, the Hyporchema in honour of Dionysus (1115-1154) too closely resembled "a choral ode of a graver cast," instead of "a lively dance-song" heightening by force of contrast the impending catastrophe. But nothing could have been more effective than the last words of the play as sung by the chorus, and repeated in the distance when they had already passed out of view on the same side as that on which they first entered.

The performance, as a whole, reflected great credit on all concerned; and the audience expressed their approval by applauding at the proper places, as well as very heartily at the end. The part of Antigone is peculiarly difficult, partly because, as observed by Prof. Jebb, "two qualities are at the basis of her character—a steadfast and passionate enthusiasm for the performance of her duty, and intense tenderness, purity, and depth of domestic affection." The easier part of Ismene was played with taste and feeling by one who had evidently been well-trained. Both were perhaps at their best in the short dialogue beginning with Ismene's line "Is life worth aught to me bereft of her?" and ending with the line rightly assigned to Antigone, "O dearest Haemon! Hear thy father's scorn." (The quotations are from Mr. Blagden's contribution to the very creditable verse-translation mainly written by the boys themselves). Creon was represented by Mr. A. C. Wade with remarkable skill and singular dignity. His action and delivery alike were excellent. The boy who sustained the part of Teiresias was successful in personating a prophet bowed down in extreme old age. He was also unconsciously true to one of the traits of advancing years in occasionally displaying a slight defect of memory. One of the masters, Mr. F. M.

Ingram, made an effective First Messenger; and another, Mr. R. C. Guy, acted the part of the Sentinel with a sense of humour that showed he was fully conscious of a certain affinity between his part and that of Launcelot Gobbo in the famous soliloquy in the "Merchant of Venice." It would be difficult to say too much in praise of one who appears in the playbill not as Coryphaeus only, but also as Choragus, the Warden of the College. As the master spirit of the whole performance, as the magnificent promoter, the Herodes Atticus, of the Greek play at Bradfield, he is entitled to the gratitude of all who had the privilege of being present on an occasion of almost unrivalled interest. As one sat in the open air, rejoicing in the clear sky, and at the same time screened from the sun by the structure that rose to the west of the stage, and sheltered from the wind by the trees that were fringing with green the white soil above the topmost seats, while the birds in their branches were from time to time joining in the chorus, one could not fail to recall the poet's own description of his birthplace—"the fairest home in the land of goodly steeds, the white Colonus, where down in the green glades the clear-voiced nightingale most loves to sing, amid bowers that know no heat of sun, no blast of storm"; and one felt at once that it was a spot such as Sophocles himself might have chosen for the revival of his own "Antigone."

J. E. SANDYS.

The "Antigone" of Sophocles was played three times last week by the boys at Bradfield College, Berkshire, the performance being given under exceptionally favourable circumstances in a disused chalk-pit adjoining the college grounds. Here a Greek stage, orchestra, and auditorium were erected at the expense of the Warden; the auditorium consisting of semi-circular tiers of solidly built steps, rising to about thirty feet above the level of the orchestra, in the middle of which stood an altar dedicated to Dionysus. The stage represented the palace of Creon, the walls being hung with shields, and the entablature inscribed with lines in praise of Sophocles.

The interest of the entertainment was both literary and histrionic, a verse translation of the play by the sixth-form boys being presented to every visitor. It is modestly said in the preface to this translation that it makes "no pretention to poetry and very little to scholarship"; but, as a matter of fact, it is eminently readable, and it rises more than once above the ordinary level of similar poetical versions. The Parodos and First Stasimon, by Mr. H. C. Moore, exhibitor of Balliol, are especially felicitous, his employment of such compound words as "argent-shielded," "all-resourceful," "field-abiding," and the like, having a fine Greekish flavour which one misses somewhat in the smoother lines of Plumptre and Donaldson. The picturesque lament of Antigone in the Fourth Episode is also remarkably well done by Mr. J. W. Jenkinson, scholar of Exeter.

The acting, to say the least of it, was as creditable as the translation. Those who played the female characters laboured under the inevitable disadvantage of being boys in masquerade; but they were capitally made up, and comported themselves with maidenly discretion. If Mr. C. M. Blagden's Antigone was somewhat heavy and passionless, it was at all events free from exaggeration; while Mr. Maconochie's Ismene was not only tender and gentle, but actually graceful. The parts of Haemon and Teiresias were effectively given by Messrs. H. S. Burnell and C. E. C. Prentis; and Mr. J. W. Harrison did as much as could be done with so minor a rôle as that of Eurydice. The honours of the play, so far as the boys were concerned, were, however, undoubtedly carried off by Mr.

A. C. Wade, whose Creon was rendered with a stern reserve and a tragic dignity entirely Greek. The parts of the Sentinel, and of the First and Second Messengers, were undertaken by three of the masters, the suicide of Haemon in the tomb of Antigone being described by Mr. F. M. Ingram, in the character of the First Messenger, with extraordinary power and dramatic effect. It is not too much to say that in this gentleman the stage has lost a really fine actor.

The getting up of the piece was most carefully studied, and the accessories were correct and in good taste. Everything was as real and as little stagey as possible. The wreaths upon the heads of the Chorus and the solitary flute-player were of natural bay-leaves; incense was burned upon the altar at the beginning and end of the play, and before the choral invocation to Dionysus; the brass armour of the royal body-guard and the sceptre of Creon were copied from originals in the British Museum; and the male characters, disdaining the abomination of "fleshings," were bare-armed and bare-legged, and wore sandals on their naked feet. The Rev. L. de Brisay, as the flute-player, clad in green and white, sat under the stage in a chair fashioned like the chairs of the Archons in the Theatre of Dionysus at Athens, playing from time to time such simple and mournful strains as might well echo the lost moods of the Greek schools of music. The Chorus meanwhile, whether moving with measured steps to the burden of their song, or sitting in scattered groups, attentive to the play, were always picturesque; the soft sea-greens, ambers, cinnamons, and salmon-pinks of their chitons forming delightful and ever changing harmonies of colour. They were led, moreover, by the Rev. H. B. Gray, Warden of the College, with a rhythmic fervour which so heightened the illusion that one almost forgot now and then that the blue sky overhead was not the sky of Hellas.

The weather (on June 24) was perfect. Scarcely a breath stirred the leaves of the young maples on the brink of the chalk-pit above. The larks sang high in air, and the swallows flitted to and fro as they listed. Had the spectators also been in old Greek garb, and had the actors spoken their verses in such accents as are used by native Greek scholars when they recite the masterpieces of their own ancient literature, it would have left nothing to be desired. But this is heresy.

AMELIA B. EDWARDS.

STAGE NOTES.

NEXT week we may have something to say about the matinée of "Illusions"—a play by Pierre Leclercq, which was produced on Thursday afternoon, with Miss Marion Lea in the chief character. To-day let me add only a few lines of record of a matinée on Tuesday, when it pleased the attractive and accomplished pupil of a very accomplished master to essay the performance of what was long accounted, and may indeed still be reckoned, among the great test parts of modern tragedy. The piece, of course, was "Fazio," which is the very remarkable work of the late Dean Milman; and the actress who was the cause of its recent performance is Miss Claire Ivanowna, a young Russian lady. It is amazing how full of good stage situations and of telling bits of natural and unstilted dialogue "Fazio" is. Here and there the phraseology is indeed but cheaply poetic, as where, for instance, the admirable divine who was the author of the play elects to call a thing "passing strange" rather than "very odd." But on the whole, although passages of unquestioned beauty are rare, the merits of the play are such that it is only surprising that it has of late years been so much neglected. As regards the actress, our praise need not be stinted. Miss Ivanowna is, to begin with, a decidedly fine young woman, with a rich and expressive voice, and an accent in English very much less marked than that which we endured nearly a generation ago in Mme. Stella Colas, or than that which contributed to make a sometime overrated Polish lady almost intolerable. Her poses are agreeable and effective, and her gestures very telling; and there is no reason that we know of why the charm of a fuller and subtler facial expression may not be added in due time to the stage virtues we have already named. The lady can express passion with breadth and picturesqueness; and Mr. Hermann Vezin must, on the whole, have been satisfied with the result of his teaching, and have admitted, to boot, that the pupil had added something of her own, which mere instruction, however necessary, could not have conveyed to her. Mr. Julian Cross and Mr. Lewis Waller, and one or two other well-known and capable people, were creditably engaged in Tuesday's performance.

MR. WILLARD—who has arranged to play "Judah" during the remainder of the summer—will sail for New York, it is understood, on October 1.

MUSIC.

RECENT CONCERTS.

AN exceedingly interesting "historical concert" was given on June 26, at Sir Julian Goldsmid's house in Piccadilly, by Signor Franceschetti, assisted by Count G. Vinci (violin), Signor de Piccollellis (violoncello), Signor Dabiero (lute), and Signor Mancinelli (pianoforte). The ancient Greek "Hymn to Calliope" ("Eis Mousa"), harmonised in the Hypo-Lydian mode by the late Sir George A. Macfarren for W. Chappell's History of Music, was the first specimen presented. It was most impressively sung by Signor Franceschetti, the rather anachronistic pianoforte accompaniment being played by Signor Mancinelli. From this early work (the text is attributed to Messomedes of Crete, between the second and fourth centuries) a jump was made to Gabriell Fallamero (1500), who was represented by a Canzonetta with lute accompaniment. Following others came a Violin Sonata by Tartini (1692), an excerpt from the Opera "Euridice," by Jacopo Peri (1560), and songs and pieces by Falconieri (1616), A. del Leuto (1645), Boccherini (1730), Durante (1710), Paradisi (1710), and Pergolese (1732) respectively. The room was well filled, and the performances generally excellent.

The Philharmonic Society's final concert of the season was remarkable for a wonderfully finished performance of Spohr's Ninth Violin Concerto by M. Ysaie—who also played a piece by Paganini as an encore—and for a rendering of Beethoven's Choral Symphony (composed for this society), which, as regards the instrumental portion especially, fell considerably below the standard we have now a right to adopt in judging performances by a first-rate orchestra. The opening movement in particular was given with a want of majesty, tenderness, and due regard to the poetic intentions of the composers—obvious to any intelligent musician—that irresistibly suggested the slipshod manner of former days. The Scherzo was coarsely played, and in the divine Adagio the phrasing of the elaborate passages for violins was so lacking in freedom that their exquisite grace and tenderness were almost entirely lost. The vocal portions fared better; for though the soloists—Miss Fillunger, Miss Hilda Wilson, Mr. Maldwyn Humphreys, and F. W. Morton—were rather overweighted, the choruses were capitally given by the now disbanded Novello Choir, reassembled for the occasion. The remaining items were Costa's Quartett, sung by the singers just named, and Macfarren's Overture "Chevy Chase." Mr. Cowen conducted.

On Saturday, at the Albert Hall, before a large though not a crowded audience, Mme. Patti sang portions of her somewhat scanty répertoire with the success that until now has never failed her. That she was in her best voice may not be said, but all she did was artistically perfect; and as she was reasonably liberal in the matter of encores, her audience had no ground for complaint, especially as their pleasure was further ministered to vocally by Mrs. Henschel, Madame Patey, Mme. Antoinette Sterling, Mr. Edward Lloyd, Mr. Durward Lely, Mr. Henschel, and the Lotus Glee Club; and, instrumentally, by Miss Marianne Eissler, M. Johannes Wolff, the Chevalier Emil Bach, and a competent orchestra under Mr. Ganz, who also acted as accompanist.

The seventh Richter concert, "given in conjunction with the Wagner Society" (i.e. its London Branch), consisted exclusively of excerpts from the works of Wagner. Miss Pauline Cramer, who has never, within our recollection, sung so well, was heard in "Elizabeth's Greeting" from "Tannhäuser," in the tremendously-exacting finale from the "Götterdämmerung," and, with Mr. Henschel, in the closing scene of "Die Walküre." Her intonation was excellent, her phrasing intelligent, and her powers equal to the heavy demands made. Mr. Henschel, too, was in excellent form, his declamation of Wolfram's beautiful solo, "Blick' ich umher," from "Tannhäuser," being especially worthy of praise. The purely instrumental items comprised the Overtures to "Rienzi" and the "Flying Dutchman," and the "Vorspiel und Liebestod" from "Tristan." That works so familiar were adequately dealt with by Herr Richter and the band he has so wonderfully trained need not be insisted on, nor is it necessary to place on record the reverent attention with which they were heard by the crowded and enthusiastic audience.

A concert was given at St. James's Hall on Wednesday evening by a choir of 100 Welsh ladies under the direction of Mrs. Clara Novello Davies, assisted by twenty other Welsh ladies, who played on ten pianofortes, and by MM. Hirwen Jones, Ffrangcon Davies, and Johannes Wolff. Miss Amy Sherwin was also to have sung, but was prevented by indisposition, her place being filled by Miss Nellie Asher. The first part of the concert consisted of Messrs. Weatherly and J. L. Roedel's Cantata "Westward Ho," a bright and taking little work, which pleased the audience greatly, and four numbers of which were encored. It was capitally sung by the choir—whose fresh young voices, spirit, and precision were at once appreciated—and by the Misses Mary Thomas, Maggie Davies, Gwen Coslett, Maggie Jones, and Nellie Asher, to whom the solos, duets, &c., fell. Dr. E. H. Turpin did excellent service at the organ, and Mrs. Clara Novello Davies conducted with a vigour and discretion worthy of the sterner sex.

MUSIC NOTES.

READERS of the ACADEMY will be concerned to hear that Mr. J. S. Shedlock has met with a serious accident. On Saturday last, about noon, he was knocked down and run over while crossing the Strand. After the first shock, he recovered sufficiently to be taken to his own home, where it was ascertained that a shoulder-blade had been fractured. He is, of course, still confined to his bed; but we are glad to be able to say that he is making satisfactory progress.

THE NINETEENTH CENTURY.

JULY.—Price 2s. 6d.

THE AFRICAN BUBBLE. By Sir JOHN POPE HENNESSY, K.C.M.G.
 THE LIGHTS OF THE CHURCH and the LIGHT OF SCIENCE. By Prof. HUXLEY.
 COMPENSATION or—CONFISCATION. By T. W. RUSSELL, M.P.
 THE FRENCH OPERA. By Mdlle. BLAKE DE BURY.
 THE THREATENED DISFIGUREMENT OF WESTMINSTER ABBEY. (With Plans.) By the Editor.
 CHARLES the TWELFTH of SWEDEN: a Memoir (concluded). By His Majesty the King of Sweden and Norway.
 INCREASE OF CANCER: its Probable Cause. By HERBERT SNOW, M.D. (Surgeon, Cancer Hospital).
 OFFICIAL POLYTHEISM IN CHINA. By Sir ALFRED LYALL, K.C.B.
 THE PRESS and GOVERNMENT. By FREDERICK GREENWOOD.
 THE CRISIS in the POST OFFICE. By J. L. MANON (General Secretary to the Postmen's Union).
 ON CRITICISM: with some Remarks on the Importance of Doing Nothing. By OSCAR WILDE.
 WHAT I SAW at TEL-EL-KEBIR: a Rejoinder. By ARTHUR V. PALMER.
 THE IRISH LAND PURCHASE BILL. By the Right Hon. EARL GREY.

London: KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRUBNER, &amp; Co., Limited.

THE FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW.

JULY.

THE ACTOR-MANAGER. By H. A. JONES and H. BEERBOHM TREE.
 RUSSIAN PRISONS: the Simple Truth. By E. B. LAMIN.
 PROTECTION OF AMERICAN LITERATURE. By EDMUND GOSSE.
 STANLEY'S EXPEDITION and its RESULTS. By J. SCOTT KELTIE.
 THE WORKMEN OF PARIS, 1890-1890. By Madame DARMESTETER.
 AMONG THE EUGANEAN HILLS. By J. A. SYMONDS.
 ENGLAND and GERMANY in AFRICA (with Map). By H. H. JOHNSTON, Commander LOVETT CAMERON, R.N., and E. W. BECKETT, M.P.
 CHAPMAN & HALL, Limited.

JEWISH QUARTERLY REVIEW.

Edited by I. ABRAHAM and C. G. MONTEFIORE.

Vol. II. JULY. No. 4.

Price 3s.; Annual Subscription, post free, 10s.

CONTENTS.

THE LATE CHIEF RABBI, DR. N. M. ADLER. By Dr. A. FRIEDLANDER.
 FRANZ DELITZSCH (1813-1890). By Prof. DAVID KAUFMANN.
 JEWISH TAX-GATHERERS at THEBES in the AGE of the PTOLEMIES. By the Rev. Prof. A. H. SAYCE.
 THE JEWISH SIBYLLINE ORACLES. By S. A. HIRSCH.
 NOTES UPON the DATE and RELIGIOUS VALUE of the BOOK of PROVERBS. By C. G. MONTEFIORE.
 A UNITARIAN MINISTER'S VIEW of the TALMUDIC DOCTRINE of GOD. By R. TRAVERS HENFORD.
 SABBATARIANS of HUNGARY. By W. BACHER.
 JEWISH IDEALS. By JOSEPH JACOBS.
 CRITICAL NOTICE.—DRIVER'S NOTES on the HEBREW TEXT of the BOOKS of SAMUEL. By I. ABRAHAM.
 NOTES AND DISCUSSION.

D. NUTT, 270, 271, Strand, W.C.

BERKSHIRE NOTES & QUERIES:

A Quarterly Journal devoted to the Family History, Antiquities, and Topography of the Royal County.

Edited by GEO. F. TUDOR SHERWOOD.

Subscription, 6s., per annum, post free, in advance.

Vol. I., Part I., JULY, 1890.

CONTENTS.

DUNCH FAMILY.
 BERKS RECORDS and their PLACES of DEPOSIT.—I. The British Museum.
 WILLS in the CHANCELLOR'S COURT, OXFORD.
 ADMONS. in P.C.C., 1633-1654.
 NON-PAROCIAL REGISTERS of BERKSHIRE.
 EPITAPHS in HUNGERFORD CHURCH, 1763.
 QUERIES: Hill-Goldwyer—Blagrove Pedigrees—John Blagrove's Works—Theale: Hundred and Village—Englefields of Englefield—Berke Churches—Ancient Coins and Roman Roads.
 REPLIES.—REVIEWS.

London: ELLIOT STOCK, 62, Paternoster Row, E.C.

EDUCATION:

An Illustrated Journal for the Scholastic World.
 SIXPENCE MONTHLY.

CONTENTS FOR JULY.

- EDITORIAL NOTES.
- H. WESTON EVE, M.A., Head Master of University College School. (With Full-page Portrait.)
- SCHOLARSHIP WORK—III. Public Schools—I. By MONTAGU BALDWIN, M.A.
- THE IDEAL EDUCATION of a GIRL. A Discussion by SARA BURSTALL, B.A., ELIZABETH DAWES, M.A., and A. A. O'CONNOR.
- PHILIPPA GARRETT FAWCETT. (With Full-page Portrait.)
- SANITARY REGISTRATION of BUILDINGS (SCHOOLS). By MARK H. JUDOK, A.R.I.B.A.
- EDUCATIONAL GOSSIP.
- CORRESPONDENCE.
- REVIEWS and NOTICES.

London: ROSEN &amp; DROWLEY, 11, Ludgate Hill, E.C.

TO STOUT PEOPLE.

Sunday Times says: "Mr. Russell's aim is to eradicate, to cure the disease, and that his treatment is the true one seems beyond all doubt. The medicine he prescribes does not lower, but builds up and tones the system." Book (128 pages), with Recipe and Notes how to pleasantly and rapidly cure obesity (average reduction in first week is 5 lb.), post-free, Eight Stamps.

F. C. RUSSELL, Woburn House,
 Store Street, Bedford Square, London, W.C.

NATIONAL

FOR MUTUAL

LIFE ASSURANCE.

48, GRACECHURCH STREET, LONDON.

JUST PUBLISHED.

"There is not a dull line in it."—*Word and Work."WHAT CHEER O!"

OR, THE STORY OF THE MISSION TO DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.

By ALEXANDER GORDON.

Beautifully Illustrated by Gordon Browne, W. S. Stacey, C. J. Staniland, and J. R. Wells.

JAMES NISBET &amp; Co., 21, Berners-street, W.

May be obtained from the Offices of the Mission, 181, Queen Victoria-street, E.C., price 1s., or post-free, 1s. 8d.

1890.—SECOND EDITION.—Price 12s. 6d., cloth.

SUMMARY OF THE CONSTITUTION AND PROCEDURE

OF

FOREIGN PARLIAMENTS,

Compiled by REGINALD DICKINSON,

Barrister-at-Law,

One of the Committee Clerks of the House of Commons.

London: VACHER & SONS, 29, Parliament-street, S.W., and SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT, & Co., Limited.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

THREE per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS, repayable on demand.

TWO per CENT. INTEREST on CURRENT ACCOUNTS calculated on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.

The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of Charge, the Custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuables; the Collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons; and the Purchase and Sale of Stocks, Shares, and Annuities. Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post-free, on application.
 FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

FISHER'S GLADSTONE BAG.

CATALOGUES POST FREE.

S. FISHER, 188, STRAND.

REDNESS, ROUGHNESS, AND CHAPPING PREVENTED.
 FAIR, WHITE HANDS AND HEALTHFUL SKIN AND COMPLEXION SECURED.

PEARS' SOAP.

This world-renowned Toilet Soap has obtained 15 International Awards as a Complexion Soap. It is specially suitable for Ladies, Children, or delicate and sensitive skins generally. Its regular use cannot fail to benefit the worst complexion.

Recommended by Mrs. LANGTRY and Madame ADELINA PATTI.

FRY'S

Lancet—"Pure and very soluble."
Medical Times—"Eminently suitable for Invalids."

PURE CONCENTRATED

Sir C. A. Cameron—"I have never tasted Cocoa that I like so well."

President Royal College of Surgeons, Ireland.

COCOA

Paris Exhibition, 1889: GOLD MEDAL awarded to J. S. FRY &amp; SONS

CHATTO &amp; WINDUS'S NEW BOOKS.

HISTORY, &amp;c.

THE FRENCH REVOLUTION. By Justin H. McCarthy, M.P., Author of "Ireland since the Union," "England under Gladstone," &c. 4 vols., demy 8vo, 12s. each. [Vols. I. and II. ready.]

"Mr. McCarthy has produced what promises to become the popular history of the Revolution for our own generation."—Daily News.

A HISTORY of the FOUR GEORGES. By Justin McCarthy, M.P., Author of "A History of Our Own Times," &c. 4 vols., demy 8vo, cloth extra, 12s. each. [Vols. I. and II. ready.]

A SHORT HISTORY of OUR OWN TIMES. By Justin McCarthy, M.P. Popular Edition. Post 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

TALES of OUR GREAT FAMILIES. By Edward Walford, M.A. Revised Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.

"Filled with abundance of out-of-the-way knowledge.....Often very entertaining." Scottish Leader.

NEW NOVELS AT ALL LIBRARIES.

THE BURNT MILLION. By James Payn, Author of "By Proxy," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"Mr. James Payn has the peculiar gift of writing a novel as if he were telling you a story vis-à-vis, and interesting you in it, not only by reason of its plot, but also by his way of narrating it.... The story will interest the Million and delight Thousands."—Punch.

SYRLIN. By Ouida. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"We have here a very clever and even brilliant collection of chapters.... The critical insight at times is startling.... It is a work of genius."—Glasgow Herald.

WITHOUT LOVE or LICENCE: a Tale of South Devon.

By HAWLEY SMART. Second Edition. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"It is certainly one of its author's best stories."—Spectator.

THE BISHOPS' BIBLE. By D. Christie Murray and Henry Herman. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"A very sound and wholesome piece of work... Isaac Stringer's character is a really masterly study."—Guardian.

NEW SIX-SHILLING BOOKS.

THE FIRM of GIRDLESTONE: a Romance of the Unromantic. By A. CONAN DOYLE, Author of "Micah Clarke," &c.

"One of the best of its kind published this season.....The novel is an excellent one, and every one will read it."—Daily Telegraph.

THE HOLY ROSE, &c. By Walter Besant. With a Frontispiece by Fred. Barnard.

"The Holy Rose" is a touching and charmingly written record.... The subject is treated with the pathetic tenderness of which Mr. Besant has the secret."—Morning Post.

PAUL JONES'S ALIAS, &c. By D. Christie Murray and Henry Herman. With 13 Illustrations by A. Forestier and G. Nicolet.

"The figures have a clearness of definition and a subtlety of conception that would not discredit our greatest masters of fiction. Altogether, people who are on the look out for entertaining reading cannot easily do better than make acquaintance with this volume." Scottish Leader.

THE LAWTON GIRL. By Harold Frederic, Author of "Seth's Brother's Wife." With Frontispiece by F. Barnard.

"One of the best, most pathetic, and, in the highest sense, most humorous books which have come over from America within the past few years."—Academy.

THE MAN from MANCHESTER. By Dick Donovan. With 23 Illustrations by J. H. Russell.

"Told with a great deal of dramatic vigour."—Glasgow Herald.

BRET HARTE'S NEW STORY.

A WAIF of the PLAINS. By Bret Harte, Author of "The Luck of Roaring Camp." With 60 Illustrations by Stanley L. Wood. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.

"If ever there was a real book, it is here..... Bret Harte has written a book which every man and woman in the country should read."—Star.

JAMES PAYN'S NEW BOOK.

NOTES from the "NEWS." By James Payn, Author of "By Proxy." Crown 8vo, Portrait Cover, 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d.

"Just the book to be taken up when one has two or three minutes to fill. It is full of good stories and interesting facts."—Speaker.

ONE SHILLING, MONTHLY.

THE GENTLEMAN'S MAGAZINE.

CONTENTS FOR JULY.

ON A MOUNTAIN. By LILLIAS WASSERMANN.—"INNKEEPER for EUROPE." By JAMES RAMSAY.—SCHRECKENSTEIN: the Key of the Elbe. By JAMES BAKER, F.R.G.S.—TWO RELICS of ENGLISH PAGANISM. By SIDNEY O. ADDY.—IN A SCOTCH "SMIDDY." By ALEXANDER GORDON.—AN INDIAN CRIME. By J. W. SHERER, C.S.I.—THE MAGPIE CATERPILLAR. By FRANK E. BEDDARD.—A WALK UP THE VALLEY of the CONWAY. By EDWARD WALFORD, M.A.—FINES. By ALEX. CHARLES EWALD, F.S.A.—TRAMPS and THEIR WAYS. By PEREGRINUS.—A ROUSSEAU of the GUTTER.—THE BULL-FIGHT in PARIS. By SYLVANUS URBAN.

SCIENCE-GOSSIP: an Illustrated Medium of Interchange for Students and Lovers of Nature. Devoted to Geology, Botany, Physiology, Chemistry, Zoology, Microscopy, Astronomy, Telescopy, Physiography, Scientific Photography, &c. Edited by Dr. J. E. TAYLOR, F.L.S., &c. Price 4d. Monthly, or 6s. per year post-free. [JULY Number now ready.]

LONDON: CHATTO & WINDUS, 214, PICCADILLY, W.

TRAVEL, SPORT, &amp;c.

A SOCIAL DEPARTURE: How Orthodocia and I went Round the World by Ourselves. By SARA JEANNETTE DUNCAN. With 111 Illustrations by F. H. Townsend. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 7s. 6d.

"A bright and pleasant book..... We have not seen for a long time any sketches more truly artistic, more picturesque, more lifelike, more delicately humorous, more full of touches and tones of beauty. As to the book itself, its charm is in its way of telling things..... The whole impresses the reader as a pleasant enterprise, out of which has come a pleasant record." Daily News.

"The reader who does not have 'a good time' over 'A Social Departure' must have a blunted appreciation of fun and pluck. There is not a dull page in it.... The story is told with wonderful dash and cleverness; and the illustrations are as good as the text."—Scotsman.

OBERAMMERGAU.—THE COUNTRY of the PASSION PLAY, and the Highlands of Bavaria. By L. G. SEGUIN, Author of "Walks in Algiers." With a Map and 37 Illustrations. Third Edition, with a New Preface for 1890. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.

SOCIETY in PARIS: the Upper Ten Thousand. A Series of Letters from Count PAUL VASILI to a Young French Diplomat. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE BLUE RIBBON of the TURF: a Chronicle of the Race for the Derby, from the Victory of Diomed to that of Donovan. With Notes on the Winning Horses, the Men who Trained Them, the Jockeys who Rode Them, and the Gentlemen to whom they belonged; also Notices of the Betting and the Betting-Men of the Period; together with an Account of the Surroundings of the Race, and Brief Accounts of the Oaks. By LOUIS HENRY CURZON. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.

"A more complete history of the race than has ever before been compiled. Will be welcomed by most sportsmen."—Standard.

"One of the most useful and entertaining books that has been recently added to the literature of sport."—Globe.

POPULAR TWO-SHILLING NOVELS, now publishing.

Herr Paulus. By WALTER BESANT.

The Devil's Die. By GRANT ALLEN.

This Mortal Coil. By GRANT ALLEN.

Eve. By Rev. S. BARING GOULD.

Fettered for Life. By FRANK BARRETT.

A Rogue's Life. By WILKIE COLLINS.

Tracked and Taken. By DICK DONOVAN.

Strange Secrets. By CONAN DOYLE, and others.

King or Knave? By R. E. FRANCILLON.

Romances of the Law. By R. E. FRANCILLON.

The Spectre of the Camera. By JULIAN HAWTHORNE.

The Mystery of the "Ocean Star." By W. CLARK RUSSELL.

Dr. Rameau. By GEORGES OHNET.

Passion's Slave. By RICHARD ASHE KING.

One Traveller Returns. By CHRISTIE MURRAY and H. HERMAN.

A Game of Bluff. By HENRY MURRAY.

Chance? or Fate? By ALICE O'HANLON.

The Mystery of Mirbridge. By JAMES PAYN.

The Romance of Jenny Harlowe. By W. CLARK RUSSELL.

The Blackhall Ghosts. By SARAH TYTLER.

The Englishman of the Rue Cain. By H. F. WOOD.

NEW PICCADILLY NOVELS.

Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d. each.

SOWING the WIND. By E. Lynn Linton, Author of "Patricia Kemball," &c.

AN OCEAN TRAGEDY. By W. Clark Russell.

POCKET VOLUMES.

Printed on laid paper and handsomely half-bound, 2s. each.

The Barber's Chair; and The HEDGEHOG LETTERS. By DOUGLAS JERROLD.

The Essays of Elia. By CHARLES LAMB.

Robinson Crusoe. Edited by JOHN MAJOR. With 37 Illustrations by George Cruikshank.

Whims and Oddities. By THOMAS HOOD. With 85 Illustrations.

The Epicurean; and Alciphron. By THOMAS MOORE.

Anecdotes of the Clergy. By JACOB LARWOOD.

Gastronomy as a Fine Art. By BRILLAT-SAVARIN.

Leigh Hunt's Essays. Edited by EDMUND OLLIER.

The Natural History of Selborne. By GILBERT WHITE. Edited by T. BROWN, F.L.S.

HENRY BLACKBURN'S ART HANDBOOKS.

ACADEMY NOTES. 175 Sketches. 1s.

GROSVENOR NOTES. 86 Sketches. 1s.

NEW GALLERY NOTES. 87 Sketches. 1s.

THE PARIS SALON. 400 Sketches. 3s.

NATIONAL SOCIETY of FINE ARTS, PARIS. 331 Sketches. 3s.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 949.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, JULY 12, 1890.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

	PAGE
STANLEY'S IN DARKEST AFRICA, by Prof. KEANE	23
MCCARTHY'S THE FRENCH REVOLUTION, by W. MARKHEIM	24
WRIGHT'S COMPOSITION OF THE FOUR GOSPELS, by the Rev. R. B. DRUMMOND	25
WOODBURY'S TALKS WITH EMERSON, by W. LEWIN	26
MYERS'S LIFE OF LORD ALTHORP, by ARTHUR ARNOLD	27
NEW NOVELS, by WILLIAM SHARP	27
SOME BOOKS ON FOLKLORE	29
NOTES AND NEWS	30
TRANSLATION: FROM PAUL VERLAINE, by ARTHUR SYMONS	31
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	31
A PALI ADDRESS TO AN ENGLISH GOVERNOR	31
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS	31
CORRESPONDENCE:—
De Quincey's alleged Untruthfulness, by Mrs. Baird-Smith; The Lost Works of Philo, by F. C. Conybeare; The Substantive "Louke" in Chaucer, by Prof. Skeat; An Icelandic upon "The Bondman," by Jón Steffánsson; Printing at Avignon in 1444, by W. E. A. Axon	32
LILLY'S ON RIGHT AND WRONG, by A. W. BENN	33
CORRESPONDENCE:—
Contributions to Pali Lexicography	34
SCIENCE NOTES	35
MILLAR'S HISTORICAL CASTLES OF SCOTLAND, by J. M. GRAY	35
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	36
"ILLUSIONS," by F. WEDMORE	36
STAGE NOTES	37
MUSIC OF THE WEEK	37
MUSIC NOTES	37

THE LECTURE AGENCY LIMITED (late of Birmingham), 3, GEORGE YARD, LOMBARD STREET, LONDON, E.C., act as AGENTS for the most distinguished Lecturers and Entertainers in Great Britain.

H. R. H. the PRINCE OF WALES is the subject of the ESSAY for which prizes of TWENTY GUINEAS are offered by the LECTURE AGENCY, LIMITED, of 3, GEORGE YARD, LOMBARD STREET, LONDON, E.C. Conditions forwarded upon receipt of a stamp for postage.

THE GIRTON GOVERNESS and SCHOOL AGENCY.—MADAME ACHERY introduces English and Foreign Governesses, Governess Pupils, Visiting Teachers, Companions, &c., and recommends Schools and Educational Homes; Schools transferred, Partnerships arranged.—27, Regent Street, S.W.

GENTLEMAN with capital seeks JUNIOR PARTNERSHIP in Publishing Business; or would treat for Share or Purchase of Country Newspaper.—Apply in confidence to Z., care of Stoddard & Neilson, Solicitors, Glasgow.

IVAN AIVASOVSKY.—A Collection of 30 Large and Important MARINE PAINTINGS by this well-known Russian Artist now ON VIEW at the GOSPEL GALLERIES, BOUSSOD, VALADON, & CO., 117, NEW BOND STREET. Admission 1s.

POPULAR INSTITUTE MANAGER.—The advertiser desires to engage the services of a gentleman to take charge of the Organisation and Management of a Popular Institute, with Library, Class-rooms, Music-room and Gymnasium, Baths and Playing-grounds, in a Midland county, amongst an intelligent population of country artisans and agricultural labourers. This inquiry is made bona fide, and deserves attention from gentlemen interested in such work.—Address, "Institute," c/o Mercury-office, Leeds, with a note of age, qualifications, and experience, salary, and referees.

THE "GEORGE BULLEN" TESTIMONIAL FUND.

Many friends and admirers of Dr. GEORGE BULLEN, C.B., F.R.S., having expressed the wish, that after his services, of upwards of fifty years, at the British Museum, so efficiently performed in the Reading Room and as Keeper of the Printed Books, a suitable ACKNOWLEDGMENT should be offered to him on his retirement. An influential Committee of Noblemen and Gentlemen, with the EARL SPENCER, K.G., as Chairman, has been formed to carry out such an object, and SUBSCRIPTIONS are invited to be at once sent to B. F. STARKES, Esq., Hon. Treasurer of the proposed Testimonial Fund, 4, Trafalgar Square, W.C., or to Messrs. BARCLAY, RANSON & CO., Bankers, 11, Pall Mall East, who have kindly consented to receive them.

CATALOGUES.

BAEDEKER'S & BADDELEY'S GUIDE-BOOKS.
New Detailed CATALOGUE, now ready, sent post free on application—DULAU & Co., 37, Soho Square, London.

TYPE-WRITING.

TYPE-WRITING, in best style, at 1d. per folio. Shorthand Notes taken. References to Authors—Miss GLADDING, 1, Loughborough Road, Brixton, S.W.

Small Advertisements continued on page 37.

TRISCHLER & CO.'S LIST. AT ALL LIBRARIES AND BOOKSELLERS.

A RAILWAY FOUNDLING. 3 vols.

By NOMAD, Author of "The Milroys."
The Daily Telegraph says: "It is a story which from the outset is delightfully tantalising. It is a story that must be read to be understood. There is vivacity and adventure in it, and good as the authoress's previous work, 'The Milroys,' was, it is not too much to say this is better."
The Sunday Times says: "It is a novel of an agreeable kind, a graphic picture drawn by the hand of an expert, and the story is interesting and amusing."

THE ROMANCE of a STATION. 2 vols.

By Mrs. CAMPBELL PRAED, Author of "Nadine," "Affinities," "Policy and Passion," "Australian Heroine," &c.
The Spectator says: "This is a really able writer, but she has never done anything quite so good as 'Romance of a Station.' The fascinating, inscrutable Necta Wilson, the veiled Princess, is a veritable creation, whose presence in any book would suffice to make it notable. We hope Mrs. Campbell Praed will give us other books that we can praise as heartily and unreservedly."

THE QUEEN of the BLACK HAND.

By HUGH COLEMAN DAVIDSON, Author of "The Old Adam," "Cast on the Waters," "The Green Hills by the Sea." Cloth gilt, 3s. 6d.
The Glasgow Herald says: "The name of Hugh Coleman Davidson has become so well known to novel readers that they know what to expect when he gives them a new book."

DARELL BLAKE. By Lady Colin CAMPBELL. 8th Thousand. Extra cloth, bevelled boards, 272 pages, 6s.

From the Saturday Review:—"The character of Lady Colin Campbell's hero is intensely interesting. It reveals uncommon acuteness and freshness of observation, and that reserve of power which the possession and artistic control of power can alone suggest. Lady Colin Campbell is certainly gifted in the art, so like intuition it may well be intuition, that impels the unfaltering hand to stay at the moment in the process of characterisation to give the required accent of light or nuance of shade, with the simple and delicate touch that is most effective."

DOCTOR GREYSTONE. By Madame VAN DE VELDE. Third Thousand. Bevelled boards, cloth extra, 252 pp., 3s. 6d.

The World says: "Dr. Greystone" is a clever and original book; and in these days of over-emphasis and exaggeration an author who can pass so quietly and simply over the scene in the prologue of the erring wife's death deserves high praise."

MIDGE. By May Crommelin, Author of "Brown Eyes," "Violet Vyvian," "Cross Roads," &c. Cloth gilt and bevelled boards, 6s.

Just out.

THE COPPER CRASH. By Frank DANBY. Author of "Doctor Phillips," "A Babe in Bohemia." Seventh Thousand. Picture boards, 2s.

Underhill, Author of "In at the Death," &c. A Realistic and Sensational Sporting Story. Picture boards, 2s.

A NASTY CROPPER. By G. F. UNDERHILL. Author of "In at the Death," &c. A Realistic and Sensational Sporting Story. Picture boards, 2s.

JUST OUT.—NEW BOOK BY JOHN STRANGE WINTER.

DINNA FORGET. By the Author of "Bootsie's Baby" and "Harvest." 30,000 copies of "Dinna Forget" have been sent in fourteen days. Paper, 1s.; cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

The Scotsman says: "John Strange Winter's tale is a love-story that is like nothing else in fiction except the former work of this pleasing author. It is sentimental without being spongy, and carries the interest lightly along without haste and without rest."

A SOCIETY SCANDAL. By Rita, Author of "Sheba," "The Mystery of a Turkish Bath," &c. Eleventh Thousand. Paper, 1s.

AGATHA'S QUEST. With Preface by JULES VERNE. By ROBERT SHERARD, Author of "Rogues." Paper, 1s.

ENORMOUS SUCCESS OF MISS AMYE READE'S REALISTIC AND SENSATIONAL NOVEL.

RUBY! RUBY! RUBY! or, How GIRLS ARE TRAINED FOR CIRCUS LIFE

Amongst others the following well-known ladies and gentlemen have kindly allowed their names to be used as indicative of their desire to assist the author in her well-directed efforts to bring before the public the horrible cruelties practised by circus trainers on offending children who are committed to their care for the purpose of special instruction:—

Gainsford Bruce, Esq., Q.C., M.P. H. H. Raphael, Esq., London School Board.

Jacob Bright, Esq., M.P. John W. Rowntree, Esq.

Sir Richard Temple, M.P. R. Manuel, Esq., M.A.

Joshua Rowntree, Esq., M.P. Colonel D'Oyley Batley, High Sheriff, County Wicklow.

Walter McLaren, Esq., M.P. Mrs. Annie Jarvis, School Board, Edinburgh.

Rev. R. Macbeth, M.A. Mrs. F. A. Walker, M.A., D.D.

Rev. F. A. Walker, M.A., D.D. Mrs. F. Bennet, Richmond.

Mrs. F. Bennet, Richmond. Mrs. F. Morrison, Farmwood, Ascot.

Royal Commission.—Mr. Gainsford Bruce, Q.C., M.P., has promised that as soon as sufficient evidence can be obtained to justify such a step, he will call attention to the matter in the House of Commons, with a view of inducing the Government to advise her Majesty to appoint a Royal Commission to inquire into and report upon the treatment of children whilst being trained to the business of circus riders, acrobats, and contortionists.

Cloth, 2s. 6d.; picture boards, 2s.

Manchester Guardian says: "Ruby" by Amye Reade. This book is notable on account of the charges brought by the authoress against a manager or managers in general of circuses. It is an indictment so tremendous that, if it can be proved, the authoress should not be content with representing a picture to harrow novel readers. She should collect her proofs and lay them before the Public Prosecutor. Miss Reade asserts that in cases of contumacious girls of seventeen are stripped naked by the circus-master and flogged by him till they are sick and faint and bleeding."

18, NEW BRIDGE STREET, BLACKFRIARS, E.C.

MACMILLAN & CO.'S LIST.

THE PRINCIPLES of ECONOMICS.

By ALFRED MARSHALL, M.A., Professor of Political Economy in the University of Cambridge, Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge, sometime Fellow of Balliol College, Oxford. 2 vols., 8vo. Vol. I. [In a few days.]

THE METHODS of ETHICS. By HENRY SIDGWICK, Knightbridge, Professor of Moral Philosophy in the University of Cambridge; Author of "The Principles of Political Economy," "Outlines in the History of Ethics for English Readers," &c. Fourth Edition. 8vo, 14s.

MR. MONTAGU WILLIAMS'S REMINISCENCES. POPULAR EDITION.

LEAVES of a LIFE. Being the Reminiscences of Montagu Williams, Q.C. Fifth Thousand. Popular Edition. Crown 8vo, 10s. In cloth, with Portrait, 3s. 6d. In paper covers, 2s. 6d.

NEW NOVELS.

PLAIN TALES from the HILLS. By RUDYARD KIPLING. 1 vol. Third Edition. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE TRAGIC MUSE. By Henry JAMES, Author of "The Europeans," "Daisy Miller," "A London Life," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo, 31s. 6d.

A SOUTH SEA LOVER: a Romance. By ALFRED ST. JOHNSTON, Author of "Camping among Cannibals." 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

MACMILLAN'S 3s. 6d. NOVELS—New Volumes.

WHEAT and TARES: a Modern Story. By Sir HENRY CUNNINGHAM, K.C.I.E., Author of "Ceruleans," "The Heriots," &c. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

LOUISIANA; and THAT LASS o' LOWRIE'S. By FRANCES HODGSON BURNETT. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

RUBÁIYÁT of OMAR KHAYYÁM, the ASTRONOMER-POET of PERSIA. Rendered into English Verse. Extra, Crown 8vo, in parchment binding, 10s. 6d.

AN INDEX TO SIR GEORGE GROVE'S "DICTIONARY OF MUSIC."

A DICTIONARY of MUSIC: an Index and Catalogue of Articles contributed by each Writer to Sir GEORGE GROVE'S "Dictionary of Music." By Mrs. EDMOND R. WODEHOUSE. 8vo, 7s. 6d.

THIRD AND ENLARGED EDITION.

THE NATIONAL GALLERY, a POPULAR HANDBOOK to. Including, by special permission, Notes collected from the Works of Mr. Ruskin. Compiled by EDWARD T. COOK. With Preface by JOHN RUSKIN, LL.D., D.C.L. Third Edition, Revised, Rearranged, and Enlarged. Crown 8vo, 14s.

POPULAR EDITION.

A SEASON in SUTHERLAND. By JOHN E. EDWARDS-MOSS. Crown 8vo, sewed, 1s. 6d.

"The Saturday Review says:—"It is a delightful little volume for the lounge in summer shade, or for the tourist who likes a little sport and natural history when rambling. Who loves these, and loves a garden too, will thank Mr. Edwards-Moss for as pleasant a book as could be desired."

SIXPENNY EDITION.

CHARLES KINGSLEY'S NOVELS. A Sixpenny Edition of CHARLES KINGSLEY'S Novels. Medium 8vo, Sixpence each. Monthly volumes as under:—

WESTWARD HO! [Next week.]

HYPATIA. [Aug.]

YEAST. [Sept.]

ALTON LOCKE. [Nov.]

TWO YEARS AGO. [Dec.]

HEREWARD THE WAKE. [Jan., 1891.]

MACMILLAN & CO., LONDON.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

POPULAR NOVELS.

A NEW NOVEL.

AN AUSTRALIAN GIRL.

In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "OUGHT WE TO VISIT HER?"

PEARL POWDER. By Mrs.

ANNIE EDWARDES, Author of "Leah: a Woman of Fashion," &c. In 2 vols., crown 8vo.

SECOND EDITION OF

ACTE. By Hugh Westbury,

Author of "Frederick Hazzleden." In 3 vols., crown 8vo.
"One of the best historical novels since 'The Last Days of Pompeii.'"—Saturday Review.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THAT UNFORTUNATE MARRIAGE."

MADAME LEROUX. By

FRANCES ELEANOR TROLLOPE, Author of "Black Spirits and White," &c. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"It is a satisfaction to possess now-a-days an author who reminds us so often and so pleasantly of the best achievements of the great writers, and who never lapses into dulness or tediousness."—Manchester Examiner.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "A DREAMER."

MR. BRYANT'S MISTAKE.

By KATHARINE WYLDE, Author of "An Ill-Regulated Mind," &c. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"To say that in this novel the characters and results of their actions are traced out step by step in the incidents and the plot of the story, and that they teach in this way an interesting legend, is only to give the author the praise which her skilful workmanship unquestionably deserves. The merits of this story are indisputable."—Athenaeum.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "MY LITTLE LADY."

The FAILURE of ELIZABETH.

By E. FRANCES POYNTER, Author of "Among the Hills," &c. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"The heroine is drawn with all the kindly knowledge and gentle experience which characterise Miss POYNTER'S art, and who, 'failure' though she may be, yet carries the sympathy of her reader with her to the end."—World.

A NEW EDITION, in 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

SIR CHARLES DANVERS.

By the Author of "The Danvers Jewels," &c. Forming the latest addition to "Bentley's Favourite Novels."

Each in 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

NOVELS BY ROSA N. CAREY.

NELLIE'S MEMORIES.

BARBARA HEATHCOTE'S TRIAL.

NOT LIKE OTHER GIRLS.

ONLY the GOVERNESS.

QUEENIE'S WHIM.

ROBERT ORD'S ATONEMENT.

UNCLE MAX.

WEE WIFIE.

WOOD and MARRIED.

Each in 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

NOVELS BY RHODA BROUGHTON.

COMETH UP as a FLOWER.

GOOD-BYE, SWEETHEART.

JOAN. | NANCY.

NOT WISELY but too WELL.

RED as a ROSE is SHE.

SECOND THOUGHTS.

BELINDA.

"DOCTOR CUPID."

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street,
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

MR. EDWARD ARNOLD'S LIST.

THE MODERN MALADY; or, Sufferers

from "Nerves." By CYRIL BENNETT, Author of "The Massage Case," &c. With an Introduction by HERBERT TIBBITS, M.D., F.R.C.P. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

"Common sense speaks from every page"

Manchester Examiner.

MY WIFE'S POLITICS. By Horace

HUTCHINSON. An Amusing Story for the Holidays. Price One Shilling. At all Booksellers and Railway Bookstalls.

"No one will take up the story without heartily enjoying it."—Scotsman.

LAMB'S ADVENTURES OF ULYSSES.

With an Introduction by ANDREW LANG. Cloth, square 8vo, 1s. 6d.; also, an Edition specially bound for a Prize or Gift-Book, gilt edges, 2s. 6d.

PROF. EGGLESTON'S HISTORIES OF the UNITED STATES.

1. THE HOUSEHOLD HISTORY. Royal 8vo, 12s.

2. THE SCHOOL HISTORY. Square 8vo, 7s. 6d.

3. THE CHILD'S HISTORY. 4s. 6d.

These volumes contain hundreds of finely worked illustrations and maps, and form a series of unrivalled beauty on the subject of which they treat.

THE BEST ELIZABETHAN PLAYS,

comprising "The Jew of Malta," "The Alchemist," "Philaster," "The Two Noble Kinsmen," and "The Duchess of Malfi." Edited by W. R. THAYER. Large crown 8vo, 612 pages, 7s. 6d.

"A useful edition, slightly expurgated."—Times.

SCHOOL AND COLLEGE TEXT-BOOKS.

TACITUS.—ANNALS. Books I.—VI.

Edited, in the College Series of Latin Authors, by the late Professor ALLEN. xl.—486 pages, cloth, 7s. 6d.

[Now ready.]

ALLEN and GREENOUGH'S LATIN

GRAMMAR. 488 pages, half-morocco, 6s.

Classical Review.—"No teacher of Latin Grammar, and no worker in Latin Grammar, can dispense with the book."

PRACTICAL LATIN COMPOSITION.

By W. C. COLLAR, Author of "The Beginner's Latin Book." Cloth, crown 8vo, 278 pages, 5s.

WILLIAMS' and LASCELLES' IN-

TRODUCTION to CHEMICAL SCIENCE. Edited by B. P. LASCELLES, M.A., F.C.S., Assistant Master and Librarian at Harrow School. Crown 8vo, 232 pages, cloth, 3s. 6d., with 50 Illustrations.

MODERN FRENCH READINGS.

With Helps for Composition. Edited by A. JAMSON SMITH, M.A., Head Master of King Edward's School, Camp Hill, Birmingham. Crown 8vo, 263 pp., cloth, 3s.

LES TROIS MOUSQUETAIRES.

Edited for the Use of Schools, it is believed for the first time, by Prof. SUMICHRIST, of Harvard University, and now in use at Eton College. Cloth, 280 pages, 3s. 6d.

COLLAR'S GERMAN LESSONS.

Based on Eysenbach's German Grammar, and forming a complete manual for the use of beginners, with Exercises and Vocabularies. Cloth, crown 8vo, 370 pages, 6s.

BENCH WORK in WOOD. A Hand-

book for Technical Schools and Manual Training Classes. With over 300 Illustrations. Cloth, crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

PLANT ORGANISATION. A Review

of the Structure and Morphology of Plants by the written method. With Diagrammatic Illustrations. By R. H. WARD, Professor of Botany in the Koenigsberg Polytechnic Institute. 4to, stiff cover, 4s.

LONDON: EDWARD ARNOLD, 18, WARWICK SQUARE, PATERNOSTER ROW, in connection with
GINN & Co., Boston and New York.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO.'S PUBLICATIONS.

"A perfectly delightful book of Irish popular tales."
SATURDAY REVIEW.

MYTHS AND FOLK-LORE OF IRELAND.

By JEREMIAH CURTIN.

WITH ETCHED FRONTISPIECE.

Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 9s.

"Mr. Curtin's work is especially valuable. It saves from loss many a fragment of folk-lore, and gives the reader a glimpse at the people of those remoter districts of Ireland, which, as the author says, are inhabited by men who, for the scholar and student of mankind, are by far the most interesting in the country."—Dublin Nation.

"Our chief favourite is the story which tells why the Gragach Gaire ceased to laugh. It is perfectly delicious, new, romantic, excellent. Mr. Curtin's is the best book of tales for many a long day."—Saturday Review.

"A most welcome addition to the small stock of folk-tales collected in Ireland. Although no information is given about the narrators, the tales are obviously genuine, and as obviously translated with spirit and verve."—Folk-Lore.

"Nobody who once opens the enchanted volume can shut it till he knows what saddened the jolly Gragach Gaire." London Dai'y News.

THE

INFLUENCE OF SEA POWER UPON HISTORY, 1660-1783.

By Captain A. T. MAHAN, U.S. Navy.

8vo, cloth, gilt top, 18s.

"The author's matter is as absorbing as it is lengthy, and the whole budget of important facts which he has herein collected are set forth in a style both graceful and succinct. It may be confidently asserted that by everyone possessing in any degree a taste for the incidents and conditions of nautical warfare, the 540 pages of this book will be read with the greatest appreciation."—Admiralty Gazette.

A new novel of great power and interest now first translated from the Polish.

WITH FIRE AND SWORD.

AN HISTORICAL NOVEL OF POLAND AND RUSSIA.

By HENRYK SIENKIEWICZ.

Translated from the original by JEREMIAH CURTIN.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

"It is the first large work of the author, and has placed him at the head of living Polish novelists. The story has solid merits which give it a high rank."—Scotsman.

"The first of Polish novelists, past or present, and second to none now living in England, France, or Germany. He has Dumas's facility for conceiving and carrying out a complicated historical romance; he has much of Bret Harte's dry humour and laconic pathos, and a good deal of Turgenieff's melancholy suggestiveness, with some of his delicacy of touch."—Blackwood's Magazine.

The SWEDISH REVOLUTION UNDER GUSTAVUS VASA.

By PAUL BARRON WATSON.

Cloth 8vo, gilt top, 12s.

CINQ MARS.

A new Library Edition of DE VIGNY'S famous historical romance "Cinq Mars; or, a Conspiracy under Louis XIII."

Translated by WILLIAM HAZLITT.

With 13 beautifully etched Plates by GAUJEAN, from drawings by DAWANT.

2 vols., 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 30s.

LONDON: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & Co., Limited,
St. Dunstan's House,
Fetter Lane, Fleet Street, E.C.;
Boston, U.S.: LITTLE, BROWN, & Co.,
254, Washington Street.

SATURDAY, JULY 12, 1890.

No. 949, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

In Darkest Africa; or the Quest, Rescue, and Retreat of Emin, Governor of Equatoria. By Henry M. Stanley. In 2 vols. (Sampson Low.)

Few works have in recent times been looked forward to with more eager expectation than this remarkable record of an expedition which will always stand out as one of the great episodes in the history of geographical research. None have, probably, more entirely satisfied the anticipations of the public, unless it be Through the Dark Continent, that other work in which the same author describes the still greater exploit of his journey down the Congo. Notwithstanding the rapidity with which it was composed, at the rate of over twenty pages a day for fifty days continuously, the book betrays surprisingly few traces of haste, and abounds in passages of considerable descriptive power, while the reviewer is bewildered by the multiplicity of topics calling for discussion. As, however, the volumes will be in the hands of everybody, the reader need not be detained with an account of the main purpose of the expedition—the relief and rescue of Emin Pasha, lost in the wilds of equatorial Africa, and for over six years cut off from the outer world by the surging waters of the Mahdist rebellion. On this point it will suffice to remark that in carrying out his arduous undertaking the leader of the expedition displayed the same endurance, the same tenacity of purpose and dauntless courage, above all, the same superb command over the very wills of his followers as have distinguished him in the execution of all his other commissions, from the quest of Livingstone to the circumnavigation of the Victoria Nyanza and the exploration of the Congo. In this respect the contrast is certainly striking between rescuer and rescued, apart altogether from the merits of the points at issue between them. Whatever view we may feel disposed to take of this question, it seems, at all events, reasonable to presume that no differences could have arisen at all had the good-natured though somewhat eccentric naturalist been endowed with a little of the resolute spirit so eminently characteristic of his deliverer.

The route followed by the expedition, whether otherwise the easiest or most practicable, had at least the advantage of opening up more of the dark places in "Darkest Africa" than would have been possible by adopting any of the alternative lines of march. By taking the Congo route new ground was broken from the very mouth of the Aruwimi affluent; and new ground continued to be followed thence uninterruptedly not only to the very sources of that river, but beyond it eastwards to the southern extremity of the Albert Nyanza, and from that point southwards to and beyond the Albert Edward Nyanza. Here Mr. Stanley entered the region already traversed by himself coming from the west twelve years previously; and thus were connected his two itineraries of 1876-8 and 1887-9, completing a rough survey of an equatorial zone extending from below Stanley Pool to the eastern shores of Victoria Nyanza. What a vast increase has been made to geographical knowledge by this junction will be readily understood when it is stated that the Aruwimi river alone is 700 miles long and drains an area of no less than 67,000 square miles, that is, some 9,000 square miles more than the whole of Great Britain south of the Solway Firth. This great catchment basin is bounded north and east by the Congo-Nile water-parting, whose limits are at last accurately determined by the combined researches of Stanley and Junker, the latter having in 1882 struck the Nepoko at a point about forty miles above the picturesque falls over which it is precipitated into the Aruwimi. Nearly the whole of this fluvial valley lies within the vast equatorial zone of primeval forest, which presented almost insurmountable obstacles to the progress of the expedition, and the march through which reminds one of nothing so much as of the marvellous expedition of Cortez when, after the fall of Mexico, he was suddenly recalled southwards to Tabasco and Chiapas by the revolt of his lieutenant Olid. The description of the Conquistador's indomitable energy in forcing his way across swamps, rivers, and woodlands, supplies falling short, and his followers driven to subsist on roots, berries, and vermin, applies with equal truth to the tremendous difficulties encountered and overcome by the Stanley expedition, lost amid the dank and sunless Aruwimi forests, and left to its own resources by the total collapse of the supporting column under the ill-starred Major Barttelot.

"For 160 days we marched through the forest, bush, and jungle, without ever having seen a bit of greensward of the size of a cottage chamber-floor. Nothing but miles and miles, endless miles of forest, in various stages of growth and various degrees of altitude, according to the ages of the trees, with varying thickness of undergrowth according to the character of the trees which afforded thicker or slighter shade. . . . With the temperature at 86° in the shade we travelled along a path very infrequently employed, which wound under dark depths of bush. It was a slow process, interrupted every few minutes by the tangle. The bill-hooks and axes, plied by fifty men, were constantly in requisition; the creepers were slashed remorselessly, lengths of track one hundred yards or so were as fair as similar extents were difficult."

Emerging from this jungly zone, the expedition traversed the magnificent grasslands of the plateau stretching away to the south-western extremity of Lake Albert Nyanza. Here its object having been effected by the rescue of the still wavering Pasha, and of his worthless Egyptian followers, who neither deserved nor apparently desired to be rescued, its progress was continued southwards through an old lacustrine basin now watered by the river Simliki, and flanked on the east side by the superb Ruwenzori massif, with snowy crests towering 17,000 or 18,000, possibly even 20,000, feet above sea level. The true configuration of this most interesting region was at last clearly determined; and we now know that both the northern Muta Nzige (Albert, and the southern Muta Nzige (now re-named Albert Edward) are fragments of an older and much larger basin at present connected by the Simliki, and themselves apparently in process of extinction. It also appears that the Albert Edward is fed by an affluent flowing north from about 1° or 1° 10' south latitude in the Ruanda country, where future explorers will consequently find the farthest sources of the Albertine branch of the Nile.

Not satisfied with these brilliant contributions to geographical research, Mr. Stanley attempts to identify Ruwenzori and the two lakes with the shadowy "Mountains of the Moon" and "Fountains of the Nile" of classical writers. To this subject he devotes a special chapter, illustrated with curious little maps of the Nile valley as known to Homer, Hekataeus, Hipparchus, Ptolemy, and later authorities, giving preference to the ancients and falling foul of recent cartographers for not retaining their wild guesses and vague nomenclature. His remarks, not always in the best taste, scarcely call for serious criticism; and if farther study satisfies him that the ancients knew absolutely nothing of the sources of the Nile, he may perhaps see fit to suppress the whole of this crudely written chapter in future editions of the work.

Although mostly wrapped in fog, a fine view of Ruwenzori was obtained one evening from the camping ground of Mtsora, when "a large field of snow and snow-peaks beyond the foremost line appeared in view. During the whole day our eyes had rested on a long line of dark and solemn spurs, their summits buried in leaden mists; but soon after 5 p.m. the upper extremities of those spurs loomed up one after another, and a great line of mountain shoulders stood out; then peak after peak struggled from behind night-black clouds into sight, until at last the snowy range, immense and beautiful, a perfect picture of majestic desolation, drew all eyes and riveted attention, while every face seemed awed."

Mr. Stanley's contributions to the science of anthropology are of great value; and his account of the pigmy people, who harassed his line of march like a swarm of disturbed hornets, throws quite a new light on the subject of the Negrito tribes in equatorial Africa. Hitherto they had been met so rarely, and in such few numbers, that they were commonly regarded as the scattered fragments of an aboriginal dwarfish population at one time spread over the whole of the interior, but now rapidly approaching extinction. So far from this being the case, Mr. Stanley's experience shows that there are numerous Negrito communities not only in the Aruwimi basin, but also in the wooded parts of the Semliki valley. He had himself heard of them during his voyage down the Congo ten years previously; they were met by Schweinfurth in Monbutland about the Nile-Congo divide, by Du Chaillu in the Gaboon region, and by Wissmann and Pogge about the southern affluents of the Congo. They would therefore appear to be widely and, in some places, continuously spread over the greater part of the tropical forest zone, the actual extent of which has not yet been determined. They are not a homogeneous race like, for instance, the Andamanese islanders; and Mr. Stanley finds that “There are two species of these pignies utterly dissimilar in complexion, conformation of the head, and facial characteristics. Whether Batwa forms one nation and Wambutti another we do not know, but they differ as much from each other as a Turk would from a Scandinavian. The Batwa have longish heads and long narrow faces, reddish small eyes, set close together, which give them a somewhat ferret-like look, sour, anxious, and querulous. The Wambutti have round faces, gazelle-like eyes, set far apart, open foreheads, which give one an impression of undisguised frankness, and are of a rich yellow ivory complexion. The Wambutti occupy the southern half of the district described, the Batwa the northern, and extend south-easterly to the Awamba forests on both banks of the Semliki river, and east of the Ituri.”

It is far too early to generalise, and many more facts must be accumulated before any attempt can be made to define, on the one hand, the relations between the various Negro groups themselves and, on the other, their collective relation either to the pure negro or to the aberrant Bushman and Hottentot races.

Not less important are Mr. Stanley's observations on the pastoral Wa-Huma people, who are found interspersed as the ruling class among the agricultural negro and negroid populations throughout East Central Africa. Like all African explorers, he was struck by the immense diversity in the physical appearance of the inhabitants of the southern half of the continent, nearly all of whom are grouped together under the collective designation of Bantus. At this purely conventional term he has a needless sneer, forgetting that it is not to be taken in an ethnological, but only in a linguistic sense; and he would be the last person to deny that, as a matter of fact, they all speak more or less divergent dialects of the same Bantu stock language. The endlessly varying physical differences of these mixed races he rightly attributes to the interminglings that have been going on for ages between the aboriginal negro and the intruding foreign element, of which latter the Wa-Humas are by him justly regarded as the living representatives. But he becomes himself a little “mixed,” when, in one place, he calls these Wa-Humas “Semites,” and, in another, traces their original home to India, for he ought to know that the Hindus are not Semites. Nor are the Wa-Humas either Hindus or Semites, but Hamites; and he unwittingly hits off the exact truth where he tells us that certain Wasongora chiefs “were as like in features to the finest of the Somali types and Wa-galla as though they were of the same race” (ii., p. 317). They are, in fact, “of the same race,” that is, they are Hamites, the Somali and Gallas being branches of that great division of the Caucasian stock.

Mr. Stanley is also mistaken in supposing that his views on the mutual relations of the Wa-Huma and Bantu peoples are new to science. Six years ago the present writer remarked that the Bantus

“have no ethnical coherency, and it seems impossible to recognise a distinct Bantu type in an anthropological sense. . . . The expression Bantu, intelligible in a linguistic sense, has no definite anthropological meaning. . . . The Wa-Huma, to whom the attention of ethnologists has scarcely yet been seriously directed, present some points of great anthropological interest, probably affording a solution of the difficulties connected with the constituent elements of the Bantu races in East Central Africa. Speke had already observed that the chiefs of the Bantu nations about the great lakes were always Wa-Huma, a pastoral people evidently of Galla stock, and originally immigrants from the Galla country. . . . From these and other indications it seems highly probable that in point of fact the Bantu peoples are fundamentally negroes in diverse proportions affected by Wa-Huma or Galla, that is, Hamitic elements. . . . The conclusion seems irresistible that [the non-negro element] should be referred to these Wa-Huma or Hamitic Gallas, probably for ages advancing as conquerors from the north-east into the heart of the continent” (Ethnology of Egyptian Sudan, 1884, passim).

It is obvious that Mr. Stanley was unacquainted with this monograph; hence all the more satisfactory to the writer that he has independently arrived at the same conclusion, and confirmed it by the addition of much further information collected by him in “Darkest Africa.”

These handsome volumes are beautifully printed in bold type on excellent paper; they are splendidly illustrated, and supplied with admirable maps and copious indexes.

A. II. KEANE.

The French Revolution. By Justin H. McCarthy. In 4 vols. Vol. I. (Chatto & Windus.)

THE first volume of this work, which I propose to consider in this article, appears to have been written as an introduction to the other three. The French Revolution is a vast subject; and the author truly observes that it is hard in such a case to know “where to make a beginning.” Further on he says: “If there is a difficulty in choosing the starting-point, there is scarcely less difficulty in deciding upon the treatment.” I do not see the truth of this remark. If the French Revolution, like many other revolutions which have preceded it, is an historical subject, it should be treated historically; the facts should be ascertained, and set forth in clear and simple language.

Mr. Justin H. McCarthy distinguishes two kinds of writers upon the French Revolution: the “brilliant special pleaders,” with whom he classes Thiers, Mignet, and Taine; and the “more impartial and more judicial” writers, such as De Tocqueville and Sorel, Von Sybel in Germany, and Mr. H. Morse Stephens in England. “Judicial” seems an ambitious word. The historian, according to etymology, is an inquirer. If he is to be raised to the dignity of a judge, let him judge not persons nor facts, but the evidence.

Mr. Justin H. McCarthy allows himself at times to be carried away by the power of language; but he is fair-minded, and something more. His book shows patience and ingenuity in research, a love of his subject, and a generous spirit of truth. But an historian must make up his mind which he intends to follow, the “muse” of history or the siren of romance. There is a path which leads to history. It is pointed out by an author whom he appears to have relished. Arthur Young, in the preface to the second edition of his Travels in France during the years 1787, 1788, and 1789, says:

“When the publisher agreed to run the hazard of printing these papers, and some progress being made in the journal, the whole manuscript was put into the compositor's hand to be examined, if there were a sufficiency for a volume of sixty sheets, he found enough prepared for the press to fill a hundred and forty; and I assure the reader that the successive employment of striking out and mutilating more than the half of what I had written was executed with more indifference than regret, even though it obliged me to exclude several chapters, upon which I had taken considerable pains. The publisher would have printed the whole; but whatever faults may be found with the author, he ought at least to be exempted from the imputation of an undue confidence in the public favour, since to expunge was undertaken as readily as to compose.”

The rule of style, “To expunge as readily as to compose,” laid down by Arthur Young, and his observance of it, might be followed by an author in the present day. He would begin by expunging adjectives, adverbs, epithets such as “pompous” and “profligate,” which Mr. McCarthy applies—it seems to me unduly—to Louis XIV., who was a man irregular in his affections, but a king majestic in his conduct. And the expunging of superfluities and “sensationalisms” of speech would lead to the reconsidering and revising of hasty judgments on persons and classes.

As an instance of hasty judgments upon persons, I may perhaps refer to Mr. McCarthy's remarks on the father of the Duke of Orleans, who became known during the Revolution as Philippe-Egalité. The father is represented in Mr. McCarthy's book as “one of the most debauched men of his age,” “a kind of brutal Falstaff,” “cynical, vicious, grotesque, coarsely immoral.” The portrait seems to me overdone; the shadows are too dark, the bright points—for Louis Philippe of Orleans had bright points—are left in shade. In Dezobry and Bachelet's Biographical Dictionary I find this account of him:

“Très-instruit et d'un caractère généreux, il avait fait le premier en France inoculer ses enfants. . . . Il faisait le bien dans le plus profond secret, dépensant en actes de bienfaisance plus de 250,000 francs par an.”

In the Nouvelle Biographie Générale, published by Firmin Didot, I find that Louis Philippe of Orleans distinguished himself greatly in the wars from 1742 to 1757, took part in the sieges of many towns in Flanders and in the battles of Dettingen, Fontenoy, Raucoux, Lawfeld, and Hastenbeck, and succeeded his father in the government of the province of Dauphiné.

"Il passa les dernières années de sa vie dans sa délicieuse résidence de Bagnolet. Il s'y entourait d'artistes et d'hommes de lettres, fit construire un théâtre dont Collé composait les pièces, et sur lequel le prince ne dédaignait pas de paraître lui-même. Jouer la comédie était chez lui une véritable passion, et si dans ses plaisirs la décence n'était pas toujours assez respectée, du moins l'intelligence y avait plus de part que dans les amusements de la plupart des seigneurs du même temps."

Learned, charitable, secret in his benefactions, active in his military duties, there is something to be said for him. Grimm's Mémoires Inédits bear testimony to his manly devotion to Louis XV. in his last illness. Collé, who, though he enjoyed the duke's benefits, speaks of him apparently without prepossession in his favour, says: "Justesse d'esprit, justice de cœur, et faiblesse, voilà en trois mots son caractère."

Arthur Young judged the old French noblesse with severity on what he saw of their estates in his rides through France. He must have lost his temper when he wrote:

"Whenever you stumble on a grand seigneur, even one who was worth millions, you are sure to find his property a desert. The Duke of Bouillon's and this prince's [the Duke de la Rochefoucauld] are two of the greatest properties in France, and all the signs I have yet seen of their greatness are wastes, landes, deserts, fern, ling. Go to their residence, wherever it may be, and you would probably find them in the midst of a forest, very well peopled with deer, wild boars, and wolves. Oh, if I were the legislator of France for a day, I would make such great lords skip!"

Mr. McCarthy is too much influenced by such remarks when he says:

"But a certain proportion of the nobles were compelled by destiny to dwell in something like intercourse with the peasantry, and of these a certain small proportion allowed that intercourse to be tinged by something like humanity . . . . A selfishness which had become ingrained by long generations of power to oppress, a malign egotism that ignored all need except its own, that refused to recognise any rights save its own, a profligate passion for ostentation and display, a heartless indifference to all things except its own sublime existence, were the prevailing characteristics of the vast majority of the nobility in the time of the Old Order."

What does this paragraph amount to? It comes to this, that the great nobles of France did not live on their estates. They served the king at court, according to the traditions of the old French monarchy, and also in the wars; they impoverished themselves in this service, and became estranged by absence from the soil and from their peasantry.

Mr. McCarthy's remarks on Voltaire are excellent:

"Posterity has on the whole dealt very harshly with Voltaire's errors, and made scant allowance of the praise which his purposes and efforts so often deserved . . . . Frequently and grievously he sinned against good taste, against that kindly, manly feeling which prompts a gentle mode of pointing out a fellow-man's errors and follies."

The chapters on Rousseau, Dalember, Turgot, and Marie Antoinette, are full of interest. An historian is bound to be cautious in his statements, and there is much to perplex him in the circumstances of the age; but he cannot be too firm in his conviction of the innocence of Marie Antoinette. The story which Mr. Justin H. McCarthy tells of her illness at Trianon, when she desired that her chamber should be guarded by four gentlemen of her court, while it displays a disregard of appearances, bears testimony to her memory, and is in itself a proof of her innocence, besides the crowning proof which she gave at the bar of the revolutionary tribunal and on the scaffold.

WILLIAM MARKHEIM.

The Composition of the Four Gospels. A Critical Inquiry. By the Rev. Arthur Wright. (Macmillan.)

MR. WRIGHT commences his critical inquiry into the composition of the Gospels with a vivid description of Eastern methods of instruction.

"Education in the East, I am told, still consists largely in learning by heart the maxims of the wise. The teacher sits on a chair, the pupils arrange themselves at his feet. He dictates a lesson, they copy it on their slates and repeat it till they have mastered it. Then the task is over, the slates are cleaned and put by for future use.

"Substitute for the slates and pencils a writing tablet and stylus, and you will have a scene which must have been common in the days of the Apostles. The teacher is a catechist, the pupils catechumens, the lesson a section of the oral gospel, for we are thinking of a time when written gospels were not yet contemplated."

Following the church tradition, which makes Mark the interpreter or translator of Peter, Mr. Wright holds that Peter was the author of what he calls the first cycle of oral teaching. This has come down to us in a threefold form in our first three Gospels, but is found most complete in the second, which was written by Mark from his recollections of Peter's teaching, though not till after an interval of thirty or forty years, when "his memory must have lost much of its freshness." Of a second cycle, consisting chiefly of speeches, sermons, and parables, as the first did of incidents and mighty works, Matthew was the author; while a third came through catechists of the Pauline school, and is incorporated in our Luke. That our first Gospel is a composite work is fully recognised and frankly stated by our author. Mr. Wright accepts the undivided testimony of antiquity to the effect that Matthew wrote in the Hebrew or Aramaic dialect, and he inclines to the view that his work was closely represented by the lost Gospel according to the Hebrews. As to the Greek version, he contends—surely with great reason—that the Apostle Matthew, having been himself an eye-witness, would scarcely have adopted the Petrine memoirs to the extent that we find in our first Gospel, nor modified them in the way they are there modified, the phenomena indicating rather that this "must have been a long process, continued by many catechists." Luke's Gospel, according to Mr. Wright, is the most complex of the three, and the least faithful to the true chronological order. That of John differs from the rest in the fact that it is not founded on oral teaching at all, but was written from his own recollections, sometimes confused or imperfect, by an eye-witness of the events. The discourses in this Gospel, which are far beyond the capacity of a Galilean fisherman, evidently contain Christ's teaching; but it is admitted that they are not verbatim reports, and that the style is the Apostle's own.

This theory, founded upon and suggested by the study of Mr. Rushbrooke's Synopticon, has much to recommend it. In fact, down to a certain point it almost compels our assent; and, apart from matters of detail, the only question of importance is whether the author takes sufficient account of the literary and religious motives operative in the construction of our Gospels to satisfy the demands of scientific criticism. Mr. Wright does very distinctly take account of such motives, and he notes several interesting examples of alterations made purposely by the catechists, as he supposes, in the original tradition. Such was the change from Mark's "Is not this the carpenter?" to "Is not this the carpenter's son?" as we have it in Matthew. And a still more striking example is the true reading in Matt. xix. 16, "Why askest thou Me about the good thing?" altered from Mark's "Why callest thou Me good?" as it was afterwards changed back by the copyists for the sake of uniformity. On this our author boldly remarks, "This is more than a lapse of memory. It is a deliberate change, made evidently for a theological purpose, lest any doubt should be engendered amongst pupils of tender age about the perfect sinlessness of Christ." In dealing with Luke, while Mr. Wright admits that in addition to the three cycles the author made abundant use of non-oral Gospel and of editorial notes, I am not sure that he has fully grasped the real character of that admirable composition as a product of literary art rather than a result of pure historical inquiry. He separates, indeed, the mission of the seventy and the miraculous draught of fishes from the more reliable materials of which the Gospel is composed, but rather as the contributions of anonymous compilers than as the free product of the writer's imagination. He sees that the draught of fishes in Luke and John is simply the same story twice repeated, and not, as so many would have it, the same incident twice occurring. He sees, with Dr. Abbot, that Luke has omitted the curse on the barren fig-tree because he has already inserted a parable of a fig-tree on which fruit was looked for and none found. All this is excellent; but a still freer handling would probably have shown or suggested that Luke omitted the incident of the fig-tree, not merely because he had introduced a parable conveying a similar lesson, but because he had himself chosen to convert the incident into a parable; that the miraculous draught of fishes presents us with the inverse case of a parable changed into a miracle; that the mission of the seventy has no pretension whatever to an historical character; that the anointing for burial is omitted because the evangelist has already made use of the incident, at an earlier stage of his narrative, in a form fitted to his own purposes; perhaps, also, that the exquisite parable of the Prodigal Son, or, as it might be called, of the Two Sons, is a literary and artistic expansion and adaptation of the parable in Matthew which goes by the latter name; that the other parables peculiar to Luke, while embodying the eternal principles of the Christian gospel, were as stories (and, by the way, as Mr. Wright remarks, they are stories rather than, in the strict sense of the word, parables) the free invention of the evangelist; and, in short, thus dispensed with the third oral cycle altogether.

Naturally the weakest point in Mr. Wright's work will be thought by rationalists to be his assumption of the authenticity of the Fourth Gospel; but this is a question which he can scarcely be said to discuss.

Mr. Wright is apprehensive that "some readers will regard his work as an attack upon the Gospels rather than a defence of them." That is not improbable; but it might be wise to drop such words altogether. Intelligent seekers of truth will regard the book as simply what it calls itself—"a critical inquiry"—and will thank the author for a piece of work so courageous and scholarly.

ROBERT B. DRUMMOND.

Talks with Ralph Waldo Emerson. By Charles J. Woodbury. (Kegan Paul & Co.)

MR. WOODBURY first met Emerson in the year 1865, in connexion with some lecturing arrangements in a country town; and from that time forward, with more or less constancy, he maintained the acquaintance. Probably, if he had been so disposed, he might have made a much more bulky volume of his recollections, but he has exercised a wise restraint, so that all he gives is to the point and welcome. The more we see of the inner and personal life of Emerson, the better for us; and Mr. Woodbury has an understanding spirit, which makes him a good reporter. A hearty admirer of Emerson, he is yet so far true to Emerson's precepts never to become a blind worshipper. He was strong enough in character to come into near contact with a great man—a very great man—without losing his own mental and moral balance. Accordingly, he has succeeded in producing a volume which every lover of Emerson will gladly place upon his book-shelf.

Mr. Woodbury lays particular stress on what may be termed Emerson's mission to the young. He quotes a remark made by Emerson to Miss Elizabeth Peabody: "My special parish is young men inquiring their way of life"; and he affirms that Emerson's "spirit of kinship with all young manhood breathed from his person in public and vitalised his page." He belonged, he says, to the young men. Matthew Arnold has drawn a fine picture of Emerson's influence on the youth of Oxford when Arnold himself was there. Emerson was one of those "voices in the air," of which he said "happy the man who, in that susceptible season of youth, hears such voices! They are a possession to him for ever." That Emerson had kinship with the young is true, as it is true of all so-called "optimists"; but it is the whole truth on the subject only if we estimate youth by a different standard than that of years. Thomas Purnell, in his memoir of Charles Lamb, relates that, when some one said that no man should be a Bohemian after thirty, it was retorted that some men are never thirty; and, adds Purnell, "in this sense Charles Lamb was never thirty." So, with reference to Emerson, we may say there are men and women who never grow old. Emerson himself was one of these. The time never came when he looked backward as old men look backward. Of those who have ever been under the spell of Emerson, it may be said that, so long as the spell remains unbroken, they are young; and they may take it as an infallible sign that old age has befallen them, whenever the influence ceases. To Matthew Arnold and to many others it was a "possession for ever." But there are some who, as they say, outlive that kind of thing; they should rather say they die away from it. It seems to me that Carlyle grew old, that indeed he was hardly ever really young. Alcott, on the contrary—one of the few men who in their relations with Emerson obviously gave as well as received benefit—continued with his more than eighty years as young as Emerson himself.

The teaching of a man with this affinity for youth is naturally stimulating, or I should rather say, energising. "Provocation" is, as Emerson has himself said, the one great service of man to man—provocation, that is, of the moral sentiment to noble endeavour. He said to Mr. Woodbury that "the most interesting writing is that which does not quite satisfy the reader"; and his advice to writers was to "try and leave a little thinking" for the reader—"that will be better for both." He said the trouble with most writers was that "they spread too thin; the reader is as quick as they; has got there before and is ready and waiting." "A little guessing," he added, "does him no harm, so I will assist him with no connexions. If you can see how the harness fits, he can. But make sure that you see it." Good advice truly, if followed judiciously. But in the literature of the hour, at any rate, it does not do to presume over much on the reader's knowledge. The important point is to convey the requisite knowledge, while leaving something for the mind to work upon in the region of inference and deduction. Emerson himself is definite enough with matters of fact. It is when he comes to deal with ideas based on those facts that he chooses to be simply suggestive and declines to provide all the reader's thinking for him. In this connexion Emerson's further advice to "read those men who are not lazy; who put themselves into contact with the realities," helps to indicate who the provocative writers really are. Assuredly writers, of which there is a superabundance, whose only concern is to produce with the least possible trouble to themselves a certain measure of "copy," will provoke, if at all, in quite a different way from that which Emerson intended.

Another piece of good advice to writers is to "avoid adjectives. Let the noun do the work. The adjective introduces sound, gives an unexpected turn, and so often mars with an unintentional false note." Readers will discern in these words an echo of the useful little essay on "Superlatives."

On one occasion Emerson recommended Mr. Woodbury to "avoid second-hand borrowing books—'Collections of —,' 'Beauties of —,' &c." Seeing some on Mr. Woodbury's shelves, he even went so far as to advise him to burn them. "No one can select the beautiful passages of another for you . . . do your own quarrying," he said. Yet these second-hand, borrowing books, if easily abused, surely have their uses; and some at least—Emerson's own Parnassus among the number—one would not willingly dispense with.

In the chapter entitled "Criticism" we find a number of interesting judgments on men and things. Of Wordsworth he said, "He is the greatest poet since Milton"; and of his sonnets, "They are the witchery of language." He thought there were no books for boys like the poems of Sir Walter Scott. He considered Gibbon "a disordered and coarse spirit, a mind without a shrine, but a great example of diligence and antidote to laziness." Locke, he said, was "a stalwart thinker. He erected a school of philosophy which limited everything to utility. But the soul has its own eyes, which are made illuminating by the Spirit of God." Advising Mr. Woodbury to read Chaucer, he remarked:

"I have seen an expurgated edition of Chaucer; shun it! Shun expurgated editions of anyone, even Aphra Behn or Francois Villon. They will be expurgating the Bible and Shakspeare next" (p. 51).

Mr. Thomas Bowdler had already performed the kindly office for Shakspeare; and I think I have seen an advertisement of a "Bible for children," which was, no doubt, an attempt in the same direction. Of Walter Savage Landor, Emerson spoke in terms of high praise. He had only one complaint against him: "He does not aspire; drops his h's like a cockney. I do not understand it." He often referred to Leigh Hunt—"a true and gentle friend of all men." Of Matthew Arnold he said, "He is stored with all critical faculties except humour, but so far he shows little of that." He could not admire Shelley or read him "with comfort." "His visions are not in accord with the facts; they are not accurate. He soars to sink." In fact, Shelley was, in his eyes, a poet of the melancholy order; and melancholy—as he said to Mr. Woodbury, and has often, in one way and another affirmed elsewhere—"is unendurable; grief is abnormal." "I do not read the sad in literature," he added. On this account he never seems to have admired Hawthorne's works, which he described as "of the terrible, the grotesque and sombre. There is nothing joyous in them. It is the same way with Hugo. No man ought to write so." His estimate of Mr. James Russell Lowell was that he "is a man of wit; a genial man, of good inspirations, who can write poems of wit and something better. It does one good to read him. He has a good deal of self-consciousness, and never forgave Margaret Fuller and Thoreau for wounding it" (p. 63).

His words about Agassiz must also be quoted :

"Nature selects some man who is impressionable, thoughtful, simple-hearted, and conducts him softly to some one of her little closets, and bids him enter; and when he comes back, the world stands still to know what he learned there. When a created thing gets an interpreter, it crowns him" (p. 66).

To Emerson's remark that "no man of self-conceit can go through Plato," Mr. Woodbury maliciously adds: "Carlyle, I believe, confesses that he cannot read Plato."

Mr. Woodbury concludes his little book with a chapter of good criticism on Emerson as a man. To only one remark do I care to take serious exception. Speaking of his manysidedness, Mr. Woodbury says, "his resemblances were of Socrates, Buddha, and Ben Franklin." Truly Emerson was manysided; but if he resembled "Ben" Franklin as well as Buddha, he was, indeed, universally related. Dr. Holmes also has drawn a comparison between Franklin and Emerson, honestly believing that therein he was doing honour to Emerson. Perhaps Mr. Woodbury thinks Socrates and Buddha should feel flattered at being linked with Franklin; for truly the Americans have some strange heroes, and notions of their relative importance quite as strange.

WALTER LEWIN.

Lord Althorp. By Ernest Myers. (Bentley.)

OF the editor of one of the London daily newspapers it is said that he surprised a friend by the candid avowal that he had never heard of Lord Althorp, and knew nothing of the place of this "English worthy," as Mr. Myers calls him, in politics. Therefore a volume of this sort can hardly be superfluous, and yet we cannot feel sure that when the reader arrives at the last page he will have a very clear idea either of the personality or of the public services of Lord Althorp. Mr. Myers has not the gift of making the best of meagre materials, and the greater part of this volume might just as well be called "a short history of the first Reform period." The literary remains of Lord Althorp are not voluminous.

We have heard Lord Hartington say that he was encouraged to persevere in a political career by the example of Althorp; and there is a certain likeness between the two statesmen, but it is not in person, and the habits of the two friends are so different that Lord Hartington has been able to gain a fluency of speech upon the platform which Althorp never attained. At the close of Althorp's official career, he was described by Ticknor, the American traveller, as "short and thick set, with a dark red complexion, black hair beginning to turn grey, a very ordinary farmer-like style of dress, and no particularly vivacious expression of countenance. His manner was as quiet and simple as possible. He does not talk brilliantly—hesitates, and even blushes."

In Althorp's character there were united a high sense of personal honour and dignity, a moderate capacity for dealing with public affairs which was the more attractive because it was conspicuously free from ambition, and a most admirable tact, springing from innate purity and simplicity of life and motives, the pleasing manners of a country gentleman who seemed to carry the sweet airs of rural life into the statesman's cabinet. He was a man to whom rank was a great advantage, but who wore it as naturally as did the oaks of his much-loved estate their summer leaves. It is probably true that "if the Reform Act would have passed without him, it was at least very largely due to him that it passed in peace and order, and left no embittering memories behind." In March 1809 he had, as he told his father, "the nerve to act on" his political opinions; and, at the early age of twenty-eight he made a signal mark in the House of Commons by a motion stamping with censure the conduct of the Duke of York while in command of the army. We need not dwell upon the oft-told story of the passing of the Reform Bill—how Russell sat down in "a deep silence more significant than cheers;" how Peel trimmed, and made "the extremest Tories speak bitterly"; how in the fullest house ever known the second reading was carried by a majority of one; and how, as the fight went forward, Grey resigned. At this point we get a rough sketch of Althorp drawn by Jeffrey, who thus describes a moving interview :

"I had a characteristic scene with that most frank, true, and stout-hearted of God's creatures, Lord Althorp. I was led up to his dressing-room, where I found him in a dressing-gown, his arms bare, his beard half-shaved, with a desperate razor in one hand and a great soap brush in the other. He gave me the loose finger of his brush-hand, and, with the usual twinkle of his bright eye, and a radiant smile, he said, 'You need not be anxious about your Scotch Bills to-night, as I have the pleasure to tell you we are no longer his Majesty's ministers.'"

Althorp was very useful in beginning the breakdown of a monstrous system of privilege. He succeeded—it seems strange that within living memory it should have been matter of controversy—in making landed property subject to simple-contract debts. Then landlords and their heirs were alone entitled to kill game; others legally enjoyed such sport only by being actually or fictitiously engaged as gamekeepers. Althorp abolished that curious statute of Charles II., and made it lawful for anyone to shoot or sell game on obtaining a licence from the Inland Revenue Office.

In the House of Commons Althorp held undoubtedly great authority. But, on the death of his father, he became Earl Spencer, and, as Mr. Myers puts it, "was thus of course irrevocably exiled by one of the most untoward and sometimes highly mischievous of our constitutional customs from the political field where he could best serve his country." His retirement from the active strife of politics soon followed, and he went home to the calm career of a country gentleman, but not for many years. He died in 1843, leaving a name by no means conspicuous, but one marked with much of contemporary honour and respect in the annals of his country.

ARTHUR ARNOLD.

NEW NOVELS.

The Shadow of a Dream. By William D. Howells. (Edinburgh: David Douglas.)

The Blind Musician. By Vladimir Korolenko. Translated by Stepniak. (Ward & Downey.)

Dishonoured. By Theo Gift. In 3 vols. (Hurst & Blackett.)

Mr. Bryant's Mistake. By Katherine Wylde. In 3 vols. (Bentley.)

Dmitri: a Tragi-Comedy. By F. W. Bain. (Percival & Co.)

Edward Burton. By Henry Wood. (Boston: Lee & Shepard.)

Three Burglars. By Frank R. Stockton. (Sampson Low.)

WHEN "Gyp" wrote her amusing story Ohé! Les Psychologues a ripple of laughter vibrated throughout that highly susceptible abstraction, the French "world of culture." M. Bourget and the literary psychologists—poets, essayists, and novelists—smiled grimly; for, as everyone knows, raillery is in Paris the beginning of the end. Some time ago an article appeared in Le Figaro or Le Temps, in which the assertion was made that the last psychological romance had been written, at least for a generation, and that a new epoch was about to dawn for the jaded novel-reader. It was a rash statement. There have been more "études de psychologie contemporaine" within the last twelvemonth than in any three years previous thereto. The weary critic has had to read realistic novels and psychological romances till he has hungered and thirsted after even such forlorn romanticism as is embodied in Gautier's Capitaine Fracasse, convinced that there is no realism so unreal as that of the self-styled realists, and no literary vivisection so wearisome as that of the professional psychologists. It is with an almost startled surprise, therefore, that the present critic finds the short psychological study by Mr. W. D. Howells at once fascinating and novel. It confirms him in his opinion that Mr. Howells works best when his canvas is not a large one; for even The Rise of Silas Lapham and A Hazard of New Fortunes, though masterpieces in all important respects save one, are weakened by their diffuseness of treatment. Unquestionably the foremost living American novelist grows upon one more and more. We may discern his limitations, we may complain of the lack of vitality (vitality in a deeper sense than that of vivaciousness or charm) in his style; we may resent what I may call his literary parochialism; and yet, withal, he is winsome. Mr. Howells's humour is always delicate, while virile; he has a charm which is quite his own; and though he has neither narrative nor constructive power in any exceptional degree, he is always able to evolve a pleasant story from the most meagre and unpromising motive. Mr. Howells has received so much indiscriminate laudation that he stands in peril of a swift reaction; indeed, it will not be surprising if, say a few years hence, his apologists will be on this side of the Atlantic and will be all the more generous because of the reckless swing of the new tide. May one "carping critic" of whom I wot be among them! The Shadow of a Dream is so remarkably subtle and clever that it may meanwhile attract much less attention than it deserves. The book seems to me as perfect of its kind as anything in latter-day fiction. Strangely enough, its one artistic shortcoming—if shortcoming it be—is the sudden and, for the novelist, convenient way in which the chief personages die. Douglas Faulkner succumbs to angina pectoris; his half-real, half-imaginary rival, Nevil, is crushed to death by a railway engine; and Hermia, the heroine, dies a year later of a broken heart. Yet this would be a crude way of conveying to possible readers an idea of the drift of the story. For it is, in truth, a tragedy, but a tragedy presented with such consummate art that its gloom and its sombre significance do not overwhelm us as we read. Even the homely commonplaceness of Mr. and Mrs. March—familiar figures—relieved, occasionally, by Mr. Howells's delightful humour, does not prevent the story being a romantically sad one, and of a still sadder general import, exposing as it does our human helplessness under the dominion of natural laws and occult physiological forces. If The Shadow of a Dream be not the most picturesque of the author's novels in point of detail, it is so in point of cumulative and final effect; and this, despite the fact that Part I. of the story is in every way superior to the remaining two-thirds of the book. The much longer second part is necessary for the working out of the life-story of Hermia and Nevil, influenced by the shadow of Faulkner's morbid dream; but in the limited sense of its being the story of the unhappy Faulkner, the book is complete with his sudden death in the deserted garden by the sea. Had the story ended here it might have been bracketted with that most artistically-wrought of all short stories by contemporary American novelists, Mr. Henry James's The Author of Beltraffio, to which, indeed, it is unmistakably akin. Still, as Hermia is the most remarkable, certainly the most baffling type of womanhood drawn by Mr. Howells, one cannot regret the expansion of the story to its present length. It is a noteworthy work in its promise also; for its able and brilliant author displays in it a firmer touch and a profounder insight than of yore, and seems in it, moreover, to be on the verge of a new departure in his art.

Those who complain that we are having more than enough of Russian fiction should read the very able translation of Korolenko's The Blind Musician, which Stepniak has made, assisted by Mr. William Westall. Certainly no Russian novelist, from Gogol to Tchernishevsky, from Lermontoff to Tolstoi, with the single exception of Tourgueniev, has written so perfect a work of art; for even Gogol's Taras Bulba, picturesque and impressive though it be, is not so well-proportioned, so complete, in a word, so masterly as this remarkable psychological romance. Vladimir Korolenko's name is not quite unfamiliar in England, for there have been frequent allusions in magazines and reviews to this "most brilliant of living Russian romancers"; and, moreover, Mr. Turner has, in his admirable book on the Russian novelists, devoted a whole chapter to Korolenko, whom he ranks as second only to Tolstoi. An interesting sketch of the career of the author of The Blind Musician is prefixed to the book; and as he is still a young man, and has suffered and experienced much, he has doubtless a future. In this study of one born blind, of all his wayward impulses and abnormal faculties, Korolenko displays extraordinary insight and sympathy. The story is a beautiful one, but it is also so natural that it is difficult for the reader to understand how any save a blind person could so surely and acutely depict the mental and spiritual development of such an one as Petrik Popelsky. I heard it asserted the other day that a sense, such as Petrik's, of remote natural aspects (an angry sunset, darkening clouds, delicate skiey changes, and so forth) was impossible; but as has been recorded of the late Philip Bourke Marston, such an abnormally acute supervisual perception is by no means impossible. Indeed, with all due allowance for differences of genius, locality, and other circumstances, much of what seems strangest in this remarkable tale might have been written of the blind poet whose fate was in nearly all respects so much sadder than that of Korolenko's fictitious hero. All lovers of Russian literature, or rather all who enjoy fresh and original work, will be grateful to Stepniak if he will give us further translations of writings by the author of so noteworthy a book. But having so much to say in praise both of the author and the translator, it is only right that a vehement protest should be made against the "bowdlerising" of the original. The interference is admitted and defended; but despite the force of the translator's plea, few readers, it is to be hoped, will endorse the wisdom of the omission of the "minute psychological details" wrought into his narrative by Korolenko. It is as though some Balzac-translator were to give us a version of Louis Lambert or Seraphita with the more profound esoteric portions omitted. No doubt the translator should not be held mainly responsible for having—as I understand he has had to do—to follow Hobson's choice: the chief blame obviously lies elsewhere. It is, however, only just to add that the translator has so skilfully wrought chapter with chapter and passage with passage that, except at one place, it would be difficult to discover where deletions have occurred.

The fundamental fault of both Dishonoured and Mr. Bryant's Mistake is one and the same—inadequacy of motive. The plot of each book is commonplace, though both Theo Gift and Katherine Wyld invest their stories with humour, freshness, vigour, and other qualities which go to the making of a good novel. The central motive of Dishonoured is the sense of indelible disgrace wrought upon a sensitive woman by the discovery that there is a stain upon her birth. Were Olive Benison a weak and hysterical girl it would be easy to understand how the shock of the revelation might have a permanently harmful effect; but it is demanding of the reader too much that he should credit the possibility of so healthy as well as so fine a nature yielding in the way she does to the knowledge of an unhappy event in her mother's life. The sense of reality in a story based on such a motive depends on the nature of the heroine; her sense of shame will seem natural (however unwarrantable), or grossly exaggerated, according as she is conventional and weak, or healthily sane in mind, body, and judgment. Dishonoured has also the common fault of the vast majority of three-volume novels: it is of quite inordinate length, and unnecessarily diffuse in many parts. Yet it is often very ably written, and if it were a third of its present length would be a notable as well as an entertaining romance. In fidelity of characterisation and scenic description, the latest of Theo Gift's always readable and pleasant novels seems to me the best. But if Dishonoured be too long the interest is, at any rate, fairly maintained from first to last; while Mr. Bryant's Mistake is wearisomely prolix. Nigh upon a thousand close-set pages are at least seven hundred too many in which to explain the mistake of the Rev. Mr. Bryant in hiding away the daughter whom his wife as Mrs. Grant had borne to a man who had beguiled her by a false marriage, and the subsequent perplexities arising out of what the worthy clergyman naively calls "an economy of the truth." But no doubt all who have enjoyed A Dreamer by the same author will read with pleasure its latest successor, which has the by no means common merit of being well and brightly written.

Dmitri is a puzzling book. It is by an Englishman, and yet is so surcharged with local colour and Slavonic sentiment that it might be a translation from the author of Taras Bulba. This tragi-comedy is founded upon fact; and several French, German, and English novelists and playwrights, with Prosper Mérimée at their head, have utilised the extraordinary career of Demetrius or Dmitri, the base-born usurper of the Czar's throne, who for a time held sway in Russia and befooled the kings of Poland and Sweden. The fault of most historical romances is their lack of verisimilitude in the all-essential matters of sentiment and diction; any student can be faithful in mere antiquarian and historical details. It is this supreme quality which makes the novels of Gogol so attractive, the romances of Scott so charming, the Salammbo of Gustave Flaubert so unique. Dmitri would be well worth perusal if for no other reason than that it is convincingly, quite marvellously faithful in this respect. No modern note jars in its barbaric and reckless savagery; it is in the best sense an historical romance. In style it is very unequal. Sometimes it is as forcible as the savage individuals with whom it deals; but often Mr. Bain seems smitten with the pet affliction of Silas Wegg, though the poetry into which he drops is not metrical. Inversion, which can be so effective when used rarely and unobtrusively, ruins many a would-be poetic or impressive sentence; and Mr. Bain loves an inversion as much as the author of Euphues loved a tortured conceit. This Russo-Polish romance is really a remarkable book of its kind, having nothing in common with "historical" fiction of the Thaddeus of Warsaw type, which has as little to do with actuality as have the English names in L'Homme qui rit with our nomenclature as we know it. The only absurdity in the volume is in the brief prefatory note. It is mental confusion, and not aesthetic insight, which is responsible for

"Whoever knows the twenty-second of Chopin's Mazurkas, knows more than words can tell him of the story of Marina; and the Overture to Bizet's 'Carmen' is the 'Open Sesame!' to the fortunes of Dmitri."

Fortunately, things are not so bad as the author would indicate. One may enjoy and adequately understand the story of Marina and her brilliant, unprincipled, daring lover, without the accompaniment of or even any profound acquaintance with Bizet's "Carmen," or the twenty-second of Chopin's Mazurkas.

In Edward Burton, Mr. Henry Wood—an American writer who, one learns from the title-page, is author of Natural Law in the Business World and "Various Ethical and Economic Essays," has written an exasperatingly sentimental and foolish book. The style recalls the diction of the amateur lady contributors to "Albums" and "Nose-gays." "My sweet bird, give me a kind little note!" is the way in which Lord Percival asks his American cousin's hand. Rosamond goes through all the old-fashioned hesitations, but at last, with mechanical aptness, "the birds twittered their carols in the tree-tops above." Simultaneously, Mr. Burton sees another love-scene near the cascade. His beloved Helen is with his friend Mr. Tapley, and the rapturous Tapley is kissing the willing Helen's hand. "But no," exclaims the unselfish Burton, "it shall not be! Crushed once for all be this unworthy conflict! She is yours, Tapley! I am serene, peaceful, content. They have my benediction." But the reader, if he has struggled so far as page 170 will not grudge Tapley his conquest. As the lovers pass the cascade ("the planetary cataclysm" Mr. Wood calls it), Helen stops to speak as follows: "This is a place where in a material sense one might feel the insignificance of man. As a physical force his power is petty. But in the real and deeper sense how powerless are mere masses of matter"—and so on, and so on. "After photographing the sublimity expressed by this waterfall upon their memories, they returned and were driven homewards." Whether they ever reached home, or were happy ever afterward, I know not. But as on glancing at the last page I see that "the king of day slowly sank to his couch of royal purple" (&c., &c., &c.), and that gentle zephyrs among the tree tops overhead whispered a benediction, along with the merry twitter of birds, it may be presumed that Tapley and the others were, or are, well content.

Mr. Frank R. Stockton's new book is a pure well of humour undefiled, after Mr. Wood's pretentious and wearisome story; but it is scarcely worthy of the author of Rudder Grange and other charming and amusing extravaganzas and comedies.

WILLIAM SHARP.

SOME BOOKS ON FOLKLORE.

Korean Tales. By H. N. Allen, M.D. (Putnam's.) It is such a little time since Korea opened her ports to barbarians that it is difficult to believe that anyone was formerly Secretary of Legation for Korea. It was, we presume, as Secretary of the American Legation that Dr. Allen obtained the experience and information which his friends desired him to write in a book. To such requests this book may be said to be a somewhat evasive but very pleasant answer. It contains but a short account of the country and the inhabitants, little or nothing of his personal experience, but—and this is the book—several of the legends of the country. These are all well told and delightful. First we have some legends of animals. With the Koreans, as with the fellow-countrymen of Uncle Remus, "Brer Rabbit" seems to take the place of the fox in European folklore. His adventures with the turtle and the king of the fishes are excellent. Still more enjoyable is the tale of the Enchanted Wine Jug, which includes the origin of the hatred between the dog and the cat. There is a charming strain of romantic sentiment in the trial of the two heavenly lovers—Ching Yuh and Kyain Oo; and this is repeated in the story of the chaste dancing girl who became the faithful wife of Toh Ryung. The element of the supernatural is not absent. In the story of Hong Kil Tong the hero has the assistance of Spirits, who remind us of the Jinns of the Arabian Nights. The dutiful daughter, Sim Chung, goes through a series of enchanting adventures; and the swallow king, who metes such admirable justice to Hyung Bo and Nahl Bo, is a being that it is good to hear of. In short, these tales, though they remind one of other folklores, and are distinctly Oriental in their imagination, have a peculiar flavour of their own; and after reading them it is more easily understood how the Japanese may have profited from their intercourse with this long secluded but by no means barbaric people. It seems that they have known for centuries the blessings of open, competitive examinations for the civil service. The competition seems limited to "composition"; and the prize essayist has his choice of office, and generally chooses the extremely honourable employment of a detective and spy. It should be added that the object of his journeys and disguises is not the running to earth of pick-pockets and co-respondents, but the exposure and punishment of governors and other persons in authority who misuse their powers.

Studien zur Griechischen Mythologie. Von G. Görres. (Berlin: Calvary; London: Nutt.) Studies in mythology, like studies in religion, are difficult things to write. On the one side stands the Charybdis of dogmatism, on the other the Scylla of mere dreaminess; and, like the Odysseus to whom he has devoted one of his studies, Herr Görres seems to have preferred facing the latter danger. There is in his style a want of that precision and that clear sequence of ideas which distinguish the essay of Curtius on Die griechische Götterlehre vom geschichtlichen Standpunkt, of which some of Herr Görres's views remind us; and the matter is confused, rather than cleared up, by frequent repetitions. He has four essays—on Lycaon, on Zeus Laphystios, on Prometheus, and on Odysseus. He seems inclined to side not so much with the solar mythologists as with the mythologists of the weather or the seasons. He finds in Lycaon an analogue, or perhaps a disguised form, of Kronos. The latter devours his own children; the former sacrifices his own son. Both represent the rays of the sun, which first call vegetation into existence and then destroy it. The names of Lycaon and of Mount Lycaeus are connected with the ideas of both "wolf" and "light"; both are natural ideas in connexion with a destructive sun-god, and the connexion is helped out by the accidental resemblance of Greek terms for "wolf" and "light." Prometheus, too, turns out to be a representative of the ripening summer-weather. Certainly, if we must build our mythology on the adventures of the sun, we should prefer his annual to his diurnal course; but we would rather look away from him altogether. As the author remarks somewhere, the mythologist must be on his guard against sunstroke.

Geschichte des "Physiologus." Von Dr. F. Lauchert. (Strassburg: Trübner.)

"The bird Charadrius shows whether the sickness of an invalid to whose bedside it is brought be mortal or not. If it be, the bird turns away; if the invalid will recover, the bird looks steadfastly upon him and draws the sickness to itself. So did the Saviour turn away His face from the Jews because of their unbelief; and He went to the heathen, took their weaknesses on Him, and made them sound."

This is a specimen of the fifty wonderful tales and allegories in natural history of which the Physiologus consists. To trace their origin and follow their development is a task of considerable interest for the scholar and for the explorer of Christian antiquities. These tales have for the most part some root in pagan ideas, but they flourished and found mystical or moral interpretation in Christian times. They were current among Greek-speaking Christians of the second century; they have left abiding traces in popular natural-history, even down to our own time; and they are preserved in early Armenian, Ethiopic, Syrian, Arabic, and Latin versions of the Greek Physiologus, as well as in German, French, and Provençal translations or excerpts. The English Bestiary belongs to the same group. Dr. Lauchert has set himself to find the origin of the various stories, and to trace their successive additions. The work in its present shape was, he shows, a religious writing of early Christian days in Alexandria; but its parts had undergone many previous changes of preparation and have undergone changes since. Dr. Lauchert does also as much for the Greek text as can be done without a critical examination of MSS., by trying to strip off late additions; and he prints also the second German version, of the first half of the twelfth century. He has brought to bear on his task great learning, great patience, and great modesty.

Griechische Märchen von Dankbaren Tieren und Verwandtes. Von A. Marx. (Stuttgart: Kohlhammer.) Herr Marx carefully excludes from his present study the mythical elements which present themselves in so many of the Greek animal-stories. These have been well and recently discussed by Keller, Thiere des Classischen Alterthums (ACADEMY, October 13, 1888); and Herr Marx is interested rather in the mere Völkermärchen—popular stories which lie at the root of Aesop's fables, and of which later forms or traces can occasionally be found in Plutarch, Aelian, or Tzetzes. Thus, the stories in which the dolphin acts as an agent of a god, or in which a god is incorporated in him, have no place here; but the various tales of a dolphin's gratitude are duly arranged and examined. More than this, they are traced, so far as possible, through their various forms; and it is shown how, with the dolphin stories, as with other animal-stories, the tale which begins with gratitude often ends with love. Then, if it can be traced yet further, it is seen to shrink up in a more tasteless age into a mere παράβολον, a story of something odd which happens about a dolphin or a lion, but not a tale of friendly and almost equal intercourse between men and beasts, such as remote times had handed down to the early Greeks. These tales are not, as Benfey argued, of Buddhist origin; indeed, we can occasionally find one among the Greeks at a date too remote for such an origin to be possible. Sometimes a παρὰδοξος, actually occurring, may have started a Volksmärchen; but it is more likely to have often happened that a παρὰδοξος, occurring at a given time and place, fitted itself into an existing story, and was decked out with all its colours. Thus, we seem to have credible evidence that a lion recognised and spared a man in the amphitheatre, probably in the time of Nero. The man was a former keeper of the lion; but the story was "improved" by circumstances of gratitude, and so forth, borrowed from an existing tale. Some few of these animal stories are carried on into the Gesta Romanorum. To those which Herr Marx notices we might add that of the lion in the Gesta which had specially fine feelings on the subject of domestic purity. Hdt. 5, i. might be added to the list of passages about dogs supporting their masters in battle; and the legend in Suidas about the death of the blasphemer Lucian is perhaps a late echo of the stories in which honest dogs spontaneously rend wicked persons.

We must content ourselves with mentioning that Mr. Alexander Gardner, of Paisley, is issuing, under the auspices of the Islay Association, a reprint, in shilling parts, of Campbell's Popular Tales of the West Highlands (1860), which is now a rare book; and that Mr. W. W. Gibbings has published four nicely-printed little volumes of Folklore and Legends, edited by C. J. T., which deal respectively with Scotland, Ireland, Germany, and the East.

NOTES AND NEWS.

It is announced that Sir Edwin Arnold has completed his new epic, The Light of the World. It is a poem longer than The Light of Asia, and not less Oriental in style and character. Six books in blank verse, interspersed with lyrical pieces, are preceded by an introduction in heroic metre; and while the treatment is bold and original, the earnest purpose of the poet throughout has been to convert Christians to Christianity.

We understand that the first volume of Prof. Alfred Marshall's long expected treatise on The Principles of Economics will be published immediately by Messrs. Macmillan & Co. The book is an attempt to present a modern version of old doctrines, with the aid of the new work, and with reference to the new problems of the age.

MR. W. F. SMITH, fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge, has completed a new translation of Rabelais, with critical and explanatory notes. He proposes to issue it by subscription, in a limited edition of 750 copies.

THE following are some of the volumes which have been arranged for in the series of "University Extension Manuals," to be published by Mr. John Murray, under the editorship of Prof. Knight, of St. Andrews:—In literature: Outlines of English Literature, by Mr. William Renton; The English Novel, from its Origin to Scott, by Prof. Raleigh, of Liverpool; Shakespeare and his Predecessors, by Mr. F. S. Boas; The Jacobean Poets, by Mr. Edmund Gosse; The English Poets, from Blake to Tennyson, by the Rev. Stopford Brooke. In history: The Daily Life of the Greeks and Romans, by Prof. W. Anderson, of Sheffield; British Dominion in India, by Sir Alfred Lyall; English Colonisation and Empire, by Mr. A. Caldecott; The French Revolution, by Mr. C. E. Mallet. In philosophy: An Introduction to Philosophy, by Prof. Knight; Logic, Inductive and Deductive, by Prof. Minto, of Aberdeen; Psychology, an Historical Sketch, by Prof. Seth, of St. Andrews; The Elements of Ethics, by Mr. John H. Muirhead. In political economy: Problems of Political Economy, by Mr. M. E. Sadler; Capital in its Relation to Social Progress, by the Rev. Dr. W. Cunningham. In science: The History of Astronomy, by Mr. Arthur Berry; Energy in Nature, by Mr. John Cox; Outlines of Modern Botany, by Prof. Patrick Geddes; The Physiology of the Senses, by Prof. McKendrick and Dr. Snodgrass; Studies in Modern Geology, by Mr. R. D. Roberts; The Study of Animal Life, by Mr. I. Arthur Thomson; Mechanics, by Prof. James Stuart.

MESSRS. ROUTLEDGE have in the press a Cyclopaedia of Card and Table Games, edited by Mr. Angelo Lewis ("Prof. Hoffmann"). Among other authorities, Dr. W. Pole will contribute articles on Piquet, Ombre, and Patience; Major General Drayson, on Whist and Ecarté; Mr. Arthur G. Payne (four times champion for Cambridge University) on Billiards; Mr. L. Hoffer (chess editor of the Field) undertakes the Chess section; and Mr. R. McCulloch (the editor of Anderson's great work) that on Draughts. A melancholy interest will attach to the sections on Napoleon and Solo Whist, the writer, Mr. Charles F. Pardon, having died while the work was in progress.

DR. EDLESTON'S reprints of the Gainford Parish Registers will be completed very shortly by the issue of the third section, containing the Deaths. The volume will be published by Mr. Elliot Stock.

MESSRS. VIZETELLY & Co. are about to publish an English edition of the poems of Mr. Francis Adams, the Australian poet, under the title of Songs of the Army of the Night.

We learn that the first edition of Paul Nugent, Materialist, by Helen F. Hetherington and the Rev. H. Darwin Burton, was exhausted on the day of publication. Messrs. Griffith Farran & Co. will have a second edition ready on Monday or Tuesday next.

THE proper title of Mr. Loftie's work, announced in the ACADEMY of last week, is London City.

THE French edition of Mr. Stanley's book, Dans les Ténèbres de l'Afrique, is published at 30 frs. in paper covers, and 38 frs. bound. The German edition, Im Dunkelsten Afrika, is published at 22 marks. Both are in two volumes, with the original illustrations and maps. We understand that the French translator, whose name is not given, is M. Elie Reclus, the brother of the geographer.

IN response to a memorial promoted by Mr. Howorth, the Treasury has authorised a grant of £150 to Mr. Ben Brierley, the Lancashire author and poet, who is disabled by ill-health and in necessitous circumstances.

STEPNIAK will give a lecture on "Tolstoi as a Novelist" at the Portman Rooms on Wednesday next, July 16, at 5 p.m., with Mr. Percy Bunting in the chair. The report which has appeared elsewhere that Stepniaik's subject was to be "The Kreutzer Sonata" is a misstatement.

ST. PAUL'S SCHOOL, despite its fine modern buildings and its magnificent playground, has no gymnasium—a want that is increasingly felt now that the number of boys exceeds 600. It is estimated that the total amount of money required for the purpose is £3500. Towards this the Mercers Company have voted £2000, the largest sum that they are legally empowered to grant; and the High Master has issued an appeal for donations to make up the balance of £1500.

MR. F. A. EDWARDS has printed in the two last numbers of the Hampshire Independent a list of local newspapers, past and present, which is intended as a contribution to Mr. H. M. Gilbert's forthcoming Bibliotheca Hantoniensis. The total number exceeds one hundred, including many which had but a short life, or were merged in others. The list shows some curiosities in nomenclature, and also illustrates the fact that in former times little regard was paid to the rights of title. The oldest paper seems to be the Salisbury and Winchester Journal, which was established so far back as 1729, and issued a Portsmouth edition circa 1736. The Hampshire Chronicle was started at Southampton in 1772, removed to Winchester in 1778 (when the former proprietor issued another paper of the same name at Southampton), took the name of the existing Salisbury and Winchester Journal in 1784, and in 1818 adopted the following portentous title—

"The Hampshire Chronicle and Courier; Portsmouth, Portsea, Gosport, Chichester, Salisbury, Winchester, Southampton, and Isle of Wight Gazette; and South of England Pilot; or, Naval, Military, Commercial, and Agricultural Register for the Counties of Hants, Sussex, Surrey, Berks, Wilts, and Dorset."

The Hampshire Independent was itself founded in 1835, giving four pages for 7d. In 1837, the price was reduced to 4½d., but raised in the following year to 5d., and again in 1846 to 6d., when the size was doubled. In 1858, the price was 4d. stamped, and 3d. unstamped. In 1870, the price was reduced to 1d., at which it still remains, though the present size is sixty-four columns. A daily issue was also begun in 1870, but lasted only for two years. Hampshire has now no daily paper.

THE 450th anniversary of the invention of printing was celebrated at Cologne, the metropolis of the Rhineland, with a "Kommers" under the presidency of Mr. August Neven Du Mont, proprietor of the Cologne Gazette. Poets, artists, literary men, burgomasters and other civil dignitaries attended. Speeches were made, a play performed, illustrating Gutenberg's life and struggles, and medals were distributed.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN have issued this week, in very pleasing form, a reprint from the Collected Works of Edward Fitzgerald (1889) of his famous version of the Rubaiyat, of Omar Khayyám, which is practically unobtainable except in those three volumes. The author, as is well known, never put his own name on the title-page of any of the four editions which appeared during his lifetime; and the show of anonymity is still preserved. In accordance with their admirable custom, which other publishers would do well to follow, Messrs. Macmillan have given on the verso of the title-page a brief bibliography. This, however, requires to be supplemented by the mention of at least two American editions: (1) that accompanying the magnificent designs of Mr. Elihu Vedder (1884); and (2) that in the Collected Works of Fitzgerald (2 vols. 1887), which (we believe) are prohibited from circulation in this country on account of some question of copyright. We may mention one further matter, which is of interest as tending to show that Omar Khayyám was not altogether so unknown as some of his modern admirers would represent. So long ago as 1804, Mountstuart Elphinstone wrote thus to his friend Strachey, in a discussion on Persian poetry:

"By-the-by, Khyoom is a singular writer. His epigrams are far above any of those that I have read in Greek or Latin. They are bold and very often profound thoughts in forcible language" (Sir T. E. Colebrooke's Life of E., 1884, Vol. I. p. 127).

Correction.—The Rev. Percy Myles, who had no opportunity of correcting a proof of his review of Dr. Stubbs's University of Dublin in the last number of the ACADEMY, writes to point out the following misprints which occur in it:

"Mitchell" for "Mitchel," p. 7, col. 1., l. 41;
 "Farquahar" for "Farquhar," and "Southern"
 for "Sotherne," same col., note, l. 4;
 "Emmett" for "Emmet," col. 3, l. 45.

TRANSLATION.

FROM PAUL VERLAINE.

TEARS in my heart that weeps,
 Like the rain upon the town.
 What drowsy languor steepes
 In tears my heart that weeps?

O sweet sound of the rain
 On earth and on the roofs!
 For a heart's weary pain
 O the song of the rain!

Vain tears, vain tears, my heart!
 What, none hath done thee wrong?
 Tears without reason start
 From my disheartened heart.

This is the weariest woe,
 O heart, of love and hate
 Too weary, not to know
 Why thou hast all this woe.

ARTHUR SYMONS.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE precentor of Lincoln contributes to the Antiquary a short but excellent paper on the recent discovery of a mediæval undercroft at Grantham. It was of rude character and possessed little beauty, but we cordially agree with the writer in reprobating its destruction.

"An additional step - up would have been needed; and, therefore, though it would have continued to form an excellent cellar, this interesting relic of antiquity, already at least two centuries old when Richard III. visited Grantham and signed the death warrant of Buckingham at the still-existing Angel Inn hard by, was demolished."

The Rev. Joseph Hirst gives an account of the new museum at Rome, and of some of the treasures it contains. It is formed out of the cloisters of S. Maria Degli Angeli, a work designed by Michael Angelo, "where a hundred columns contrast finely with the beautiful cypresses he is said to have planted in the court." The Hon. Harold Dillon, a high authority on costume and armour, contributes a paper on the canvas coat of Sir Hugh Willoughby, which was to be seen in the Tudor Exhibition. It is not possible to abridge his description of one of the most curious articles of defensive dress which time has spared to us. Mr. Edleston continues his catalogue of Monumental Brasses and Mr. Hope his papers on Holy Wells. The counties are taken in alphabetical order; Mr. Hope has now arrived at Northumberland.

MR. ELLIOT STOCK has issued this month the first part of Berkshire Notes and Queries: a Quarterly Journal devoted to the Family History, Antiquities, and Topography of the Royal County. The editor is Mr. George F. Tudor Sherwood (6 Fulham Park Road, S.W.), who makes an appeal for the loan of old documents and newspapers, copies of monumental inscriptions, and extracts from parish registers and churchwardens' accounts. He himself prints in this number a collection of epitaphs in Hungerford Church, made in 1766, from a MS. in the British Museum; the first instalment of a list of nonconformist registers preserved at Somerset House; and an alphabetical index of administrations for the years 1653 and 1654, from the records of the prerogative court of Canterbury. Another valuable paper is a catalogue of MSS. relating to Berkshire in the British Museum. It will be seen, therefore, that the new periodical is of a more serious aim than is commonly associated with the title "Notes and Queries."

WE would briefly call attention to an article in the July number of Time entitled "Old John Brown and the Men of Harper's Ferry, by One of Them." The author is Mr. Richard J. Hinton, an ex-Chartist, who here gives an account of the work that went on in Kansas in 1856, the year when Buchanan was elected president. To most Englishmen this chapter of the anti-slavery movement is quite unknown; and Mr. Hinton's picture of the times is rendered very vivid by the personal touches. We trust that he will be encouraged to fulfil his promise of continuing it.

IN the Boletín of the Real Academia de la Historia for June F. Codera analyses favourably the "Historical Sketch of Islamite Rule in the Balearic Isles," by Alvaro Campaner, correcting and supplementing it from documents which have appeared since its publication. Sanchez Moguel comments on a Spanish romance of the Eastern Jews, showing how closely they have preserved the metrical forms and the Spanish of the fifteenth century. Fernandez Duro gives an account of the valuable historical works of Torribio Medina, the historiographer of Chili, one of whose works on the Historical Cartography of Chili relates the piracies of the English—Drake, Cavendish, Hawkins, and others—and their contributions to the hydrography of the Pacific coasts. Pujol y Camps gives an important addition, and a few corrections, to his elaborate article on Iberian Epigraphy in the Boletín for April; and Father Fita prints further documents relating to the early history of the Inquisition, together with some Hebrew and Latin inscriptions.

A PALI ADDRESS TO AN ENGLISH GOVERNOR.

ON the occasion of Sir Arthur Gordon's retirement from the governorship of Ceylon, two addresses in Pali were presented to him on May 26 on behalf of the Buddhist community generally, and the Pandits in particular. The following is a translation of the former address, which was presented by the high priest of Adam's Peak:

"May it please Your Excellency,—Your Excellency renowned throughout the world, the Honourable Arthur Hamilton Gordon, G.C.M.G., Governor and Commander-in-Chief in and over the Island of Ceylon with the dependencies thereof, has been placed by Her Most Gracious Majesty Victoria Queen of Great Britain, and Empress over Bharatkhandha [India] and many other colonies within the glorious continent of Asia, to rule over the Island of Lanka [Ceylon] which is the key to the land of Bharatkhandha.

"Your Excellency, albeit a Christian, has won the hearts of persons of all religions existing in this island by your just administration during a term of more than six years.

"Your Excellency has pleased all parties by giving to the Buddhists, Sivites, and Mohammedans public holidays in order that each sect might honour the founder of its faith, exempting every one on those days from public duty. Thus the Buddhists have received a great boon.

"Administering moreover the affairs of this Island with justice and equity, Your Excellency has, with the advice and consent of the Executive and Legislative Councils, enacted a law to prevail for the future that the landed property granted by ancient kings and others to Viharas and Dewales should be properly managed.

"Having observed that the ancient Viharas, Stupas, etc., caused to be erected by the most powerful and glorious Sinhalese monarchs were falling into ruin and dilapidated, as there were no longer Sinhalese princes to restore them, Your Excellency has ordered one of them to be repaired for archaeological purposes in the hope that they may remain protected for a long period.

"Your Excellency has further benefited the Buddhists by sanctioning the employment of persons of their own religion as Registrars of Marriage.

"Your Excellency, with the laudable wish of preserving the philosophy and sciences contained in that most noble language, the Pali—which is regarded by Eastern nations as the original language and the depository of the teachings of the blessed Buddha, as well as those found in the Sanskrit language of the gods—has caused many works such as the Mahawansa and others to be translated into English, and given an incentive to the publication of Pali and Sanskrit works by allowing them to be printed at the Government Press.

"Your Excellency has entranced the gladness of Buddhists by honouring at times with your presence their festivals when great offerings were made at their shrines, without despising them, and without hurting the feelings of the people.

"Your Excellency has also gladdened the hearts of the Buddhists—by far the greater portion of the inhabitants of this island—by showing them no hostility, but treating them with kindness and respect.

"Our hearts' desire therefore is that Your Excellency the Governor of Lanka, who is now leaving us in grief at your departure, may live for many years endowed with every blessing, pleasing the hearts of the people around you.

"Stanza.

"May the noble Gordon live victorious over his enemies, protected by the virtues of the Great Sage and endowed with every blessing—endearing himself, like the moon, unto all classes, and delighting the hearts of the people."

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- BINDSEIL, Th. Von Agrigent nach Syrakus. Seehausen: Roever. 1 M.
 BOISGOBEY, Fortuné du. Fontenay Coup-d'épée. Paris: Plon. 7 fr.
 COUBERTIN, P. de. Universités transatlantiques. Paris: Hachette. 3 fr. 50 c.
 DAUDET, E. Film d'émigré. Paris: Marpon. 3 fr. 50 c.
 JENNY, G. Miltons verlorenes Paradies in der deutschen Literatur d. 18. Jahrh. Leipzig: Gräfe. 1 M. 60 Pf.
 MAÏTRES HOLLANDAIS, les. 1re Série. Paris: Lib. de l'art. 10 fr.
 MAXIMILIAN II., König v. Bayern, u. Schelling. Briefwechsel, hrsg. v. L. Trost u. F. Leist. Stuttgart: Cotta. 6 M.
 RAVAISSON-MOLLIER, Ch. Les manuscrits de Léonard de Vinci. 66 vol. Paris: Quantin. 150 fr.
 SIMON, Jules. L'affaire Nayl: trois condamnés à mort. Paris: Calmann Lévy. 5 fr.
 WOLKAN, R. Bühmens Antheil an der deutschen Literatur d. 16. Jahrh. 1. Thl. Bibliographie. Prag: Haase. 4 M.

THEOLOGY.

- CORSESS, P. Die Altercatio Simonis Judaei et Theophili Christiani, auf ihre Quellen geprüft. Berlin: Weidmann. 1 M. 60 Pf.
 GIESEBRECHT, F. Beiträge zur Jesaia kritik. Göttingen: Vandenhoeck. 5 M.
 DÜLLINGER, I. v. Briefe u. Erklärungen üb. die Vaticanischen Decrete 1869—1887. München: Beck. 2 M. 25 Pf.
 SOLGER, E. Das Urevangelium. Studien zur Entwicklungsgeschichte der christl. Lehre u. Kirche. Jena: Mauke. 3 M. 60 Pf.

HISTORY, ETC.

- GÄRTGENS, P. Die Beziehungen zwischen Brandenburg u. Pommern unter Kurfürst Friedrich II. 1440—1470. Giesen: Ricker. 2 M. 60 Pf.
 KRIEGER, die Friedrichs d. Grossen. 1. Thl. Der erste schlesische Krieg. 1740—1742. 1. Bd. Die Besatzg. Schlesiens u. die Schlacht bei Mollwitz. Berlin: Mittler. 16 M.
 TOMASIN, P. Die Völkstämme im Gebiete v. Triest. u. in Istrien. Eine ethnograph. Studie. Triest: Schimpff. 2 M. 60 Pf.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- BERLESE, A. N. Icones fungorum ad usum sylloges Saccardianae accommodatae. Pars 1. Fasc. 1. Berlin: Friedländer. 8 M.
 DOHRN, A. Studien zur Urgeschichte d. Wirbelthierkörpers. Berlin: Friedländer. 7 M.
 GREMLI, A. Neue Beiträge zur Flora der Schweiz. 5. Hft. Aarau: Witz-Christen. 1 M. 60 Pf.
 KLAUSNER, F. Mehrfachbildungen bei Wirbelthieren. München: Rieger. 12 M.
 VOSS, W. Mycologia carniolica. 2. Thl. Berlin: Friedländer. 1 M. 80 Pf.

PHILOLOGY.

- LATTMANN, H. Selbständiger u. bezogener Gebrauch der Tempora im Lateinischen. Göttingen: Vandenhoeck. 3 M. 60 Pf.

CORRESPONDENCE.

DE QUINCEY'S ALLEGED UNTRUTHFULNESS.

81, Lexham Gardens, Kensington: July 6, 1890.

May I ask admission for a few words? An article by Mr. Saintsbury in Macmillan's Magazine for June on "de Quincey" has only recently come to my knowledge. In this the author imputes untruthfulness to de Quincey. I have offered to the editor of Macmillan's Magazine, and through him to Mr. Saintsbury, a perusal of private letters substantiating de Quincey's account of the definite points in question. The editor has refused this offer; and in this condition of things I desire to ask such of the public as interests itself in these subjects to suspend judgment till the letters I offered for these gentlemen's private consideration are made public. This, I hope, will be shortly.

FLORENCE BAIRD-SMITH

(de Quincey's daughter).

THE LOST WORKS OF PHILO.

University College, Oxford: July 3, 1890.

May I through the ACADEMY correct an error contained in a recent edition of the "Libellus de Officio Mundi" of Philo Judaeus, by Leopold Cohn (Breslau, 1889)?

This edition is a great advance on all preceding ones; and with the exception of Tischendorf's Philonea and Prof. Rendel Harris's Fragments, it is the first modern attempt at a really critical edition of any part of this writer. It is entitled: Specimen novae editionis operum Philonis ab Academia Regia Berolinensi praemio ex donatione Carlottiana ornatum; and as the basis of his new text, Mr Cohn rightly takes—so far as it goes—a Viennese Codex (in the Catalogue of Nessel: theol. gr. 29). This codex stands alone in that it gives at the head of the text a list of several of the writings of Philo lost in Greek but preserved in ancient Armenian; writings as to which it is of importance to ascertain when they were last copied and where. The list is prefaced by the words τάδε ἐνέστιν φίλωνος, and enumerates the "De Mundi Officio"; the lost "Quaestiones et Solutiones ad Genesin," six books; "Ad Exodon," books β' and ε'; "De Posteritate Caini"; "De Decalogo"; "De Specialibus Legibus"; "De Justitia." On the same page with the list is written in cruciform arrangement of letters the following: "Εὐζόιος ἐπισκοπος ἐν σμάρτιοις ἀνευρέσασα," "Euzoius, bishop, renewed these writings on parchment." Then follows about half of the "De Mundi Officio." Now, of this codex, Cohn writes in his Prolegomena de Codicibus thus:

"Philonea olim plura inerat; fol. 146<sup>v</sup> enim haec tabula extat [then follows in Greek the list above given] nunc in codice tantum modo liber περι τῆς κατὰ Μωσέα Κοσμοποιίας servatus est et ne is quidem integer: abrupitur . . . ut dimidia fere pars libelli interierit . . . reliqua Philonea periisse eo magis dolendum, &c."

An examination of the codex, however, reveals the fact that it never contained more than it now contains. For, firstly, the treatise "De Mundi Officio" breaks off in the middle of the sentence, and at a point in the writing not half way down the page, of which the lower half is left entirely blank; while the book "S. Cyrilli Catecheses," which follows in the same hand, begins only at the top of the next folio. Secondly, there never intervened any leaves between that in the middle of which the "De Mundi Officio" breaks off and the one following on which begin "S. Cyrilli Catecheses." If Leopold Cohn's statement were accurate, it would follow that these lost works of Philo were in existence, and were copied, as late as the eleventh century, whereas it is not certain even that they were contained in the book from which this Viennese Codex was copied, and which was clearly a book written litteris majusculis. For it may have been because his archetype extended no further than the eleventh-century scribe broke off where he does. Perhaps, however, he merely grew tired of writing out Philo. In any case, it is curious that the rest of the very large page of parchment is left blank, and that the writing should end in the middle of a sentence.

I believe this Viennese Codex to be the only one in which any trace remains of the lost Quaestiones of Philo upon Genesis and Exodus.

A similar error occurs in Fabricius "Bibliotheca Latina," who ascribes an old Latin paraphrase of these Quaestiones, published in Paris in 1520, and in Basel in 1527, to the sixteenth century. A glance at these printed books, however, shows that this paraphrase, along with the Latin rendering of the "De Vita Contemplativa" which accompanies it, is much older than the notice of Fabricius would lead one to suppose. The Basel copy, in particular, was printed from a "pervetustum exemplar," preserved at the monastery of Lorch, near Heidelberg; and the version of the "De Vita Contemplativa" contains a tradition of Philo's text older than any of the Greek MSS., and agreeing with the ancient Armenian version. This latter version, which dates from about 400 A.D., was itself doubtless made from the copy written out on parchment by Euzoius, A.D. 376, for the church of Caesarea (see S. Hieronymus Epist. 34, referred to by Leopold Cohn); perhaps even from the papyrus codex which, originally part of the library of Origen, had probably been brought to Caesarea by Pamphilus Martyr from Alexandria, at the beginning of the fourth century.

FRED. C. CONYBEARE.

THE SUBSTANTIVE "LOUKE" IN CHAUCER.

Cambridge: July 4, 1890.

I wish to draw attention to the curious word louke in Chaucer, not only because it has not been explained, but because it seems to me to be an important word in Teutonic philology.

Just at the end of the Cook's Tale we have the lines—

"And for ther is no theef without a louke,
That helpeth him to wasten and to souke
Of that he brybe can or borwe may," &c.

Tyrwhitt guessed it to mean "a receiver"; but a receiver does not help a thief to steal, he only helps him afterwards. Morris says, "a good-for-nothing fellow," which is vague in the extreme, though correct so far as it goes.

I see in it a sb. formed with the M.E. agential suffix -e (A.S. -a) from the A.S. lūcan, to pluck up weeds, whence prov. E. lowk, look, to weed corn, &c. The Friesic lūkan (also lukan, which is important) means not only to pull, weed, pluck, but also to suck or to milk. Surely then we can connect with it the M. Du. locke, "a worme that sucketh blood, a horse leach," in Hexham. But this vowel-change requires that lūcan should be a strong verb; and this it certainly was once, as the pp. gelochen occurs in Notker (Schade, s.v. lūhan). This being so, I can see no reason at all for separating the A.S. lūcan, to pull, pt. t. **lēac*, pp. **locen*, from the A.S. lūcan, to lock, with the same pt. t. and pp. The Gothic galūkan means to lock or shut; and, on the other hand, us-lūkan means not only to open or unlock, but also to pull out a sword. This is the view taken by Schade.

The original sense seems to be simply "drag" or "pull violently." Hence, to drag up weeds, to draw a sword, to draw a bolt. And as we are not restricted to the direction of drawing the bolt, it may equally well mean to undraw, to open, as well as to shut, which curious variation of sense is sometimes found in Icelandic. This gives us at once the sense of "aperture" for the G. Loch.

In the Bremen Wörterbuch, luken means both to pull up weeds and to take a hearty pull in drinking, to suck down. With this notion of pulling thus inherent in the verb, it is natural to connect with it the Icel. lokka, to pull softly, also to entice; the only change is from the use of violence to the use of gentler ways. And thus Icel. lokkari, an enticer, a decoy, is akin to E. louke, an accomplice who decoys dupes, and helps the thief to "suck" them; cf. Icelandic Loki.

Surely this illustrates the G. locken, to entice, and furnishes a reason why we need not hesitate to connect G. locken with G. Loch and E. lock. Schade accepts this, but Kluge does not seem to do so.

For the etymology of E. leek, G. Lauch, considered as doubtful, the A.S. lūcan may help us. It may simply mean "a plucked-up herb," a "thing gathered," cf. our use of crop. Much more might be added; this family of words I take to be a large one.

WALTER W. SKEAT.

AN ICELANDER UPON "THE BOWDMAN."

London: June 30, 1890.

"Rien n'est si désagréable que d'être pendu obscurement."—VOLTAIRE.

Mr. Hall Caine deserves high praise for his courage. He has dared to leave the beaten track of novelists, and to lay his scene in Iceland and the Isle of Man; and, what is more, he has actually, in A.D. 1890, sent into the world a Saga in three volumes. It is true the new Saga, with due allowance for the time of writing, ranks below the Sagas of old; but here probably the author would himself disclaim all rivalry. The Saga writers take good care of chronology and of historical facts; whereas no poet ever displayed a more utter disregard of history than this writer of a historical novel. His novel is dated "about 1800"; but it contains descriptions that ought to be dated 1000-1300, and others that ought to be dated 1874-90. Then, into the bargain, he turns upside down all the events at the beginning of the present century which he relates, so that they can hardly be recognised. The author will say that he has the right to make any alterations required to suit his story. So he has; but then his novel ceases to be a historical novel, a Saga.

Mr. Hall Caine's misspellings of names may easily be forgiven; but, as he expresses the hope that the Icelanders may some day throw off the Danish yoke, why does he himself lay this hateful yoke on the neck of many an Icelandic name, giving it in a Danish form?

Mr. Hall Caine paints some graphic scenes in the course of his story, but at times he lapses somewhat into the Jules Verne manner. I do not doubt that there were strong men in Iceland about 1800; but, alas! we have degenerated, and at the present day I fear that no Icander could carry another man on his back eighty miles in less than twenty-four hours. Plovers do not in these latter days fall dead from the fumes of a lake; and how could prisoners in sulphur mines wear iron collars, and iron bells on their foreheads? As a matter of fact, prisoners never worked in these sulphur mines (which are not mines, but diggings), much less did they wear these emblems of slavery. How could carts be used for transporting victuals, no conveyance of this kind having existed on the island, so far as I know? The author goes on to tell how a prisoner was nailed down by his right hand and got nothing to eat, while food and drink were placed within sight, and a knife was put in his left hand (evidently that he might cut off his right hand in order to get at the food). Surely, never was Herod out-heroded if Jules Verne is not beaten here on his own ground. In actual fact, there is not the slightest foundation for these harrowing tales, compared with which a volcanic eruption suspending the sittings of Parliament (though as yet it has not happened) is innocent, and even possible. All this is legitimate only on the condition that the author meant to write a weird romance, not a Saga. Then his sins are no more sins, but merits, and his book deserves its success.

I thank Mr. Hall Caine heartily for the goodwill and kind feelings displayed by him throughout his book towards my country and countrymen. May other authors follow the example he has set in widening the bounds of the novelist's field, and feeding the hungry world of readers on new pastures! The people closely akin to the English who are living to-day in Scandinavia are an unknown world, worth knowing. Who will throw open the doors of this world to the English public? I fear that for some time yet they will remain closed. The fame of the Scandinavian dramatist Ibsen, which has been established in Scandinavia for more than thirty years, and in Germany for ten years, has only at this moment reached the shores of England. Doubtless, many a man in England to-day thinks, "how can a few millions of people produce anything worth knowing? Let the Scandinavians learn from us; we cannot possibly learn from them." But, I ask, how many millions of people were living in England in the times of Shakspeare?

JÓN STEFÁNSSON.

PRINTING AT AVIGNON IN 1444.

Bowdon, Manchester: July 6, 1890.

It does not seem to me at all certain that the Waldfoghel documents refer to movable printing types. "Ars scribendi artificialiter" would not be an inappropriate term for stencils to be used by the scribe. Of what service would forty-eight letters in tin, or two alphabets in iron, be in setting up a book by the process of typography? But an alphabet in stencil would answer the purpose of a scribe who wanted a quicker or a more certain method of making a book than the old fashion of writing every letter by hand.

That stencils were used is well known. Some MSS. of this kind are described by the late John Hirst, of Saddleworth, in the fourth volume of the Transactions of the Lancashire and Cheshire Antiquarian Society, and were afterwards sold at the dispersal of his collection.

WILLIAM E. A. AXON.

SCIENCE.

On Right and Wrong. By W. S. Lilly. (Chapman & Hall.)

According to Mr. Lilly, modern society is in a very alarming condition. The old moral distinctions are discredited. Very dangerous opinions are openly professed. Moral responsibility is denied. Public virtue is at a low ebb. The sanctity of marriage is impaired. Mendacity prevails in the newspaper press, and indecency in art. For these disastrous results we have to thank what he is pleased to call Materialism, that is to say, the teaching of such men as Mr. Herbert Spencer, Prof. Huxley, and Prof. Clifford. If we ask for a remedy, the course suggested is a return to the old notions of right and wrong. But for a clear definition and derivation of moral principles we may ask in vain. Throughout the volume "right" means what Mr. Lilly likes, and "wrong" what he dislikes. There is, indeed, a great show of clear philosophical thinking, but it is merely a show. Amid the arbitrary assumptions, the reckless misstatements, the platitudes, the irrelevancies, the inconsistencies, the shrieks and gasps of rhetorical rage that form the staple of these essays, it is difficult to trace any definite line of attack or defence.

I have charged Mr. Lilly with reckless misstatement; I must at once substantiate the charge. Prof. Huxley, who is one of his "Materialists," says, as quoted on p. 37 of this volume, "natural knowledge, in desiring to ascertain the laws of comfort, has been driven to discover those of conduct, and to lay the foundations of a new morality." According to Mr. Lilly, this means a morality "based ultimately on the laws of comfort." When Saul went out to seek his father's asses and found a kingdom, did it follow that his kingdom was based on asses? "Mr. Lecky," we are told (p. 48), "has justly remarked that the only charge utilitarians can bring against vice is that of imprudence." It was very discreditable for Mr. Lecky to say this; it is doubly discreditable for Mr. Lilly to endorse it; for, in preparing his review of Mr. John Morley, he can hardly have overlooked the essay in which that critic has denounced Mr. Lecky's confusion of utilitarianism with the selfish system. Moreover, he apparently has the advantage which his predecessor had not, of having read Prof. Sidgwick's Methods of Ethics. The same calumny is repeated, without the citation of a single authority, in the statement that "in the mouths of Materialists 'reformation' means nothing more than hindrance by fear of consequences, or prudential self-restraint" (p. 124). In the course of a highly edifying attack on the unveracity of newspaper-writers, I find the following passage:

"I suppose I should not greatly err if I said that truth is, as a rule, the last thing which an average journalist thinks about, as he girds himself up to the delivery of his daily burden. It is a dictum of Cudworth's, 'Truth is the most unbending and uncompliant, the most firm and adamant thing in the world.' The mere adjectives would in most cases suffice to make the able editor or the nimble leader-writer drop his pen. He prefers the teaching of Mr. Herbert Spencer, that, 'What we call truth is simply the correspondence of subjective to objective relations'; and he betters the instruction. The manipulation of relations is the business of his life" (pp. 167-8).

Now, either this means nothing at all (which is quite possible), or it means that Mr. Spencer's teaching tends to encourage systematic falsehood. Let Mr. Lilly then produce one single false statement, from a newspaper or any other quarter, which satisfies Mr. Spencer's definition of truth. There are statements of his own which do not satisfy it, but that of course has nothing to do with his dislike for it. How, one may ask, is the obnoxious definition incompatible with Cudworth's description? The actions and events that a journalist professes to tell about belong to past time, and therefore constitute a series of unalterable relations; and the series of subjective relations whose correspondence to them Mr. Spencer calls truth must be equally unalterable to be true. But the journalist, we are told, "betters the instruction." Is it bettering an instruction to break it? If Mr. Lilly were required to draw a straight line through a given point parallel to a given straight line, would he call it bettering the instruction to draw his line at an angle to the other line or in a different plane? I must, however, apologise for offering such a petty matter-of-fact illustration to a transcendentalist who revels in high-flown phrases about "that Absolute which is the True, the Good, the Beautiful; whereof all truth, goodness, and beauty of which we have knowledge are but the faint emanations, the dim shadows" (p. 226). That, it seems, is how journalists are to be reformed, by being taught to look on the most accurate knowledge attainable as a faint emanation and a dim shadow. The most audacious of them can hardly "better the instruction." They may remember, too, that Plato, the first philosopher who ever talked in this style, claimed for the authorities in his Republic an unlimited right of lying, in what they considered the public interest. Once more: according to Mr. Lilly, utilitarian, experimental, and physical moralists generally tell us that "you make an act wrong by making it penal. It is not punished because it is wrong, but wrong because it is punished" (p. 125). No reference is given in support of this preposterous assertion, and, I am convinced, for the best of all possible reasons. If no authority is cited, it is because there was none to cite. A tolerably intimate acquaintance with the writings of the school incriminated does not enable me to recall a single passage that even the practised "manipulation" of Mr. Lilly could pervert into the sense required. Is it credible, to take but a single instance, that a class of moralists, among whom the Positivists are included, should agree in declaring that the distinction of right and wrong is inapplicable to international relations?

The truth is that Mr. Lilly's arguments are vitiated throughout by a profound misapprehension of the positions occupied by the phenomenist school, and, perhaps one may add, by a certain unfamiliarity with English modes of thought. He seems to have consorted a good deal with reactionary Frenchmen, and his tone is too often that of the hectoring French spiritualist professor, sometimes doubled with a French clericalist. The rapid leaps of his logic are very French. Because the analytical school of psychology refuse to admit personality as something distinct from the phenomena of feeling, willing, and thinking that make up the concrete man, therefore they must ignore the distinction between a person and a thing, therefore they must disbelieve in human rights. Because, in accordance with common experience and with the law of the conservation of energy they refuse to believe in Free-will, that is, in a will undetermined by motives, therefore they must deny moral obligation, and have no right to use punishment as a deterrent. "Where there is no responsibility there is no guilt. 'But his [the murderer's] execution will deter others.' Deter others! Is that a sufficient reason for hanging an innocent person?" (p. 55). A human being so constituted that he commits a murder, knowing what he does, is held by determinists to be responsible—to be guilty—and to deserve death, if his death be necessary for the protection of other lives. It is Mr. Lilly's God who punishes the innocent, to judge by the following hysterical interrogation :

"Or England, alas! Can any man whose moral sense is not hopelessly blunted doubt that she will have to pay, to the uttermost farthing, the penalty of her centuries of tyrannical oppression and remorseless cruelty in Ireland?" (p. 158).

I suppose the moral sense of the great Hebrew prophet was "hopelessly blunted" when he denied that the children's teeth were to be set on edge because their fathers had eaten sour grapes. In England and elsewhere the innocent have had, and will again have, to suffer through the actions of the guilty, not to make vicarious satisfaction for them.

After misinterpreting the doctrines of his opponents, Mr. Lilly proceeds to credit them with practical consequences involving the negation of his own doctrines. When phenomenonist opinions have been once adopted, the freedom of the will and the inborn sense of moral obligation disappear as if by enchantment or hypnotism. Women especially must live in servitude to animal passion, or in servitude to decaying belief. "Bring up woman in the Positivist school, and you make of her a monster: the very type of ruthless cynicism, of all-engrossing selfishness, of unbridled passion" (p. 34). No man who was familiar with English thought and life—not even Mr. Mallock, for example—would write like this. And, in fact, what Mr. Lilly adduces as a proof of this broad statement is the character of Sabine Tallevant in M. Octave Feuillet's novel, La Morte. One might as well refer to the "Avis aux pères de famille" in the French red republican papers as a proof of what Jesuitism inevitably leads to. M. Octave Feuillet always writes as a fanatical clericist, and the work here cited is simply a Catholic pamphlet under the disguise of an indecent and improbable romance.

A constant charge against the "Materialists" is that their morality is relative, while that of Mr. Lilly is absolute and immutable. Here is a specimen of the latter as applied to prostitutes and their trade :

"I believe the true function of the State is to control and regulate what it must regard as a necessary evil, and to minimise, as far as may be, the resultant mischiefs, moral and physical. These miserable women are the guardians of our domestic purity" (p. 32).

Here is another example of immutable morality. Mr. Lilly is very strong on "the great aboriginal right of man to belong to himself, to realise the idea of his being" (p. 114). But apparently he is to exercise this right within such limits as suit Mr. Lilly. In his Century of Revolution we learned that there was a "relative justification" for the mediaeval inquisitor. In the present volume we are told that "the realisation of the socialistic idea must, at any cost, be prevented: even if we have to seek in the gallows and the sword the ultimate answer to its votaries. The preservation of the fair frame of civilisation is of infinitely more account than are the lives of a horde of fools and fanatics" (p. 193).

On this two observations suggest themselves. The first is that Plato, a thorough transcendentalist, gave it as his deliberate and matured opinion that all things should be held in common. Here then we have two transcendentalists (Plato would understand and excuse the collocation) differing absolutely from one another on a question that goes to the root of morality. So much for transcendentalism as a satisfactory basis of ethics. The second is that Mr. Lilly's notions of punishment are conveniently elastic. I would ask him: Is Mr. William Morris innocent or guilty? In the former case, would you hang an innocent man? In the latter, are you not talking like a mere relativist when you postpone his execution to a more convenient time? For (p. 128) you adopt Plato's view that the guilty person has a right to be punished; so that by delaying his punishment you keep him out of his own. Altogether the author of the Earthly Paradise seems to be very hardly treated. By the way, Mr. Lilly himself holds that the soil and the entire accumulated wealth of the country are, in the last resort, the property of the country; and hints that they ought to be distributed by legal authority among the necessitous classes to such an extent as shall place every one above the reach of want (pp. 197 sq.). Thus the question for the present holders of property is in what sauce they shall be cooked. It is well known that Mr. Herbert Spencer has been led by a priori reasoning from a theory of natural right to a directly opposite conclusion. Those who maintain the old utilitarian theory may be content to look on for the present, while their enemies are tearing one another to pieces. The hour of their own triumph will come at last.

ALFRED W. BENN.

CORRESPONDENCE.

CONTRIBUTIONS TO PĀLI LEXICOGRAPHY.

Dedham, Essex.

1. Lūha, luhasa, lūkhasa.

In Divyāvadāna (ed. Cowell and Neil) we find the curious form LŪHA in lūha-civara (pp. 81, 427) and lūha-praṇīta (p. 425). It has evidently puzzled the editors, who have conjecturally glossed it by "bad." But the sense of the passages in which the word occurs shows that lūha does not mean "bad," but "coarse,"

"rough," and corresponds to Sanskrit rūksa or lūksa, which in Pāli takes the form of lūkha, and is used exactly in the same way as lūha. Childers gives a number of passages in which lūkha is employed in connexion with paṇīta (see Samyutta, xvi. 4, 5), but none where it is employed with reference to civara. In Anguttara Nikāya, I. xiv. 5, 6, we have lūkhacivara-dhara, "wearing a coarse robe." It is also found in the sense of "rough," as applied to person and life, in Mahāvagga (ed. Oldenburg), p. 55; Majjhimanikāya, pp. 77, 78; Jāt. I. 390, II. 136.

We do not, however, find lūha in Pāli, as we should naturally expect, though it is undoubtedly a Prakrit form; but, as we have lahu for laghu, there is no reason why we should not find lūha for lūkha, through the intermediate and hardened form lūgha. We, however, meet with something like it in Pāli.

In the Ambaṭṭha-sutta (Dīgha Nikāya III. 1. 12, p. 90) we have the following interesting and curious passage: "Candaḍḍa bho Gotama Sakyā-jāti, pharusā . . . . , LAHUSĀ . . . . , rabhasā."

Buddhaghosa, while confirming the readings of the text, had some difficulty in explaining at least two words in this quotation. His note on lahusā is as follows: "Lahusāti lahukā, appaken' eva tussanti vā russanti vā udakapitthe lābukatāham viya appakenāpi uppilavanti" (Sumaṅgala-Vilāsinī I., p. 256). The commentator evidently connected lahusa with lahuka (= lahu = laghu), "light," "frivolous." Now the context shows that this cannot possibly be the meaning of lahusa in the text, and we are compelled to assign to it some such meaning as "rough," "uncouth." It represents a form luhasa or lūhasa. This transposition of vowels is not uncommon in Pāli. I have shown that Sanskrit mūrvā becomes in Pāli not only mubbā, but marūvā or maruvā (see Journal of the Pāli Text Society for 1889, p. 208).

Luhasa, with the force of "rough," ought to correspond to a Pāli lūkhasa, a form that is not to be found in Childers's Dictionary, but for which, however, there is very good authority. In Suttanipāta (v. 244, p. 43) we find "Ye LŪKHASĀ dārunā pīthimamsikā mittadduno nikkarunātimānino." Those who are rough, harsh, backbiting, treacherous, merciless, arrogant.

The word lūha was probably adopted by the compilers of the Divyāvadāna from a Pāli source, and it is not unlikely that, when we get more texts, we shall find lūha to be a genuine Pāli form.

2. Rabhasa.

RABHASA, in the passage quoted above from the Ambaṭṭha-sutta, is not registered by Childers. Buddhaghosa renders it incorrectly by bahu-bhānī, "loquacious"; and, curious enough, one of the variant readings of the Burmese MSS. is bhasā. RABHASA needs, however, no emendation. It is a well-known Sanskrit word, with the meaning of "violent," "fierce," and makes very good sense along with the epithets canda, pharusā, and lahusa.

3. Aranavihāri.

ARANĀVIHĀRĪ occurs in the Divyāvadāna, p. 401, and is conjecturally explained as "hermit." The correct reading is aranavihāri, a term that occurs in Anguttara Nikāya I. xiv. 2, and Petavatthu iv. 1. 33, signifying "living free from care." According to the commentary on the Petavatthu, it is equivalent to mettā-vihāri, "living in friendship," "friendly disposed"; but, see mettā-vihāri, in Anguttara Nikāya, I. xiv. 7.

4. Sālittaka.

SĀLITTAKA occurs in Jātaka, i., p. 418, in the compound sālittakasippa = sakkharākkhipanasippa, the art of slinging stones, potshards, &c., from a catapult or bow. The Jātaka story tells of a cripple who was such an adept at the art that he was able to cut out the figure of an elephant or horse on a tree. There is another reference to the term in the Petavatthu, iv. 16.7—"Sālittakappahārena vo* bhindissan tassa matthakam," upon which the commentator has the following remark: "Sālittakappahārenāti sālittakam vuccati dhanukena aṅgulīhi eva vā sakkharākkhipanapayogo ti."

Childers has no notice of the word, and its etymology is by no means clear. It might possibly come from saṅkhattaka, from kship, with the preposition saṃ, through the intermediate forms sakkittaka, sākittaka, and by dissimilation of the consonants sālittaka (cf. Pāli phāsulika = pārçukika and sallālikata = çalya-kikrita). It might, however, represent an original sallittaka = sallikhitaka, from likh, with preposition sam (cf. sārambha, sāradbha, for sam-rambha, samradbho).

* The printed text has co, which seems against the sense and metre.

5. Pitta.

We find PITTA in a metaphor often used in Buddhist works: "Seyyathāpi bhikkhu candassa kukkurassa nāsāya pīttam bhindeyyum, evaṃhi so kukkuro bhiyyosomattāya candataro assa" (Samyutta Nikāya, xvii. 36. 6; Cullavagga, vii. 2. 5). The editors of the Vinaya Texts (iii., p. 237) translate this passage as follows: "Just, O bhikkhus, as if you were to burst a gall [bladder] before the nose of a fierce dog, the dog would thereby become so much the fiercer." As nāsāya is here in the locative case, and means on the nose, not before the nose, pitta cannot signify "a gall" or "gall bladder." In Pāli its usual acceptation is "bile." The Sanskrit nāsa-raktapitta, "a bleeding of the nose," does not help us here, unless we take pitta to mean a "blister" or bladder filled with blood or pus. Pitta is evidently a pimple or gathering of some kind on a dog's nose, and we can easily understand why, if by a blow this should be broken, a fierce dog would become fiercer; but it is hard to see why breaking a gall (bladder) before the nose of a dog should have this effect.

PITTA may here stand for phitta, i.e., phīta, corresponding to Sanskrit spīṭa "swollen," and denote "a gathering" or "swelling." For the shortening of the vowel, compensated by the doubling of the consonant, compare vanibbaku = vanīpaka and niddha = nīda.

In the Commentary on the Udāna, i. 7 (see Pāli Text Society's Journal for 1886, pp. 98-9) the passage under discussion occurs with some slight variations—"... canda-kukkurassa cīttam bhindeyya . . .," in which kukkurassa "cock," is substituted for kukkurassa "dog," and cīttam "comb?" for pīttam "swelling." These alterations may be due to the Burmese original from which the Sinhalese scribe copied his text. We can thus understand how kukkurassa appears for kukkulassa, i.e., kukkurassa. A similar confusion is found in Sanskrit (see Benfey's Dictionary, s.v. kukkuta).

6. Samāsisī.

SAMĀSISĪ occurs in Puggala-paññatti, i. 19, p. 13), and is there defined as "one who has simultaneously attained an end of human passion and of existence." It seems to represent an original samāsimasī from the root ṣas (ṣis), cf. Pāli ṣimsati "to desire."

7. Satakkatu.

"Yathā hi meghe thanayam vijjūmālī satakkatu." (Samyutta Nikāya, iii. 3. 4, p. 100.)

SATAKKATU corresponds to Sanskrit ṣaṭakratu "honoured by a hundred sacrifices," one of the names of Indra, but in the passage quoted above, it is an epithet of meghe, and is equivalent to satasikhara or satakotī "having a hundred points," one of the epithets of the "thunderbolt." The various readings are satakkaku, satakkuku, the former of which should perhaps appear in the text—kkaku or kakū, representing Sanskrit kakud "a peak."

8. Sāhunnavāsī.

"Sāhunnavāsīno eke aññe kesaṇivāsīno." (Petavatthu iii. 1. 6).

The Commentary explains sāhunnavāsīno by chinnabhinna - pilotikakhandanivāsāna. This enables us to see that SĀHUNNA means "a strip of ragged cloth," "a ragged or dirty robe"; but it has nothing corresponding to it in Sanskrit by which we can get at its derivation. It may be a mere error for sāhula, which we find in Majjhimaka Nikāya (pp. 509, 510), in sāhulacīvara (v. l. sāhula-, sāhuli-), but of which the meaning is by no means clear. Can sāhunna vāsīno be a blunder for sānanivāsīno, "wearing a coarse robe"?

R. MORRIS.

SCIENCE NOTES.

THE programme has just been issued of the "long excursion" of the Geologists' Association to the Mendip Hills during the week beginning Monday, August 4. The directors are the Rev. H. H. Winwood, and Mr. Horace B. Woodward; and the headquarters will be successively at Frome, Wells, and Weston-super-Mare. Among the places of popular interest to be visited are Wookey Hole and the Cheddar Cliffs. On Saturday, August 9, an excursion is proposed to the Steep and Flat Holmes, islets of carboniferous limestone, which have never yet been thoroughly examined from the geologist's point of view.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN have issued this week a fourth edition of Prof. Henry Sidgwick's Methods of Ethics, which originally appeared in 1874. As was the case with the two intermediate editions, not inconsiderable alterations have been made, which may be thus summarised from the Preface. The discussion on Free Will has been expanded, to meet the criticisms of Prof. Fowler in his Principles of Morals, and of Dr. Martineau in his Types of Ethical Theory. With reference also to the latter work, part of the chapter on "Motives or Springs of Action as Subjects of Moral Action" has been rewritten. The argument on the Summum Bonum has been expanded, to meet objections "ably urged" in Mind by the Rev. Hastings Rashdall, to whose criticisms the author had previously acknowledged his obligations. The concluding chapter—which aims at determining the relations of the three methods of Utilitarianism, Intuitionism, and Egoistic Hedonism—has also been somewhat altered, in consequence of an "important criticism" by Prof. von Gizycki. But, while several pages of new matter have thus been introduced, the bulk of the whole has not been increased, owing to omissions and compression in other parts. Finally, the author calls attention to a new feature in the Index, which has been compiled for the present edition by Miss Jones, of Girton College, the author of Elements of Logic as a Science of Propositions.

FINE ART.

The Historical Castles and Mansions of Scotland—Perthshire and Forfarshire. By A. H. Millar. (Alexander Gardner.)

IT was an excellent thought of Mr. Millar's to collect into one compact illustrated volume those descriptions of Scottish castles and mansions which, during several years past, he has been contributing to the Dundee Advertiser, for the articles are far too interesting and valuable to be permitted to remain permanently buried in the columns of the newspaper in which they originally appeared. Their author has manifestly entered upon his researches in the true spirit of an enthusiastic and painstaking antiquary. His style, if it is destitute of eloquence and shows no touch of literary finesse, is clear and accurate; and he has succeeded in producing a volume which will certainly be prized by the lover of Scottish antiquities.

The book opens with an account of Rossie Priory, in the Carse of Gowrie, the seat of Lord Kinnaird—a typical example of the work of John Atkinson, of the sadly cold and meagre Gothic of the end of the last century; but interesting for its valuable contents, its sculpture and its pictures, many of the latter from the Orleans collection, which receive intelligent comment and description. From Rossie Priory we pass to Castle Menzies, the stronghold, since the end of the sixteenth century, of the Lairds of Weem, and occupying a site near that where previously stood a still older and now utterly vanished seat of the family, erected in 1487. In this notice a very interesting account of the old kirk of Weem is included, and of the curious tomb in its choir, erected by Sir Alexander Menzies and Margaret Campbell, of Glenurchay, in 1616, sculptured with a life-sized male figure in armour, leaning on a cross and with its foot on a skull, emblematic of Faith, and a companion female figure, accompanied by children and personifying Charity, the two watching over the kneeling effigies of the knight and his lady, whose eyes are directed towards a symbolical representation of the First Person of the Trinity.

A lengthy chapter, perhaps the most interesting in the volume, is devoted to Glamis Castle, the seat of Lord Strathmore, one of the most imposing and picturesque of all the Scottish castles, not wanting, either, the charm of weird legendary associations, for it was here—so tradition affirms, if history shakes her head—that Malcolm II. was murdered. And does not the mansion contain a haunted room of very especial celebrity, a mysterious chamber

"the entrance to which is known to only three persons at one time—the earl, the heir apparent, and the factor on the estate—where 'Beardie,' the fourth Earl of Crawford, is confined, doomed, on the penance for a hasty vow, to play dice till the day of judgment"?

The legend is one of the best-known and most recurrent in the annals of the supernatural in Scotland, and it has more than once furnished a ghostly motif for works of fiction. Our present gravely antiquarian author touches upon the matter with duly guarded reserve, remarking that "we have the best authority for stating that the apartment exists, and that its entrance was concealed, though the story of Earl Beardie's connexion with it is a popular delusion."

An added interest is given to any examination of the architecture of Glamis by the fact that a "Book of Record" is still preserved there, in which Patrick, third Earl of Kinghorn and first Earl of Strathmore, has recorded the extensive repairs, alterations, and additions, which he carried out in the castle from 1671 to 1689. From this volume Mr. Millar gives considerable extracts, enough to whet our appetite for the whole work, which he is at present editing for the Scottish Historical Society, and which cannot fail to throw curious light upon the progress of art in the North during the seventeenth century—a subject deserving, and still requiring, elucidation. Several of the artists employed by Charles II. in the restoration of Holyrood Palace were also at work at Glamis, Jan van Santvoort executing some of the carving, and Jacob de Witt (or Wet, as he signs his name) the painted panels in the chapel, and several of the portraits. From the "Book of Record" it would appear that the fashion of female decorators is not peculiar to our century, for we find that two ladies, bearing a name since famous in connexion with ornamental work, were employed by the earl. These were "two English women, Mistress Moreis and her sister." Owing to his restricted means, Lord Strathmore was obliged to conduct his architectural operations with all possible economy, and he was in the habit of very closely supervising his accounts. The existing records furnish some quaint glimpses of his consequent struggles with the workmen whom he employed. Here is one curt jotting:

"Impremis, for puting up hings—nothing, in regard Andrew Wright should give me sumthing for learning him to be an uppolsterer."

And, again:

"Because he made the reeder's seat wrong, it is just to give him nothing for making it right."

Among the other castles that come under review are Taymouth, Huntly, Kinfauns, and Dupplin; and we have a charming description of Hospitalfield, Forfarshire, which originally was attached to the abbey of Arbroath, and was bestowed by Cardinal David Beaton upon Mariota Ogilvy his mistress. During recent years it has been excellently restored by Mr. Patrick Allan-Fraser, and it now contains his collection of pictures, admirably illustrative of the art of his native country, and including, among much else of interest, Robert Scott Lauder's "Trial of Effie Deans," perhaps—giving due weight to qualities of both conception and execution—the most notable figure-picture ever executed in Scotland.

Great value is given to Mr. Millar's volume by the full and, in every case where we have been able to test them, accurate accounts which it contains of the various families connected with the mansions under examination; and many references to stirring scenes of Scottish history serve to brighten his pages. Our author's heraldry seems, occasionally, to be less trustworthy than his genealogy. It is, for instance, difficult to understand his meaning in the statement that "lions, rampant opposant," are "the heraldic designation of the Lyons, Earls of Strathmore"; and a distinct non sequitur seems to be involved in the assertion regarding Sir Archibald Campbell, that "as he had been created a baronet of the United Kingdom before it [Garth Castle] was finished, he placed his crest—a demi-lion issuing out of an eastern crown, holding a crowned heart—over the pillars of the doorway."

The accounts of the works of art preserved in the various family seats are interesting and useful, and might well have been extended. We have much information regarding the pictures, &c., at Rossie Priory, Glamis, and Castle Menzies; but most readers would desire a similar record of such fine collections as that preserved at Dupplin Castle. In the account of Taymouth it should have been noted that some of the portraits executed by George Jamesone for Sir Colin Campbell, of Glenarthy, are now the property of Mr. Baillie-Hamilton, at Langton House, Duns. In his reference to the Medinas, in his article on Castle Menzies, Mr. Millar falls into inaccuracy. He states that "T. B. Medina and Sir John de Medina" were "the favourite portrait-painters of the Scottish nobility during the reign of James VII. and the four succeeding sovereigns." But, in fact, there was no

"T. B. Medina"; Sir John Baptist de Medina was the first of the name. He came to England in 1686, was introduced into Scotland by the Earl of Leven in 1688 or 1689, was knighted by the Lord High Commissioner to the Scottish Parliament, and died October 5, 1710 (not 1711, as stated by Redgrave). He was indeed the leading portrait-painter in Scotland during his day; but his son and grandson, both named simply John Medina (the former not mentioned by Redgrave), were painters of little ability or repute, and were better known as copyists and picture-restorers than as original artists. The portrait of Mary Queen of Scots—a copy at Castle Menzies, dated 1767—ascribed to Sir John de Medina, cannot be his work, as he died fifty-seven years previously, nor his son's, who died in 1764; but it must be by his grandson, who survived till 1796.

In the prospectus of Mr. Millar's work it was indicated that the present might probably be followed by a second similar volume. Readers of this one will wish good speed to its author's future researches, and will look with interest for the appearance of their results.

J. M. GRAY.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

ARRANGEMENTS have now been finally concluded for the sale to the National Gallery of the three finest pictures in the collection of the Earl of Radnor, at Longford Castle. These are Holbein's "Ambassadors," the largest known work of the painter, who has hitherto been entirely unrepresented; the "Admiral Pulido Pareja," of Velasquez, which is considered one of his principal works to be found out of Spain; and a portrait by Moroni. The total price for the three is £55,000, towards which £30,000 has been guaranteed by certain gentlemen in the City of London, leaving £25,000 to be provided by the Treasury.

MR. HUBERT HERKOMER has received a commission to paint a portrait of Prof. Mayor, for St. John's College, Cambridge. Mr. Herkomer is already represented at Cambridge by portraits of the late Master of Trinity, Prof. Fawcett, Prof. Adams, and Dr. Routh.

THE Rev. Andrew Trollope, rector of Edith Weston, has completed An Inventory of the Church Plate of Leicestershire, with some Account of the Donors, which will be published, in two volumes demy quarto, in a limited edition, by Messrs. Clarke & Hodgson, of Leicester.

WE understand that the July number of the Art Review is the last that will appear. It was founded as the Scottish Art Review in June, 1888, and changed its name when taken over by Mr. Walter Scott last January.

THE annual meeting of the Royal Archaeological Institute will be held at Gloucester, from Tuesday, August 12 to Tuesday, August 19, under the presidency of Sir J. E. Dorington. The presidents of sections are—antiquarian, Dr. Edwin Freshfield; historical, the Dean of Gloucester; architectural, Prof. J. H. Middleton. Excursions have been arranged to Deerhurst Church and Saxon Chapel and Tewkesbury; to Sudeley Castle and Spoonley Villa; to Prinknash and Painswick; to Withington, Chedworth Roman Villa, and Northleach Church; to Cirencester, Corinium, and Fairford Church.

THE proprietors of Work have arranged to hold an exhibition of articles made by the readers of that journal, for which medals and other prizes are offered. The exhibition will be divided into sixteen groups, and will include upwards of 200 subdivisions. There will be three classes of exhibitors, viz., workmen, apprentices, and amateurs. Full particulars will appear in No. 70 of Work, issued next week.

THE total number of old coins which were submitted for report to the Asiatic Society of Bengal last year, under the provisions of the Treasure Trove Act, amounted to more than 3,200.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN have just issued a third edition of Mr. Edward T. Cook's Popular Handbook to the National Gallery, which has been called for within less than two years since the appearance of the first edition. Besides including the latest additions to the Gallery, the compiler has had to incorporate the results of Sir Frederic Burton's recently published Catalogue of the Foreign Schools. He has also enumerated the three series of copies from old masters, nearly two hundred in all, which have lately been placed in the west basement. The volume is thus swollen to nearly 760 pages; but it is so clearly printed and so stoutly bound as still to deserve its title of "handbook."

THE STAGE.

"ILLUSIONS."

It is said that Mr. Pierre Leclercq's "Illusions"—which was seen at the Strand on Thursday in last week—has been purchased for performance in America and the Provinces. Unless it is greatly altered it is unlikely, we consider, that much more will be heard of it in London. It is the work of an author who is not without dexterity as a playwright—the work of one who has an eye to novel and telling effects. This he had shown already in "The Love Story," which, as we pointed out at the time, was faulty but extremely interesting, and to which the genius of Miss Janet Achurch, or her magnetic personality, gave an additional measure of acceptableness. "Illusions" has its clever scenes; its opportunities for intensity; its chances for the comedian. But it has likewise its gross improbabilities; and in writing it the author has made far less reference to life than to the successful conventions of the stage. Its characters are not new, nor profound, nor individual. Its style is tolerable, and not excellent. In a word, "Illusions" is not literature. It is a theatrical scaffolding, more or less serviceable to the actors who mount upon it.

The mere story of the mistake made by a young married woman as to the nature of the relations between her husband and a famous demi-mondaine is not very attractive. The young married woman is, in reality, the demi-mondaine's daughter. She is not aware of the fact; her husband is, and the elder woman can only, it appears, approach and hear news of the younger one if the husband is an intermediary. Hence the pangs of jealousy, which, after all, are only interesting when displayed by such a colossal savage as Othello. Una Revellin's—so unfounded after all—can hardly make a deep impression upon us. Had there been subtlety in character-drawing, or great delicacy and resource in the devising of incident, what is now a respectable piece of stage-craft might have been made into a work of literary art. In that case it would have deserved a more detailed analysis than I can now give it. Only one of its improbabilities shall be named; and that is the assumption of the disguise of a statue by the heroine, who comes into a St. John's Wood garden the better to listen to what her husband has to say to the woman of the demi-monde. Now, it has been very well remarked that, while this statue scene might have been made a convincing spectacle in an idyllic drama of a remote place or a far-away age, it is out of keeping with the realism of a modern play, of which the time is the present moment, and the locality the less desirable side of Regent's Park.

The piece has merits; but there was more merit in the acting. Miss Marion Lea—one of the few young women of sufficient intellectual culture to grasp a part far more distinguished than that of Una Revellin—was the representative of the heroine. A face full of expression, and an attire well selected and picturesquely and gracefully worn, helped her on her road. So, of course, did her knowledge of her art. And—to boot—Miss Lea has force and genuine feeling. Her voice is capable of being most telling. Sometimes, however, her control of it appears imperfect; and her method, at such moments, appears spasmodic. For all that, she has very much more in her than your average young actress, who, up to a certain point, may be universally acceptable. Miss Lea is not universally acceptable. Her reputation will probably increase; but, to the end of the chapter, there will be those whom she pleases, and those to whom she can never appeal. In other words, it is a strong individuality, which carries a burden as well as a privilege. Miss Rose Leclercq was the only other lady who appeared on Thursday week in a part of any importance. Her performance of the demi-mondaine was exceedingly clever. It had about it, indeed, an almost undue note of distinction. Still, we will not be hypercritical—the actress was of immense service. Mr. Lewis Waller and Mr. W. H. Vernon, Mr. Ivan Watson, and Mr. Fuller Mellish all deserve praise. Nothing can well be sounder or more convincing than the method of Mr. Waller. He has, I think, no mannerism, but an abundance of quiet force. Mr. Vernon and Mr. Ivan Watson played character-parts with ripe skill and tact, and Mr. Fuller Mellish's presence and method are habitually agreeable.

FREDERICK WEDMORE.

STAGE NOTES.

On Tuesday evening, the Daly Company, at the Lyceum, played "The Taming of the Shrew," for the first time this year; Miss Ada Rehan, Mrs. Gilbert, Mr. Lewis, and Mr. John Drew having all appeared, together with the minor members of a troop which, in many performances, is even more remarkable for its "all round" excellence than for the talent of several of its members. In "The Taming of the Shrew," however, the visitor—great as may be his disposition to do justice to the company as a whole—is perforce struck most by the impersonation of Katherine by Miss Rehan, and next by Mr. John Drew's performance of Petruchio. As Katherine, in the earlier scenes, Miss Rehan is absolutely volcanic; and if these scenes display the vigour and violence which are at her command; the later ones—in which the shrew is very gradually tamed—give proof of the subtlety and thoroughness of her art. Some quite clever people have lately been asserting that what one likes in Miss Ada Rehan is Miss Ada Rehan, and not Miss Ada Rehan's art. Of course, the personality of the actress, abounding as it is in force, vivacity, and flexibility—is bound to be attractive; but she has something much more than her personality—her art is great and is delicately controlled. Impressive and "convincing"—"convincing," we believe, is the proper word just now—as is Mr. John Drew in Petruchio, it is possible that there is a touch of exaggeration in his actions with the horse-whip. His Petruchio drives Katherine as a drover drives cattle. The performance, admirable on the whole as we ordinary mortals must allow ourselves to find it—is, we hear, exceedingly unwelcome to some of those women who have "rights," and who spell their rights with a capital R. At least one such woman has been known to leave the theatre; and others, we are informed, have come away indignant with the playwright. "Shakspeare, in their opinion, lacked consideration and penetration." He knew nothing about women, they think—though he did happen to give us Ophelia and Viola, Beatrice and Rosalind.

"JEANNE D'ARC" not having been found greatly to the taste of English playgoers, Mme. Sarah Bernhardt has been appearing in some of her more familiar parts these last few evenings at Her Majesty's. Her first performance, this year, of Adrienne Lecouvreur—in M. Legouvé's well-known drama of that name—was exceedingly impressive. That night Mme. Bernhardt was in her best form.

MUSIC.

MUSIC OF THE WEEK.

At the eighth Richter Concert on Monday, the Symphony was Dvorák's No. 4 in G, produced, for the first time in England at the Philharmonic Society's concert on April 24 of this year. Those interested in musical matters will remember that the work was then very favourably received. Its freshness, charm, and power were at once recognised, and these qualities again made their mark on Monday. On a second hearing we are inclined to rank the third and fourth movements lower than the first and second, chiefly because their thematic material seems less valuable; but this need not be insisted on, since the work, as a whole, is delightful. An interesting innovation on established form in the first movement deserves mention, as exemplifying the natural course of evolution tabulated by modern scientists. Dvorák has constructed this movement upon four principal subjects instead of the usual two; but as these are grouped in pairs—two "first" and two "second" subjects—it will be seen by those conversant with musical history that the new form is but an amplification of the traditional one. As Mr. Herbert Spencer would put it, differentiation has taken place. As regards thematic material, the Symphony cannot be called a "tone poem." Hearing it, one is conscious of small need for an explanation of its "poetic basis." It depends for its effect and charm on the frank and engaging tunefulness of its themes, their masterly development, and the richness of its harmony and orchestration. A splendid performance allowed the work to be heard under the most favourable conditions. Similar praise must be awarded to the renderings of Wagner's noble "Faust" Overture, which opened the concert, and of the now familiar selection from "Der Ring des Nibelungen," and of the singing of Mr. and Mrs. Henschel and Mr. Andrew Black. The lady was heard in Liszt's dramatic setting of "Die Lorelei," and, with her husband, in the scene for Eva and Hans Sachs from Act. II. of "Die Meistersinger," which was given with perfect appreciation of its dramatic significance; and the two gentlemen sang very finely in an expressive setting by Mr. Henschel of Byron's "O! weep for those that wept by Babel's stream."

In presence of a distinguished and numerous company, the foundation stone of the new Royal College of Music was "well and truly laid" on Tuesday morning by the Prince of Wales. Mr. Samson Fox, whose munificent gift of £45,000 has made the new building possible, read an address, to which the Prince replied in suitable terms. Prayers were read by the Archbishop of Canterbury, and the Duke of Edinburgh also spoke. Mr. Samson Fox's Leeds Forge Band, consisting of working men, played several pieces, before the arrival of the Royal party, in a way that spoke highly for Yorkshire musical talent and for the skill of the conductor, Mr. Alexander Owen. The college orchestra, under Prof. Stanford, gave a creditable performance of Beethoven's overture "The Consecration of the House," and Dr. Parry's fine setting of Milton's "Blest Pair of Sirens" was capitally given by the chorus and orchestra of the college under the composer's direction. When it is added that Mme. Nordica sang the solo in the National Anthem, that the sun shone, that all the arrangements for the comfort of visitors were admirably carried out, that the gathering included almost every musician of note in the kingdom, and that Mme. Nordica, Prof. Stanford, and Dr. Parry were presented to the Prince and Princess of Wales at the close of the proceedings, it will be seen that nothing was wanting to make the occasion a successful one in every sense.

The concerts given by Messrs. Ludwig and Whitehouse are among the most artistic of the musical season. The fourth of the present series, given on Tuesday evening at Princes' Hall, showed no falling off from the high level attained by its predecessors. The scheme included Dvorák's Quintet in A for piano and strings, played by Miss Fanny Davies, Messrs. Ludwig, G. Collins, A. Gibson, and W. E. Whitehouse; Beethoven's Quintet in C (Op. 29); Mendelssohn's Andante and Variations in E flat (admirably played by Miss Davies); and Max Bruch's "Kol Nidrei" and Spohr's Adagio in F, played respectively by Messrs. Whitehouse and Ludwig. Each soloist was "honoured" by an encore. The vocalist was Mr. Plunkett Greene, who in his most artistic manner sang songs by Brahms, Rubinstein, Stanford, and Battison Haynes.

A Vocal Recital was given on Thursday afternoon at Princes' Hall by Herr von zur Mühlen, assisted by the Misses Liza Lehmann, Marguerite Hall, M. V. White, and Agnes Zimmermann. Herr von zur Mühlen is a highly intelligent and dramatic singer, and the middle notes of his voice are excellent; but his use of "head" notes is so excessive as to become unpleasant.

MUSIC NOTES.

THE Wagner Society will hold a conversazione in the galleries of the Royal Institute, Piccadilly, on Wednesday next, July 16, at 8.30 p.m. Among other selections, the entire first act of "Die Walküre" will be given, with the assistance of Miss Pauline Cramer and Mr. Bernard Lane. The musical arrangements will, as usual, be under the direction of Mr. Carl Arnbruster.

WE are glad to state that Mr. J. S. Shedlock is progressing satisfactorily towards complete recovery. He hopes to be able to resume his usual work next week.

Just published, price 6s.

"THE RELIGION OF HUMANITY,"
and other Poems. By ANNIE MATHESON.
London: FRANCIS & Co., King Street, Covent Garden.

ONE FARTHING.

"LONDON CITY," an amusing 12-page booklet, being a prelude to the large quarto work to be issued later under the same title which will contain at least 250 splendid illustrations of the City and its teeming life as it is to-day. To be published at 4s.; to subscribers 2s. (a limited number of large paper copies at 4s.); subscribers' names and addresses will be printed alphabetically in the body of the work. Beautifully illustrated four-page quarto prospectus, worthy of careful preservation, free with booklet.—THE LEADENHALL PRESS, 50, Leadenhall Street, E.C.

A NEW MANUAL OF BOOK-KEEPING
for Wholesale and Retail Traders. By PHILIP CRELLIN, Chartered Accountant. Price 3s. 6d.
G. BELL & SONS, York Street, W.C., and the AUTHOR, 32, Channing Lane, W.C.

HURST & BLACKETT'S PUBLICATIONS.

NEW NOVELS.

NOW READY AT ALL THE LIBRARIES.

THE KEEPER of the KEYS. By F. W. ROBINSON, Author of "Grandmother's Money," "The Youngest Miss Green," &c. 3 vols.

A VILLAGE HAMPDEN. By ALGERNON GISSING, Author of "Both of this Parish," 3 vols. "Mr. Gissing has made a pleasant and faithful picture of Gloucestershire scenery and rustic life."—Athenaeum.

THYME and RUE. By Margaret B. CROSS. 2 vols. "Thyme and Rue" is a pretty and an entertaining story, told with sufficient cleverness on the basis of a fairly novel plot."—Athenaeum.

DISHONOURED. By Theo Gift, Author of "Pretty Miss Bellow," "Victims," &c. 3 vols. "The book must be pronounced a really good novel, because it fulfils the purpose for which a novel exists, by telling an interesting story in a thoroughly interesting way."—Manchester Examiner.

LITTLE MISS COLWYN. By ADELINE SERGEANT, Author of "Jacob's Wife," &c. 3 vols. "Most of the characters in the book are, however, more or less distinctive and well drawn, and her readers have to thank Miss Sergeant for an undoubtedly good and well-written story."—Athenaeum.

CUTTING for PARTNERS. By John CORDY JEFFRESON, Author of "The Rapiers of Regent's Park," "Live it Down," &c. 3 vols. "A clever and interesting story, and contains a number of clever and interesting characters and sayings."—Scotsman. "It is enough to say that the reader who does not feel the kindlier and the wiser for having read it must be a curiosity."—Graphic.

TILL the GREAT ASSIZE. By VERA CLAVERING, Author of "A Modern Delilah," &c. 3 vols.

ADA TRISCOTT. By Captain ANDREW HAGGARD, Author of "Dodo and I," 2 vols. "Ada Triscott" is a better novel than ninety-nine out of every hundred published, and is so great an improvement on "Dodo and I" that it is reasonable to anticipate that the next novel from the same pen will give Captain Haggard a considerable position among living novelists."—Athenaeum.

Uniform, each in 1 vol., crown 8vo., 6s.

NOVELS BY EDNA LYALL

A HARDY NORSEMAN.

WE TWO. IN THE GOLDEN DAYS.
KNIGHT ERRANT. WON BY WAITING.

DONOVAN: a Modern Englishman.

HURST & BLACKETT'S STANDARD LIBRARY.

SELECTIONS FROM.

Each in a Single Volume, price 5s.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "JOHN HALIFAX."

JOHN HALIFAX, GENTLEMAN. CHRISTIAN'S MISTAKE.
A WOMAN'S THOUGHTS. A NOBLE LIFE.
ABOUT WOMEN. HANNAH.
A LIFE for a LIFE. THE UNKIND WORD.
NOTHING NEW. A BRAVE LADY.
MISTRESS and MAID. STUDIES from LIFE.
THE WOMAN'S KINGDOM. YOUNG MRS. JARDINE.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "SAM SLICK."

NATURE AND HUMAN. THE OLD JUDGE; or Life
NATURE. in a Colony.
WISE SAWS and MODERN. TRAITS of AMERICAN INSTANCES. HUMOUR.
THE AMERICANS at HOME.

BY DR. GEORGE MAC DONALD.

DAVID ELGINBROD. ALEC FORBES.
ROBERT FALCONER. SIR GIBBIE.

BY MRS. OLIPHANT.

ADAM GRAEME. LIFE of IRVING.
LAIRD OF NORLAW. A ROSE in JUNE.
AGNES. PHOEBE, JUNIOR.

IT WAS A LOVER AND HIS LASS.

LONDON: HURST & BLACKETT, LIMITED.

MISS SELBY'S NEW NOVEL.

At all Libraries, 2 vols., crown 8vo.

IN THE SUNLIGHT.

By ANGELICA M. SELBY, Author of "On Duty."

FREDERICK WARNE & CO., BEDFORD STREET, STRAND.

CHEAP EDITION AT ALL BOOKSELLERS.

Picture Boards, 2s.; cloth, 2s. 6d.

ANNETTE. By the Author of "St. Olaves," "Little Miss Primrose," "The Blue Ribbon," &c.

LONDON: SPENCER BLACKETT, 35, ST. BRIDE STREET, E.C.

NEW NOVEL BY MRS. OLIPHANT.

At all Booksellers and Libraries, cloth, 2s. 6d.

THE MYSTERY of MRS. BLENCARROW. By Mrs OLIPHANT, Author of "Harry Joscelyn," "The Son of His Father," &c.

LONDON: SPENCER BLACKETT, 35, ST. BRIDE STREET, E.C.

SCHOOLS, COLLEGES, &c.

QUEEN'S SERVICE ACADEMY, 3 and 4, ELY PLACE, DUBLIN.—The oldest, and among the most successful in the United Kingdom; over 2,000 have passed.

I. All Army Examinations.
II. Civil Service of India, Universities, &c.
III. R. I. Constabulary Cadetships.
There is not a Corps in the Services or a Department under Government that does not owe some of its Officers to the QUEEN'S SERVICE ACADEMY, DUBLIN. No attempt at cramming; unsurpassed staff of Specialists under personal direction of W. J. CHETWODE CRAWLEY, LL.D., D.C.L., F.R.G.S., F.G.S., F.R.Hist.Soc., &c.

TO PARENTS AND GUARDIANS.

MR. W. S. LOGEMAN, Principal of the Newton School, Rock Ferry, is FORMING a small PARTY of BOYS to spend the SUMMER HOLIDAYS at some healthy Seaside place for recreation and study. Instruction in Modern Languages, Classics, or Mathematics as required. References given and required. Inclusive terms, £3 3s. a week, or £10 1s. for four weeks.—Particulars on application.

MISS BRAHAM, late of INGLENOOK, DORKING, has REMOVED to PIXHOLME, DORKING,

and has now space for an additional number of BOYS to train for the PUBLIC SCHOOLS. Miss Braham is assisted by a Graduate of Oxford University, and by other responsible Teachers, and pays especial attention to Physical Education. Her gymnasium is fitted with the latest apparatus, and the boys have daily practice. Inclusive terms 9s or 10s guinea a year according to age.

References permitted to:

Miss Buss, North London Collegiate School, N.W.
Rev. J. F. E. Fanning, M.A., King's College, Cambridge.

MESSRS. DRUMMOND & CO., 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C., are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HAUFSTAENGL, of Munich, the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY. There is a steadily increasing demand for reproductions by this justly celebrated process for large plates and editions de luxe. For ordinary Book Illustrations, Catalogues, Advertisements, &c., Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. have the latest and most improved processes. Specimens on view. Prices on application.

TO AUTHORS.

MESSRS. DIGBY & LONG, PUBLISHERS,

18, BOUVERIE STREET, FLEET STREET, LONDON, E.C., are prepared to receive and give careful consideration to all M.S.s. and arrange terms for their PUBLICATION. Messrs. DIGBY & LONG have also every convenience and ample facilities for the Publication of Magazines. Editorial offices if required. Newest Catalogue post free.

SEVENTH MEMOIR of the EGYPT EXPLORATION FUND.

NOW READY.—"THE MOUND of the JEW and the CITY of ONIAS," by E. NAVILLE; and "THE ANTIQUITIES of TELL EL YAHUDUJEH," by F. LL. GRIFFITH (being the EXTRA VOLUME for 1888-9), with 26 Plates and a Frontispiece. Price 25s.

KEGAN PAUL, TURNER & Co., Ludgate Hill, E.C.

TO PUBLISHERS.—The Advertiser is OPEN to an ENGAGEMENT as Manager or other responsible position. Thoroughly conversant with all the details of Paper, Printing, Binding, Advertising, &c. First-class references.—Address, C. S., 100, Mercer's Road, Tufnell Park, N.

The Autotype Company, London,

Renowned for the excellence of its process of high-class

BOOK ILLUSTRATION

Adopted by the Trustees of the British Museum, the Learned Societies, and the leading Publishers. For specimens, prices, &c., apply to the Manager.

AUTO-GRAVURE

The Autotype process adapted to Photographic Engraving on copper. Copies of Paintings by Holman Hunt, of Portraits by Holl, R.A.; Oulless, R.A.; Pettie, R.A.; Prinsep, A.R.A.; of the Fresco in Guy's Hospital; "SPRING," by Herbert Draper, &c., &c.; also examples of Auto-Gravure Reproductions of Photographs from Art Objects and from Nature can be seen at the Autotype Gallery—

THE

AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY,

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON,

is remarkable for its display of Copies of celebrated Works by

"THE GREAT MASTERS"

from the Louvre, Vatican, Hermitage, and the National Galleries of Italy, Spain, Holland, and London, including H.M. Collections at Buckingham Palace and Windsor Castle.

Albums of reference to the various Galleries are provided, are easily looked over, and of great interest to lovers of Art. Send for the new Pamphlet, "AUTOTYPE: a Decorative and Educational Art," per post to any address.

The AUTOTYPE FINE ART CATALOGUE, 186 pp., free, per post, for Sixpence.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY, LONDON.

Just published, price 5s.

HOLIDAY STUDIES of WORDS-

WORTH: By Rivers, Woods and Alps. The Wharfe, The Duddon, and The Stelvio Pass. By the Rev. F. A. MALLISON, M.A.

"This book can be read as much for its own merits as for the particular insight which it reveals into the spirit of Wordsworth's esoteric nature-worship."—Scotsman.

CASELL & COMPANY, Limited, Ludgate Hill, London.

LADY FLORENCE DIXIE'S NEW NOVEL.

GLORIANA: or the REVOLUTION of 1800. By the Author of "Redeemed in Blood," &c. Crown 8vo., 6s. At all Libraries and Booksellers.

"Very sensational."—Morning Post.

"Crisp writing and sparkling satire."—People.

HENRY & Co., 6, Bouverie Street, E.C.

PHENIX FIRE OFFICE,

19, LOMBARD STREET, E.C., and 57, CHARING CROSS, S.W.

Established 1782.

Moderate Rates. Absolute Security.

Liberal Loss Settlements.

Prompt Payment of Claims.

Joint Secretaries—W. C. MACDONALD and F. B. MACDONALD.

LOSSES PAID OVER £17,000,000.

THE QUARTERLY REVIEW,

No. 341, will be published on WEDNESDAY, JULY 18TH.

CONTENTS.

- I.—ETON COLLEGE.
 II.—THE EMPEROR FREDERICK.
 III.—REALISM and DECADENCE in FRENCH FICTION.
 IV.—SHAKSPEARE'S GHOSTS, WITCHES, and FAIRIES.
 V.—THE ACROPOLIS of ATHENS.
 VI.—PENNY FICTION.
 VII.—SIR ROBERT WALPOLE.
 VIII.—WESTERN CHINA, its PRODUCTS and TRADE.
 IX.—MESMERISM and HYPNOTISM.
 X.—TWENTY YEARS of IRISH HOME RULE in NEW YORK

JOHN MURRAY, Albemarle Street.

THE PARENT'S REVIEW.

A MONTHLY MAGAZINE of HOME TRAINING and CULTURE

Edited by CHARLOTTE M. MASON.

CONTENTS JULY.

SIXPENCE.

EDITORIAL.

- THE BEST CURRICULUM. By the Rev. W. H. H. KEELING.
 DRIFTED APART. By SARAH TYLER.
 BE GOOD: or, "Nursery Ethics." By T. G. ROOPER, H.M.I.
 THE INVINCIBLE ARMADA.—SCHILLER. Translated by E. P. ARNOLD-FORSTER.
 A DULL CHILD.—WHY? By A PARENT.
 LETTER-WRITING in FRANCE. By Mrs. A. CAUMONT.
 FLOOD-TIDE. By Dr. J. E. TAYLOR, F.R.S., &c.
 ANOTHER READING LESSON. By A. C. BEALE.
 THE EVENING SKY. By Mrs. LIPSCOMB.
 BOOKS.—BY THE WAY.—NOTES and QUERIES.—PRIZES.
 W. H. ALLEN & Co., 13, Waterloo Place, S.W.; and at Calcutta.

THE UNIVERSAL REVIEW.

Ready JULY 15th. PRICE 2s. 6d.

- I. THE GREEN GAFFER. (Fully Illustrated.) L. HOUSMAN.
 II. THE REFERENDUM .. .. Prof. FREEMAN.
 III. WESTMINSTER ABBEY and its last ABBOT. (Fully Illustrated.) .. .. Dr. LEE.
 IV. ACROSS AMERICA with "JUNIOR BRUTUS' BOOTH." (Illustrated.) .. .. ELIZABETH ROBINS.
 V. THE PAINTER, BERNARDINO LUINI. (Illustrated.) Ven. Archdeacon FARRAR, D.D.
 VI. THE RIVAL SALONS. (Illustrated.) .. EMILY CRAWFORD.
 VII. MORALS in MUSIC .. .. H. ARTHUR SMITH.
 VIII. HEINES' BOOK of IDEAS .. .. ALICE ROYSTON.
 IX. THE WAGES of SIN. (Illustrated.) .. LUCAS MALET.
 X. THE WORLD in JULY .. .. The EDITOR.

ILLUSTRATIONS.

- The Green Gaffer:—"Helter-Skelter out of the Wood." (Frontispiece) "The Green Gaffer sat, rigid and lank." L. HOUSMAN.
 "The Pipes of Pan."
 "The god was running at great speed."
 "Then came the Green Gaffer."

- La Vierge au Fleur-de-Lys (From photographs of paintings in the Dispute of Jesus with the National Gallery, and at Rome and Doctors of the Law) Sarunno, by BERNARDINO LUINI.
 "Lisette" .. .. From G. COURTOIS.
 "Le Retour de Champs" .. .. original sketches by GEORGES LAUEE.
 "La Prière" .. .. by LOUIS DESCHAMPS.

- The Wages of Sin:—"She leaned forward, smiling, &c." A. SACHEVERELL.
 "Miss Crookenden paused just inside the door" COKE.
 Westminster Abbey, 13 Illustrations, by C. A. CHAMBERLAIN.
 Initials and Tailpieces, by A. S. COKE, L. B. BRADFORD, J. P. DODGE, &c.

London: SWAN SONNENSCHEIN &amp; Co.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

THREE per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS, repayable on demand.

TWO per CENT. INTEREST on CURRENT ACCOUNTS calculated on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.

The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of Charge, the Custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuables; the Collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons; and the Purchase and Sale of Stocks, Shares, and Annuities. Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post-free, on application. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.*BRAND & CO.'S A1 SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS, and

POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME PIES. Also,

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—

11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET, MAYFAIR, W.

NATIONAL

FOR MUTUAL

PROVIDENT

LIFE ASSURANCE.

INVESTED FUNDS,
£4,400,000.INSTITUTION.

48, GRACECHURCH STREET, LONDON.

ESTD. 1835.

THEATRES.*ADELPHI THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 8, THE GREEN BUSHES.
 Messrs. Frank Cooper, J. D. Beveridge, J. L. Shine, W. L. Abingdon, Lionel Rignold, Arthur Styan, Howard Russell, Marshall Moore, James East, J. Northcote, &c.; Mesdames Mary Rorke, Ada Ferrar, Kate James, Brunton, C. Jecks, &c.
 Preceded, at 7.45, by THE MARRIED BACHELOR.

AVENUE THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 9, DR. BILL.
 Messrs. George Alexander, Benjamin Webster, G. Capel, H. Grattan, and Albert Chevalier; Mesdames Elizabeth Robins, Carlotta Leclercq, Leston, Marie Linden, Laura Graves, Edith Kenward, Lillie Young, and Fanny Brough.
 Preceded, at 8.30, by MISS CINDERELLA.

COMEDY THEATRE.

Manager, Mr. CHAS. H. HAWTREY.
 Every Evening, at 8, NERVES.
 Messrs. H. Kemble, Edward Righton, and Charles Hawtreys; Mesdames Maud Millett, Sophie Larkin, Lydia Cowell, Ethel Matthews, and Lottie Venn.
 Preceded, at 8.15, by A BAD PENNY.

COURT THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 8, THE CABINET MINISTER.
 Messrs. Arthur Cecil, Weedon Grossmith, Herbert Waring, Brandon Thomas, Allen Ayneworth, Saunders, Farren, and Clulow; Mesdames Le Thière, Rosina Filippi, Tanner, Eva Moore, Caldwell, Isabel Ellissen, Harrington, Edmund Phelps, and John Wood.

HAYMARKET THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. H. BEERBOHM-REE.
 Every Evening, at 8.40, A VILLAGE PRIEST.
 Messrs. Tree, Fernandez, F. Terry, Allan; Mesdames R. Leclercq, Norreys, Gaston Murray, Brooke, and Mrs. Tree.
 Preceded, at 7.50, by COMEDY AND TRAGEDY.

LYCEUM THEATRE.

This Evening, at 8.15, TAMING OF THE SHREW.
 Messrs. James Lewis, and John Drew; Mesdames Rehan, and Gilbert.

PRINCE of WALES' THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. HORACE SEDGER.
 This Evening, at 8.15, MARJORIE.
 Messrs. C. H. Hayden Coffin, Joseph Tapley, H. Ashley, Templer Saxo, Wood, James, Shale, Hendon, and H. Monkhouse; Mesdames Phyllis Broughton, Amadi, and Miss Camille D'Arville.
 Preceded, at 7.30, by ALL ABROAD.

ST. JAMES'S THEATRE.

Lessee, Mrs. LANTRITY.
 This Evening, at 9.20, YOUR WIFE.
 Messrs. Bourchier, Everill, De Lange, Ernest Lawford; Mesdames Edith Chester, Annie Irish, A. Dairrolles.
 Preceded, at 8.30, by OLD FRIENDS.

VAUDEVILLE THEATRE.

This Evening, at 9, MISS TOMBOY.
 Messrs. Thomas Thorne, Cyril Maude, Frank Gilmore, J. S. Blythe, O. Yorke, F. Grove, Harbury, and Fred. Thorne; Mesdames W. Emery, Hanbury, Collette, and Sylvia Hodson.
 Preceded, at 8, by MEADOW-SWEET.

See Prospectus, page 17, for particulars of Endowment Assurance Policies combining Life Assurance at Minimum Cost with Provision for Old Age.

TO STOUT PEOPLE.

Sunday Times says: "Mr. Russell's aim is to eradicate, to cure the disease, and that his treatment is the true one seems beyond all doubt. The medicine he prescribes does not lower, but builds up and tones the system." Book (128 pages), with Recipe and Notes how to pleasantly and rapidly cure obesity (average reduction in first week is 3 lb.), post-free, Eight Stamps.

F. C. RUSSELL, Woburn House, Store Street, Bedford Square, London, W.C.

FURNISH your HOUSES or APARTMENTS THROUGHOUT*MOEDER'S HIRE SYSTEM.

The original, best, and most liberal. Suits all.

FOUNDED A.D. 1868.

Furnish direct from the Manufacturer, from £10 to £10,000.

Cash prices. No extra charge for time given.

Catalogues, Estimates, Press Opinions, Testimonials Post Free.

F. MOEDER,

248, 249, 250, Tottenham Court Road, W. Also for HIRE ONLY.

Books produced at a fixed price for Printing, Paper, and Binding, and terms arranged for Publishing.

Authors advised with as to Printing and Publishing. Estimates of Cost of Printing and Binding.

ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD,

Publishers, Printers, and Binders,

21, FURNIVAL STREET, HOLBORN, and 27, CHANCERY LANE, LONDON.

Third Edition, crown 8vo, cloth, price 1s. 6d., post-free.

LESSONS from the RISE and FALL of the ENGLISH COMMONWEALTH. By J. ALLANSON PICTON, M.A., M.P.

CONTENTS: Introductory.—Treason and Loyalty.—The Limits of Moral Force.—The Limits of Physical Force.—The Sources of Popular Enthusiasm.—"Republicanism: Form and Substance."

PEOPLE'S EDITION.—Price 6d., with PORTRAIT.

(Special terms for quantities.)

JOSEPH MAZZINI: a Memoir by E. A. V., with two Essays by MAZZINI: "THOUGHTS on DEMOCRACY" and "THE DUTIES of MAN."

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, 21, FURNIVAL STREET, HOLBORN.

GOLD PEN,

WITH DIAMOND POINT.

Anti-corrosive—Flexible—Durable—Adapting itself to any Handwriting.

Price 6d. each; post-free, 7d.

With White Metal Pocket Holder, complete - - - 1s.

Or, with Mordan's Best Silver Pocket-Holders—

Fluted Pattern, complete - - - - - 5s. 6d.

Engine-turned Pattern, complete - - - - - 6s. 6d.

Fluted Pattern, Telescopic - - - - - 10s. 6d.

Other Patterns in great variety.

ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, 27, CHANCERY LANE, LONDON.

FRY'S

Lancet—"Pure and very soluble."

Medical Times—"Eminently suitable for Invalids."

PURE CONCENTRATED

Sir C. A. Cameron—"I have never tasted Cocoa that I like so well."

President Royal College of Surgeons, Ireland.

COCOA

Paris Exhibition, 1889: GOLD MEDAL awarded to J. S. FRY &amp; SONS

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO'S NEW BOOKS.

THE NEW ANGLO-GERMAN TREATY. LIFE in UGANDA: Imperial England's Latest Charge.

By Rev. R. P. ASHE, M.A., F.R.G.S., &c., Author of "Two Kings of Uganda." Crown 8vo, boards, 1s.

NEW NOVELS AT ALL THE LIBRARIES.

JACK ABBOTT'S LOG: a Yarn of the Merchant Service. By ROBERT BROWN, Author of "Spun yarn and Spindrift," "Jack's Yarn," &c. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 21s.

THE WAY of TRANSGRESSORS. By E. Rentoul ESLER. 3 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 31s. 6d.

"A pleasant, casual story, sufficiently moral in its aim, full of gossip and detail.....A decidedly good novel, marked by much quiet power and grace."—Athenaeum.

NEW ADDITIONS TO LOW'S STANDARD NOVELS. 6s. SERIES.

THE NEW PRINCE FORTUNATUS. By William BLACK, Author of "A Princess of Thule," "A Daughter of Heth," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"A remarkable easy book to read... The author's touch has been light all through this long story, but seldom more bright, amusing, pathetic, humorous, and tender."—Saturday Review.

SPRINGHAVEN: a Tale of the Great War. By R. D. BLACKMORE, Author of "Lorna Doone," &c. With numerous Illustrations. Small post 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"The story is one of Mr. Blackmore's best.....A fine touch of romance reveals the author of 'Lorna Doone' on almost every page."—Saturday Review.

MIRIAM: a Lightship Tragedy. By Mrs. Musgrave,

Author of "Our Flat," "Illusions," &c. New and Cheaper Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"A peculiarly tragic, terrible, and realistic story."—Court Journal.

GREAT ARTISTS SERIES.—New Volumes. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. each.

THE PAINTERS of BARBIZON:

Millet, Rousseau, and Jules Dupre. By J. W. Mollett, B.A., Author of "Life of Rembrandt," &c. With 20 Illustrations from their best Works.

Corot, Daubigny, and Diaz De-La-Pena. By J. W. Mollett,
B.A. With 20 Reproductions of their Paintings and Drawings.

The 2 vols. bound together in half-roxburgh, price 7s. 6d.

SECOND EDITION IN THE PRESS.

IN DARKEST AFRICA.

Being the Official Publication recording the

QUEST, RESCUE, and RETREAT of EMIN,
GOVERNOR OF EQUATORIA.

By HENRY M. STANLEY, LL.D., &c., &c.

The Illustrations, numbering over 150, have all been made from Mr. Stanley's own Notes, Sketches and Photographs. There are three large Maps and fourteen smaller ones.

ORDINARY EDITION, 2 vols., demy 8vo, of over 500 pages each, in handsome cloth binding, price TWO GUINEAS.

"Nor does the interest of the book depend only on the thrilling nature of its subject matter: of its purely literary merits we can speak in terms of high commendation. The style of the narrative is direct, vigorous, and incisive, as befits one who is a man of action rather than a man of letters; but in many of the descriptive parts Mr. Stanley shows that, consummate man of action as he is, he is a born man of letters as well."—Times.

The STANDARD.—"Mr. Stanley's animated pages; and will continue to be read as long as there remains amongst Englishmen any taste for adventure, and any honour for manliness."

LONDON: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, SEARLE, & RIVINGTON, LIMITED,
ST. DUNSTON'S HOUSE, FETTER LANE, FLEET STREET, E.C.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN'S LIST.

NOW READY, THE TWENTY-FIFTH VOLUME OF
"THE STORY OF THE NATIONS."

SCOTLAND.

By JOHN MACKINTOSH, LL.D.,
Author of "The History of Civilisation in Scotland," &c.
Index, Illustrations, and Maps. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.
"A complete and accurate outline of the story of Scotland will be found in the latest addition to that admirable series of volumes telling the Story of the Nations."—Glasgow Mail.

Recently published, in Same Series.

THE JEWS UNDER ROMAN RULE.

By W. D. MORRISON,
"Deserves high commendation."—Academy.
Illustrated Catalogue of the Series post free.

THE ADVENTURE SERIES.

Large crown 8vo, well illustrated, cloth, 5s. each.
VOLUME II. now ready.

ROBERT DRURY'S JOURNAL in MADAGASCAR.

Preface and Notes by Capt. S. PASFIELD OLIVER.
With many Illustrations and Maps.

"A chronicle as fascinating and romantic as 'Robinson Crusoe'."
"Capt. Oliver has edited the book with painstaking care....A fascinating and romantic narrative."—Speaker.

Just ready, crown 8vo, cloth 6s.

THE GAIN of LIFE.

And other Essays.
By WILLIAM CHATTERTON COUPLAND, D.Sc., M.A.

Demy 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

THE TWO KINDS of TRUTH:

A Test of all Theories.
With Special Application to those of Instinct, Immortality, and Evolution.

By "T. E. S. T."
An Old Life Member of the British Association for the Advancement of Science.
"A volume of rambling philosophical essays that are very readable and suggestive."—Scotsman.
"He disclaims for his work the dignity of a philosophical treatise.
...An intelligent and suggestive writer."—Glasgow Mail.
"Vigorously written, and abounds in information."—British Weekly.

NEW WORK BY THE AUTHOR OF "ENGLISH WAYFARING LIFE."

THE ENGLISH NOVEL in the TIME of SHAKESPEARE.

By J. J. JUSSERAND.
Translated by ELIZABETH LEE. Revised and Enlarged by the Author.

Illustrated by 6 Heliogravures by Dujardin, of Paris, and 21 Full-page and many smaller Illustrations, executed in Facsimile.

1 vol., demy 8vo, cloth, gilt tops, 21s.
"M. Jusserand's book and its exquisite engravings form a most valuable contribution to the study of English literature."—Standard (Leader).
"Dr. Jusserand's agreeable style makes his book, though historically valuable, very pleasant reading."—Daily Telegraph.

NEW NOVEL AT ALL THE LIBRARIES.

A MARIAGE DE CONVENANCE.

By C. F. KEARY.
2 vols., cloth, 21s.
"We may congratulate Mr. Keary on having produced not merely a novel, but a work of art."—Saturday Review.

Now ready, demy 8vo, cloth, 1s. 6d.; paper, 1s.

A SYMPOSIUM on the LAND QUESTION.

By AUBERON HERBERT, SYDNEY OLIVIER,
HERBERT SPENCER, and many others.
Edited by J. H. LEVY.

A NEW VOLUME OF POEMS.

SONG-STRAYS.

By CYFAILL.
Parchment, 3s. 6d.
"Contains fragments of verse of which no living poet would need to be ashamed."—Manchester Examiner.

THE CENTURY DICTIONARY.

An Encyclopaedic Lexicon of the English Language.
Edited by Prof. W. D. WHITNEY, Ph.D., LL.D. (Yale University).

Profusely and Artistically Illustrated.
Cloth gilt, sprinkled edges, £2 2s. each Volume; half-morocco, cloth sides, marbled edges, £2 16s.

Will be completed in 6 Volumes. Also in 24 Monthly Parts, himp cloth, 10s. 6d. each.

Vol. II. (CONO—FY) and Part VIII. are now ready.
"Characterised throughout, and in every respect, by a lavish expenditure of labour and capital, of rare ability and technical skill, all turned to the best advantage by careful and capable attention to the uniform realisation of a thoroughly judicious plan."—Athenaeum.

Prospectuses post free on application.

LONDON:

T. FISHER UNWIN, PATERNOSTER SQUARE, E.C.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 950.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, JULY 19, 1890.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

	PAGE
BROWN'S BIOGRAPHY OF BUCHANAN, by ARTHUR GALTON	43
MORFILL'S STORY OF RUSSIA, by R. NISBET BAIN	44
DR. WARNER'S MENTAL FACULTY, by P. A. BARNETT	45
DUFFIELD'S LATIN HYMN WRITERS, by G. A. SIMCOX	46
NEW NOVELS, by G. BARNETT SMITH	47
RECENT VERSE	48
NOTES AND NEWS	49
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS	50
ORIGINAL VERSE: "LEAVING HOME," by the Rev. H. D. RAWNSLEY	51
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	51
AN UNKNOWN EDITION OF TYNDALE'S NEW TESTAMENT	51
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS	51
CORRESPONDENCE:
"The Romance of the Rose," by Prof. Skcat; "Cockney," by H. Wedgwood; "A Bogus Old English Word," by Prof. Logeman; "The Bondman," by Hall Caine; Fitzgerald's "Omar Khayyam," by C. Weekes	51
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	52
LUNIAK'S SAPHO AND OVID, by H. T. WHARTON	53
OLD SAXON TEXTS	54
SCIENCE NOTES	54
MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES	54
PETRIE'S HISTORICAL SCARABS, by MISS AMELIA B. EDWARDS	54
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	56
STAGE NOTES	56
MUSIC OF THE WEEK, by J. S. SHEDLOCK	56

TO PUBLISHERS.—The Advertiser is OPEN to an ENGAGEMENT as Manager or other responsible position. Thoroughly conversant with all the details of Paper, Printing, Binding, Advertising, &c. First-class references.—Address, C. S., 100, Mercer's Road, Tufnell Park, N.

THE LECTURE AGENCY LIMITED (late of Birmingham), 3, GEORGE YARD, LOMBARD STREET, LONDON, E.C., act as AGENTS for the most distinguished Lecturers and Entertainers in Great Britain.

H. R. H. the PRINCE of WALES is the subject of the ESSAY for which prizes of TWENTY GUINEAS are offered by the LECTURE AGENCY, LIMITED, of 3, George Yard, Lombard Street, London, E.C. Conditions forwarded upon receipt of a stamp for postage.

THE GIRTON GOVERNESS and SCHOOL AGENCY.—MADAME AUBERT introduces English and Foreign Governesses, Governess Pupils, Visiting Teachers, Companions, &c., and recommends Schools and Educational Homes; Schools transferred, Partnerships arranged.—27, Regent Street, S.W.

CATALOGUES.

BAEDEKER'S & BADDELEY'S GUIDE-BOOKS.
New Detailed CATALOGUE, now ready, sent post free on application.—DULAU & Co., 37, Soho Square, London.

TYPE-WRITING.

TYPE-WRITING.—MSS., Scientific, and of all descriptions. Legal Documents, Specifications, Plays, &c., COPIED with speed and accuracy. Dictations taken in shorthand or Type-writing by expert Type-writers. Special success attained in work requiring delicacy and care. Highest testimonials. Pupils taught.—Misses E. B. & I. FARRAN, 4, Southampton Street, Strand, London.

TO AUTHORS.

MESSRS. DIGBY & LONG, PUBLISHERS,
13, BOUVERIE STREET, FLEET STREET, LONDON, E.C.,
Are prepared to receive and give careful consideration to all MSS. and arrange terms for their PUBLICATION. Messrs. DIGBY & LONG have also every convenience and ample facilities for the Publication of Magazines. Editorial offices if required. Newest Catalogue post free.

LADY FLORENCE DIXIE'S NEW NOVEL.

GLORIANA: or the REVOLUTION of 1900. By the Author of "Redeemed in Blood," &c. Crown v., 6s. A all Libraries and Booksellers.
"Very sensational."—Morning Post.
"Crisp writing and sparkling satire."—People.
HENRY & Co., 6, Bouverie Street, E.C.

Just published, price Three Shillings, crown 8vo.

OF PALOMIDE,

Famous Knight of the Round Table.

By ALLAN PRINCE.

Thirty (numbered) Large Paper Copies, One Guinea each.

E. W. ALLEN, 4, Ave Maria Lane.

SCHOOLS, COLLEGES, &c. MANCHESTER NEW COLLEGE,

90, HIGH STREET, OXFORD.

The College adheres to its original principle of freely imparting Theological knowledge, without insisting on the adoption of particular Theological doctrines.

PROGRAMME OF LECTURES FOR THE SESSION 1890-91.

PRINCIPAL—

Rev. JAMES DRUMMOND, M.A., LL.D.
GOSPELS (Introduction, Criticism, and Exegesis).
STUDY OF DOCTRINAL THEOLOGY.

VICE-PRINCIPAL—

Rev. J. ESTLIN CARPENTER, M.A.
OLD TESTAMENT. COMPARATIVE RELIGION.
Rev. C. B. UPTON, B.A., B.Sc.
MENTAL PHILOSOPHY. PHILOSOPHY OF RELIGION.
Rev. P. H. WICKSTEED, M.A., will Lecture on SOCIOLOGY.

The College opens in October. All Lectures are Free to the Public.
For further particulars apply to the Rev. Dr. DRUMMOND, 18, Rawlinson Road, Oxford; or to R. D. DARRISHIRE, Esq.,

23, George Street, Manchester; } Secs.
or to Rev. H. ENFIELD DOWNSON, B.A.,
Gee Cross, near Manchester.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, BRISTOL.

The SESSION 1890-91 will begin on 1st OCTOBER. The College supplies for persons of either sex, above the ordinary school age, the means of continuing their studies in Science, Languages, History, Literature, and Theory of Music. The Chemical, Physical, Electrical, Engineering, Geological, and Biological Laboratories are open daily. The Engineering Department includes Civil, Mechanical, Electrical, and Mining Engineering and Surveying; and special arrangements for practical work have been made with various engineers in and near Bristol. Information with regard to the lodging of Students may be obtained on application. Several SCHOLARSHIPS are tenable at the College.

ENGINEERING EDUCATION.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, BRISTOL.—Courses of Civil, Mechanical, Electrical, and Mining Engineering. Mineralogy and Applied Geology for Civil and Mining Engineering. Facilities are offered in the way of College Scholarships, Engineering Works' Scholarships, and special arrangements for entrance into professional life. CALENDAR, containing full information, price 1s. (by post 1s. 3d.).—For Prospectus and further information apply to JAMES RAFTER, Secretary.

QUEEN'S SERVICE ACADEMY, 3 and 4, ELY PLACE, DUBLIN.—The oldest, and among the most successful in the United Kingdom; over 3,000 have passed.

I. All Army Examinations.
II. Civil Service of India, Universities, &c.
III. R. I. Constabulary Cadetships.
There is not a Corps in the Services or a Department under Government that does not owe some of its Officers to the QUEEN'S SERVICE ACADEMY, DUBLIN. No attempt at cramming; unsurpassed staff of Specialists under personal direction of W. J. CHETWODE CRAWLEY, LL.D., D.C.L., F.R.G.S., F.G.S., F.R.Hist.Soc. &c.

TO PARENTS AND GUARDIANS.

MR. W. S. LOGEMAN, Principal of Newton School, Rock Ferry, is FORMING a small PARTY of BOYS to spend the SUMMER HOLIDAYS at some healthy Seaside place for recreation and study. Instruction in Modern Languages, Classics, or Mathematics as required. References given and required. Inclusive terms, £3 3s. a week, or £10 10s. for four weeks.—Particulars on application.

PHILOSOPHY CLUB.—Founded as a Central Social Meeting Place for Gentlemen interested in Philosophical Thought, and also for the Association of Members of the various Learned Societies.
Town Subscription, £4 4s.; Country, £2 2s. Entrance Fee, £3 3s. The first 300 Members, however, will be admitted without Entrance Fee. Particulars forwarded upon application.
F. C. HUDDLE, Hon. Sec.
26, Suffolk Street, Pall Mall.

MESSRS. DRUMMOND & CO., 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C. are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HAUFSTAENGL, of Munich, the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY. There is a steadily increasing demand for reproductions by this justly celebrated process for large plates and editions de luxe. For ordinary Book Illustrations, Catalogues, Advertisements, &c., Messrs DRUMMOND & CO. have the latest and most improved processes. Specimens on view. Prices on application.

Just published, price 6s.
"THE RELIGION OF HUMANITY,"
and other Poems. By ANNIE MATHESON.
London: PERCIVAL & Co., King Street, Covent Garden.

ONE FARTHING.

"LONDON CITY," an amusing 12-page booklet, being a prelude to the large quarto work to be issued later under the same title which will contain at least 250 splendid illustrations of the City and its teeming life as it is to-day. To be published at 2s.; to subscribers 21s. (a limited number of large paper copies at 4s.); subscribers' names and addresses will be printed alphabetically in the body of the work. Beautifully illustrated four-page quarto prospectus, worthy of careful preservation, free with booklet.—The LEADENHALL PRESS, 50, Leadenhall Street, E.C.

STAMMERERS should read a book by a gentleman who cured himself after suffering nearly forty years. Price 13 stamps.—B. BRASLEY, Brampton Park, near Huntingdon.

CLARENDON PRESS NEW AND STANDARD BOOKS.

BOOKS FOR OXFORD LOCAL EXAMINATIONS, 1891.

VIRGIL.—ÆNEID. BOOKS I.-III.

Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by T. L. PAPILLON, M.A., formerly Fellow and Tutor of New College; and A. E. HAIGH, M.A., late Fellow of Hertford College, Oxford, Author of "The Attic Theatre." Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. [Just published.]

* The first section of a New and thoroughly Revised Edition of Mr. Papillon's well-known Virgil.

VIRGIL.—ÆNEID. BOOK I. With

English Notes, &c., by C. S. JERRAM, M.A., Editor of the "Eclogues," &c., &c. Extra fcap. 8vo, cloth limp, 1s. 6d.

CÆSAR.—THE GALLIC WAR (for Schools). With Notes and Maps by C. E. MOBERLY, M.A. Complete, 4s. 6d.; separately, BOOKS I.-II., 2s.; BOOKS III., IV., V., 2s. 6d.; BOOKS VI., VII., VIII., 3s. 6d. "Stands high among the best classics we have met."—Saturday Review.

XENOPHON.—ANABASIS. BOOK I.

Edited for the use of Junior Classes and Private Students. With Introduction, Notes, &c. By J. MARSHALL, M.A. Extra fcap. 8vo, 2s. 6d.

EURIPIDES.—ALCESTIS. With

Notes and Introductions by C. S. JERRAM, M.A. Extra fcap. 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

PLATO.—APOLOGY. Edited by

ST. GEORGE STOCK, M.A., Editor of "Plato Metaphysics," "Cicero Pro Roscio," &c. Extra fcap. 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

LIVY.—BOOK XXI. With Introduction

and Notes, by M. T. TATHAM, M.A., Balliol College, Oxford, late Assistant-Master at Westminster School. Extra fcap. 8vo, 2s. 6d. "A thoroughly good school-book."—Saturday Review. "The book contains a vast quantity of good work, and we can heartily recommend it."—Journal of Education.

EUCLID REVISED. Containing the

Essentials of the Elements of Plane Geometry as given by Euclid in his first six Books. Edited by R. C. J. NIXON, M.A. Second Edition. Crown 8vo, 6s.

Sold separately as follows:—
Book I. 1s. Books I.-II. 1s. 6d.
Books I.-IV. 3s. Books V., VI. 3s.

BOOK-KEEPING. By Sir R. G. C.

HAMILTON, K.C.B., late Under-Secretary for Ireland, and JOHN BALL, of Messrs. Quilter, Ball, & Co. New and Enlarged Edition. Extra fcap. 8vo, limp cloth, 2s. Ruled Exercise Books adapted to the above may be had, price 1s. 6d.

* Selected by the Commissioners of National Education for use in Irish National Schools and Colleges.

A CLASS-BOOK OF ELEMENTARY

CHEMISTRY. By W. W. FISHER, M.A., Demonstrator of Chemistry, Oxford, late Fellow of Corpus Christi College, crown 8vo, cloth, 4s. 6d.
"The book is of sterling value."—Nature.
"Students preparing for preliminary examinations could not find a better book."—Scotsman.

NEW BOOKS.

NEW VOLUME OF THE "RULERS OF INDIA" SERIES.

Just published, crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

AKBAR. By Col. G. B. Malleson, C.S.I.

* Uniform with "THE MARQUESS OF DALHOUSIE," by Sir W. W. Hunter, K.C.S.I., Editor of the Series.

NEW VOLUME OF THE CLARENDON PRESS SERIES OF GERMAN CLASSICS.

Just published, extra fcap. 8vo, cloth, 4s. 6d.

SCHILLER'S JUNG FRAU VON

ORLEANS. With Historical and Critical Introduction. Complete Commentary, &c. Edited by C. A. BUCHHEIM, Ph.D., F.R.P., Professor of German, King's College, London, Editor of the Series.
"Dr. Buchheim, by his excellent editions of the German Classics, has done far more than any other man to forward the study of German in England and America."—Westminster Review.

Just published, extra fcap. 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

CICERO PRO ROSCIO. With Introduction and Notes, by ST. GEORGE STOCK, M.A., Pembroke College, Oxford, Editor of Plato's "Apology" and "Meno."

Full Clarendon Press Catalogues sent Free on Application.

LONDON: HENRY FROWDE, CLARENDON PRESS
WAREHOUSE, AMEN CORNER, E.C.

ALSO PUBLISHED BY HENRY FROWDE.

Just published, crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 7s. 6d.

SANCTA RESPUBLICA ROMANA:

A Handbook to the History of Rome and Italy from the Division of the Roman World to the Breaking up of Charlemagne's Empire.

By RICHARD HEBER WRIGHTSON, M.A.
LONDON: HENRY FROWDE, OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS WAREHOUSE, AMEN CORNER, E.C.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

POPULAR NOVELS.

A NEW NOVEL.

AN AUSTRALIAN GIRL.

In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "OUGHT WE TO VISIT HER?"

PEARL POWDER. By Mrs.

ANNIE EDWARDES, Author of "Leah: a Woman of Fashion," &c. In 2 vols., crown 8vo.

"A clever and original story with plenty of life and movement about it."—Woman.

"The reader will find both mysterious plot and exciting incident."—Athenaeum.

"The character of the heroine is admirably contrasted with her surroundings: delightfully simple, and sweet and natural, she makes the whole story seem redolent of fresh spring flowers."—Manchester Examiner.

SECOND EDITION OF

ACTE. By Hugh Westbury,

Author of "Frederick Hazzleden." In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THAT UNFORTUNATE MARRIAGE."

MADAME LEROUX. By

FRANCES ELEANOR TROLLOPE, Author of "Black Spirits and White," &c. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"An exceedingly vivacious story with some very lively people in it. The rather complicated plot is unravelled with considerable cleverness, and the scenes change with amusing rapidity."—St. James's Gazette.

"It is a satisfaction to possess now-a-days an author who reminds us so often and so pleasantly of the best achievements of the great writers, and who never lapses into dulness or tediousness."—Manchester Examiner.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "A DREAMER."

MR. BRYANT'S MISTAKE.

By KATHARINE WYLDE, Author of "An Ill-Regulated Mind," &c. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"To say that in this novel the characters and results of their actions are traced out step by step in the incidents and the plot of the story, and that they teach in this way an interesting legend, is only to give the author the praise which her skilful workmanship unquestionably deserves. The merits of this story are indisputable."—Athenaeum.

Each in 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s., at all Booksellers.

NOVELS BY JESSIE FOTHERGILL.

The "First Violin."

Borderland.

Healey.

Kith and Kin.

Probation.

NOVELS BY MARIE CORELLI.

A Romance of Two Worlds.

Thelma.

Vendetta!

Ardath.

NOVELS BY W. E. NORRIS.

Thirlby Hall.

A Bachelor's Blunder.

Major and Minor.

The Rogue.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street,
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

ELLIOT STOCK'S NEW BOOKS.

In crown 8vo, tastefully printed and bound in cloth, price 2s., post-free.

NEW LIGHT UPON SCRIPTURE.

Maschal; or, Hebrew Poetry Revived.

Containing Moses' Song and other Poems from Scripture: the original lines printed in roman type, with literal translation or transmutation with English corresponding measures and cadences. Based on the authority of Josephus and Philo, Eusebius, Jerome, and other ancients. By Rev. CASTLE CLEARY, late minister of Boston Chapel of Ease, and formerly Vicar of Newchurch, Isle of Wight, and Walsall Wood, Staffordshire.

"Interesting and suggestive."—Glasgow Herald.

"A curiosity: the verses have a fine rolling sound, resembling, shall we say, 'Evangeline' or 'Iliad.' Appended to the translations are a number of critical notes."—Scotsman.

In handsome 5vo cloth, price 6s., post-free.

God in His World.

An Interpretation. CONTENTS:—From the Beginning: The Incarnation: The Divine Fellowship.

"The author is evidently a profound classical scholar. The articles on 'The Incarnation,' and 'The Divine Fellowship,' are powerfully written."—Christian Globe.

"A remarkable book, full of suggestiveness and originality."—Glasgow Herald.

"A study of all the religions that preceded Christianity. His own faith in it is more firmly fixed by the study, and his manner of expressing it to readers who are curious or anxious about the truth is such as to grasp and hold their sympathy. He is not a controversialist or a sectarian; for nothing that he says can stir up an angry opposition, and everything is so well said, in such pure, manly English, that the readings of his book is a literary and a religious indulgence at the same time."—Philadelphia Bulletin.

In handsome crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d., post-free.

Boyhood, Adolescence, and Youth.

By LEON TOLSTOI,

Author of "Anna Karenini," "What I Believe," "War and Peace," &c.

Translated by CONSTANTINE POPOFF.

"An excellent translation."—Saturday Review.

"Indubitably the best English version of the Russian novelist's remarkable semi-autobiographical work."—Academy.

"Extremely interesting. Tolstoi's power of description is admirably shown in the pictures of Russian scenery. Some of the incidental characters bear the impress of real portraiture."—Times Weekly.

"Mr. Popoff's version is easy, natural, and 'free and despoiled of Gallicisms.' The translator has a command of English idiom, and his piece of work is a decided improvement on the translation of Miss Hopgood's."—Speaker.

"Supplying an unquestionably graphic picture of the Russia of the time."—Globe.

"Delightful and characteristic specimens of Tolstoi's writing."—Manchester Guardian.

"Singularly eloquent and deeply interesting. The translation is exceedingly well done, the English being clear, vigorous, and forcible."—Newcastle Chronicle.

"Mr. Stock's publication derives its chief merit from its translation by a native of Russia. Mr. Popoff's English is remarkably good; so good, indeed, that it is only here and there, by dint of hard searching, that we can find anything betraying the handling of a foreigner."—Bookseller.

"The ordinary versions raise a suspicion by their style that they have not been rendered direct from the author's Russian, but from the French versions that are so widely circulated. In the double transmission from speech to speech, Tolstoi's expression, as may be supposed, gets curiously distorted. Mr. Popoff seems to have worked from the genuine Slavonic. An English reader could not read the story in a better rendering."—Scotsman.

NEW VOLUME OF VERSE.

In crown 8vo, neatly bound, price 2s. 6d., post-free.

Lostara; a Poem.

By SOPHIA LYDIA WALTERS.

"Contains many truly poetic ideas, some of which are expressed with considerable verbal skill. Miss Walters should do good work in the future."—Sunday Times.

London: ELLIOT STOCK, 62, Paternoster Row, E.C.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

SECOND EDITION, NOW READY.

AT ALL BOOKSELLERS AND LIBRARIES.

In Darkest Africa.

Being the Official Publication recording the QUEST, RESCUE, and RETREAT of EMIN, GOVERNOR of EQUATORIA.

By HENRY M. STANLEY, LL.D., &c.,

Author of "How I Found Livingstone," "Through the Dark Continent."

With numerous Original Illustrations and many Maps.
2 vols., demy 8vo, cloth, 42s.

"The style of the narrative is direct, vigorous, and incisive, as befits one who is a man of action rather than a man of letters; but in many of the descriptive parts Mr. Stanley shows that, consummate man of action as he is, he is a born man of letters as well."—Times.

"Mr. Stanley's animated pages.....will continue to be read as long as there remains amongst Englishmen any taste for adventure and any honour for manliness."—Standard.

"It is a great performance, alike in what it relates, and in the manner of the relation, and it will constitute an enduring monument to its author's fame."—Daily News.

Low's Standard Library of Travel.

THE HEART of AFRICA: being Three

Years' Travels and Adventures in the Unexplored Regions of Central Africa. By Dr. GEORG SCHWEINFURTH. New Edition. With Map and numerous Illustrations. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. per volume.

TWO KINGS of UGANDA; or, Life

by the Shore of the Victoria Nyanza. Being an Account of a Residence of Six Years in Eastern Equatorial Africa. By ROBERT P. ASHE, M.A., F.R.G.S., F.R.H.S., &c. New and Cheaper Edition. With Map and Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

"The annals of missionary enterprise contain no more thrilling recitals, and Mr. Ashe has brought to their narration the pen of a fluent and graphic writer.....Every line of the book is well worth reading."—Blackburn Standard.

HOW I FOUND LIVINGSTONE; including Four Months' Residence with Dr. Livingstone. With Map and Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

"It is incomparably more lively than most books of African travel. The reader may follow him with unflagging interest from his start to his return, and will be disposed to part with him on excellent terms."—Saturday Review.

THROUGH the DARK CONTINENT;

from the Indian to the Atlantic Ocean. With Map and Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

"Every page contains the record of some strange adventure, or the note of some valuable observation.....We lay down the book with a feeling of admiration for the courage of the explorer, and of respect for his powers of observation and great industry."—Pall Mall Gazette.

New Novels at all the Libraries.

JACK ABBOTT'S LOG: a Yarn of the Merchant Service. By ROBERT BROWN, Author of "Spun yarn and Spindrift," "Jack's Yarn," &c. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 21s.

"Among recent tales of the sea, 'Jack Abbott's Log' ranks high. It is a rattling good story, or rather stories; for the two volumes are crammed with seamen's yarns from beginning to end. And, since a 'yarn' is not worth the name unless it is full of fun or adventure, it is needless to say that Mr. Brown's work will commend itself to the lovers of both."—Scotsman.

THE WAY of TRANSGRESSORS. By

E. RENTOUL ESLEER. 3 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 31s. 6d.

"A pleasant, casual story, sufficiently moral in its aim, full of gossip and detail.....A decidedly good novel, marked by much quiet power and grace."—Athenaeum.

THE CONSPIRATOR: a Romance of

Real Life. By Count PAUL P.—. Edited by FRANK HARKUT. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 21s.

"There is no lack of startling incident and sensational adventure in this record of Russian oppression and Polish intrigue..... The interest of the story seldom flags."—Speaker.

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, SEARLE,
and RIVINGTON, Limited,
St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, Fleet Street, E.C.

SATURDAY, JULY 19, 1890.

No. 950, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

George Buchanan, Humanist and Reformer. A Biography. By P. Hume Brown. (Edinburgh: David Douglas.)

THE name of Buchanan stood once for everything that is refined and estimable in the career of letters and in the workmanship of literature; the scholars of his own time and of the two following ages bore witness alike to his admirable style and to the solid powers of his genius. In these present days, when the vast majority of readers are more familiar with living authors than with the pages of our national classics, his name is either too much forgotten, or it serves to remind the student of productions curiously unlike those for which George Buchanan has been so justly admired by his own century and by the learned of all succeeding generations. "True glory," as Pliny has remarked, "consists in doing what deserves to be written, and in writing what deserves to be read." In the fullest sense, this definition may be applied, perhaps, to Caesar alone; but the second part of it may certainly be applied to Buchanan. If he was not himself a maker of history, he had a large and an indirect influence over the affairs of his native country, and he was upon familiar terms with, or at least had known, many of the greatest personages of the sixteenth century.

"The object of the present biography," says Mr. Brown, "is to show what it was in Buchanan that won him the admiration of his contemporaries, and what share may be fairly assigned to him in the general development of the national life of Scotland."

Buchanan was born, somewhere near Killearn, in Stirlingshire, in February, 1506. He was descended on both sides from ancestors of gentle blood; and, on his father's, he was related to the noble house of Lennox. The first Buchanan appears to have been an Irish Celt, who migrated into Scotland in the eleventh century. "In all probability Gaelic was George Buchanan's mother tongue"; and in the districts in which he passed his youth "the prevailing language must have been Gaelic." From this Gaelic original, and from early association, Mr. Brown very properly derives much of Buchanan's genius, and the most of his sympathies:

"that he had the feelings and prepossessions of a Celt, his writings, prose and poetry, abundantly prove; when he celebrates, as he frequently does, the valour and glories of the Scots, it is the Celts of whom he is thinking."

Though Buchanan's family was of honourable extraction, his own branch of it was poor; his father died early, and his youth was a time of distress and hardship. He was, moreover, a tender child; and through life his health was precarious and frail. By the good offices of the unreformed Church, "education was perhaps more widely spread in Scotland than in any other country of Europe"; "with the exception of the Netherlands, no country in Europe was better provided than Scotland with schools for what was then primary and secondary education." It would seem that Buchanan received his first knowledge of letters in the country schools of Dumbarton and Killearn. Thence he was removed in his fourteenth year, when his uncle, James Heriot, placed him at the university of Paris. That institution was then agitated by the zealous promoters of the new learning, and the anxious and acrid supporters of the old; of these, one of the most illustrious examples, at a later time, was Buchanan's tutor and fellow countryman, John Major. The colleges were attended by a large number of Scottish youths; and here Buchanan pursued his education for the space of two years. "Partly of his own choice, and partly of compulsion, the writing of Latin verse, then the one subject prescribed for boys, made the chief part of his literary studies." This indicates, according to Mr. Brown, that the Humanists had prevailed to some extent in modifying the old course of studies. "But what an age was that," exclaims Erasmus, "when the largest part of our time was wasted in dictating and repeating the verses of John Garland, the most foolish verses." Not that the practice of Latin versification is in itself ridiculous, as some illiberal moderns have contended; Erasmus only implies that the models were vicious in form, and void of sense or meaning. At any rate, Buchanan profited by his exercises; and to his proficiency in Latin verse he was indebted for his European reputation and his posthumous fame. Joseph Scaliger said of him "Buchananus unus est in tota Europa omnes post se relinquens in Latina poesi"; and Henri Estienne—who is described by Mark Pattison, perhaps too familiarly, as one of the Stevenses—calls Buchanan "poetarum nostri sæculi facile princeps."

In 1522, want of means and serious illness drove Buchanan back into Scotland. In the following year he served in an expedition against the English border; and he loves to relate "that a great soldier must of necessity have all the gifts that make a great writer: 'neque enim inter rei militaris et literarum studium ea est, quam plerique falso putant, discordia.'" And it would appear, from certain anecdotes of Buchanan's great estimation with the Marshal of Brissac, that he was not destitute of military talent. In 1525, he matriculated at Saint Andrews. The Universities of those days enjoyed an interchange of convenient politeness; Buchanan was credited with his Parisian training, and in the same year that he entered Saint Andrews he proceeded Bachelor of Arts. Like many famous writers, he obtained only a second class: for the finest literary gifts and the widest reading are not commonly the most successful in the schools; nor are they always the most grateful to university examiners, whose own qualifications are sometimes of a different order.

In 1526 Buchanan returned to Paris; and in due time he became a Regent, or teacher, in the College of Saint Barbara. Here, it is interesting to record, he met Calvin and Saint Ignatius of Loyola; for Paris was not only agitated by the partisans of the old and the new learning, but by the more venomous encounters of the Roman Catholics and the Protestants. The sympathies of Buchanan were always with the new learning and the Reformation; though, as Mr. Brown properly observes, he was Humanist first, and Reformer only in the second place. Besides being Regent, he was chosen Procurator of the "German nation"; that is, of the British, the Scandinavian, and the Teutonic members of the university. But his opinions were not acceptable in Paris, nor could they be safely held there; and, in 1535, he went back to Scotland, and became tutor to Lord Cassilis. At this time, having composed his Satire against the Franciscans, he fled into England, and there dedicated poems to Henry VIII. and Cromwell. Though he returned to France, he was not secure from the activity and malice of Cardinal Beaton; and, in 1539, we find him Regent in the College of Guienne at Bordeaux. Here Montaigne was his pupil, and he was intimate with both the Scaligers. From Bordeaux he ventured back to Paris; thence he was invited into Portugal, where he was a member of the Royal College at Coimbra. When the Jesuits obtained the mastery of that once liberal foundation, by their usual arts, Buchanan went into France again, and served the count of Brissac, one of the French Marshals, as tutor to his son; and in this service he had a further experience of war. At this time Mary Stuart was Dauphiness, and soon afterwards Queen. Buchanan made poems on her marriage, and on the death of her first husband. When Mary retired to Scotland, Buchanan accompanied her; and the English ambassador records that "the Queen readeth daily after her dinner, instructed by a learned man, Mr. George Bowhannan, somewhat of Lyvie." Buchanan was made poet laureate and official Humanist to the Court; he received a pension and a grant from the dissolved Abbey of Crossraguel. But the pension was uncertain, the grant was disputed, and "Buchanan was in actual straits while Mary was in power." At this period he associated openly with the Reformers, and was upon intimate terms with Knox, and with Moray, the future regent. The last work he did for Mary was a poem on the birth of James VI., and a masque for his christening. Buchanan was convinced of Mary's guilt, of the murder of her second husband, of her previous adultery with the third; to justify his convictions, he wrote the Detectio Mariæ Reginae Scotorum, and he was one of the Commissioners who were sent into England to apologise for Mary's deposition by the Scotch Estates. Though the facts in this work cannot be absolutely proved, they can neither be denied nor dismissed; the principles of it agree with several of Buchanan's poems, and with his more famous treatise De Jure Regni Apud Scotos. After this he was made Principal of Saint Leonard's College, in the University of Saint Andrews; at Moray's death he became tutor to James VI.; he was also Director of Chancery, Keeper of the Privy Seal, and a Member of Parliament. During his last years he wrote his admirable Rerum Scotticarum Historia—a work admirable, indeed, to those who can appreciate their Sallust or their Livy, since it is a worthy imitation of those fine models. To the historian it is not so admirable: it is filled with mythical sovereigns and fictitious events; it too much resembles the spurious kings at Holyrood. But those miserable canvases are the work of an execrable hand, while Buchanan's portraits are executed with the highest art, and filled in according to the most perfect rules. If the historian be also a man of letters, he will forgive their inaccuracy and study them with continual pleasure. Buchanan died poor, as he had lived, upon September 28, 1582. His last act was to distribute all his cash in charity. He was buried at the public expense, and his only property was a sum due to him from his charge upon the lands of Crossraguel.

Mr. Brown deserves the gratitude of his countrymen, and of all scholars, for his excellent Life of Buchanan. His work shows commendable industry and pains, as well as an intimate knowledge of the history of those times. A scholar himself, he is qualified to write of a great scholar; and he shows an evident enjoyment, as well as a just appreciation, of Buchanan's writing. His biography is lucid in style, quiet in expression, sound in workmanship. There is no straining after effect, no display of cheap and second-hand knowledge, no ostentatious list of authors or events with which Buchanan had little to do. Everything is told in the simplest and plainest way. Mr. Brown never forgets the matter in hand, the "hero is never long out of sight"; all the digressions are natural and necessary, they are to illustrate Buchanan's life, not to satisfy the biographer's vanity; there are no pages or chapters which could as well belong to any other Life as to Buchanan's. It is a biography of which Buchanan, with his admiration for the best models, would not have been ashamed. The examination of Buchanan's intercourse with Montaigne, and the explanation of the disputed term Précepteur Domestique, should add some lustre to Mr. Brown's researches. His criticism is nearly always just, and always fair. It is to be feared that "English lies," which are multitudinous and bold, and "Scotch vanity," which is illimitable, still obscure many subjects in debate between the historians of either nation. And it is agreeable to meet with an author whose sole aim is to try and see things as they are, and to discuss them with the impartiality of a true scholar. We note with pleasure, among Mr. Brown's many evidences of scholarship, his correct use of diphthongs; "Caesar," "mediaeval," and so on, are not printed in the usual slovenly manner. It is a blemish, however, that the word "mediaeval" is not spelt consistently; sometimes Mr. Brown follows the good use "mediaeval," sometimes the less good "medieval." It is probable that the spelling "Ussher" is more accurate than "Usher."

for the name of the learned archbishop. Buchanan's prose, as Mr. Brown says admirably, is Scotch in vocabulary, but Latin in construction; and, therefore, it is clear. But "in England, as is well known," he goes on to say, "it was not till long after this date that the compass of the sentence was clearly apprehended." This opinion is current, it is true; and it is supported by the high authority of Matthew Arnold, who got it from Dryden. Now it would seem that, just before the age of Dryden, some writers, but not all, had begun to affect these unwieldy and interminable sentences. Milton and Clarendon are the great examples of this way of prose; Walton, upon the other hand, is a charming exception; and, if we look back to the preceding age, we find Latimer, Cranmer, Ascham, Lyly, and many other writers, lucid in their construction, and perfect masters of their sentences. Mr. Brown again, quoting Mark Pattison, asserts that James I. "was the only English prince who has carried to the throne knowledge derived from reading, or any considerable amount of literature." Mark Pattison's history is here almost as defective as his punctuation; this is one of those fallacious half-truths of his which are too common when he touches matters of general history. It is sufficient to point to the learning of Henry VIII., or the culture of Elizabeth, to show that even the late Rector of Lincoln may sometimes be too absolute in his judgments, and almost superficial in his verdicts. James VI. of Scotland is the only pedant, but not the only scholar, who occupied the throne of Beaulieu and of Alfred. In his panegyric of the Scotch, Buchanan describes them as those "whose faith can ne'er be bought nor sold." That Scottish faith can be bought the long and honourable history of the Scottish Guards in France will serve to prove; that it cannot be sold is not so easy to assert since the events of Charles I.'s reign and the negotiations which preceded the Act of Union. With Mr. Brown's criticism of Mary Stuart, of the Scotch Reformation, and of Buchanan's character, we are in complete agreement. Unfortunately it is not possible to quote from the latter; and, as we are constrained to leave Buchanan himself with no notice of his verse and no example of it, we cannot leave him more properly than with the excellent words of Calderwood, "No man did merit better of his nation for learning, nor thereby did bring it to more glory." We might add to them that which Erasmus prettily remarks of Cicero, "Quis enim sumpsit hujus libros in manum, quin surrexerit animo sedatiore."

ARTHUR GALTON.

"THE STORY OF THE NATIONS."—Russia.
By W. R. Morfill. (Fisher Unwin.)

MR. MORFILL, in his contribution to "The Story of the Nations" series, has brought together many curious and interesting facts from many sources, either unknown or inaccessible to the general reader. He has compiled a book every chapter of which shows traces of genuine and recondite erudition; and the philological portions of it in particular are what might have been expected from a Slavonic scholar of his acknowledged eminence. Yet, from the historical point of view, the book must be called a disappointment. It is true that Mr. Morfill had no ordinary task before him. How to compress within the narrow limits of 394 small-octavo pages the history of the development and progress of one of the world's great nations, extending over a period of 1000 years, is a problem which might well confound the most capable. But Mr. Freeman has taught us how to epitomise without garbling history; and though it would be absurd to look for exhaustiveness in a mere "outline of Russian history," we have at least the right to expect such an outline, in the hands of a specialist, to be consecutive, adequate, and symmetrical. Mr. Morfill's book is none of these things. Instead of following the broad, simple, and clearly defined lines of Russian history, which may be summarised in the two words—expansion seawards, and treating everything else as simply accessory and subordinate, Mr. Morfill has too often been tempted into byways and side issues by the tales of travellers and the gossip of courts, frequently losing for a time the main thread of his story, and only recovering it at the expense of harmony and sequence.

Russia, in fact, is little more than a picturesque piece of patchwork, loosely held together byshreds of connecting narrative; it is a collection of curious and interesting extracts for the general reader rather than a historical monograph for serious students. Such minor incidents as the account of a court ceremony, or the disgrace of a court favourite, or the personal description of a monarch, occupy three times the space usually allotted to Russia's political relations with her neighbours or to the wars which have made her what she is. Such descriptions are no doubt very good things in their way, especially when they are so well told as Mr. Morfill always tells them; but he had no room for such luxuries, and in introducing them notwithstanding, he has often been forced to dwarf out of recognition the most important historical events, so as occasionally to lay himself open even to the charges of carelessness and inaccuracy. Thus, nearly ten pages are given to Ivan the Terrible's commercial intercourse with England which, however interesting to Englishmen, was of little importance to Russia, or, at any rate, of nothing like the importance of Ivan's wars with Stephen Bathory, which brought Russia to the very brink of ruin, and are nevertheless disposed of in something like ten lines. No one would ever guess from Mr. Morfill's account of the Great Northern War that Charles XII. drew his sword in sheer self-defence; that Patkull was a felon and a traitor who richly deserved his fate; and that Charles's last campaign in the Ukraine was opened by the brilliant Swedish victory of Holoftsin—in the opinion of German military critics one of the most remarkable cavalry engagements on record. Still more unsatisfactory is the description, in eight lines, of the Russo-Swedish War of 1741-2; and not a single word is said of the offer of the Swedish crown to the Empress Elizabeth's kinsman, the Duke of Holstein, afterwards Peter III., or of the agreement by which the same Empress allowed the Swedes to retain possession of Finland east of the Kymmene, in consideration of their securing the Swedish succession to Adolphus Frederick of Holstein, afterwards the father of Gustavus III. In the latter great monarch, whose extraordinary and manifold genius is admitted even by his most virulent enemies, and whose character, in spite of the floods of light cast upon it, still remains so enigmatical, Mr. Morfill can only see a foolish "French fop." He might just as well label Frederick the Great a "French scribbler" sans phrase, or describe Napoleon I. in all seriousness as a "Corsican ogre." The description of the war between Gustavus III. and Catharine II. is almost ludicrously inadequate, and contains many serious blunders. There is no hint that Catharine for a time was in such danger that she actually thought of retiring to Moscow or even to Kazan. Hogland was a drawn battle, not a Swedish defeat. Not one of the many sanguinary engagements on land is mentioned; and the treaty of Värälä, erroneously described as leaving everything on the same footing as it had been before the war, was the first absolute acknowledgment of Swedish independence by Russia since 1719 (subsequent treaties giving her the right to interfere in Swedish affairs), and therefore conceded everything for which Gustavus originally contended. Still more meagre is the description of the fall of Poland. It is no sufficient excuse to say that "the minute discussion of Polish constitutional questions more properly belongs to the history of that country." From and after the middle of the eighteenth century the affairs of Russia and Poland were inextricably blended together, and every step which led to the absorption of the unhappy Republic is of vital importance to the historian of Russia. Nor is Mr. Morfill's attempt to palliate Russia's conduct "for her share in these unlawful transactions" very satisfactory. It is quite true, no doubt, that Frederick II. was the first person to "suggest" the spoliation; but Russia had carefully prepared the way for it years before, and Frederick's suggestion was really a defensive measure—he filched a part lest Russia should grab the whole. Much more criminal, moreover, were Russia's subsequent efforts to prevent Poland from recovering herself, and especially her overthrow of the liberal and enlightened constitution of May 3, 1791, which reformed all the old abuses. The Polish question, indeed, is the cardinal point upon which the politics of Northern and Central Europe turn during the last three decades of the eighteenth century. The triple alliance between England, Holland, and Prussia, as a counterpoise to the union of Russia and Austria, the barter and exchange policy of Hertzberg, the conferences of Reichenbach and Pilnitz, all these things can only be explained by a reference to Poland; but Mr. Morfill has nothing to tell us about any of them, though they all, more or less, directly affected Russia.

Finally, let us take the description of the second Turkish war of Catharine II. as a specimen of how Mr. Morfill slurs over great historical events instead of describing them:

"In 1783, the Crimea, which had for some time been put under the rule of an independent Khan, was annexed to Russia; and four years later the Turks declared war, owing, no doubt, to the apprehensions which they had formed from the meeting of Catharine and the German Emperor Joseph, which seemed to bode them no good. But they were everywhere defeated owing to the military talents of Suvarov."

Then, thirteen pages further on, we are told:

"By the treaty of Jassy with Turkey in 1792, Catharine kept possession of Ochakov and the shore between the Bug and Dniester."

Who, reading the above, would ever suppose that Austria and Russia combined to partition Turkey; that the Austrians were driven back into Transylvania by the Turks, who also held the whole Russian army at bay for six months before Oczakov; that even Suvarov's triumphs were so far from breaking the spirit of the Ottomans that Austria was glad to retire from the struggle by the peace of Sistova; that the crushing victories (Matchin and Baboda), which finally brought the Porte to its knees, were won not by Suvarov, but by Repnin; and that Russia was so exhausted by the struggle that she was glad to accept the terms offered by the Turks, and leave the Roumanians and the Greeks (for whom she had principally taken up arms) to their fate?

So much for the historical portion of Mr. Morfill's book. The remainder—by far the greater part—is above praise. The translations from the Bilini and the selections from Pushkin's lyrics could not possibly be better done; and the history of the literature, though necessarily most brief, is excellent. Still, we think, mention should have been made of Russia's one great critic, Byelinski; and no account of Gogol is complete without a notice of his immortal "Revizor," the best comedy in the Russian language. What should we think of a sketch of English literature which alluded to Sheridan without speaking of "The School for Scandal," and ignored Hazlitt altogether? We also demur to the Malo-Russian or Ruthenian tongue being called a dialect. There is as much difference between Ruthenian and Russian as there is between Swedish and Danish or between Spanish and Portuguese. And if Mr. Morfill could find room for Shevchenko, why did he pass over Fedkovich, the Auerbach of Ruthenian literature? In everything relating to the social and religious development of the Russian nation, Mr. Morfill, it need scarcely be said, is a sure and charming guide; and to criticise the philological portion of the book would, of course, be impertinent. Still, we venture to question Mr. Morfill's contention that the Slavonic hetman is a possible relative of the German hauptman; "Ochakov," though phonetically preferable to "Oczakov," has not the sanction of general use; and "Verela" for "Värälä" is perfectly inadmissible as transgressing a cardinal rule of the Finnic languages.

R. NISBET BAIN.

Mental Faculty. By Francis Warner. (Cambridge: University Press.)

THIS small book of only two hundred pages is, in its modest way, both remarkable and welcome. Though its title may suggest to those who read only when they run that we have here merely another variation of the common text-book of the theory of psychology, and that, like the rest, it may be read running, the examination of a few pages will come as a pleasant surprise, and the whole treatise will be read by practical teachers with profit.

Dr. Warner's book fills a troublesome gap. It is an attempt, and a successful one, to set forth shortly such a profitable conspectus of the main facts of physio-psychology as may make lay parents (and most parents are of the lay kind) wise trainers of youth, and may send the teacher to the schoolroom with just that knowledge of the varieties of nerve-condition as will enable and entitle him to "classify" in a scientific way. "Classify"; for we hear a good deal about classification and freedom of the same, and we are a little too apt to think that the only folk properly interested in it are public elementary teachers legally so entitled. But, beside marriage and public elementary teaching and some other conventions, there are many spheres of activity "recognised by the police," as Mr. R. L. Stevenson has it, where a power to "classify" is eminently desirable. It is very true and very sad that the elementary teacher feels the pinch most acutely, for the reason that most of all men he is bound by law to classify; and though it is highly probable that he sometimes overrates his hardship, yet classification on the basis of difference of age, rough and ready and apparently easy method as it is, can hardly pretend to be scientifically accurate. And if it is not accurate, its application to over six million immature souls for practical purposes will in the practical long run cause serious and may-be irreparable error. But no teacher in the world can affect to be superior to the necessity of help from those who have mastered the radical principles of his craft, although it is a well-known fact that a very large number of teachers (like poets, lunatics, and lovers) are compact of heavenly matter and not made by hand-books, and, unlike cricketers and butchers and bakers and candlestick-makers, require no apprenticeship at "practice." No one doubts that without imagination a teacher is likely to be a "blind mouth" indeed; but imagination and sympathy require disciplining and drilling and furnishing with tools. For these we must go to the physiologist and to the psychologist; one without the other is useless.

To compare Dr. Warner's book with others, one may freely confess that, as books, there have been many better. It displays no particular graces of style; the arrangement of chapters and matter seems curiously unmethodical, even for lectures; and the index should certainly be fuller. If the matter were better arranged, a larger index would not be needed; the rest may be freely forgiven for the sake of the writer's genuine earnestness and the value and copiousness of the information which he supplies.

He begins naturally and intelligibly with an examination of the points of similarity between all animate things, their relations to their surroundings, their innate proclivities, using "natural history" to illustrate simply and directly his account of the conditions of child-life, the first practical lesson coming on the fourth page. This brings us to the study of the brain as that part of the body which is most important in man and most commanding in its effect on his capacities and development; all through the book we are being continually brought back to practical lessons for school-room and home guidance. One would think that a teacher could put into profitable practice chap. iv., "How to observe a child," at any moment of his working day; it is perhaps the most useful in a useful book, and with chaps. v. and vii. forms a capital treatise in itself. The chapters on method and classification (vi. and vii.) are the proper supplement. Some valuable specimen cases of observation are appended, and the author adds the catalogue of such a natural history museum as would be required for pedagogic purposes.

Not the least recommendation of the book is the fact that it is written by a man of science absolutely independent of the many controversies which have separated into hostile camps, on what are really side issues, people otherwise earnest in promoting education. The writer has a good deal (incidentally, of course) to teach both sides, and partisans of either colour will gladly recognise the justice of his implied strictures on their opponents. Much can be learnt, for instance, from the following paragraph on p. 134:

"Among primary schools there seems to be much difference between those that have to receive all the children compelled by law to attend, and Voluntary schools which are not necessarily obliged to keep exceptional or troublesome children. The coexistence of Voluntary and Board schools in a district is likely to lead to the aggregation of the more difficult children in the school which is not free to select its members. Exactly what the average percentage of delicate, feeble-brained, and nervous children may be in the school population is not yet known; but where it is much higher than the average there is evidence that it may be desirable, in the interests of the school, that some at least of the exceptional children should be removed from the general classes, from examinations, and from the standards instituted under the Educational Code, and placed under special training more suitable to their requirements." Evidently the shilling rate has no more terrors for Dr. Warner than has the equator.

Of the strictly scientific value of the book the writer of this notice is not competent to speak, but it is very certain that experiences and discoveries in the subject-matter have been co-ordinated here so skilfully that a very great deal will strike the grateful teacher as new as well as true. It is, of course, quite possible that the physiologist may take exception to some of the author's methods and conclusions, and the psychologist is pretty sure to wish to exclude the physiologist from his preserves; but the service done to the man who has to face a class of children remains beyond all doubt.

Dr. Warner incidentally mentions a most useful step taken by the British Medical Association towards the acquisition of further data for forming trustworthy generalisations as to the capacity and condition of children under instruction. A committee of the Association, of which he was a member, observed over five thousand cases in schools, and obtained most valuable statistics, of which we have a précis here. It is to be hoped that such observations will be continued over a larger area, for it is almost impossible to exaggerate the value of the results so obtainable to every man and woman nearly or remotely concerned with young children.

Again, while such clamours are being raised around us on behalf of all possible subjects of education, it is pleasant to be brought back, as we are by Dr. Warner, to the old conviction that all teaching is not education; nor is it less important to be made to understand the real need that lies deep in the heart and mind of man for "technical" training, the harmonious development of all his parts, of his senses no less than his judgment. Indeed, one can hardly put down the book without feeling that we have long, as a nation, neglected one of the best means to intellectual development at our command, though this is neither chemistry nor shorthand, nor even commercial correspondence; that no arbitrary classification of scholars is possible; and that some systematised endeavour to arrive at irrefutable data in regard to the development conditions of children under teaching in our schools would give us results of incalculable value.

P. A. BARNETT.

The Latin Hymn Writers and their Hymns.

By the late Samuel Willoughby Duffield. Edited and completed by Prof. R. E. Thompson. (Funk & Wagnalls.)

EVEN if the principal writer of this tantalising book had not gone where the singing is better than here, it would be impossible to criticise it severely. The last words of the introduction would disarm Zoilus.

"I could not hope to rival, far less to equal, such illustrious scholarship as that of Daniel or Mone. I have, therefore, been content to pipe to a lesser reed, and in a more familiar and gossiping way to attempt the history of the hymns. And for the rest I can only add what Master Robert Burton saith in his Anatomy of Melancholy: 'If through weakness, folly, passion, ignorance, I have said amiss, . . . I earnestly request every private man, as Scaliger did Cardan, not to take offence. . . . If thou knewest my modesty and simplicity, thou couldst easily pardon and forgive what is here amiss or by thee misconceived.'"

Mr. Duffield began as a translator of hymns; and his interest in them gradually grew beyond what seem to be the somewhat scanty resources of American libraries, and he contemplated a book which should communicate his knowledge to the public of American religious magazines. He shared the convictions of his public as to the immense superiority of the modern religion of America to the mediaeval religion of Europe. Austerities shock him and miracles scandalise, and he has not a spark of Hawthorne's imaginative sympathy with

"Mariolatry." He likes Peter the Venerable ever so much better than St. Bernard, because he was large-bodied as well as large-hearted. He prefers Jacopone da Todi's satiric rhymes on the vanity of the world to the "Stabat Mater"; and he is quite honestly shocked at the submission of Rabanus Maurus to an abbot who cared more for building the church than for keeping up the school and improving the library. Otherwise, Rabanus is rather a favourite of Mr. Duffield's. He is quite sure that he wrote the "Veni Creator," which is ascribed to him in Brower's MS., apparently on the ground that the writer is thoroughly familiar with the doctrine and phraseology of Rabanus's treatise on the Holy Spirit. The same considerations have led the writers of other MSS. to ascribe St. Peter Damien's hymn on Paradise to St. Augustine. As the claims of St. Augustine are rejected, one does not quite see why those of Rabanus are to be treated as certain. The case is very much the same with the "Salve Caput" and "Jesu Dulcis Memoria," which are confidently ascribed to St. Bernard, whose sermons on the Canticles inspired the latter. Probably Mr. Duffield is right in thinking the "Salve Caput" older than the hymns in the same metre to the "Five Wounds," which have also been ascribed to St. Bernard and to St. Bonaventure. Mr. Duffield is at once vague and sceptical in his treatment of the best known of the two rhymes ascribed to St. Francis Xavier beginning,

"O Deus Ego amo Te."

It is true that it might be better attested; but it comes from a seventeenth-century authorised translation of the rule for daily prayer, which it is probable he gave to his converts.

Apparently, Mr. Duffield was too modest to compete as a translator with Father Canvell, so he has given us the last known of the two.

"O, Lord, I love Thee, for of old
Thy love hath reached to me,
Lo, I would lay my freedom by
And freely follow Thee.
Let memory never have a thought
Thy glory cannot claim,
Nor let the mind be wise at all
Unless it seek Thy name.
For nothing further do I wish
Except as Thou dost will;
What things Thy gift allows is mine
My gift shall give Thee still.
Receive what I have had from Thee,
And guide me in Thy way,
And govern as Thou knowest best
Who lovest me each day.
Give unto me Thy love alone,
That I may love Thee too,
For other things are dreams; but this Embraceth all things true."

This, like most of Mr. Duffield's translations, is decidedly above the average, even when he is unsympathetic with the original, as in the brilliant tour de force of Adam of St. Victor. The reason that his hymns do not sing when translated is not the author's lack of feeling, but the scarcity of double rhymes in English, which always forces translators to sacrifice literary ease for the sake of a very poor reproduction of Adam's metrical effects. In the "Zyma Vetus Expurgetur," Mr. Duffield comes off at least as well as Mr. Wrangham. In dealing with the "Ambrosian" hymns, he loses something of the massive dignity of the originals, but he neither dilutes their gravity nor tricks out their simplicity. One of the best translations is from the Paraclete text of "O quanta qualia sunt illa Sabbata," which is ascribed to Abelard on the faith of the treatise on hymnology which accompanied the hymns he sent to Heloise. It is a pity the translator did not live to revise his volume and recollect the difference between curia and cura, which appear to be confounded in the first line.

There is a good deal of interesting matter in the biographical part of the book. The pathetic story of Hermann Contractus—for whom the "Veni Sancte Spiritus" is too confidently claimed, though it is quite unlike the structure of his known sequences—will be new to most readers. The squabbles of two friends and partisans of Notker, who invented sequences, with their rather profane superiors are entertaining enough. There is a fair account of Ennodius and of Venantius Fortunatus, neither of whom are hackneyed. St. Hildebert, of Tours, the close of whose long prayer to the Trinity became a popular pilgrim song, is rather a favourite of Mr. Duffield, who thinks he never gave scandal because he honestly repelled a particular accusation. His own words prove that his life was not always edifying. St. Peter Damien, Cardinal and Flagellant, affords occasion for a sketch of the history of the devotion he introduced, which we learn still flourishes in California. We are indebted to Prof. Thompson for an account of the writers who remodelled the hymns of the Roman and Parisian Breviaries, which is discriminating and intelligent, and gives information for the present hardly so accessible anywhere else. G. A. SIMCOX.

NEW NOVELS.

The Mystery of M. Felix. By B. L. Farjeon. In 3 vols. (White.)

Madame Leroux. By Frances E. Trollope. In 3 vols. (Bentley.)

The Way of Transgressors. By E. Rentoul Esler. In 3 vols. (Sampson Low.)

The Scudamores. By F. C. Philips and C. J. Wills. In 2 vols. (Gardner.)

One of the Wicked. By Godfrey Burchett. In 2 vols. (Ward & Downey.)

Love's Loyalty. By Cecil Clarke. In 2 vols. (Griffith, Farran & Co.)

Monsignor. By Mrs. Compton Reade. (Bristol: Arrowsmith.)

Saved by a Looking-Glass. By Edgar H. Wells. (Digby & Long.)

Laying Down the Cards. By the Hon. Mrs. Fetherstonhaugh. (Spencer Blackett.)

Truth with Honour. By C. R. Coleridge and M. Bramston. (Smith & Innes.)

The House on the Scar. By Bertha Thomas. (Sampson Low.)

An Unwilling Wife. By Alice Clifton. (Remington.)

Forging the Fetters. By Mrs. Alexander. (Spencer Blackett.)

Ida. By Mabel Collins. (Ward & Downey.)

Few living novelists can rival Mr. Farjeon in the construction of a plot, and this art is manifested to a remarkable degree in The Mystery of M. Felix. It is not until a good way into the third volume that the threads of the narrative are gathered up, and in a most ingenious manner. From the literary point of view, perhaps, Mr. Farjeon may have written abler books, but he has never invested any of his stories with a deeper interest. Pathos and humour hold the reader's attention by turns. The opening chapters reveal to us one or two characters which might have been drawn by Dickens, but even these have a direct bearing upon the serious part of the work. It would be unfair to the author to expose the details of his cleverly built-up hypotheses and incidents, but we may be permitted to say that M. Felix has first been supposed to have been murdered in his bedroom, and that, secondly, his body disappears apparently without human agency, which furnishes the ground of the "mystery." Ultimately, it is discovered to have been a case of suspended animation. M. Felix is only a pseudonym. The bearer of that name is really one Leonard Paget, who pushes his half-brother, Gerald, down a precipice on the Alps, while away on his honeymoon. He does this to obtain possession of a large property; and a good deal of the story is occupied with the machinations of Leonard Paget and his fellow conspirator, Dr. Peterssen, against his brother and his brother's wife, whom Paget relentlessly persecutes. Gerald is not killed by his fall, but he is subsequently thrown into a private lunatic asylum by his brother, where he lingers for eighteen years, while Leonard dissipates the property. Nemesis overtakes the villains at last, but how this comes about readers must discover for themselves. There is not a dull page in the whole of these three volumes, and the novel would form a capital companion for the country or the seaside.

Mrs. Trollope's Madame Leroux is excellent, for its sharp, crisp drawing of character—indeed, it is long since we have met with a novel to compare with it in this respect. Nor does this praise merely extend to the leading personages of the story—Mme. Leroux herself, for example, who leads a kind of dual life—but it is equally true of all the minor characters. As for the narrative generally, it is full of motion, and no reader can possibly find the work dull. Some of the humour is furnished by the sour and cynical Mrs. Shard, who puts duty above everything. "As to the agreeable, whenever I'm particularly pleased about anything—it isn't often—I begin to be pretty sure there's something wrong in it." This is not very cheerful doctrine to instil into a bright young heart. Another of this singular being's deliverances is, "We're all worms and mire, and when once you're sure of that you have peace of mind." The history of poor Lucy Marston, the supposed friendless orphan, is calculated to inspire deep interest; and there is something very dramatic in the manner in which she at length finds her father, as well as in the tragic death of Madame Leroux, who is the heroine's mother. It may, perhaps, be urged that probability is sometimes sacrificed for the purposes of fiction, but of how few works could not the same thing be said? In our view, Mrs. Trollope has written one of the best novels of the season; at any rate, if it is not one of the most original, it is one of the most captivating.

Miss or Mrs. Rentoul Esler—for we opine from internal evidence that the author of The Way of Transgressors is a woman—has written a pleasing though too lengthy story. The primary object of it seems to be a counterblast against the caste notions which still prevail in England on the subject of marriage. Indeed, the great authority on the subject, Lady Mildred, expressly lays it down that it is a social misdemeanour for the grandson of a nobleman to marry the daughter of a grocer, however well-to-do the unfortunate grocer may be. If the misguided man's relatives will only wait until the third generation, when the shop has been dropped, and there has been a respectable intermediate marriage, then the grocer's descendants may mingle with the charmed circle of "society." The particular transgressor in this story is one Bertie Lyall. In spite of his aristocratic antecedents, he is engaged at the same time to the daughter of a general and the daughter of a shopkeeper; and after his marriage with the former he betrays in the most heartless manner an innocent and beautiful orphan girl. He rises in the world, but the worm begins to gnaw at his heart, and an extravagant expenditure, together with such little matters as forgery, weigh him down. At length, finding life insupportable, and detection absolutely certain, he is found dead under circumstances which seem to point to suicide. The best character in this novel is Viney Grace, the grocer's daughter, who has been educated above her station, and who in her straitened circumstances resembles a caged bird longing for freedom. The devotion of Harry Caffyn, the grocer's apprentice, to the young lady who is so much above him, is very touching. Lady Mildred has a pretty wit. When reminded that attorneys are gentlemen by Act of Parliament, she dryly remarks, "I dare say an Act of Parliament would be necessary." She is not quite so happy when she airs her political idiosyncracies. If this is a first work, it indicates considerable promise.

Although there is a vein of amusing comedy in The Scudamores, on the whole it is not so clever as previous work from the same hands. The serious portion of the story is occupied with the fortunes of a younger branch of the great Scudamore family, who are leading a life of genteel poverty at Brixton, when the eldest son Jack is suddenly acknowledged as the heir to a baronetcy and a splendid estate in North Wales. Jack does not run-a-muck in consequence, drawing bills against the future and speculating upon the death of his uncle, the existing holder of the title. On the contrary, he behaves as though he were the embodiment of all the virtuous maxims which emanated from the brain of Benjamin Franklin. He has a struggle with the querulous and valetudinarian baronet, Sir John, who requires him to marry an American heiress, but the hearts of both these young people have already been bestowed elsewhere. This they mutually discover, so that all comes right in the end. One of the most absurd personages in the book is a broken-down actor of the Vincent Crummies type, whose language is flowing in the extreme. Owen Price, the rough millionaire, is a sterling fellow, and occasionally gives vent to smart epigrams. "It's a great thing to come across a woman that's always right," he remarks to his private secretary, "if a man ain't married to her, and then it's kinder wearyin'." He can always tell a real lady when he sees one, "she does make a fellow feel so thoroughly uncomfortable." This story is slight in structure, but it is very readable, and contains many sparkling passages.

The author of One of the Wicked has certainly taken care that the chief character in his story shall justify his description. A more thorough-paced villain than Pedro Mallerock it would be difficult to conceive. The admixture of Spanish blood in his veins perhaps partially accounts for this. He stabs his half-brother, Antony, with a three-pronged ornament belonging to the unfortunate man's wife, seizes upon Antony's property, and destroys his will, as well as his marriage certificate. This seems pretty warm work for a brother to accomplish; but, to ward off suspicion from himself, the fiendish Pedro casts it upon Antony's wife, and causes her to be sentenced to five years' penal servitude for manslaughter. His anxiety that she should not be condemned for murder scarcely harmonises with his ruthless nature, and it certainly ought to have aroused the suspicions of the authorities. However, in the end all turns out as it should. The truth of the murder is discovered by a very simple incident; and Pedro, finding that the officers of the law are upon his track, throws himself into the sea in order to escape the gallows. Pedro Mallerock puts his own philosophy into a nutshell, as follows: "I would sooner see any number of excellent persons arranged in rows in their polished coffins than go out into the cold myself for even half an hour." This may be cynical philosophy, but it has no staying power. Mr. Burchett's story is undeniably exciting, and exhibits very considerable powers of analysis.

The writer of Love's Loyalty is, we presume, a lady. She has much yet to learn in constructing a story that shall hang well together. There are many good things in these volumes; but they are almost spoilt by the author's diffuseness and lack of concentration. Miss Clarke is very severe upon the stronger sex, from the drunken floater of public companies down to a scion of the nobility—the Hon. Montgomery Spooner, the vacuous, who is erroneously called in one place a nobleman. The ladies, on the other hand, furnish a bright moral contrast to the disreputable men-kind; but why it was necessary for the author to make Mary Stapleton translate a bad book because she was driven to poverty we fail to understand. Though life was no doubt hard with her, there were surely other ways open in which to gain a livelihood.

Monsignor, by Mrs. Compton Reade, is able but uneven. Her portrait of the smooth ecclesiastic—who cannot bear the winds of heaven to blow upon him too roughly, but who has by no means an immaculate past—is well drawn, and is the dominant character in the book, as he should be. The next most striking individuality is Lady Ursula, the high-souled daughter of Lady Leintwardine, who is immeasurably above her surroundings. The aristocracy do not always observe the rules of grammar in this volume, perhaps because they are such very superior persons. But as a story the work undoubtedly rivets the attention.

A very ghastly murder is the chief incident in Saved by a Looking-Glass. The tragedy occurs at sea on board the Presidency of Bombay; and a young passenger, Edward Kerr, believes himself to have perpetrated the crime while under the influence of a drug. Things look very black against him, when, in a very ingenious way, circumstances are made to point towards the real culprit. A looking-glass plays an important part in his identification—hence the title of the story. The tale has little or no literary merit, but its sensational vein will probably cause it to be read.

There is a great deal of "go" in the Hon. Mrs. Fetherstonhaugh's stories, and her Laying Down the Cards may be read with real pleasure. There is much about Epsom and Ascot, and the "favourites," of course; but the sketch has also its better or more serious side, in which is set forth, with considerable skill, the pathetic love story of Col. Villiers and the tragic fate of Mrs. Monteith.

Misses Coleridge and Bramston have given us a delightful little story in Truth with Honour. It deals with the trials and loves of two sisters whose different natures are admirably contrasted, and its high tone—without being goody-goody—makes it a capital book for girls. We are rather inclined to agree with the mercurial young sister who is always having superior examples thrown at her, that "looking up to people is very fatiguing."

Miss Bertha Thomas has a very unpleasant hero in The House on the Scar, a tale of South Devon, but the sketch certainly manifests no little skill. It may possibly seem strange that a being like George Elliston, who has led a desperado kind of life in the South Seas, and left a record of bloody adventure behind him, should come to England, find an entrance into society, and win the love of a pure and unsophisticated girl. But fiction is sometimes less strange than truth; and Miss Thomas observes that a true account of George Elliston's "brilliant" career would "startle those who believe the successful pirate and sea-robber to be a thing of the past, a product incompatible with the latter end of the nineteenth century." We are certainly not anxious to see the "product" multiplied.

The tale of An Unwilling Wife, by Miss Alice Clifton, deals very graphically with a number of episodes in the Indian Mutiny. To escape the terrors with which a British garrison is threatened, the daughter of an Indian officer is married to Captain Carey, who conveys her away to a place of safety. It would be surprising if a girl's affections could be forced under such circumstances, but the noble conduct of Carey and his great services win the truly devoted love of his young wife in the end. The story is interesting enough in itself, but it is better by affording promise for its author's future.

Mrs. Alexander has joined the ranks of the great army of writers of shilling shockers. We are rather sorry for this; for Forging the Fetters, while quite equal to the general run of its class, is by no means worthy of the author of Her Dearest Foe at her best. She has had to consider a different kind of public, for which she would have done well to allow others to cater. Sir Frederic Morton's attempts to inveigle a rich woman whose wealth shall atone for his past excesses may be of importance to him, but they are not particularly elevating or instructive. Our opinion of Mrs. Alexander is so high that we hope she will keep to her older and far nobler style of work.

Ida, by Miss Mabel Collins, is an account of an adventure in Morocco—an adventure which it would have been better neither to undertake in the first place, nor to record in the second. Miss Collins has shown in her previous books that she is a clever writer; but her present venture cannot be called either clever or wholesome. It is impossible to see what good end is to be answered by it; and Ida has herself to thank for the delicate, or rather the indelicate, difficulties into which she falls. We look for much better things than this from Miss Collins.

G. BARNETT SMITH.

RECENT VERSE.

Engelberg, and Other Verses. By Beatrix L. Tollemache (Hon. Mrs. Lionel Tollemache). (Percival & Co.) These are mountain verses, and, like mountain air, rather thin. But they have the coolness and refreshment of the heights, and a placid quality which is certainly restful, in these days of storm on the lower levels. Mrs. Tollemache sings of glacier streams and mountain flowers, of St. Moritz in all its seasons, the snow, the "alpine chillness," with memories of English valleys and English gardens, recollections of childhood, travel-pictures from various lands, poems for children, verses of piety and philosophy. Her verse has always a personal quality—a personal quality which is not always sufficiently disengaged from the mere accidents and occurrences which may be the stuff of poetry but are not usually poetry without an artistic change. In this, as in other ways, she may be compared to the late Miss Havergal, who would no doubt have been less attractive to her large feminine audience if the mild grace of her manner had exercised itself with more of the artistic sense. Rather after the fashion of Miss Havergal, at times, though with a larger outlook, is the attempt which Mrs. Tollemache is much too fond of making to force a sort of moral out of natural things, which might better have been left as impressions. Why set the Alps to teach lessons in school? Apart from this too insistently didactic note, many of the nature pictures are genuinely good. Mrs. Tollemache is a sympathetic observer, only too deeply read in Wordsworth; and she can bring her snows and mountain flowers into verse that is always respectable, and often much more than that.

She has considerable metrical ability, and can be felicitous in epithet, as when she writes of an echo :

"Only an echo, but the note
Lingers, and like a charmed boat
Over a sea of sound doth float."

As an example of what she can do well, and of how far she can be successful, one may quote "Tatton Mero"—a piece which is not without serious blemishes, but which is on the whole a really faithful and a really fine study after nature :

"At dawn I passed beside a silent mere,
So still, so smooth, it mirrored calmly here
Its own green banks, the heavens, the passing cloud,

And some gray willow with its branches bowed.

"The day was closing ere I passed again,
The north wind blew a fierce and angry strain;
The cry of wild geese sailing o'er the wood,
The plash of wavelets reached me as I stood.

"The rushes bent and rustled in my ear,
How quickly changed the lovely placid mere;
Yet not unwelcome are the signs of strife,
The rushing wind, the scream of birds, for life

"Is here that slept, but now with stir and strength
No more with passive heart receives, at length
Knows the new joy of motion, voice, and gives
To man the sympathy of all that lives."

Poems like these of Mrs. Tollemache are undoubtedly the outcome of a genuine delight in nature and a genuine impulse to express that delight in verse. They give evidence of a thoughtful and sympathetic temperament, and of much culture. Compared with the weak and amateurish verse which so many indulgent publishers find it worth their while to print, publish, and lay on the reviewers' tables, such pieces as these in "Engelberg" are of high order. But it cannot be said that they have in them that new and vivid strength, that sheer and simple intensity, which inform the frontispiece of Mr. William Strang—an artist who has his own vision of the world, and his own strong, quaint, wilful way of putting that vision into black and white.

Elegies and Memorials. By A. and L. (Kegan Paul & Co.) There is nothing great or wonderful about this little modest book; but there is a shy charm, a fervid and yet cloistered sentiment, and a natural happiness in the use of verse, which sets it in a sort of secluded nook apart from and very much above the open station where many of its more pretentious rivals are clamorous. A. and L. are apparently not young.

"A grey-haired toiler, I attain
A half-way height, content, for pain
And weariness, with little gain."

They are genuinely modest about the little book they send out, and plead, unnecessarily, personal considerations. The elegy on a sister and brother, with which the volume opens, has a genuine grace and beauty—something curiously Shelleyan, a certain fine-drawn delicate fervour of language, as in these lines :

"Now the red rose leaf on the pure young cheek,
More childlike as time moves and leaves her there;
And eyes which spring up ere the lips could speak,
Melt into shadow through the drooping hair.
Now all that girlhood, now that flushed intense
Young fever, are a whisper of the night,
A faint sweet resurrection, a strange sense
Of absence unexplained till morning light.
And whilst her memory in its crystal urn
Gleams fair as silver through the dust of years,
Cold evermore where sky and ocean burn
With azure fire that isle of sepulchres,
'Twixt purple passion-flower and whitest rose,
Where Death a garden's summer queen appears,
She sleeps—but others live for other tears."

Besides this personal lament, there is a poem charged with a noble bitterness on behalf of woman, and there are other pieces in which the same humanitarian fire glows. The volume ends with a graceful translation of nine sonnets of Petrarch.

WE did not review Mr. John James Piatt's A Dream of Church Windows, &c. (Elliot Stock) at the time it was published; but, as it has been followed at a very short interval by another volume—A Book of Gold and other Sonnets (same publisher)—it may be as well, for the sake of Mr. Piatt himself, to say a few words about them both. We trust the careless praise given to the first book by irresponsible critics did not mislead him, and encourage him to produce the second. Mr. Piatt seems to be a well-intentioned man who has mistaken his vocation. These pieces of his are not poetry; they are hardly even good verse. They should have been kept for the private reading of intimate friends who would have treated them with kindly indulgence, and even with sympathy. The "dead house-fire" and the "trundle bed," and the other miscellaneous domestic matters which Mr. Piatt celebrates, have no doubt an interest and significance of their own in the family circle, enhanced rather than otherwise by Mr. Piatt's efforts to enshrine them in verse. If Mr. Piatt had been well advised he would have kept the pieces where they really are in place, printing them, if at all, for private circulation only; and he would not have made them the basis of a bid for public fame as a poet.

A Little Book: Poems, by George H. Kersley, (Bickers), is surely the most immature, the most green and juvenile book ever issued; and no one can doubt that the writer is very young. Only extreme youth could excuse the number of "dears" and "darlings" strewn with both hands over these ingenuous pages; only extreme youth could explain the writing and the printing of anything so mawkish and maudlin as a great deal of what one reads there. But at the same time there is a certain promise, we are bold enough to think, in these ragged and ridiculous verses, with their prate of "parched lips, hot eyes, and burning heart," of "massed and matted hair-locks," of "darlings" of various nations. The germ of promise is faint, indeed; but it is there, and it may expand. Meanwhile, the sooner Mr. Kersley repents of these appallingly-juvenile juvenilia, the better will it be for his future.

Rhymes: Real and Romantic. By M. C. Tyndall. (Bristol: Arrowsmith). This rather nicely got-up quarto, with its white cover, its red lettering, its sounding division into "Books," its neat mottoes, its prodigality of pages, ought really to be better than it is. Unhappily, it is not. The poems are pleasingly and intelligently written commonplace, in the manner of the late Mr. Longfellow. They are so far from being badly written that one could wish it were possible to read them and to say something pleasant about them. But there is no variation of the level ennui. Curiously correct, curiously lifeless, they are written on subjects like "The Ides of March," "Under the Lord Protector," "The Hanging Gardens of Babylon," "In the Days of Queen Anne"—dead and buried subjects that only genius could make interesting, and not even genius if one had to read seven books of them, with an average of eight poems per book.

Carmina Silulæ: Poems, Original and Translated. By James Ambrose Story. (Authors' Co-Operative Society.) Mr. Story begins his volume with an ode addressed to "Sprightly Fancy," in the first stanza of which he rhymes "sporting" and "floating." He is an old-fashioned, innocent soul, who loves to—"Listen to the birds all singing,

And hear the woodman's hatchet ringing;
While, as the frequent strokes around,
Sly Echo mocks with mimic sound."

He invokes Leonidas thus :

"Leonidas, when shall thy name
No more the patriot soul inflame?"

Is one not respectfully forced to conclude that Mr. Story has made a mistake as to his century? He writes about the Old Year's Death, the Poet and the Waves, Childhood, Youth, and Age; he composes a Vesper Hymn; he addresses remarks in verse to the Christian; he constructs allegories, he puts together translations. And what is the use of it all, and who is expected to read it?

NOTES AND NEWS.

MESSRS. LONGMAN & Co. have in the press a new "Student's History of England," by Mr. S. R. Gardiner. It is intended for the upper classes in schools, and aims at avoiding, on the one hand, the allusive style of writing which is so puzzling to young people, and, on the other hand, the multiplicity of detail which unprofitably burdens their memories. The book will be illustrated under the superintendence of Mr. St. John Hope, secretary to the Society of Antiquaries, and will be accompanied by a School Atlas of English History, prepared by Mr. Gardiner. The work will ultimately appear in a single volume of about the same size as the "Students' Hume"; but for the sake of schools which do not wish to incur the expense of so large a book, there will also be an edition in three divisions. The first of these divisions, extending to the death of Henry VII., will be issued in September next.

MR. JOSEPH JACOBS—the editor of The Fables of Bidpai and Caxton's Æsop in the "Bibliothèque de Carabas," and of Angell Daye's version of Daphnis and Chloe in the "Tudor Library"—has now completed another important reprint, which is of yet greater interest for the history of English literature. This is W. Painter's Palace of Pleasure (1567), containing translations of more than one hundred Italian novelle, from which our dramatists have derived so many of their plots, from Shakspeare downwards. Here is to be found the original of "Timon of Athens," "All's Well," and "Romeo and Juliet," as also of some of the plays of Peele, Marston, Webster, Beaumont and Fletcher, Massinger, and Shirley. Mr. Jacobs has chosen for reprinting the second and fuller edition of 1575. He gives the literary history of each tale, so far as it can be traced; and also a general historical introduction. The whole will form a quarto of nearly 1500 pages, divided into three volumes. It will be published by Mr. David Nutt, in a limited edition of fifty large-paper and 500 small-paper copies.

THE August number of Macmillan's Magazine will contain an article, by Mr. Goldwin Smith, on "The Two Mr. Pitts," showing that on all essential points his opinion of that statesman remains the same as it has always been, defending him from the charges recently brought against him in certain quarters, and defending himself also from the charge of "apostacy."

THE August volume in Mr. Walter Scott's series of "Great Writers" will be Nathaniel Hawthorne, written by Mr. Moncure D. Conway.

WHAT a triumph must it be considered for the poetical fame of Shelley that his centenary is to be celebrated by the publication of a Lexical-Concordance to his poems, which, from the complete and exhaustive mode of compilation, will equal in bulk Dr. Schmidt's Shakspeare Lexicon or Mrs. Clarke's Concordance to Shakspeare! By a sort of strange irony, moreover, this tribute to the greatness of the expelled Oxford student of 1811 is to be printed at the University Press, with a type specially cast and a paper made expressly for the book. Strange, too, will it be thought that so laborious and costly a work should be undertaken by two publishers. Yet so it is; for while Mr. Ellis is content to spend six of the last years of his life in the close and arduous application necessary for the preparation of such a book—which involves not only the arrangement but the careful and anxious consideration of 125,000 references to the poet's writing—without any hope of reward or benefit to himself beyond the pleasure he finds in the study of the author, his whilom business antagonist, Mr. Quaritch, has undertaken to invest his capital in the production of the volume, which is assuredly a speculation from which many a great publishing house would shrink. It is intended that the book shall be issued on the hundredth anniversary of the poet's birth—August 4, 1892.

THE title of Mr. Ælian Prince's new volume of verse, about to be published by Messrs. E. N. Allen & Co., is Of Palomide: Famous Knight of the Round Table. This knight does not appear in the Laureate's "Idylls of the King," nor has he been made the subject of any special poem. Yet the character of Palomide was greatly admired by Sir Walter Scott. Speaking of the romance of Sir Tristran, he said that there is no "truer picture of the human mind than the struggles between the hatred of rivalry and the chivalrous dictates of knightly generosity which alternately sway Sir Tristran and Palomide.

MESSRS. WERTHEIMER, LEA & Co. will publish shortly, on behalf of the Jewish Association for the Diffusion of Religious Knowledge, a new English translation by the Rev. S. Singer, together with the text, of the authorised Daily Prayer-Book of the United Hebrew Congregations of the British Empire.

THE English Dialect Society's publications for the year will be issued to members in the course of the next fortnight. They will be A Glossary of Words in Use in the County of Gloucester, collected by Mr. J. D. Robertson, and edited by Lord Moreton; and English Dialects: Their Homes and Sounds, by Dr. Alex. J. Ellis.

SEVERAL foreign translations of Marie Corelli's works are now published, the latest being Ardath, done into Swedish by Mme. Emilie Küllmann, whose translation of the same author's Norwegian story, Thelma, has had an enormous sale in Stockholm. A German translation of A Romance of Two Worlds, by the Baroness von Fircks, is soon to appear; and Mme. Loyson, wife of Père Hyacinthe, is about to publish a French rendering of the same work. Vendetta! is to be had in Russian, Italian, and Spanish; and Herr Deubner, of Berlin, is about to produce it in German.

THE thirteenth annual meeting of the Library Association of the United Kingdom will be held at Reading, in the town hall, from September 17 to 20. The last day will be devoted to excursions and other entertainments; and it is proposed to assign one entire day to the subject of public library legislation, the draft bill of Messrs. Fovargue and Ogle being taken as the basis of discussion.

DURING the three last days of next week, Messrs. Sotheby will be engaged in selling the very valuable collection of MSS. and autographs formed by the late F. W. Cosens, F.S.A. Besides letters from Sterne, Scott, Byron, Keats, Coleridge, Lamb, Dickens, &c., the collection is particularly rich in documents of historical importance. Among these are Captain Cook's log of his voyage round the world in the Endeavour (1768-71), which has never been printed in full; three volumes of letters, &c., relating to Sir Michael Stanhope, lieutenant-governor of Hull, temp. Henry VIII.; thirteen portfolios of letters, &c., relating to Sir Thomas Fairfax, the parliamentary general, and other members of his family; and forty-two volumes of transcripts from the Simancas archives, relating to the reigns of Elizabeth and James I., which were specially made for Mr. Cosens by Don Pascual de Gayangos and Don Juan Facundo Riaño.

THE following are the pensions which have been granted on the Civil List for the year ended June 20, 1890, making a total sum of £1200: To Dr. William Huggins, £150; to the widow of the late Major-General Henry Scott, and the widow of the late Rev. Dr. Edwin Hatch, £100 each; to a daughter of the late Martin F. Tupper, a daughter of the late Major-General Sir H. W. Barnard, the widow of the late J. T. Wood (of Ephesus fame), and the widow of the late Judge Mottram, £75 each; to Lady Wilde, £70; to Mr. John Absolon, the Rev. Dr. E. Cobham Brewer, Dr. William Spark, the widow of the late E. L. Blanchard, the widow of a son of Dr. Livingstone, a daughter of the late Richard Shilleto, and the widow of the late Rev. J. G. Wood, £50; to two unmarried sisters of the late Dr. Thomas Maguire, of Trinity College, Dublin, £25 each; and to the four unmarried daughters of the late Rev. M. J. Berkeley (the botanist), £20 each. It will be observed that by far the larger number of pensions this year are in the nature of compassionate grants to the surviving members of the families of deceased men of letters or science.

THE new volume of the "Mermaid Series" is the second that has been devoted to Middleton, edited by Mr. Havelock Ellis. The plays here given are "The Roaring Girl," written by Middleton in conjunction with Dekker; "The Witch," which is of special interest in connexion with the witch scenes in "Macbeth"; "A Fair Quarrel," in which Rowley collaborated with Middleton; "The Mayor of Quevenborough," concerning the authenticity of which the present editor speaks doubtfully; and "The Widow," which modern critics have vindicated for Middleton alone. For frontispiece is given a reproduction of the portrait of Mary Frith, the Roaring Girl, which appeared on the title-page of the first edition of 1611.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

PROF. F. Y. EDGEWORTH has been appointed to the Tooke chair of political economy at King's College, London, vacant by the resignation of Prof. Thorold Rogers; and Mr. David S. Capper has been elected professor of mechanical engineering at the same college.

Dr. ELLIOTT, of Edinburgh, has been appointed to the newly-founded chair of engineering at the University College of South Wales and Monmouthshire, Cardiff; and Dr. Turpin, of Cambridge and London, has been appointed lecturer in chemistry at the same college.

THE following is the programme of lectures at Manchester New College, Oxford, for next term: "The Gospels" and "The Study of Doctrinal Theology," by the principal, the Rev. Dr. James Drummond; "The Old Testament" and "Comparative Religion," by the vice-principal, the Rev. J. Estlin Carpenter; "Mental Philosophy" and "The Philosophy of Religion," by the Rev. C. B. Upton; and "Sociology," by the Rev. P. H. Wicksteed. All lectures are free to the public.

AT the recent Degree Day of Victoria University the vice-chancellor, Principal Rendall, of Liverpool, thus described the progress made by the university and its constituent colleges during the past year:—

"A three-fold scheme for certificates—technical, commercial, and literary—has replaced the narrow project for technical certificates alone, and will be the means of giving university direction and attachment to numerous organisations which have hitherto lacked clearness of aim or recognition of results. The Manchester Chamber of Commerce has entrusted the examinations for its commercial certificate to the university. The local lectures schemes continue to thrive vigorously. In the last three sessions twenty-one courses, with an average attendance of 130—the large majority in or near Manchester—have been delivered under university auspices. The three colleges of the university are taking action, more or less concerted, for the establishment of day training colleges for primary teachers under the provisions of the new Education Code. Thus step by step the university is comprehending her mission and entering upon her heritage. Those who are forwarding the work may feel that impatience for quick returns which comes of convictions confident and energetic, but the observer and the historian will agree that in content and scope Victoria University has advanced with unparalleled rapidity. In all the colleges of the university building is in progress or in contemplation. At University College the Victoria building for the arts department is advancing towards completion; at Yorkshire College funds have been raised for the erection of a medical department and other needed extension; at Owens College further enlargement of the medical school buildings is now under consideration."

On Commencement Day at Harvard the honorary degree of LL.D. was conferred upon Mr. Leslie Stephen, who made the following reference at the Alumni dinner to his former visit to the United States:

"I had a letter to James Russell Lowell, the creator of the immortal Hosea Bigelow, and after I had been with him a week I felt the conviction that I had made a friend for life. That has been more than amply confirmed. I made the acquaintance of Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes, who was then a much older man than I was, though I have been given to understand that I am rapidly overtaking him in that respect. I made friends with his son, now on your supreme judicial bench, then coming home with rebel bullets dropping from every part of his body. I then made the acquaintance of Mr. Norton, who has been the vindicator of the character of one of the greatest Englishmen—Thomas Carlyle. I feel that I am boasting in making these statements, but it is a kind of boast which I hope will be permitted to even to a modest person like myself. There is no university in the world, except my own, where I have made so many, so faithful, and so dear friends as at this."

MR. W. C. MACDONALD, a merchant of Montreal, has given the munificent donation of about 400,000 dollars (£80,000) to McGill College. Part of this is to be devoted to endowing two chairs in the law faculty, and a third for experimental physics; and the remainder is to be applied to the erection of class rooms and laboratories.

NUMBER 38 of Harvard Bibliographical Contributions contains a list of the publications of Harvard University and its officers, together with the principal publications about the university for the twelve months ending September, 1889. We have before expressed the wish that something of the same kind should be compiled for Oxford and Cambridge.

WE have received Number 3 of University Studies, published by the University of Nebraska. It contains: (1) a paper on "The Determination of Specific Heat and of Latent Heat of Vaporisation with the Vapor Calorimeter," by Mr. Harold N. Allen; (2) a statistical inquiry into "The Colour-Vocabulary of Children," by Mr. Harry K. Wolfe; and (3) an historical study of "The Development of the King's Peace and the English Local Peace-Magistracy," by Mr. George E. Howard. This last seems a very thorough piece of work, being based upon the latest authorities, both English and German. We may remark that each paper has an independent pagination at the top, besides a continuous pagination at the bottom—a convenient plan for separate publication.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

"LEAVING HOME."

Mr. La Thangue's Picture in the New Gallery.

SHE dare not look, she has too full a heart,
She cannot wave farewell, she only knows
That down between the ruts with Dobbin goes
The crazy uncompassionate market cart;
But hers is not the only bitter smart,
For little Lucy's grief o'erwhelming grows,
And she who bore for this a mother's throes
Feels better far be childless than so part.
Silent the father stands, but ah the ache!
Old Dobbin drags no heavier load to-day,
The carrier cracks his whip and jerks the rein,
Yet will not speak—what comfort can he say?
And on beside the dreary marshland drain
They go, but leave behind them hearts that break.

H. D. RAWNSLEY.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

A WELL-KNOWN Semitic scholar (whose initials are "Th. N.") has contributed a review of Prof. Margoliouth's recent essays on the re-translation of Ecclesiasticus into Hebrew to the Literarisches Centralblatt for July 12. There is no lack of detail, nor can any just exception be taken to the tone. If "Th. N." is not convinced, it is not for want of a minute examination of the evidence for the new theory. The author has not proved his metre, lax as the rule which he makes for it is; and his own examples are to a great extent opposed to his theory. Nor can "Th. N." believe that for the sake of metre Ben Sira can have used such impossible forms as צָרְפוּ for צָרְפוּ, or מִלְּךָ for מִלְּךָ and, above all, הַשְׁתַּנְּרָה for הַשְׁתַּנְּרָה (if an Aramaic form). The translation, too, has been often made simply in the interests of the theory (for example, in the very first passage quoted, Eccles. xii. 8; see also ii. 5, xxvii. 9, xxxviii. 1, ix. 8, vii. 16, xi. 28, all in the Expositor essays). The reviewer concludes that a restoration of the Hebrew Urtext is, as a whole, not even approximately feasible, and that the critical student of Ecclesiasticus can only on occasional passages expect much help from the projected retranslations. "Th. N.'s" conclusion is thus more definitely unfavourable than that of Prof. Schürer in the Theologische Literaturzeitung a few months since. That careful student of later Jewish and early Christian literature expressed himself with a combined caution and hopefulness which must have gratified Prof. Margoliouth's numerous well-wishers in England; but his excellent little notice, after all, contributed little to the "threshing out" of the subject. We have omitted to notice that "Th. N." admits a certain prejudice against a Hebrew metrical system in the proper sense, similar to that which Arabic, with its abundance of short syllables, naturally enough developed, and against an attempt to overthrow "the perfectly secure results of Old Testament criticism. Can he be blamed for this by anyone who is acquainted with the course of recent study? We understand that a review of Prof. Margoliouth's dissertations will shortly appear in an Anglo-American journal called Hebraica (to the July number of which Prof. Sayce has contributed an article illustrating Gen. xiv. from an Aramaic inscription found lately in Egypt).

WITH the June number, Mr. E. A. Petherick completes the third volume of the Torch, which, while intended primarily for the benefit of the colonies, must commend itself to all book-lovers for the excellence of its classification of current literature and the clearness of its typography. The bibliography of New South Wales is now brought down to 1887. We are promised, in future numbers, a bibliography of voyages of discovery made in Australasia during the sixteenth, seventeenth, and eighteenth centuries.

AN UNKNOWN EDITION OF TYNDALE'S NEW TESTAMENT.

MR. J. R. DORE, of Huddersfield—who last year discovered a portion of a 16mo edition of Coverdale's Bible—was last week fortunate enough to pick up a copy of a hitherto totally unknown edition of Tyndale's New Testament. The authorities at the British Museum, after a thorough investigation of the book, state that "this imperfect copy of an unknown edition of Tyndale's last revision contains some of the identical woodcuts and initial letters used in printing the G.H. edition of 1534-5." Unfortunately, this copy is without titlepage; and any preliminary matter it may have had, together with the first three chapters of S. Matthew's Gospel, is lost. Also, it is still more imperfect at the end, as the Epistles of SS. James and Jude, as well as Revelation, are wanting, the last leaf being folio 328. It is evidently a reprint of the revised translation published by Godfried van der Haghen, which was recognised by John Rogers and all Tyndale's friends as the standard edition. In all cases where it varies from the G.H. the alterations are unintentional and due solely to errors of the press. The type used in the text is small black letter, but the prologues and marginal references in the Epistles are in Gothic type. In the Gospels there are thirty-four lines to a full page, but in most of the Epistles there are thirty-five lines. Several other circumstances concur to indicate that the second half of the book was not set up by the same compositors who were engaged on the first half. The printed matter on a page measures 4½ by 3½ in. It is strange that this Testament, which has passed through many hands, should not long before have been recognised as a copy of a distinct edition.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- DÉROULEDE, Paul. Histoire d'amour. Paris: Calmann Lévy. 3 fr. 50 c.
EYSENHARDT, F. Mittheilungen aus der Stadtbibliothek zu Hamburg. VII. Hamburg: Herold. 2 M. 40 Pf.
GOUNOD, Ch. Le Don Juan de Mozart. Paris: Ollendorff. 3 fr. 50 c.
KIEPERT, H. u. R. KOLDEWEY. Itinerare auf der Insel Lesbos. Berlin: Reimer. 4 M.
MAÎTRES français, les. 1re Série. Le Baron Gros, Prudhon, Delacroix, Decamps. Paris: Lib. de l'Art. 12 fr.
MICHEL, E. Jacob van Ruysdael et les paysagistes de l'école de Harlem. Paris: Lib. de l'Art. 3 fr. 50 c.
MORBIER, E. de. Romanciers allemands contemporains. Paris: Didier. 3 fr. 50 c.
PAUKERT, F. Die Zimmergotik in Deutsch-Tirol. II. Das Etzthal. Leipzig: Seemann. 12 M.
PIERSON, Le général. Stratégie et grande tactique d'après l'expérience des dernières guerres. T. 2. Paris: Berger-Levrault. 15 fr.

HISTORY, LAW, ETC.

- BOCKENHEIMER, K. G. Geschichte der Stadt Mainz während der 2. französischen Herrschaft (1798-1814). Mainz: Kuperberg. 6 M. 50 Pf.
BONNAULT D'HOUE, Le Baron de. Pèlerinage d'un paysan picard à Saint-Jacques de Compostelle au commencement du 18e siècle. Paris: Picard. 12 fr.
CODEX diplomaticus et epistolaris Moraviae. 12. Bd. 1891-1899. Brünn: Winiker. 10 M.
FAZY, H. Les constitutions de la République de Genève. Basel: Georg. 3 fr.
FOURNIER, M. Les statuts et privilèges des universités françaises depuis leur fondation jusqu'en 1789. T. 1. 1re partie. Paris: Larose. 50 fr.
FÜRTH, Fhr. H. A. v. Beiträge u. Material zur Geschichte der Aachener Patrizier-Familien. 1. Bd. Aachen: Cremer. 17 M.
LEHMANN, O. Herzog Georg v. Sachsen im Briefwechsel m. Erasmus v. Rotterdam u. dem Erzbischof Sadolet. Leipzig: Fock. 1 M.
MOLINIER, Aug. Les obituaires français au moyen âge. Paris: Picard. 7 fr.
PREXINGER, H. Das Strafrecht der Schweiz. Berlin: Puttkammer. 12 M.
SCHLUMBERGER, G. Un empereur byzantin au dixième siècle: Nicéphore Phocas. Paris: Firmin-Didot. 90 fr.
WOLFF, G. Das römische Lager zu Kesselstadt bei Hanau. Hanau: König. 4 M. 50 Pf.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- APPEL, H. Die Lehre der Scholastiker von der Synteresis. Rostock: Volkmann. 1 M. 80 Pf.
LORIA, G. Il periodo aureo della geometria greca. Turin: Loescher. 8 fr. 50 c.
STUMPF, C. Tonpsychologie. 2. Bd. Leipzig: Hirzel. 12 M.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

BUGGE, S. Etruskisch u. Armenisch. Sprachvergleichende Forschgn. 1. Reihe. Christiania: Aschehoug. 8 M.
LEPSIUS, C. R. Griechische Marmorstudien. Berlin: Reimer. 6 M. 50 Pf.

CORRESPONDENCE.

"THE ROMAUNT OF THE ROSE."

Cambridge: July 12, 1890.

IN the ACADEMY of July 5, 1890, is the announcement of a really important discovery by Dr. Max Kaluza, with respect to this poem. I do not wish to anticipate his results, but I wish to point out that one of them is quite untenable; and I think he will much strengthen his position by not insisting upon it.

The MS. contains two distinct fragments, viz., fragment A, ll. 1-5813, and fragment B, ll. 5814 to the end. Lindner has shown (Engl. Studien, xi. 163) that these fragments are probably by different hands.

The chief point made by Dr. Kaluza is that fragment A is also by two different hands, and can be clearly cut in two somewhere near l. 1704. This really makes three fragments, which we may call A1, A2, and B, probably by three distinct writers.

His next point is, that all my strongest arguments against Chaucer's having a hand in it are really directed against fragment A2, say ll. 1705-5813. This is the longest of the three, and amounts to more than half the poem, as now extant. This is quite true; the whole of this part abounds in Northernisms, and it would be charitable to suppose than any man who claims this fragment for Chaucer is entirely ignorant of Middle-English in general, and of Chaucer's style in particular. Here we quite agree.

Setting this aside, he claims for Chaucer all the rest. But this is going too fast. Fragment B is nearer to Chaucer than fragment A2; but, on close inspection, it cannot be his. Dr. Kaluza makes a grave mistake in saying that none but Chaucerian rimes occur here. Only the third line of this fragment ends with the pt. t. pl. filie, and the fourth line ends in til. There is no rime here unless we cut down filie to fil; and when we have done this, the resulting fil, as a pt. t. pl., is non-Chaucerian. I am not going to waste words over this. The matter can be tested easily enough. A mere glance at once shows such rimes as accordance, abstinence (5850), where Chaucer would use abstinence; entent, present (5872), where Chaucer would have entent-e; hors riming with wors in 5922, whereas Chaucer has wers or wurs; atte last and agast in 6108, whereas Chaucer has atte last-e; and just below, in 6115, covertilly riming with ipocrisy-e, which is utterly against Chaucer's well-known habit. It is not worth while to go on after that. I merely add that I think I can undertake to prove, to utter demonstration, that Chaucer had no hand in fragment B.

And now we come to Dr. Kaluza's chief point, viz., his fragment A1. One this I congratulate him. One cannot be sure all at once, but I trust he may succeed in claiming this small piece as Chaucer's very own. There are difficulties; and I think it will be a mistake to ignore them, especially as they may turn out to be not insuperable. I see, in this fragment, a very marked superiority to the rest. I never noticed it before, because I was prejudiced against it by linking it with the rest of the same fragment, but I see much to admire now. If there is any Chaucer in the poem at all, it is certainly in lines 1-1704 only, and nowhere else at all. Difficulties as to rimes are: been, wreen, 55 (but wreen may be right); river, neer, 113 (we should expect ny); ferde, herede, 249 (but Chaucer has ferde, herde, and then the rime is perfect, and note ferde, herde at l. 500); faire, haire, 437 (we should expect heer, but note that the F. text has haire); mirour, tressure (miswritten tresour) in 567; shet, pp., met-te, pt. t., in 1341 (a decided difficulty); lyke, syke in l. 1357, where we should expect seke, as in Prol. l. 18; however, Chaucer really does use syke in "Hous of Fame," 1270. These things must be considered, though they are hardly decisive in the negative.

We have to remember that, if this be Chaucer's work, it fell into the hands of a Northerner, who attempted to continue it, and who may have touched it up. Very startling is the Northern bode (I behaved) variant of bud, in l. 791; a manifest patch. In l. 1655, the Northern hand has calmly turned to see into at see! This result is the same, whether Chaucer wrote fragment A1 or not; for this portion is not Northern at all, whoever wrote it.

I think Dr. Kaluza is clearly right in his division. A 1 is not Northern; it has, usually, pure Chaucerian rimes, and shows many of his turns of phrase and peculiarities of rhythmical effect. A 2 is full of northernisms, full of non-Chaucerian rimes, and is often rugged and clumsy; and all this, independently of the style of translation, which also shows a marked difference. The transition from one to another is soon detected. At l. 1705, we get a false rime at once, viz., about-e, swot-e (probably about swoot).

I believe it will appear that fragment A 2 is written artificially; that is, with affectations of the use of the final -e, out of mere imitation, by a man who is not used to it, and therefore makes mistakes. The rime at l. 1790 requires grew, hew; but Chaucer has hew-e; and, sure enough, at l. 1839, we find heue, reue. At l. 1849, we have I, malady-e, a manifest piece of imposture.

Without considering this question as quite settled, we may at least admit that it has entered upon a new and more satisfactory phase. It is much to Dr. Kaluza's credit.

WALTER W. SKEAT.

"COCKNEY."

London: July 12, 1890.

The question as to the meaning of the word "coken-ay," and the train of thought by which it came to signify a darling or over-indulged child, has hardly been settled to the general satisfaction by the correspondence on the subject which has lately taken place in the ACADEMY.

Dr. Murray considers the coken of coken-ay as representing the genitive plural of "cock," making the word to signify cocks' egg; and finding it in some quarters to signify a small or misshapen egg—he might have added (as the French œuf de coq), an abortive egg without a yolk—he thinks it is not improbable that this "may have been actually the original sense in which 'cocks' egg' was used in the M.E. form, coken-ay." Now, in the first place, if a person wished to express the notion of an egg laid by a cock he would undoubtedly call it a cock's egg, and not a cocks' egg, just as in French the expression is œuf de coq, and not œuf de coqs. But without laying stress on this objection, the idea of anything abortive or misshapen is so repulsive to the general sentiment, and an abortive egg without a yolk is so utterly worthless, that it is hard to believe it could ever have been taken as a type of an object of special affection. If these misshapen or abortive eggs had been what was intended by Florio's "cockaneggs," as Dr. Murray supposes may have been the case, there would have been no analogy with the Italian cacherelli, the cackling or clucking of hens, and thence eggs in general, as it was explained by Florio. But by the way in which he introduces the word, "or as we say 'cockaneggs,'" he plainly implies not only that "cockaneggs" was a familiar expression signifying eggs in general, but that it came by that meaning in a similar way to that in which cacherelli, signifying the clucking of a hen, is applied to the egg which the clucking announced. Thus, it would seem that Florio understood "cockaneggs" as if it carried in itself a reference to the idea of clucking, making it, in his apprehension, equivalent to a form such as "cluck-egg," analogous to "baa-lamb" or "moo-cow." But if Florio's "cockanegg" is to be understood as a familiar and probably a nursery expression for an egg in general, we ought to attribute the same meaning to the M.E. cokenay (practically identical with "cockanegg") before it came to be used in the sense of a darling. And it is certain that this signification is all that is required in the passage from Heywood cited by Prof. Cook, "men say that he that cometh every day shall have a cockenaie. . . . But I gat not so much. . . . as a good hens fether or a poore egg shell." Nor can I accept Prof. Child's explanation of the word as an egg in the shell. Inasmuch as an egg never appears out of the shell, except in the shape of a poached egg, there could be no occasion to speak of an egg in general as an egg in the shell; and in fact no one ever heard of such an expression in actual use.

Now the designation of an egg, especially in nursery language, in a wide range of languages, is taken from the cackling of fowls, represented by the syllables cock, cack, gack, and the like. We have already seen that the Italian cacherelli signifies in the first instance the cackling of fowls, and, in the next place, eggs. The Swabian gacken, to cluck as a hen, gives rise in nursery language to gackele, an egg, explaining the Swiss gaggi of the same meaning, to which our own country affords a parallel in the Craven goggy, an egg. In South Wales one says, "If you will be a good child you shall have a goggy for your tea," meaning an egg. In like manner we have Basque kokoratz, the clucking of a hen, koko (in nursery language), an egg; Magyar kukoritni, to crow, kuko (nursery), an egg; Italian coccolare, to cluck, cocco, cucco (nursery), an egg. In French nurseries also coco has the same acceptation. With these analogies before us we shall have little difficulty in believing that the first syllable in cokenay, cockanegg really represents the clucking of a hen, making the words equivalent to "cluck-egg." The transition in meaning from an egg to a darling would not be obvious were it not that in French mon œuf and mon coco are both used as terms of endearment. Hence, when once the sense of cokenay has been established as signifying a mere egg, we pass without difficulty to the sense of a darling, an over-indulged child, and finally of an effeminate or unwarlike person, as the inhabitants of cities were supposed to be.

H. WEDGWOOD.

A BOGUS OLD-ENGLISH WORD.

Ghent, Belgium: July 7, 1890.

I am not aware that it has ever been attempted to explain No. 257 of the Leiden Glossary, in Dr. Sweet's edition, p. 117. Examination of the MS., which I have had here at my disposal for a couple of weeks, has given me the clue to the solution of this mysterious form.

The two lines, in the latter of which the form neos occurs, run as follows (fo. 36, 2° a):

"Citra; bihina; Suricus; brooc; Extores; extra Classica; tuba; Opere prcium; necessarium neos."

It will be seen at once that the pretended Old-English **neos* is in reality part of a Latin word extraneos, whose lemma is—in a slightly different form—explained on fo. 20, 2° a, and 32, 7° b of the same MS. (Extorris; vi expulsus quasi exterris, and Extorres; exules de patria). The editor's transcript must have yielded t (= uel) instead of l = the sign of reference.

The results of my collation of the Leiden Codex will be published shortly in an early number of the Moyen Age (Paris: Bouillon).

H. LOGEMAN.

"THE BONDMAN."

Hawthorne, Keswick: July 14, 1890.

The burden of Mr. Stefánsson's letter is very simple: that The Bondman ought to be called a romance, not a Saga, because a Saga is an historical novel. My reply is equally simple: a Saga is not necessarily an historical novel. The Sagas of old belong to at least three classes: first, those that are, so far as we know, pure histories; second, those that are founded on tradition, often of the vaguest; and, third, those that seem to live in the region of pure romance. There is only one word that describes the entire body of Saga literature, the word "stories." A Saga is simply a story; and The Bondman is called a Saga merely because it follows the epic, not the dramatic, method of narration.

As for Mr. Stefánsson's detailed criticisms, some of them are right (such as that about the Danish spelling of proper names), and some are wrong (such as that of the carts in Iceland, the punishment of the hand, the badge of iron-collar and bell); but all of them are completely outside the proper attitude to adopt towards a work of pure fiction. Then Mr. Stefánsson's references to the topsy-turvydom of my chronology are a little inappropriate when compared with the explicit confessions of my preface.

In short, it matters not to me whether Icelanders call The Bondman a Saga or a romance, if they will only honour me by reading it in the open-hearted spirit and with the free mind in which they are content to read of Grettir and his fights with the Troll. I can ask no more and no better than that from Mr. Stefánsson or any of his compatriots.

HALL CAINE.

FITZGERALD'S "OMAR KHAYYAM."

Howth, Dublin: July 14, 1890.

The Quaritch edition of Fitzgerald's "Omar" has long been out of print, and is, of course, "practically unobtainable"; but there is an edition (obtainable for a dollar and a half) published by Messrs. Houghton, Mifflin, & Co., of Boston, U.S., which quite deserved notice by the writer of the note in the ACADEMY of last week. It is bound in blue boards backed with parchment and gold, contains a biographical preface, a pretty sketch and description of Omar's grave by William Simpson, the first and fourth edition of the Rubáiyát, notes referring to the Nicolas and Whinfield versions, and other interesting matter. The print and paper are good. There is also (published by the same house) the smaller "red-line" edition obtainable for a dollar. One or other of these editions is in the hands of his many Dublin admirers.

CHARLES WEEKES.

[We fear that the importation of these editions is an infringement of copyright. The American edition of Fitzgerald's "Collected Works" (referred to in the ACADEMY of last week) contains everything mentioned by our correspondent. It also was published by Messrs. Houghton, Mifflin, & Co., but bears no editor's name.—ED. ACADEMY.]

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

SATURDAY, July 26, 3.45 p.m. Botanic: General Fortnightly Meeting.

SCIENCE.

SAPPHO AND OVID.

Quæstiones Sapphicæ. By John Luniak, Phil. Mag. (Kazan, Russia.)

THIS is a treatise of 114 pages written in Latin, and a model of what such a monograph should be. It has two main divisions—Part I. is devoted to the investigation of the sources from which Ovid obtained the material of his celebrated epistle, "Sappho to Phaon"; Part II. is entitled "Sapphus notitiæ complendæ corrigendæque experimentum"; and the work concludes with a "Corollarium criticum atque exegeticum ad Ovidianum Sapphus epistulam."

In 1885 Prof. De Vries published the most complete and valuable critical edition of this epistle, and conclusively showed that it was the work of Ovid, and not an imitation of his style by a later hand. The chief object of the present treatise is an endeavour to prove that Ovid was in possession of facts regarding the life of Sappho, as well as of verses of her own, which have not otherwise come down to us; and that he did not rely so much upon rumours and comedies and his own imagination as Welcker and his successors have been satisfied that he must have done. Whether Prof. Luniak (to spell his name as it appears upon his title-page) has succeeded in maintaining his thesis or not, his work is a monument of erudition and unbiassed criticism. He commences by showing that, even before the fanaticism of the early Christians, much of the melic poetry of Greece was allowed to be lost in consequence of the Aeolic dialect being unfamiliar, alike in Athens and in Rome—a fact to which he also attributes our scanty knowledge of the lives of most melic poets. He proceeds to wonder why Bergk only twice quotes passages in Ovid's epistle which are apparently founded upon extant verses of Sappho, whereas he himself is able to find so many instances of parallelism. In proof of his point, he adduces seventeen places in Ovid's poem which seem inspired by still existing fragments of Sappho. Three more he shows that we have evidence of from the prose writers who have described the themes of some of her poems. The use of such words as barbitos and chelys by Ovid he also presses into his service, together with quite an array of analogous epithets and expressions. The fact of a number of Sappho's verses having been quoted by ancient authors without mentioning her name shows him how widely known her writings were; and he even attempts to prove, from Ovid's words, that some of Bergk's fragmenta adespota were hers; indeed, the words on the Fayum papyrus, of which the present writer gives an autotype facsimile in the second edition of his Sappho, appear to have been familiar to Ovid—an unexpected evidence of their genuineness. The absurd riddle attributed to Sappho by Antiphanes, as presented by Athenæus, is proposed as perhaps the origin of Ovid's inspiration to write his epistle. Headings from old MSS. are adduced to show that perhaps the whole epistle was translated by Ovid from a then extant Greek source; and it is actually surmised that the existence of such a letter may have induced Ovid to imagine the whole of his other Heroic Epistles! Some examples are further given to demonstrate Ovid's familiarity with Greek epigrams and lyric poetry in general.

In his second part Prof. Luniak investigates the sources other than Sappho's poems from which Ovid may have obtained some of his details of her life. He does not accept Welcker's theory that most of the stories against Sappho's character were taken from the representation of the Attic comedians. His main argument is that too little of their comedies remains to substantiate the theory. He thinks that the fragments of Sappho preserved by Maximus Tyrius in the second century, A.D., go to prove that there were better sources then extant, and even so late as Suidas's time, for the compilation of her biography. But there lurks a fallacy in the presumption that, because Ovid, Maximus Tyrius, and Suidas agree in certain statements, these must have had a common origin; indeed, the argument results in a guess that the facts of her life were taken by each author from a compilation of them written by some Alexandrian grammarian, "perhaps Callimachus." There is much more in Prof. Luniak's statement that, in no fragment which has come down to us from the Attic comedies, is any mention made of the Lesbian vice. An interesting point is also discussed regarding the Leucadia of Menander, which the Russian scholar shows very plausibly may have had no reference to Sappho at all, but probably regarded a man only, upon which he founds an argument that even the story of the Leucadian leap was not taken by Ovid from a Greek play. A clear diagram, on p. 61, shows genetically the difference between the two interpretations of the Sapphic question: in one, Sappho's own poems are represented as the origin of the stories of the comedians, from which Ovid's details might have been taken; in the other, Sappho is given as the common source of both. Only we do not see where the Callimachus hypothesis comes in. Nevertheless, the Leucadian leap is admirably explained, as well as the origin of the fable that there were two Sapphos.

In the second part of the essay the author takes heart from his hypothesis, regarded as proved, that Ovid's epistle was founded upon Sappho's actual writings, and he proceeds to interpret the legends of her life upon that basis. By analogy, rather than by proof, he maintains that Phaon and Sappho were lovers, and that Phaon was no fictitious personage. The now illegible Parian inscription is ingeniously impressed into his service, and its difficulties are explained away—although, to be fair, its difficulties are not ignored. Prof. Luniak does not, however, think that fr. 6 is proof that Sappho ever visited Cyprus or Sicily, notwithstanding Ovid's line,

"In quoque, quæ montes celebras, Erycina, Sicanos."

He considers that the report of Sappho's flight to the latter island squares better with the possibility of Phaon's having fled thither, driven away by seditions in their native island; and that fr. 75 refers to her unwillingness to rejoin him after many years of separation.

Koch's myth that Phaon meant the sun (Phaëthon) and Sappho (from σαφής) the moon, in explanation of the leap from Leucas, is next dealt with; as well as the legend that Phaon may have been merely a pet name derived from ταῖς, as if Sappho called her lover, whoever he was, a "peacock," from his beauty and his pride. But to derive the name of Sappho from any word signifying wisdom or brilliancy or a clear voice, is rather like putting the cart before the horse. Cercolas, her reputed husband's name, Prof. Luniak derives from κρέκειν and λαός, "he who played and sang to the people," and that of her daughter, Cleïs, also from her singing. From an original reading of a passage quoted by Athenæus from Timocles, he goes so far as to aver that the name of Sappho's husband, Cercolas (for which he thinks the comic poet may have intentionally put Misgolas), was genuine, and no fiction of the comedians. And he finds plausibility in Suidas's assertion that Cercolas came from Andros in a supposition that some scribe wrote Andros for Antandros, an Aeolic city on the mainland which was closely connected with the island of Lesbos, if not founded by the Lesbians. Columbanus Abbas called Sappho "the seer of the Trojan race." He concludes that Sappho was a widow of mature age when she became enamoured of Phaon, because she confesses that she had a daughter, Cleïs, and yet Ovid makes her say to Phaon:—

"Nihil de te mecum est."

Anactoria, he considers, took her name from the Milesian city, Ἀνακτορίη; but Anagora was her real name, only Anactoria was more suitable to Ovid's dactylic measure. Suidas restored the name by which she was actually known to Sappho, although Maximus Tyrius quoted it as Anactoria. One is tempted to ask how Callimachus put it. Cydno, one of Sappho's maidens named by Ovid, he shows, despite the various readings cited by Vries, was really Cydro, from κυδρός (illustrious). The three epigrams attributed to the poetess he rejects as fictitious, because Ovid makes her say she could not write Phaon an elegy—

"lyricis sim magis apta modis."

In the critical "Corollarium" with which the work concludes, several points are taken up for special consideration. The first note is respecting the meaning, and the reading, of furialis Erichtho. For the proper name he would substitute Erinnis, which in fact some MSS. give; and, if that be the true reading, furialis certainly becomes an apposite epithet. His explanation of Ovid's lines, where two successive pentameters each end with the words, nominis ipsa fero, is less satisfactory. But the remaining difficulties are discussed with such erudition and critical acumen that, even where we may be inclined to differ from the author, we cannot help feeling that it would be a very difficult matter to convince him that there might be reason for his conclusions to require reconsideration.

H. T. WHARTON.

OLD SAXON TEXTS.

DR. J. H. GALLÉE, professor of Teutonic Languages in the university of Utrecht, who will be best known to some in this country by his contributions to the Encyclopædia Britannica, has issued the prospectus of a new critical edition of all the documents that exist in the Low-German dialect known as Old Saxon. The most important of these—the great poem of the “Heliand,” or the History of our Lord, written in alliterative verse circa 830—was admirably edited from the Munich and Cottonian MSS. by Prof. Sievers, of Halle, in 1878; but since that time a third fragmentary MS. has been discovered by Prof. H. Lambel. Of the minor Old Saxon documents, the standard edition is that of Dr. M. Heyne (second edition, Paderborn, 1877); but this, however excellent for its date, is hardly adequate to modern requirements.

Prof. Gallée, in the course of his investigations into Old Saxon Grammar, has collated afresh all the known MSS., and has been fortunate enough to discover some others hitherto unknown. He proposes to give a faithful reprint of all, whether before published or not, together with a phototype facsimile of every one of them. Each facsimile will be preceded by a minute description of the MS., information as to its history and palaeographic peculiarities, and discussion of its dialect. An introductory essay will be devoted to the early condition of the church in Saxon countries, and to the state of literature down to the eleventh century.

The work will be published, in large folio, by Mr. E. J. Brill, of Leiden, at the subscription price of £1 15s. The text will be printed both in English and in German, provided that a sufficient number of subscribers is found for each language. The number of copies struck off will also depend upon the number of subscribers, who should send in their names before August 30, after which date the price will be raised.

SCIENCE NOTES.

MR. THOMAS BRYANT has been elected president of the Royal College of Surgeons for the ensuing year, in succession to Mr. Jonathan Hutchinson; and Mr. Thomas Smith and Sir William McCormac have been elected vice-presidents.

MR. G. CLARIDGE DRUCE, author of The Flora of Oxfordshire (1886), is now well advanced with a companion volume on Berkshire, which will also give all available information about the distribution of plants in the counties immediately adjoining. In order to make the work as complete as possible, Mr. Druce will greatly value any notes on plant occurrence that may be sent to him, at 118, High Street, Oxford.

AT the recent sale of the library of the late William Hartree, of Lewisham, a set of Gould's “Birds” fetched the following prices: Europe, £80; Australia, with Supplement, £210; Asia, with Handbook, £96; Humming-Birds, £47; Great Britain, £59; New Guinea, £40.

WE have received a copy of the annual address delivered last February by the president of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, Colonel J. Waterhouse, assistant surveyor-general of India. It forms a stout pamphlet of 86 pages, in which the progress of philology, literature, and science relating to India during the past year is summarily reviewed. To condense still further such a summary review is impossible; but we may mention that its most notable feature is the prominent place given to physical science. It is remarked that three Bengali students have passed the M.A. examination in zoology, and one in geology; and that more attention generally is being paid to scientific studies by the natives. We may add that one of the Government of India scholars from Madras, Mr. C. Krishnan, obtained a first class in the science tripos at Cambridge last month.

MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES.

BRITISH SCHOOL AT ATHENS.—(Annual Meeting, Wednesday, July 2.)

F. C. PENROSE, Esq., in the chair.—There were present Sir Charles Newton, Sir Henry Layard, Sir G. F. Bowen, the Provost of Oriel, Prof. Jebb, the Bishop of Southwell, Mr. G. A. Macmillan, Mr. Walter Leaf, Mr. Watkiss Lloyd, Mr. Theodore Bent, Dr. W. C. Perry, Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Gardner, Mr. A. S. Murray, Mr. Louis Dyer, Mr. Talfourd Ely, and Mr. H. G. Dakyns.—Mr. G. A. Macmillan, the hon. secretary, read the report, from which it appeared that the session now ended had been the most successful that the School had yet held; twelve new students had been admitted; important excavations had been begun upon the site of Salamis, and valuable contributions to our knowledge both of ancient art and of ancient life might confidently be expected. The school had also undertaken, by arrangement with the Greek Government, excavations on the site of Megalopolis. Mr. Schultz and Mr. Barnsley had continued during the past session their previous labours on Byzantine architecture. Dr. E. Freshfield had liberally subscribed to the expenses. There still remained the cost of publication to be met by subscription, and the committee commended this undertaking to the support of all friends of the School. A photographic apparatus had been presented by a member of the committee, and had already proved of great practical utility. Both by gift and purchase considerable additions had been made during the session to the library of the school. Dr. Schliemann had given a complete set of his works; Mr. W. W. Fowler, Sub-Rector of Lincoln College, Oxford, gave the sum of £29, being the profit of the first edition of his Tales of the Birds, which enabled the committee to purchase a set of the Archæologische Zeitung; Mr. E. D. A. Morshead, copies of Mykenische Thongefässe, by Furtwängler and Loeschke, and Die Funde aus Olympia; and the council of the Royal Institute of British Architects, five volumes of their Transactions, together with a selection of papers on Greek architecture and archaeology. Other books had been presented by the delegates of the Clarendon Press, Messrs. Macmillan, and others. Last year a fund was raised for the purpose of presenting Sir C. Newton with a testimonial in recognition of his eminent services to classical archaeology. In pursuance of this object a bust was placed in the British Museum. The balance of the fund, amounting to upwards of £400, was, at his particular request, placed at the disposal of the managing committee of the School at Athens. The committee decided to expend part of this sum upon the purchase of a complete set of the Annali e Monumenti of the German Institute at Rome, to be inscribed with Sir Charles Newton's name. The rest of the money had been set aside as a Newton Fund, from which grants might be made for purposes of research. As to the financial condition of the School, if its present income of £440 were absolutely assured, it might at least hold its own, though under ordinary circumstances that sum would hardly do more than provide the salary of a competent director. But when the income was at once inadequate and precarious, the case was indeed serious. Was it too much to hope that, in so wealthy a country as ours, means might yet be found to place so promising an undertaking beyond the risk of premature collapse? If only by endowment or by annual subscriptions a permanent income of £600 or £700 a year could be assured, no one need doubt that the British School at Athens would amply justify its foundation, and would help successive generations of British scholars to play their part in adding year by year to our knowledge and appreciation of the art, the thought, and the life of Greece. Within the last few days the School has lost one of its best friends by the unexpected death of the Earl of Carnarvon. The committee could not allow the event to pass without an expression of most sincere regret. Lord Carnarvon had on two occasions presided at the annual meeting, and had throughout shown the warmest interest in the welfare of the School. His advice had been sought more than once on questions of policy where his experience was of the utmost value, and it was never sought in vain.—The chairman was sure that all present would sincerely join in the expressions of regret at the death of Lord Carnarvon, who had always taken so deep an interest in their work, as, indeed, in all subjects of classical study. He congratulated the School on the increased success which had attended its operations during the past year. He moved the adoption of the report. The Bishop of Southwell, in seconding the motion, said that he had returned from a recent visit to Greece, and had to regret that he was unable to accompany Dr. Schliemann to Megalopolis. Sir C. T. Newton moved, and Sir George Bowen seconded, the appointment of the officers of the society, and the latter expressed his disagreement on one point from Mr. Gardner—he was strongly in favour of pronouncing ancient Greek in the manner of the modern Greeks. The director (Mr. E. A. Gardner) then read his annual report, in which he said that the British School was twice as numerous as any of the other foreign schools at Athens. For the first time they had attacked the soil of Greece itself, and had begun operations at Megalopolis, one of the centres of civilisation in ancient Greece. A system of co-operation and interchange of views was carried on with the other Schools, whose members were free to attend their lectures. The attendance at the public meetings varied from fifty to thirty; and careful examination of the earlier vases, inscriptions, and remnants of Greek sculpture had been carried out. Papers on different questions of Greek archaeology had been read, which would be published in the Journal of Hellenic Studies. Mr. Gardner then gave a detailed statement of the work carried on by the kind permission of Mr. Kavvadios at Megalopolis, and of the work carried on by Mr. Loring, Mr. Bickford Smith, Mr. Schultz, Mr. Barnsley, and other gentlemen connected with the School.—Mr. Tubbs read his account of the work of the Cyprus Exploration Fund during the past year on sites which he described as being practically untouched. Some statues of great interest, including statues of Pluto with the triple-headed Cerberus, Athene, and others, had been discovered.—Mr. Loring then read his report of the labours undertaken at Megalopolis. Although no great works of art had been discovered, the excavation of one of the most interesting theatres in Greece redeemed their labours from failure.

FINE ART.

Historical Scarabs: a Series of Drawings from the Principal Collections. By W. M. Flinders Petrie. (David Nutt.)

MANKIND—civilised mankind, of course—may be roughly divided into those who care for scarabs and those who do not. The former are a select minority; the latter are dwellers in outer darkness, and so ignorant that they are even ignorant of their ignorance. Not for them, but for the children of light, is Mr. Petrie's new and delightful little volume—a volume of only sixty-eight pages; so small that it may quite literally be carried in one's pocket without inconvenience, yet containing the portraits of no less than 2,220 historical scarabs, admirably drawn in facsimile by Mr. Petrie's faithful and practised hand. I say “portraits” advisedly; for scarabs, like human beings, have their distinctive types, and vary in what may be called their personal appearance, from age to age, from generation to generation. The men and women of the Holbein school, for instance, are not more unlike the men and women of the Lely school than the scarabs of the XIIIth and XIVth Egyptian Dynasties are unlike those of the XIXth and XXth. "To the outsider," as Mr. Petrie very truly says in his brief introduction, "probably all styles look alike, as foreigners do to a stranger; but to an accustomed eye the specialities of each dynasty, and even of separate reigns, are very clear." These specialities are various. Materials, glazes, colours, sizes, subjects, treatment, differ with the tastes and methods of the time; and all these factors have to be taken into the account when it is a question of either classifying a collection or determining the age of a specimen. Even royal scarabs are not necessarily dated to the reign of the king with whose name and titles they are engraved. There were such things as re-issues; and without some knowledge of the phases of the scarab-maker's art from the IIIrd to the XXXth Dynasty, it is impossible to distinguish between a contemporary example and one of these later reproductions.

Scarab art, like all the arts of ancient Egypt, had its decadences and renaissances. It was at its best under the Pharaohs of the XVIIIth Dynasty; but it betrays no sign of archaism when we first make its acquaintance in the time of the very ancient kings of the IIIrd and IVth Dynasties. The scarabs of that remote period are actually better cut, made of finer pottery, and coated with a more imperishable glaze, than those of many a more recent epoch. Scarabs older than the time of Nebka, Nebkara, and Neferkara, the predecessors of Khufu and his dynasty, may yet await the explorer; but we look meanwhile in vain for examples of the infancy of scarab art. At the same time, no art was more fluctuating. The scarabs of Khufu, of which Mr. Petrie gives eight examples, show a greater firmness and amplitude of style than those of the IIIrd Dynasty kings; while the scarabs of Khafra, his immediate successor, are inferior as regards both glaze and execution. With the VIth Dynasty there comes an extraordinary change of style, beginning with Pepi Neferkara, sixth king of that line. This change is apparently an archaistic revival of some very early school of which we at present know nothing. The cutting is coarse; the hieroglyphs are rude, yet feeble; the style is intentionally barbaric. "Se Ra" (son of Ra), as a royal title, now makes its first appearance in scarab art; and the scroll, of which only two previous examples are noted, begins to assume importance as a border pattern. It is confined, however, to the sides, dividing the field of the scarab into three parts, the centre division containing the name and titles of the king. It is not till the time of the XIIth Dynasty that we find the scroll carried round as a continuous ornament.

The archaism of the VIth Dynasty becomes yet more pronounced from the VIIth to the Xth Dynasties, when the degradation of the hieroglyphic forms is greater than at any subsequent time. To this archaic period, which extends over six dynasties in all, belongs a class of scarabs peculiarly fascinating to collectors, namely, "private scarabs" inscribed with the names and offices of private individuals. Of these,

Mr. Petrie gives about one hundred and twenty interesting examples.

Something of the broader style of the Khufu school re-appears under the earlier Pharaohs of the XIIth Dynasty, speedily followed, however, by a reversion to the archaic fashion, which continues in favour with more or less modification till the beginning of the XVIIIth Dynasty. With the advent of this great line of kings, scarab-cutting rises suddenly to the level of a fine art. Figure-subjects abound; and inscriptions, instead of containing only names and titles, record important historical events. The former series may be likened to gems, and the latter to medals. The king as a human-headed sphinx, now couchant, now passant, now trampling on a prostrate Asiatic; the king as a bull, typifying strength and valour; the king seated in the bark of Ra; the king crowned, sceptred and enthroned; the king on foot, grasping an enemy by the hair and about to deal the death-blow with his scimitar; the king in his chariot, driving over the fallen foe; the king as a mighty hunter, pursuing the antelope with bended bow or holding up the struggling lion by the tail—these, and such as these, are the favourite subjects of scarab art in the time of the third Thothmes, and of the second and third Amenhotep. Many of the specimens given by Mr. Petrie (as, for instance, Nos. 816, 1069, 1119 and 1211) are models of fine cutting and spirited design, while some are as remarkable for historical interest as for beauty of workmanship. Such is No. 1206 (p. 38), representing a couchant and beardless sphinx protecting the cartouche of Amenhotep III., and watched over by a winged serpent. Pre-eminent for the delicacy with which the tiny profile of the sphinx is engraved, this striking head is also, quite undoubtedly, a portrait of Queen Hatasu, the profile being identical in outline with the profile sculptured on the obelisks of Hatasu at Karnak.* Scarcely less interesting, though vastly inferior in point of art, is No. 1331, in which Khu-en-Aten, with his hatchet face and hideous physique, is shown squatting under the rays of the sun-disk. Two interesting scarabs (Nos. 819 and 820) represent Amenhotep I. and his fighting lion—a subject which I do not remember to have seen before. In the former, he is about to release the beast, which strains at the collar, in face of a kneeling suppliant. In the latter, king and lion together rush fiercely on the foe. The execution of both is indifferent, but the action in No. 820 is remarkably vigorous.

It is to be regretted that Mr. Petrie should have excluded from his pages the series of three large scarabs issued by Amenhotep III., one recording the opening of an artificial lake; another commemorative of a hunting expedition to Mesopotamia, where the king with his own hand slew "110 great lions"; and a third recording his marriage with Queen Tii. These important scarabs are more strictly historical than some hundreds figured in Mr. Petrie's selection. To this reign belong the yellow, violet, red, chocolate, and other brilliantly coloured glazes which are found on the scarabs of no other period, and of which, by the way, there are some remarkable examples in the Abbott collection, now the property of the New York Historical Society. One large scarab (inscribed, if I remember rightly, with the marriage text) struck me as unique, the glaze being of the peculiar and brilliant blue of the corn-flower, and the hieroglyphs in white.

* See the series of historical heads in Rossellini, Monumenti Storici.

From the time of the XVIIIth Dynasty, scarab art enters upon its long decadence, and finally expires with the last Pharaoh of the last native dynasty. This decadence was not, of course, unbroken by occasional revivals. Good work (notwithstanding Mr. Petrie's inveterate contempt for all that belongs to the Ramesside period) was done under the XIXth and XXth Dynasties, as may be seen from Nos. 1576, 1524, 1529, 1623, and 1647 of his own facsimiles; and some well-cut and well-designed examples are given of the XXIInd and XXVth Dynasties. A few more delicately executed specimens of the Osorkon time were found during M. Naville's recent explorations at Tell Basta.

Mr. Petrie's wide experience as a collector and explorer enables him to put many new truths at the service of those who have not enjoyed the same opportunities.

"It is not usually known," he says, "that all the brown scarabs (which are a majority) have originally been green-glazed; while all the white ones, excepting possibly some of Amenhotep III., have been originally blue. There are also the white and grey ones without any glaze remaining, which have been either blue or green. The evidences for these transformations are innumerable in the half-way stages, not only on scarabs, but also on ushabtis" (p. 9).

That the cowroid-shaped amulets with a rope-border decoration on the back "certainly belong to the Hyksos period, and can be fixed to any other but rarely," is so important a piece of information that one would like to know by what steps Mr. Petrie has arrived at this conclusion. He says, also, that he has been "assured that all the scroll-border scarabs come from Abydos." This is extremely curious, if true, seeing that these little objects form almost the only continuous monumental links between the VIth and XIth Dynasties. It is characteristic of Mr. Petrie's conscientious method that he positively affirms only those results which he has worked out for himself, and that he gives second-hand information for what it may be worth. To him is due the discovery of "double-reading" scarabs; that is to say, of scarabs inscribed with hieroglyphic anagrams composed of two names having one or more signs in common. The solar names of Seti I. and Rameses II.—Ra-men-ma and Ra-user-ma—have the first and last syllables in common, and can be read interchangeably if the men and the user are both present. Such scarabs, because they contain a superfluous hieroglyph either way, were a standing puzzle till Mr. Petrie solved their mystery. Of these, and of the re-issues of scarabs inscribed with the names of earlier kings but produced under later reigns, Mr. Petrie gives some useful examples.

I have said enough to show that Historical Scarabs is invaluable as a standard of comparison, and as a guide to the study of a very fascinating branch of Egyptian archaeology. A more welcome little vade mecum for the use of collectors and travellers cannot well be imagined; and one has but to note the confusion which reigns in the scarab-cases of most provincial museums at home and abroad to estimate its value to the whole race of curators. Some may be puzzled, perhaps, by Mr. Petrie's rigid adherence to Egyptian etymology, and will with difficulty recognise Psammetichus in Psemthek, Apries in Haa-abra, &c., &c. It might be well, therefore, in future editions to give a table of royal names with their Greek equivalents. Against such innovations as Shepseskaf and Shepseskara I must be forgiven for raising a meek protest. That the hieroglyph which stands for as in early Egyptian was employed for shep (not sheps) in Roman times is universally admitted; but, as Mr. Le Page Renouf has pointed out, this modern value should be adopted only in the reading of texts which date from the period to which it belongs. To employ it in the transliteration of early proper names, such as Aseskaf, Aseskara, and Hatasu, is an anachronism. I would also suggest that, to be strictly consistent, a purist should surely render Thothmes, not by Tahutmes, but by Tahutimes.

It is impossible to say too much in praise of the exquisite skill with which Mr. Petrie has drawn these 2220 scarabs, reproducing every beauty, every blemish, and even every fracture as it stands. Photography could not render them more faithfully. Each is given of exactly the size of the original, and to each is appended a brief indication of its material and colour. It is not too much to say that a tyro may learn as much from Historical Scarabs as from a direct study of all the principal collections; while to the connoisseur of scarab art, an hour spent in turning over the leaves of this little volume gives almost as much pleasure as an hour with the originals.

It is unfortunate that Mr. Petrie's careful chronological arrangement, so invaluable in a work of reference, should have been marred by the carelessness of his binder, who appears to have misplaced two large folding sheets, representing nine pages of the book and some 386 scarabs, throughout the entire edition.

AMELIA B. EDWARDS.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

MR. RUDOLPH LEHMANN has presented his fine portrait of Robert Browning, painted in 1870, to the National Portrait Gallery.

THE Queen has given permission to Mr. Macbeth Raeburn to etch, for the Fine Art Society, Prof. Angeli's portrait of Mr. Stanley, the only one for which he has given sittings since his return from Africa.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY will sell on Monday and Tuesday of next week a valuable collection of coins, &c., described as "the property of a gentleman giving up collecting." They include a series of milled English silver coins, from Charles II. to Victoria; patterns in gold and silver of George III., William IV., and Victoria; and patterns and proofs of British and colonial copper currencies. At the end of the catalogue is an extensive collection of numismatic books.

ENCOURAGED by the success of the exhibition held in May last, the Armourers' and Braziers' Company propose holding a second exhibition upon similar lines in May, 1891. Particulars will be sent on application to the clerk of the Company, accompanied by an addressed envelope.

AN Order in Council, dated June 30, 1890, has been issued prescribing that the following monuments in Ireland shall be deemed to be ancient monuments to which the Ancient Monuments Protection Act, 1882, applies:—(1) Cahernamactierech and Bee Hive Structures on the Promontory of Dingle, Drumquin and Ballinroher, County Kerry; (2) Round Tower, Lusk, Swords, County Dublin; (3) Round Tower, Kells, County Meath; (4) Stone Cashel with Galleries, Cashelmore, County Sligo; (5) Stone Circles and Pillar Stones, Enniskillen, County Fermanagh; (6) Round Tower of Tulloheran, County Kilkenny; (7) Round Tower of Rathmichael, Church and Stone Cross, County Dublin.

M. RAVAISSON has been chosen by the Académie des Inscriptions to represent that body at the annual meeting of the full Institut in October, when he will read a portion of his paper on "The Venus of Milo." In this paper M. Ravaissou first establishes that the statue was originally found in the same fragmentary condition, without arms, in which it was when brought to the Louvre; and then proceeds to suggest a new restoration of the attitude.

IN the course of his recent excavations in the Troad, Dr. Schliemann discovered the ruins of a theatre, capable of holding about two hundred persons, which is proved by an inscription to have been constructed in the time of Tiberius. Two marble statues, representing goddesses, were also found.

AT the recent sale of the Sabatier collection at Paris, some of the most valuable of the Egyptian antiquities were purchased for the Royal Museum of Copenhagen. Among these was a statue of Anubis, of black basalt, dating from the reign of Amenophis III. of the XVIIIth Dynasty, which cost 13,650 frs. (£546); and a specially fine group of a mother and son, of a comparatively late date, which cost 17,325 frs. (£693). The Louvre made no purchases at the sale.

THE STAGE.

STAGE NOTES.

OF the appearance of Miss Rehan in "As You Like It"—the only theatrical event of importance still remaining to engage the playgoer—we shall be able to give some brief account next week. To-day let us survey the position of the theatre at the end of a season more remarkable for excellent performances than for memorable plays. The St. James's, which re-opened but a week or so ago under the control of Mr. Bouchier, with a piece which showed to advantage the talent of Mr. Justin Huntley McCarthy, and which we had proposed to discuss—has now suddenly closed its doors, a prominent specialist in matters of the throat having told Mr. Bouchier that he was not to act. We are sorry for Mr. Bouchier and his throat, and quite as sorry for ourselves, who wanted to see Mr. McCarthy's play. It is not pure selfishness—it is rather selfishness tinged with curiosity—that makes us inquire, Why had not Mr. Bouchier an under-study? Such a being is by no means unheard of in the theatrical world; and it looks a little strange that the sudden dictum of a specialist in regard to an actor who, after all, is not a very famous star should be allowed to be the means of closing an important playhouse. If this sort of thing were to happen again, we should be warranted in assuming that there are certain theatres inexplicably unfavourable to robust health.

WHILE the piece at the St. James's has come to an unexpected stop, a piece at the Court which never invited serious criticism—but which at the same time did not fail to entertain—continues a successful career. Mr. Pinero's dialogue, and some of his situations besides, are in "The Cabinet Minister," as in so many others of his plays, admirably humorous. You cannot argue gravely, or elaborately analyse, "The Cabinet Minister"; but it has been exactly described as a pièce qui se laisse voir. In other words it occupies an evening adequately, and when one has seen it there is nothing to regret and not very much to remember. For a play of the kind—not absolutely farcical, and yet by no means serious—the cast is a strong one. Mr. Arthur Cecil and Mrs. John Wood are 'towers of strength' anywhere where their particular and peculiar talents may find fair play. Mr. Weedon Grossmith has made a hit; Mr. Herbert Waring and Mr. Brandon Thomas are both of them responsible actors of high quality, to whom difficult parts may be safely trusted. Miss LeThière and Miss Filippi have their value; Miss Eva Moore is elegant; and Miss Isabel Ellisen—who should have a better opportunity presently—is both clever and engaging.

MR. BEERBOHM TREE closed the Haymarket last Saturday, and promised that upon its re-opening, in October, the system of the unbroken "run" shall come to an end. Mr. Tree has resolved to devote every Monday evening to the performance of a piece other than that which is performed on the other five nights of the players' week. The change—which very probably may in the first instance affect the manager's] pocket prejudicially—will be very refreshing to the actors and to the better and more cultivated portion of the audience; and Mr. Tree, we hold, is to be warmly commended for having had the courage to announce a policy approximating to, though of course not exactly resembling, that of the two subsidised French theatres, one of which at least has a great repertory, and the other a few distinguished traditions.

MUSIC.

MUSIC OF THE WEEK.

THE 152nd anniversary of the Royal Society of Musicians was the occasion of a Handel festival in Westminster Abbey last Thursday week. The programme commenced with some choral selections from "Saul." Mr. Hilton sang "Great God! who yet but darkly known," from "Belshazzar," with effect. Mme. Nordica sang "Angels ever bright and fair," and "Let the bright seraphim," with trumpet obligato by Mr. J. Solomon. Mme. Patey was heard in "Return, O God of Hosts," and "To dust His glory." Mr. E. Lloyd gave an exceptionally fine rendering of "Sound an alarm." Mr. C. S. Jekyll presided at the organ, and Dr. Bridge conducted. The music was impressive, and all the more enjoyable in that it was not spoiled by applause. There was a large and attentive audience.

Master Max Hambourgh gave a pianoforte recital at Princes' Hall last Saturday afternoon. His age is ten, and he commenced to study the pianoforte two years and a half ago under his father, who is a professor at the Moscow Conservatoire. Master Max made his début in that city in June, 1889. His programme on Saturday commenced with Bach's Fantaisie Chromatique and Fugue, and it was certainly a remarkable performance; there was good technique, and the reading showed intelligence and feeling. His rendering of the Beethoven Sonata in A flat (Op. 26) was less satisfactory. The style in which it was played—though for this the child is, of course, not responsible—was sensational; and, besides, he was quite unable to manage the large chords of the funeral March, so that the effect of the movement was lost. His performances of small pieces by Schumann and Chopin were good. There is not the slightest doubt that the child is highly gifted, and that, if properly trained, he will become a great pianist. But it is a mistake to bring him out while he is yet immature, and a still greater one to give him music to play beyond his powers.

The Richter concerts came to a close last Monday evening. The programme was devoted to Wagner and Beethoven, the two composers whom Dr. Richter holds in highest honour. The Kaiser-Marsch came first. Mr. Max Heinrich sang most effectively Pagner's Address from the first act of "Die Meistersinger," and Mr. Lloyd was successful in Lohengrin's Herkunft und Abschied from "Lohengrin." Sach's Address to Walther, and the closing chorus from "Die Meistersinger," were also given by Mr. Heinrich and the Richter choir. The second part of the programme included the Choral Symphony, with Miss Fillunger, Miss Lena Little, and Messrs. Lloyd and Heinrich. The performance was a magnificent one, and at the close the eminent conductor received an ovation. We are glad to learn that financially the present series has been most successful, and that the nineteenth season is announced to commence in May next year.

A performance of Mozart's comic opera, "Cosi fan tutti," was given at the Savoy Theatre by the pupils of the Royal College of Music on Wednesday afternoon. In a notice of the work, published in 1792, the writer says:—"The opera is the most absurd stuff in the world, and only sought after on account of the excellence of the music." Mozart was commissioned by the Emperor to write it, and the libretto was provided him without consulting his wishes. He spent little more than a month over the music. There is plenty of melody in it, and clever writing; but, with some few exceptions, the work does not represent the composer at his best. The Quintet and Terzettino in the first act, and the Finale of each act are, however, exceedingly fine. The chorus has next to nothing to do in the opera, and hence the college was unable to make effective use of its excellent choir. Miss Ella Walker (Isidora) and Miss E. Webster (Dorabella), if not altogether satisfactory, deserve praise. Miss Maggie Davies, as the Waiting Maid, sang exceedingly well, and her acting was bright. Messrs. Branscombe, Sandbrook, and Magrath, all of whom had amusing parts, sang carefully, and acted in a lively manner. The opening of the first act was uncertain, but soon a decided improvement took place. The orchestra was, as usual, under the able direction of Dr. Stanford.

Mme. Adelina Patti made her last appearance this season in London at the Albert Hall on Wednesday evening. There was an immense audience. The prima donna was in excellent voice, and responded liberally to the demand for encores. Mme. Antoinette Stirling was also received with special enthusiasm. Messrs. Lloyd, Barrington Foote, and Hollman; Mlle. Janotha, Miss Nettie Carpenter, and the Lotos Glee Club were additional attractions. The orchestra was under the direction of Mr. W. Ganz.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

F. V. WHITE & CO.'S RECENT PUBLICATIONS.

I. FERGUS HUME'S NEW NOVEL. THE MAN WITH A SECRET.

3 vols.

By the Author of
"The Mystery of a Hansom Cab,"
"Miss Mephistopheles"
"The Picaresque Puzzle," &c.
(At all Libraries.)

"....An acquaintance with its contents will prove it to be worthy of any favourable anticipation it may have raised....Side by side with much that is powerful, and many bright gleams of humour. 'The Man with a Secret' has enough of mystery to satisfy the most exacting on this head."—Morning Post.

"Mr. Hume's interesting story....Patience Allerby—a woman with a past—powerfully drawn and interesting....Una Challoner, sweetest of heroines....the dialogue natural....A word of praise may be spared for Cecilia Mosser, whose passion for music is pathetically and cleverly treated....On the whole, 'The Man with a Secret' is a really interesting story, full of go and sensationalism, and the characters are varied and natural."—Court Journal.

II. By B. L. Farjeon.—THE MYSTERY of M. FELIX.

By the Author of
"Great Porter Square," "Tollers of Babylon," &c.
In 3 vols. (At all Libraries.)

"....A novel of great interest and power—one that can scarcely fail to enhance his already high reputation and extend his popularity as a writer of fiction....It bubbles over with humour of the raciest and richest character....The author unravels with much dramatic effect as sensational, singular, and striking a story as could well be conceived. The air of mystery pervading the novel is successfully maintained till towards the closing chapters....In conception and character, indeed, the work is quite distinct from the general run of modern novels—a circumstance which in itself lends value to Mr. Farjeon's latest literary effort, apart from other merits always readily recognisable in the writings of this accomplished author."—Scotsman.

III. By Mrs. Frank Penny.—CASTE and CREED.

2 vols.

IV. By André Raffalovich.—The WILLING EXILE.

2 vols., 12s.
By the Author of
"It is Thyself."

V. By Mrs. Alexander Fraser.—The NEW DUCHESS.

By the Author of
"A Professional Beauty," &c.
3 vols. (Shortly.)

VI. By Annie Thomas.—THE LOVE of a LADY.

By the Author of
"Allerton Towers," "Eyre of Blenden," &c.
3 vols. (Shortly.)

AT ALL BOOKSELLERS AND BOOKSTALLS.

JOHN STRANGE WINTER'S LATEST NOVEL. FERRERS COURT. By the Author of "Bootles' Baby." In paper covers, 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d.

"It introduces its readers to the Bootles again, for which they will be profoundly thankful, as for the freshness, good spirits, and bright humour which animate the tale throughout. No reader of this delightful novelist will be disappointed to learn that the love-making of military men constitutes its chief interest."—Scotsman.

"RITA'S" NEW NOVEL. THE DOCTOR'S SECRET. By the Author of "Dame Durden," "Sheba," "Miss Kate," "A Vagabond Lover," &c. In paper covers, 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d.

FLORENCE WARDEN'S NEW NOVEL. CITY and SUBURBAN. By the Author of "The House on the Marsh," &c. In paper covers, 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d.

MRS. EDWARD KENNARD'S POPULAR NOVEL. MATRON or MAID? (Second Edition.) Cloth, 2s. 6d.

By F. C. PHILIPS and C. J. WILLS. SYBIL ROSS'S MARRIAGE: the Romance of an Inexperienced Girl (Second Edition.) Cloth, 2s. 6d.

F. V. WHITE & CO., 31, SOUTHAMPTON STREET,
STRAND, W.C.

D. NUTT, 270, STRAND.

NOW READY AT ALL LIBRARIES.

THE WOMEN of TURKEY and THEIR FOLK-LORE. By LUCY M. GARNETT. The Christian Women (Greeks, Vlachs, Armenians, Franks)—Social, Political, and Educational Situation—Manners, Customs, and Superstitions—Popular Ballads and Stories. With an Introduction by J. S. STUART-GLENNIE upon the Ethnology of the Races inhabiting the Turkish Empire, and upon Folk-Conceptions of Nature, and an Ethnographical Map. Medium 8vo, lxxx-368 pages, cloth, 10s. 6d.

INCURABLE. Translated from the German of PAUL HEYSE, by Mrs. H. W. EVE. 8vo, cloth, 6s.

FOR ALL TRAVELLERS IN FRANCE.

TRAVELLERS' COLLOQUIAL FRENCH. A Handbook for English-Speaking Travellers and Students. Idiomatic French Phrases, with the Exact Pronunciation, represented on a New System, based upon a Scientific Analysis of French Sounds, with other General Information useful to Travellers in France. By H. SWAN. 1s.

THE JEWISH QUARTERLY REVIEW. Edited by I. ABRAHAM and C. G. MONTEFIORE. Vol. II. Part IV. JULY. 8vo, 170 pages, 3s. 6d. Yearly Subscription, 10s. 6d.

Contents.

Dr. M. FRIEDLAENDER—The late Chief Rabbi, Dr. N. M. Adler.
Prof. D. KAUFMANN—Franz Delitzsch: a Palm Branch from Judah on his newly-covered Grave.
Prof. A. H. SAYCE—Jewish Tax-Gatherers at Thebes in the Age of the Ptolemies.
Rev. S. A. HIRSCH—The Jewish Sibyllian Oracles.
C. G. MONTEFIORE—Notes upon the Date and Religious Value of the Book of Proverbs.
Rev. R. TRAVERS HERFORD—A Unitarian Minister's View of the Talmudic Doctrine of God.
Prof. W. BOCHER—The Sabbatarians of Hungary.
JOSEPH JACOBS—Jewish Ideas.
I. ABRAHAM—Canon Driver's Samuel.
Shorter Notices—Notes and Discussions.

CLASSICAL REVIEW. Vol. IV. No. 7, JULY, 1s. 6d. Subscription price for Year, 13s. 6d., post-free.

Contents.

T. W. ALLEN—MSS. of the Iliad at Rome.
J. C. SNOW—Pronunciation of Ancient Greek.
L. CAMPBELL—Mr. Verrall's Agamemnon.
H. A. HOLDEN—Two Editions of Plutarch's Moralia.
E. A. SONNENSCHNEIN—Studemund's Codex Ambrosianus.
S. G. OWEN—Postgate's Catullus.
Shorter Notices.
Notes.
Archæology.
Summaries of Periodicals.
Bibliography.

THE ENGLISH HISTORICAL REVIEW.

Edited by the Rev. MANDELL CREIGHTON, M.A., LL.D.

NUMBER 19, JULY. Royal 8vo. Price 5s.

1. Articles. CONTENTS.
 THE SEVEN LIBERAL ARTS. By H. PARKER.
 THE DECREES of the ROMAN PLEBS. By J. L. STRACHAN-DAVIDSON.
 ST. PATRICK'S EARLIER LIFE. By B. W. WELLS.
 ODE of CHAMPAGNE, COUNT of BLOIS and "TYRANT of BURGUNDY." By Miss KATE NORRIS.
 SIR RICHARD CHURCH. (Part III., Conclusion.) By STANLEY LANE-POOLE.
 2. Notes and Documents.—Gafol, by J. H. Round—The Black Death in Lancashire, edited by A. G. Little—The Trial of Richard Wyche, edited by F. D. Matthew—The Draft Dispensation for Henry VIII.'s Marriage with Anne Boleyn, edited by James Gairdner—Aske's Examination, edited by Miss Mary Bateson.
 3. Reviews of Books.
 4. List of Historical Books recently published.
 5. Contents of Periodical Publications.
 London: LONGMANS, GREEN, & Co.

THE EDINBURGH REVIEW,

No. 351.

CONTENTS.

- I.—THE HADDINGTON MEMORIALS.
 II.—THE JOURNAL of MARIE BASHKIRTSEFF.
 III.—PROGRESS in JAPAN.
 IV.—THE LIFE and WORKS of LAVOISIER.
 V.—THE ORIGIN of ALPHABETS.
 VI.—MONTCHRESTIEN, the FIRST FRENCH ECONOMIST.
 VII.—RELIGIOUS PERSECUTION in RUSSIA.
 VIII.—BIRDS in GREAT BRITAIN.
 IX.—CHARLES, PRINCE de LIGNE.
 X.—THE CAMPAIGN in the SUDAN.
 XI.—THE HOUSE of COMMONS FOILED.
 London: LONGMANS, GREEN, & Co.

THE QUARTERLY REVIEW,

No. 341, is published THIS DAY.

CONTENTS.

- I.—ETON COLLEGE.
 II.—THE EMPEROR FREDERICK.
 III.—REALISM and DECADENCE in FRENCH FICTION.
 IV.—SHAKESPEARE'S GHOSTS, WITCHES, and FAIRIES.
 V.—THE ACROPOLIS of ATHENS.
 VI.—PENNY FICTION.
 VII.—SIR ROBERT WALPOLE.
 VIII.—WESTERN CHINA, its PRODUCTS and TRADE.
 IX.—MESMERISM and HYPNOTISM.
 X.—TWENTY YEARS of IRISH HOME RULE in NEW YORK
 JOHN MURRAY, Albemarle Street.

Now ready, price Half-a-Crown.

THE FORUM.

JULY, 1890.

- FORMATIVE INFLUENCES. By Professor TYNDALL.
 A STUDY of HAMLET. By J. E. MURDOCH.
 OBSTACLES to CIVIL SERVICE REFORM. By W. M. FERRISS.
 THE WAGES SYSTEM. By Dr. LYMAN ABBOTT.
 A DEFENCE of the VETO POWER. By EDWARD MASON.
 THE ART of GERRYMANDERING. By WALTER C. HAMM.
 MODERN ECLIPSE PROBLEMS. By Prof. DAVID TODD.
 PERPLEXITIES that CANADA would BRING. By A. R. CARMAN.
 THE NEWSPAPER of the FUTURE. By NOAH BROOKS.
 GUNPOWDER and its SUCCESSORS. By Commander F. M. BARBER.
 THE NEWER WEST. By R. J. HINTON.
 NOTICE.—This famous American Review can now be obtained regularly at all Bookellers, Librarians, and Bookstalls, about the 15th of each month.
 London: EDWARD ARNOLD, 18, Warwick Square, E.C.

THE SCOTTISH REVIEW.

JULY, 1890.

CONTENTS.

- ART. I.—CANADA and the UNITED STATES. By J. K. GEO. BOCKING.
 II.—TRACES of a NON-ARYAN ELEMENT in the CELTIC FAMILY. By Professor JOHN REYS, M.A.
 III.—BIKELAS on SCOTLAND. By J. S. BLACKIE.
 IV.—THE INTERPRETATION of the CRITICAL PHILOSOPHY.
 V.—ORIENTAL MYTHS and CHRISTIAN PARALLELS. By FLORENCE LAYARD.
 VI.—LUTHER MONUMENTS and the GERMAN REVOLUTION of 1822. By KARL BLIND.
 VII.—FOODS. By ALFRED J. H. CRESPI.
 VIII.—THE CESSION of HELIGOLAND. By ANDREW T. SIBBALD.
 IX.—SUMMARIES of FOREIGN REVIEWS.
 LETTER to the EDITOR from LORD ROSEBURY.
 X.—CONTEMPORARY LITERATURE.
 ALEX. GARDNER, Paisley; and 12, Paternoster Row, London.

Books produced at a fixed price for Printing, Paper, and Binding, and terms arranged for Publishing.

Authors advised with as to Printing and Publishing. Estimates of Cost of Printing and Binding.

ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD,
 Publishers, Printers, and Binders,
 21, FURNIVAL STREET, HOLBORN, and 27, CHANCERY LANE, LONDON.

W. H. SMITH & SON'S SUBSCRIPTION LIBRARY,

186, STRAND, LONDON, and at the Railway Bookstalls.

1.—This Library is established in connexion with Messrs. W. H. SMITH & SON'S numerous Railway Bookstalls; it embraces all the most important Works of History, Biography, Travel, Fiction, Poetry, Science, and Theology, as well as the leading Magazines and Reviews, and gives greater advantages to Subscribers than any other existing Library, from the fact that there are 500 Bookstalls in England and Wales, and to any of these Depots a Subscriber may be transferred free of charge.

2.—Subscribers can only change their Books at the Depot where their names are registered, but they may transfer the place of exchange by giving notice to the Clerk in charge of the Depot at which they obtain their Books. Of the current periodicals, one only at a time is allowed to a Subscription under Five Guineas, and Subscriptions will not be accepted for the supply of Magazines and Reviews only.

3.—The Books are delivered at the Bookstalls, carriage free. A Subscriber may exchange once a day; the Clerk in charge will obtain from London any Work in the Library which a Subscriber may desire to have. NOVELS exchanged only in unbroken and complete Sets.

4.—London Subscribers transferring their Subscriptions to a Country Depot will be entitled only to the number of volumes which the Country terms assign to the amount they subscribe; similarly, Country Subscriptions transferred to Town become subject to the London regulations.

5.—Subscriptions may commence at any date, and are payable in advance at any of the Railway Bookstalls.

6.—Messrs. W. H. SMITH & SON beg to impress upon their Library Subscribers the fact that much disappointment and inconvenience would be avoided if they would, in all cases, give to the Clerk in charge a list comprising at least twice as many titles of works as they wish to exchange.

I.—FOR SUBSCRIBERS OBTAINING THEIR BOOKS FROM A LONDON TERMINUS.

	6 Months	12 Months.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
For One Volume at a time ... ..	0 12 0	1 1 0
(Novels in more than One Volume are not available for this class of Subscription.)
For Two Volumes ... ..	0 17 6	1 11 6
(Novels in more than Two Volumes are not available for this class of Subscription.)
For Four ... ..	1 3 0	2 2 0
For Eight ... ..	1 15 0	3 3 0
For Fifteen ... ..	3 0 0	5 5 0

II.—FOR SUBSCRIBERS OBTAINING THEIR BOOKS FROM A COUNTRY BOOKSTALL—

For One Volume at a time ... ..	0 12 0	1 1 0
(Novels in more than One Volume are not available for this class of Subscription.)
For Two Volumes ... ..	0 17 6	1 11 6
(Novels in more than Two Volumes are not available for this class of Subscription.)
For Three ... ..	1 3 0	2 2 0
For Four ... ..	1 8 0	2 10 0
For Six ... ..	1 15 0	3 3 0
For Twelve ... ..	3 0 0	5 5 0

III.—FOR COUNTRY BOOK CLUBS, READING SOCIETIES, &c.

For Twenty-four Volumes at a time ... ..	5 5 0	9 9 0
For Thirty-six ... ..	8 0 0	14 2 6
For Forty-eight ... ..	10 10 0	18 16 0
For Sixty ... ..	13 0 0	23 9 0
For Seventy-two ... ..	15 10 0	28 2 0
For Eighty-four ... ..	18 0 0	32 15 0

For every additional Twelve Volumes, £4 12s. 6d.

A Catalogue of Surplus and New Books, offered at greatly reduced prices, is published Monthly, and can be had upon application at the Bookstalls. Also a Catalogue of Books in elegant bindings, for Gentlemen's Libraries.

THEATRES.

AVENUE THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 9, DR. BILL.
Messrs. George Alexander, Benjamin Webster, G. Capel, H. Grattan, and Albert Chevalier; Mesdames Elizabeth Robins, Carlotta Leclercq, Lenton, Marie Linden, Laura Graves, Edith Kenward, Lillie Young, and Fanny Brough.
Preceded, at 8.30, by MISS CINDERELLA.

COMEDY THEATRE.

Manager, Mr. CHAS. H. HAWTREY.
Every Evening, at 9, NERVES.
Messrs. H. Kemble, Edward Righton, and Charles Hawtrej; Mesdames Maud Millett, Sophie Larkin, Lydia Cowell, Ethel Matthews, and Lottie Venne.
Preceded, at 8.15, by A BAD PENNY.

COURT THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 8, THE CABINET MINISTER.
Messrs. Arthur Cecil, Weedon Grossmith, Herbert Waring, Brandon Thomas, Allen Aynesworth, Saunders, Farren, and Clulow; Mesdames Le Thière, Rosina Filippi, Tanner, Eva Moore, Caldwell, Isabel Ellissen, Harrington, Edmund Phelps, and John Wood.

CRITERION THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. CHARLES WYNDHAM.
This Evening, at 9.30, SOWING AND REAPING.
Messrs. Charles Wyndham, Geo. Giddens, W. Blakeley, and S. Valentine; Mesdames M. A. Victor, E. Leyshon, E. Vining, and Mary Moore.
Preceded, at 8.30, by DELICATE GROUND.
At 8, Comedietta.

GAIETY THEATRE.

Mr. NAT GOODWIN will make his first appearance in England at this theatre on Monday next, at 8.20 (for six weeks only) in Messrs. Brander Matthews and George H. Jessop's original three-act comedy entitled A GOLD MINE, with the following cast:—
Messrs. William Farren, Harry Eversfield, Eric Thorne, Frank Wood, and Charles Glenny; Mesdames Kate Forsyth, Jennie McNulty, and Carlotta Leclercq.

GARRICK THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. JOHN HARE.
Thi Evening, at 8.50, A PAIR OF SPECTACLES.
Messrs. John Hare, C. Groves, R. Cathcart, S. Brough, C. Dodsworth, and R. Harding; Mesdames Webster, F. Hunter, and Kate Rorke.
Preceded, at 8, by DREAM FACES.
Mr. J. Forbes Robertson and Miss Carlotta Addison.

GLOBE THEATRE.

This Evening, at 8, ROMEO AND JULIET.
Miss Adelaide Moore, Juliet; Mr. Otis Skinner, Romeo.
Messrs. J. Nesbitt, G. F. Black, J. F. Graham, E. Wilde, J. Humphries, J. H. Manley, S. C. Henry, F. Wells, G. B. Philips, M. Baker, E. Boddy, and Mark Quinton; Mesdames May Prothero, Nellie Duncan, and Charles Calvert.

LYCEUM THEATRE.

Mr. HENRY IRVING, Sole Manager.
Mr. AUGUSTIN DALY'S COMPANY of COMEDIANS, every evening, at 8.15 (precisely) in
AS YOU LIKE IT.
Miss Ada Rehan as Rosalind, Mr. Drew as Orlando, Mr. Lewis as Touchstone, and Mr. Clarke, Mr. Fisher, Miss Prince, Miss Irving, &c.

PRINCE OF WALES' THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. HORACE SEDGER.
This Evening, at 8.15, MARJORIE.
Messrs. C. H. Hayden Coffin, Joseph Tapley, H. Ashley, Templer Saxe, Wood, James, Shale, Hendon, and H. Monkhouse; Mesdames Phyllis Broughton, Amadi, and Miss Camille D'Arville.
Preceded, at 7.30, by ALL ABROAD.

SHAFTESBURY THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, E. S. WILLARD.
Every Evening, at 8.30, JUDAH.
Messrs. Willard, Royce Carleton, F. Kerr, Sant Matthews, C. Fulton, E. Cane, Harting, and Thomas; Mesdames Bewie Hutton, Gertrude Warden, A. Bowering, and Olga Brandon.

TERRY'S THEATRE.

Manageress, Miss GRAHAME.
Last Three Nights. NEW LAMPS FOR OLD.
by J. K. Jerome.
Messrs. W. S. Penley, Bernard Gould, W. Lestocq, and Alfred Bishop; Mesdames Cissy Grahame, Rose Dearing, and Gertrude Kingston.
At 8.15, NEARLY SEVERED,
in which Miss M. A. Giffard will appear.
Last Matinee Saturday next, at 3.

VAUDEVILLE THEATRE.

This Evening, at 9, MISS TOMBOY.
Messrs. Thomas Thorne, Cyril Maude, Frank Gilmore, J. S. Blythe, O. Yorke, F. Grove, Harbury, and Fred. Thorne; Mesdames W. Emery, Hanbury, Collette, and Sylvia Hodson.
Preceded, at 8, by MEADOW-SWEET.

NATIONAL

FOR MUTUAL

PROVIDENT

LIFE ASSURANCE.

48, GRACECHURCH STREET, LONDON.

See Prospectus, page 17, for particulars of Endowment Assurance Policies combining Life Assurance at Minimum Cost with Provision for Old Age.

INVESTED FUNDS,
£4,400,000.

INSTITUTION.

ESTBD. 1835.

TO STOUT PEOPLE.

Sunday Times says: "Mr. Russell's aim is to eradicate, to cure the disease, and that his treatment is the true one seems beyond all doubt. The medicine he prescribes does not lower, but builds up and tones the system." Book (128 pages), with Recipe and Notes how to pleasantly and rapidly cure obesity (average reduction in first week is 3 lb.), post-free, Eight Stamps.

F. C. RUSSELL, Woburn House,
Store Street, Bedford Square, London, W.C.

FURNISH your HOUSES or APARTMENTS THROUGHOUT

MOEDER'S HIRE SYSTEM.

The original, best, and most liberal. Suits all.

FOUNDED A.D. 1888.

Furnish direct from the Manufacturer, from £10 to £10,000.

Cash prices. No extra charge for time given.

Catalogues, Estimates, Press Opinions, Testimonials Post Free.

F. MOEDER,

248, 249, 250, Tottenham Court Road, W. Also for HIRE ONLY.

Third Edition, crown 8vo, cloth, price 1s. 6d., post-free.

LESSONS from the RISE and FALL of the ENGLISH COMMONWEALTH. By J. ALLANSON PICTON, M.A., M.P.

CONTENTS: Introductory.—Treason and Loyalty.—The Limits of Moral Force.—The Limits of Physical Force.—The Sources of Popular Enthusiasm.—"Republicanism: Form and Substance."

PEOPLE'S EDITION.—Price 6d., with PORTRAIT.

(Special terms for quantities.)

JOSEPH MAZZINI: a Memoir by E. A. V., with two Essays by MAZZINI: "THOUGHTS on DEMOCRACY" and "THE DUTIES of MAN."

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD,
21, FURNIVAL STREET, HOLBORN.

GOLD PEN,

WITH DIAMOND POINT.

Anti-corrosive—Flexible—Durable—Adapting itself to any Handwriting.

Price 6d. each; post-free, 7d.

ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD,
21, CHANCERY LANE, LONDON.

REDNESS, ROUGHNESS, AND CHAPPING PREVENTED.
FAIR, WHITE HANDS AND HEALTHFUL SKIN AND COMPLEXION SECURED.

PEARS' SOAP.

This world-renowned Toilet Soap has obtained 15 International Awards as a Complexion Soap. It is specially suitable for Ladies, Children, or delicate and sensitive skins generally. Its regular use cannot fail to benefit the worst complexion.

Recommended by Mrs. LANGTRY and Madame ADELINA PATTI.

FRY'S

Lancet—"Pure and very soluble."
Medical Times—"Eminently suitable for Invalids."

PURE CONCENTRATED

Sir C. A. Cameron—"I have never tasted Cocoa that I like so well."

Paris Exhibition, 1889: GOLD MEDAL awarded to J. S. FRY &amp; SONS.

COCOA

KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRÜBNER, & CO.'S LIST.

MR. PLIMPSOLL'S NEW BOOK. CATTLE SHIPS.

Being the Fifth Chapter of Mr. PLIMPSOLL'S Second Appeal for Our Seamen.

Published separately and out of its turn on account of its pressing urgency, not published before lest the case should be deemed incomplete.

Square 8vo, 5s., with 46 Illustrations.

Also, a CHEAPER EDITION, crown 8vo, paper covers, 1s.

THIRD THOUSAND.

ALEXANDER HERIOT MACKONOCHE: a Memoir. By E. A. T.

Edited, with Preface, by EDWARD FRANCIS RUSSELL, M.A., St. Alban's, Holborn. With Portrait and Two Views. Large crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

"Those who would learn the secret of his strange power over those who came under his influence may be safely referred to Mrs. Towle's fascinating biography."—Spectator.

"The nearest approach to a faithful literary likeness we have yet had. ... Readers may rely on the accuracy of the portraiture. ... Our best hope is that this most ably written memoir may find its way into the hands of many thousands of Englishmen that they may know the truth concerning one who lived and died for truth."—Church Times.

NEW VOLUME IN THE "PULPIT COMMENTARY."

II. CHRONICLES. Exposition and Homiletics by Rev. PHILIP C. BARKER, LL.B. Homilies by Rev. W. CLARKSON and Rev. T. WHITELAW, D.D. 15s.

Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

THE APOSTLES' CREED. Sermons by the Rev. R. EYTON, Rector of Upper Chelsea and Prebendary of St. Paul's.

Nos. 1, 2, and 3, now ready.

SUN ARTISTS. Published Quarterly. Price 5s. Each Number contains Four Full-page Photogravures from Negatives (1) By Mr. F. GALE; (2) By Mr. H. P. ROBINSON; (3) By Mr. F. B. B. WELLINGTON.

INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES.

INTRODUCTION to FRESH-WATER ALGÆ. With an Enumeration of all the British Species. By M. C. COOKE, LL.D. With 13 Plates Illustrating all the Genera. Crown 8vo, 5s.

Demy 8vo, 14s.

UNTRODDEN GROUND in ASTRONOMY and GEOLOGY.

Giving Further Details of the Second Rotation of the Earth, and the important Calculations which can be made by aid of a Knowledge thereof. By Major-General A. W. DRAYSON, F.R.A.S., late R.A., Author of "Practical Military Surveying," &c.

Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d.

MISCELLANIES:—Vol. IV. POLITICAL ECONOMY; or, the Science of the Market, especially as affected by Local Law. By F. W. NEWMAN, M.R.A.S.

Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d.

THE TESTIMONY of TRADITION. By DAVID MACRITCHIE, Author of "Ancient and Modern Britons." With Twenty Illustrations.

Medium 8vo, 7s. 6d.

VISITATIONS of ENGLISH CLUNIAN FOUNDATIONS. Translated from the Original Records in the National Library of France. By Sir G. F. DUCKETT, Bart.

2 vols., demy 8vo.

A MANUAL of CATHOLIC THEOLOGY. Based on Scheeben's

Dogmatik. By JOSEPH WILHELM, D.D., and THOMAS B. SCANNELL, B.D. Vol. I.—The Sources of Theological Knowledge, God, Creation, and the Supernatural Order. Now ready, price 15s.

"A clear and systematic conspectus of the position and teaching of the Church of Rome. .... A model of clearness and systematic statement."—Saturday Review.

Demy 8vo, 9s.

THEOLOGY and PIETY ALIKE FREE: from the Point of View of Manchester New College, Oxford. A Contribution to its Effort, offered by AN OLD STUDENT.

"The editor is to be congratulated on the felicity of his idea, and on the mode of its execution. .... The essays and papers here collected furnish a series of pieces justificatives which the most benighted obscurantist can neither gainsay or resist."—Academy.

Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

DANTE'S TREATISE de VULGARI ELOQUENTIA. Translated into English, with Explanatory Notes, by A. G. FERRERS HOWELL.

Price 3s.

SOCIETY for PSYCHICAL RESEARCH. — PROCEEDINGS. PART XVI.

Small crown 8vo, 1s. 6d.

LYRA MANCUNIENSIS. By WALTER HUGHES.

LONDON: KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRÜBNER, & CO., LIMITED.

EDWARD STANFORD'S LIST.

A NEW BOOK FOR THE HOLIDAYS.

Ready shortly, crown 8vo, cloth, with numerous Maps, &c.

CAMPING VOYAGES

ON GERMAN RIVERS.

By ARTHUR A. MACDONELL, M.A.,

Corpus Christi College, Oxford.

The Rivers described are: The Werra, Weser, Neckar, Rhine, Moselle, Main, Moldau, Elbe, and Danube. Several of these Streams were navigated for the first time by the Author, and practical details of Outfit, Obstructions, Distances, &c., are given.

Now ready, FOURTH EDITION, REVISED.

A PHYSICAL, HISTORICAL, AND DESCRIPTIVE GEOGRAPHY.

By KEITH JOHNSTON, F.R.G.S.

Revised and Edited by E. G. RAVENSTEIN, F.R.G.S.

Large post 8vo, cloth, with numerous Maps and Illustrations, 12s.

"Mr. Keith Johnston's text-book of geography is a work of much thought, wide research, and no inconsiderable literary skill. It contains a vast amount of information on the physical features of the countries of the world, their climate and productions, commerce and industry, political institutions, administrative divisions and leading towns. A set of maps coloured so as to distinguish forest regions, agricultural lands, steppes, and deserts, forms a welcome addition to this judiciously planned and carefully written text-book."—Athenæum.

STANFORD'S TWO-SHILLING SERIES OF TOURIST'S GUIDES.

Fcap. 8vo, cloth, with Maps and Plans.

NEW EDITIONS JUST PUBLISHED.

DERBYSHIRE.—TOURIST'S GUIDE to the COUNTY. By R. N. WORTH, F.G.S. Includes the Peak District, Matlock, Buxton, &c.

SOUTH DEVON.—TOURIST'S GUIDE to SOUTH DEVON: Rail, Road, River, Coast and Moor. By R. N. WORTH, F.G.S.

The other Guides in Stanford's Two Shilling Series are:—

BEDFORDSHIRE. By A. J. FOSTER.

BERKSHIRE. By E. WALFORD.

CAMBRIDGE. By A. G. HILL.

CHANNEL ISLANDS. By G. P. BEVAN.

CORNWALL. By W. H. TREGELLAS.

DEVON, NORTH. By R. N. WORTH.

DORSETSHIRE. By R. N. WORTH.

ENGLISH LAKE DISTRICT. By H. I. JENKINSON.

ESSEX. By E. WALFORD.

GLOUCESTERSHIRE. By R. N. WORTH.

HAMPSHIRE. By G. P. BEVAN.

KENT. By G. P. BEVAN.

LONDON (THROUGH). By the Rev. W. J. LOFTIE.

LONDON (ROUND ABOUT). By the Rev. W. J. LOFTIE.

NORFOLK. By WALTER RYE.

SOMERSETSHIRE. By R. N. WORTH.

SUFFOLK. By Dr. J. E. TAYLOR.

SURREY. By G. P. BEVAN.

SUSSEX. By G. F. CHAMBERS.

WARWICKSHIRE. By G. P. BEVAN.

WILTSHIRE. By R. N. WORTH.

WORCESTERSHIRE. By R. N. WORTH.

WYE (The) and its NEIGHBOURHOOD. By G. P. BEVAN.

YORKSHIRE, EAST and NORTH RIDINGS. By G. P. BEVAN.

YORKSHIRE, WEST RIDING. By G. P. BEVAN.

JENKINSON'S PRACTICAL GUIDES.

Fcap. 8vo, cloth, with Maps, &c.

ENGLISH LAKES. Eighth Edition. 7s.

THE ISLE of WIGHT. Third Edition. 5s.

NORTH WALES. Fourth Edition. 6s. 6d.

Also, in Five Sections, separately:

CHESTER — LLANDUDNO — BETTWS-Y-COED and SNOWDON — DOUGELLY and BALA — ABERYSTWTH and LLANGOLLEN. With Maps, each 1s. 6d.

THE ISLE of MAN. Third Edition. 5s.

CARLISLE, GILSLAND, the ROMAN WALL and NEIGHBOURHOOD. Second Edition. 2s.

ISLE of WIGHT.—Smaller Practical Guide. Fifth Edition, Revised. 2s. 6d.

NORTH WALES.—Smaller Practical Guide. Third Edition. 3s. 6d.

LONDON: EDWARD STANFORD, 26 and 27, CUCKSPUR STREET, CHARING CROSS, S.W.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 951.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, JULY 26, 1890.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

	PAGE
CAPT. MAHAN'S INFLUENCE OF SEA-POWER UPON HISTORY, by Judge O'CONNOR MORRIS	63
BARBIE'S MY LADY NICOTINE, by W. WALLACE	64
PROF. DRIVER'S NOTES ON THE HEBREW TEXT OF SAMUEL, by T. TYLER	65
TWO TRANSLATIONS FROM THE GERMAN, by E. D. A. MORSEHEAD	66
THE LIFE OF THE LATE J. G. WOOD, by the Rev. M. G. WATKINS	67
NEW NOVELS, by J. B. ALLEN	67
HISTORICAL BOOKS	68
NOTES AND NEWS	70
THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES	71
VERSE: "NOTES AT FLORENCE," by MICHAEL FIELD	71
OBITUARY: GENERAL PLANTAGENET HARRISON, by F. M. YPATMAN	71
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	71
MEMORIAL TO THE AUTHOR OF "JOHN HALIFAX, GENTLEMAN"	72
SHAKESPEARE'S SONNETS IN ITALY	72
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS	72
CORRESPONDENCE— A Memorial to Richard Jefferies, by A. Kinglake; Notes from Reviews, by Whitley Stokes; "Cockney," by Prof. Max Müller; Old French "Encrement," by La Goul-d'Adont, by Paget Toynbee; "Hetman" and "Hauptmann," by H. Krebs; Fitzgerald's "Omar Khayyam," by Charles Weekes; "The Bondman" Again, by Jón Stefánsson	72
SALMON'S ARABIC-ENGLISH LEXICON, by H. C. KAY	74
SOME BOOKS ON PHYSICS	75
SCIENCE NOTES	75
PHILOLOGY NOTES	75
M. DE NOLHAC'S MARIE ANTOINETTE, by F. WEDMORE	76
MR. FLINDERS PETRIE'S EXCAVATIONS IN PALESTINE	76
CORRESPONDENCE— Sculptured Slabs from Mesopotamia found in Egypt, by Prof. Sayce	77
EGYPTIAN JOTTINGS, by MISS AMELIA B. EDWARDS	77
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	77
STAGE NOTES	78
MUSIC NOTES	78

TO PUBLISHERS.—The Advertiser is OPEN to an ENGAGEMENT as Manager or other responsible position. Thoroughly conversant with all the details of Paper, Printing, Binding, Advertising, &c. First-class references.—Address, C. S. 100, Mercer's Road, Tufnell Park, N.

THE LECTURE AGENCY LIMITED (late of Birmingham), 3, GEORGE YARD, LOMBARD STREET, LONDON, E.C., act as AGENTS for the most distinguished Lecturers and Entertainers in Great Britain.

THE GIRTON GOVERNESS and SCHOOL AGENCY.—MADAME AUBERT introduces English and Foreign Governesses, Governess Pupils, Visiting Teachers, Companions, &c., and recommends Schools and Educational Homes; Schools transferred, Partnerships arranged.—27, Regent Street, S.W.

STAMMERERS should read a book by a gentleman who cured himself after suffering nearly forty years. Price 13 stamps.—R. BEASLEY, Brampton Park, near Huntingdon.

CATALOGUES.

BAEDEKER'S & BADDELEY'S GUIDE-BOOKS.
New Detailed CATALOGUE, now ready, sent post free on application.—DULAU & Co., 37, Soho Square, London.

AUTOGRAPHS.—CATALOGUE of interesting AUTOGRAPH LETTERS on SALE, at moderate prices, forwarded on application.—NEWCOMB & Co., 16, Kennedy Street, Manchester.

FOREIGN AND ORIENTAL BOOKS.

LUZAC & CO.,

Foreign and Oriental Booksellers and Publishers,
46, GREAT RUSSELL STREET, W.C.
(Opposite the British Museum).

NOW READY.

LUZAC & CO.'S MONTHLY LIST.

No. V., JULY, 1890.

CONTENTS:—I. New Oriental Books, published in England. II. New Oriental Books, published on the Continent. III. New Books, published in the East. IV. Recent Continental Importations. (a) Miscellaneous. (b) Belles-Lettres. (c) History, Geography, Sociology, (d) Medicine. (e) Novels, (f) Science, &c. (g) Theology and Philosophy. V. A choice collection of New and Second Hand Books.

To be had, post free, on application.

Messrs. LUZAC & Co. have constantly on hand a large choice collection of works in all branches of Literature in Europe and the Orient.

TO AUTHORS.

MESSRS. DIGBY & LONG,
PUBLISHERS,

18, BOUVIERIE STREET, FLEET STREET, LONDON, E.C.
Are prepared to receive and give careful consideration to all MSS. and arrange terms for their PUBLICATION. MESSRS. DIGBY & LONG have also every convenience and ample facilities for the Publication of Magazines. Editorial offices if required. Newest Catalogue post free.

Just published, crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

ETYMA LATINA: AN ETYMOLOGICAL LEXICON of CLASSICAL LATIN.

By EDWARD ROSS WHARTON, M.A.,

Fellow and Lecturer of Jesus College, Oxford; Author of "Etyma Græca."

LONDON: PERCIVAL & CO., KING STREET, COVENT GARDEN.

One Volume, demy 8vo, 30s.

THE BOOK of DIGNITIES. Containing

Lists of the Official Personages of the British Empire, Civil, Diplomatic, Heraldic, Judicial, Ecclesiastical, Municipal, Naval, and Military, from the Earliest Periods to the Present Time; together with the Sovereigns and Rulers of the World from the foundation of their respective States; the Orders of Knighthood of the United Kingdom and India; and numerous other Lists. Founded on Beatson's "Political Index (1806)": Remodelled and brought down to 1851 by the late JOSEPH HAYDN; Continued to the Present Time, with numerous Additional Lists and an Index to the entire Work, by HORACE OCKERBY, Solicitor to the Supreme Court.

W. H. ALLEN & CO., 13, WATERLOO PLACE; AND AT CALCUTTA.

SCHOOLS, COLLEGES, &c. MANCHESTER NEW COLLEGE, 90, HIGH STREET, OXFORD.

The College adheres to its original principle of freely imparting Theological knowledge, without insisting on the adoption of particular Theological doctrines.

PROGRAMME OF LECTURES FOR THE SESSION 1890-91

PRINCIPAL—
Rev. JAMES DRUMMOND, M.A., LL.D.
GOSPELS (Introduction, Criticism, and Exegesis).
STUDY OF DOCTRINAL THEOLOGY.

VICE-PRINCIPAL—
Rev. J. ESTLIN CARPENTER, M.A.
OLD TESTAMENT. COMPARATIVE RELIGION.

Rev. C. B. UPTON, B.A., B.Sc.
MENTAL PHILOSOPHY. PHILOSOPHY OF RELIGION.
Rev. P. H. WICKSTEED, M.A., will Lecture on SOCIOLOGY.

The College opens in October. All Lectures are Free to the Public. For further particulars apply to the Rev. Dr. DRUMMOND, 18, Rawlinson Road, Oxford:

or to R. D. DARRISBURK, Esq.,
26, George Street, Manchester; } Secs.
or to Rev. H. ERFIELD DOWNSON, B.A.,
Gee Cross, near Manchester.

QUEEN'S SERVICE ACADEMY, 3 and 4, ELY PLACE, DUBLIN.—The oldest, and among the most successful in the United Kingdom; over 2,000 have passed.

I. All Army Examinations.
II. Civil Service of India, Universities, &c.
III. R. I. Constabulary Cadetships.
There is not a Corps in the Services or a Department under Government that does not owe some of its Officers to the QUEEN'S SERVICE ACADEMY, DUBLIN. No attempt at cramming; unsurpassed staff of Specialists under personal direction of W. J. CHITWODE CRAWLEY, LL.D., D.C.L., F.R.G.S., F.G.S., F.R.Hist.Soc., &c.

TO PARENTS AND GUARDIANS.

MR. W. S. LOGEMAN, Principal of Newton School, Rock Ferry, is FORMING a small PARTY of BOYS to spend the SUMMER HOLIDAYS at some healthy Seaside place for recreation and study. Instruction in Modern Languages, Classics, or Mathematics as required. References given and required. Inclusive terms, £3 3s. a week, or £10 10s. for four weeks.—Particulars on application.

TO TEACHERS.—A HEAD MASTER is WANTED for the ACADEMY of the CORPORATION of BERWICK-UPON-TWEED, in which upwards of 200 children are taught the following branches:—English, French, Latin, Writing, Arithmetic, and Mathematics.

The Head Master will have the general superintendence of the Academy, but is specially to devote himself to those departments in which the Languages are taught.

The salary will be £180 per annum with a free house and a prospect of an advance.

The person selected will be required to enter upon the duties of the office early in September next.

Intending candidates must send Testimonials to the Town Clerk on or before the 1st August next and from whom further particular can be obtained.

Canvassing is prohibited.

Town Hall, 17th July, 1890.
Berwick-on-Tweed.

By order,
R. DOUGLAS, Town Clerk.

INEXPENSIVE Sound EDUCATION at
SCHORNE COLLEGE, WINSLOW.—Over 40 Army and Navy Boys, Clergy Sons, Medical, &c., have been educated in either the Classical or Modern side, and the School has a good record. 30 guineas a year; reduced to brothers and orphans. Entrance fee, 5 guineas.—Address Rev. Dr. JAMES.

The Autotype Company, London,

Renowned for the excellence of its process of high-class

BOOK ILLUSTRATION

Adopted by the Trustees of the British Museum, the Learned Societies, and the leading Publishers. For specimens, prices, &c., apply to the Manager.

AUTO-GRAVURE

The Autotype process adapted to Photographic Engraving on copper. Copies of Paintings by Holman Hunt, of Portraits by Holl, R.A.; Oulless, R.A.; Pettie, R.A.; Prinsep, A.R.A.; of the Fresco in Guy's Hospital; "SPRING," by Herbert Draper, &c., &c.; also examples of Auto-Gravure Reproductions of Photographs from Art Objects and from Nature can be seen at the Autotype Gallery—

THE

AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY,

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON,

Is remarkable for its display of Copies of celebrated Works by

"THE GREAT MASTERS"

from the Louvre, Vatican, Hermitage, and the National Galleries of Italy, Spain, Holland, and London, including H.M. Collections at Buckingham Palace and Windsor Castle.

Albums of reference to the various Galleries are provided, are easily looked over, and of great interest to lovers of Art. Send for the new Pamphlet, "AUTOTYPE: a Decorative and Educational Art," per post to any address.

The AUTOTYPE FINE ART CATALOGUE, 186 pp., free, per post, for Sixpence.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY, LONDON.

ROYAL ACADEMY of ARTS.—LAST WEEK.—The EXHIBITION will CLOSE on the EVENING of MONDAY, AUGUST 4th.

ROYAL ACADEMY of ARTS.—EVENING EXHIBITION.—The EXHIBITION will be OPEN in the EVENING from MONDAY, JULY 29th to MONDAY, AUGUST 4th (BANK HOLIDAY), from 7.30 to 10.30. Admission 6d. Catalogue 6d. On BANK HOLIDAY the Admission throughout the day will be 6d. On other days it will be as usual.

ROYAL SOCIETY of PAINTERS in WATER COLOURS.

The PRESENT EXHIBITION will CLOSE on SATURDAY, AUGUST 2nd.—5, PAUL MALL EAST, from 10 till 6. Admission 1s. Catalogue 1s. ALFRED D. FRIPP, R.W.S., Secretary.

MESSRS. DRUMMOND & CO., 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C. are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HAUFSTAENGL, of Munich, the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHURE. There is a steadily increasing demand for reproductions by this justly celebrated process for large plates and editions de luxe. For ordinary Book Illustrations, Catalogues, Advertisements, &c., Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. have the latest and most improved processes. Specimens on view. Prices on application.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

PRICE ONE SHILLING.

THE

TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE

CONTENTS FOR AUGUST, 1890.

- I. ALAS! By RHODA BROUGHTON, Author of "Nancy," &c. Part I. Chaps. XXVII.-XXX.
- II. WATTEAU—HIS LIFE and WORK.
- III. LETTERS of a WORLDLY WOMAN. I.-VI.
- IV. GOD'S MUSIC.
- V. RIVAROL.
- VI. THE WORKS of WILKIE COLLINS.
- VII. A PERILOUS AMOUR.
- VIII. DRYDEN'S PROSE WORKS.
- IX. THE FIRST of AUGUST, and FLAPPER SHOOTING.
- X. PEARL-POWDER. Chaps. XXXIV.-END.

POPULAR NOVELS.

NOW READY.

AUDREY.

By MARGERY HOLLIS,
Author of "Anthony Fairfax."

In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

A NEW NOVEL.

AN AUSTRALIAN GIRL.

In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"Amongst a fair number of good novels which have lately reached us from the Antipodes, none has possessed a deeper human interest, or has had passages of greater elevation or more decisive literary vigour than 'An Australian Girl.'"
Athenaeum.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "OUGHT WE TO VISIT HER!"

PEARL POWDER. By Mrs. ANNIE EDWARDS, Author of "Leah: a Woman of Fashion," &c. In 2 vols., crown 8vo.

"A clever and original story with plenty of life and movement about it."—Woman.

"The reader will find both mysterious plot and exciting incident."—Athenaeum.

"The character of the heroine is admirably contrasted with her surroundings: delightfully simple, and sweet and natural, she makes the whole story seem redolent of fresh spring flowers."—Manchester Examiner.

SECOND EDITION OF

ACTE. By Hugh Westbury,
Author of "Frederick Hazledon." In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THAT UNFORTUNATE MARRIAGE."

MADAME LEROUX. By FRANCES ELEANOR TROLLOPE, Author of "Black Spirits and White," &c. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"Mrs. Trollope's novels are always well worth reading."—Athenaeum.

"An exceedingly vivacious story with some very lively people in it. The rather complicated plot is unravelled with considerable cleverness, and the scenes change with amusing rapidity."—St. James's Gazette.

"It is a satisfaction to possess now-a-days an author who reminds us so often and so pleasantly of the best achievements of the great writers, and who never lapses into dullness or tediousness."—Manchester Examiner.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "A DREAMER."

MR. BRYANT'S MISTAKE. By KATHARINE WYLDE, Author of "An Ill-Regulated Mind," &c. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"To say that in this novel the characters and results of their actions are traced out step by step in the incidents and the plot of the story, and that they teach in this way an interesting legend, is only to give the author the praise which her skilful workmanship unquestionably deserves. The merits of this story are indisputable."—Athenaeum.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street,
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

HUTCHINSON'S LIBRARY OF POPULAR NOVELS

BY AUTHORS OF THE DAY.

In handsome cloth binding, gilt top, 2s. 6d. per vol.

By Sir JULIUS VOGEL, K.C.M.G.

ANNO DOMINI 2000; or Woman's Destiny.

By Mrs. RIDDELL.

AUSTIN FRIARS.
TOO MUCH ALONE.
THE RICH HUSBAND.
MAXWELL DREWITT.
FAR ABOVE RUBIES.
A LIFE'S ASSIZE.
THE WORLD in the CHURCH.
HOME, SWEET HOME.
PHEMIE KELLER.
RACE for WEALTH.
THE EARL'S PROMISE.
MORTOMLEY'S ESTATE.
FRANK SINCLAIR'S WIFE.
THE RULING PASSION.
MY FIRST and MY LAST LOVE.
CITY and SUBURB.
ABOVE SUSPICION.
JOY AFTER SORROW.

By FLORENCE MARRYAT.

MOUNT EDEN.
GERALD ESTCOURT.
LOVE'S CONFLICT.
TOO GOOD for HIM.
WOMAN AGAINST WOMAN.
FOR EVER and EVER.
NELLY BROOKE.
VERONIQUE.
HER LORD and MASTER.
THE PREY of the GODS.
THE GIRLS of FEVERSHAM.
MAD DUMARESQUE.
NO INTENTIONS.
PETRONEL.

[Shortly.]

By JOSEPH HATTON.

CLYTIE.
THE TALLANTS of BARTON.
IN the LAP of FORTUNE.
VALLEY of POPPIES.
NOT in SOCIETY.
CHRISTOPHER HENRICK.
CRUEL LONDON.
THE QUEEN of BOHEMIA.
BITTER SWEETS.

By J. SHERIDAN LE FANU.

CHECKMATE.
ALL in the DARK.
GUY DEVERELL.
THE ROSE and the KEY.
TENANTS of MALLORY.
WILLING to DIE.
WYLDER'S HAND.

By F. W. ROBINSON.

CHRISTIE'S FAITH.
CARRY'S CONFESSION.
UNDER the SPELL.
HOUSE of ELMORE.
MILLY'S HERO.
MR. STEWART'S INTENTIONS.
NO MAN'S FRIEND.
WILD FLOWERS.
POOR HUMANITY.
OWEN, a WAIF.
WOODLEIGH.
A WOMAN'S RANSOM.
MATTIE, a STRAY.
SLAVES of the RING.
ONE and TWENTY.

By M. BETHAM EDWARDS.

LOVE and MIRAGE.

[Shortly.]

By ANNIE THOMAS.

ON GUARD.
WALTER GORING.

By G. A. SALA.

QUITE ALONE.

LONDON: HUTCHINSON & CO.,
25, PATERNOSTER SQUARE.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO.'S LIST OF STANDARD NOVELS

NEW AND CHEAPER ISSUE.

Crown 8vo, fancy boards, 2s.; cloth, uniform, 2s. 6d.

- Lorna Doone. By R. D. BLACKMORE.
Far from the Madding Crowd. By THOMAS HARDY.
Senior Partner. By Mrs. RIDDELL.
Clara Vaughan. By R. D. BLACKMORE.
The Guardian Angel. By OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES.
Her Great Idea, and other Stories. By Mrs. WALFORD.
Some One Else. By Mrs. CROKER.
The Mayor of Casterbridge. By THOS. HARDY.
The Casting Away of Mrs. Lecks and Mrs. Aleshine; and the Dusanter. By FRANK R. STOCKTON, Author of "Rudder Grange."
Adela Cathcart. By GEORGE MACDONALD.
Cripps the Carrier. By R. D. BLACKMORE.
Dred. By HARRIET BEECHER STOWE.
The Trumpet Major. By THOMAS HARDY.
The Vasty Deep. By STUART CUMBERLAND.
Daisies and Buttercups. By Mrs. RIDDELL.
The Hand of Ethelberta. By THOMAS HARDY.
Mary Anerley. By R. D. BLACKMORE.

* To be followed by others.

SEA STORIES.

By W. CLARK RUSSELL.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION. In uniform crown 8vo volumes, half-leather, gilt top, 3s. 6d. each.

- An Ocean Free. A Strange Voyage.
Lance. A Sailor's Sweetheart.
The Frozen Pirate. The Wreck of the "Grosvenor."
A Sea Queen. Little Loo.
The Lady Maud. John Holdsworth, Chief Mate.
My Watch Below.
Jack's Courtship.

"That richly gifted chronicler of the great waters, Mr. W. Clark Russell, whose knowledge, imagination, and graphic power, each being excellent of its kind, unite in a marine style which has no modern parallel."—Daily Telegraph.

PRICE ONE SHILLING.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE.

AUGUST NUMBER.—CONTENTS.

- PORT TARASCON: the Last Adventures of the Illustrious Tartarin.—111. ALPHONSE DUBET. With 17 Illustrations, Drawn by Louis Rossé, Louis Montaut, and F. de Myrbach.
IMPRESSIONS of BERLIN. THODOS CHIL. Illustrations, Drawn by T. de Thulstrup, and Charles Mente.
Initial Illustration.—Café Bauer—The Brandenburg Gate—The Postilion—Statue of Frederick the Great—King's Guard-house and the Arsenal—The Guard-mount—In the Courtyard of the Arsenal—In the Arsenal—Statue of Frederick William, the great Elector—The Reichshalle—The Victory Column—Krohn's Garden—The Charlottenburg Races—Berlin on the Spree—Troops reviewed by the Emperor—Tail-piece.
MAGELLAN and the PACIFIC. EDWARD EVERETT HALE. Illustrations from Old Prints, and a Drawing by A. R. Wand.
Fernando Magellan—Magellan's Ships—Map of the Strait—Illes Infantes.
TO an OLD APPLE-TREE: a Poem. COATES KINNEY.
THE BATHLEY AFFAIR: a Story. LUCY C. LILLIE.
WESTWARD: a Poem. JOHN B. TABB.
CUSTER'S LAST BATTLE. Capt. CHARLES KING, U.S.A. With a Map.
A WALK UP the AVENUE. RICHARD HARDING DAVIS.
PLANTIN-MORETUS. OCTAVIA HENSEL. Illustrations, From Photographs by J. Maes, Antwerp.
Christopher Plantin—Medallion of Balthazar Moretus—Covered Gallery and Staircase—The Court-yard—Portrait Gallery—Old Presses—The Library.
THE WORLD IS TOO MUCH WITH US: a Sonnet. WILLIAM WORDSWORTH. With 3 Illustrations, Drawn by Alfred Parsons.
AN IMPRESSION: a Poem. RENNELL RODD.
THE UNCLE of an ANGEL: a Story. THOMAS A. JANVIER. With 9 Illustrations (including Frontispiece). Drawn by W. T. Smedley.
SOME GEOLOGY of CHICAGO and VICINITY. ELLEN B. BASTIN.
THE UNDER LIFE: a Poem. HARRIETT PRESCOTT SPORFORD.
LIZZIE BRUBAKER: a Story. LINA REDWOOD FAIRFAX. With 2 Illustrations. Drawn by Alice Barber.
A CONVENT at ROME. Dr. FRANCIS PARKMAN.
STREET LIFE in INDIA. EDWIN LORD WEEKS. Illustrations, Drawn by Edwin Lord Weeks.
A Scene in India—Bullock Feeding in the Street—Bird-house in a Public Square—The Bridal Procession—At the Foot of the Tower—Along the Ghats—The Successful Robber.
&c. &c.

"When the public find they can get, in Harper's Monthly Magazine, one hundred and sixty royal octavo pages of letterpress, and about seventy illustrations, for one shilling, they are pretty sure to invest in it."—ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, SEARLE, and RIVINGTON, Limited,
St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, Fleet Street, E.C.

SATURDAY, JULY 26, 1890.

No. 951, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

The Influence of Sea-Power upon History, 1660-1783. By Captain A. T. Mahan, United States Navy. (Sampson Low.)

THIS is a remarkable book of no common interest. The author is a captain in the navy of the United States; and he justly regrets the marked tendency of his countrymen, during the last twenty years, to direct the national energies inland towards the development of their immense territory, and to turn away from the sea and maritime rule. The purpose of this work is to show the importance of what he calls "sea-power," in the history of the world, in the seventeen and eighteenth centuries—that is, the effect of national greatness on the sea upon national prosperity, and upon the march of empire.

We have, indeed, seldom read a more instructive volume—one so perfectly combining breadth of view, real knowledge of history, and technical science in all that relates to the naval profession. But we can scarcely agree with Capt. Mahan that he has treated an almost untouched subject. The importance of power at sea has been illustrated by more than one thoughtful and able writer; but it is true to say of this book that no previous writer has dealt with the question with equal fulness, within somewhat contracted limits, or has so clearly shown the relation it bears to the history of the rise and the decline of states. What maritime ascendancy really means, and how it bears on the fortunes of nations, is explained with admirable insight and skill; and the subject is detached from what is foreign to it, and is placed before us in its true aspect. The account, too, of what is incidental to it—naval operations and the encounters of fleets—is careful, elaborate, and thoroughly worked out; and we would especially commend the wise reflections of the author on naval tactics and strategy. Some Englishmen may, perhaps, think that the book exhibits too strong French sympathies; but if this be the case, it is no harm that an intelligent foreigner should throw some weight into the balance against the mass of prejudice which, in this matter, too largely prevails.

We pass by Capt. Mahan's chapter on the elements of national power at sea. They are nearly comprised in Napoleon's phrase when he exclaimed at Ulm that "ships, colonies, and commerce" were the real wants of France. Nor can we dwell on the thoughtful chapter on the conditions of maritime greatness; we shall merely remark that if territory, population, government, and geographical features are important factors in the result, "race" probably is the most important of all. Capt. Mahan has not dwelt enough on this; but it is indisputable, we think, that the Teutonic races, including the great Scandinavian stock, have more aptitude for the sea than the Celtic races; and this goes far to explain the difference between the history of England, France, and Spain on the sea. A word must be said, however, on the excellent review of the effects of national power at sea contained in the opening part of this book; it is a philosophic estimate of a high order. The author, indeed, has stopped before the period when this kind of ascendancy was most conspicuous—the first years of the present century. The power of England at sea saved a little island from the attack of overwhelming military force; made our country the treasurer of half-conquered Europe; sent Napoleon to Russia, and caused his overthrow; secured, in Portugal, a field for Wellington; and, in the midst of world-wide war, enormously increased the national greatness. Capt. Mahan, however, has dwelt on two instances, one in ancient and one in modern history, which strikingly illustrate the lesson he teaches. Rome, without a fleet in the first Punic war, had a great navy when she waged the second. And the command of the sea which she thus obtained gave her the advantage of an interior line in her contest with her African foe; compelled Hannibal to invade her, with enormous loss to his army, along the immense circuit from the Ebro, across the Pyrenees and the Alps; enabled her to destroy his power in Spain; and, finally, notwithstanding tremendous defeats, baffled the mighty genius who had brought her to the verge of destruction, and, after the Trebbia and Cannae, opened the way to Zama. The second example is well known; and England should steadily keep it in view. At the outbreak of the Seven Years' War, the power of England at sea, which had been growing with a vigorous growth since the Peace of Utrecht, was easily supreme over that of France, which had been declining for more than half a century. In the contest that followed, the French fleets were annihilated as completely by Hawke and his fellows as they were afterwards at the Nile and Trafalgar; and, notwithstanding the craft of Dupleix, and the heroism of Montcalm and other warriors, France, because she had no hold on the sea, lost an empire in the Far West and the East which has passed away from her hands for ever.

Power at sea largely depends on commerce; but its principal element is naval force. Capt. Mahan's sketch of the rise and progress of the navies of England, of France, and of Holland at the period when he begins his narrative is well designed, and deserves attention. England had long claimed the sovereignty of the seas; and Charles I. and Cromwell, very different rulers, did much to vindicate this proud pretension. But England had rivals in France and Holland; the French navy was a great work of Richelieu; and the Dutch had a very powerful military marine—this, like the English, and unlike the French, which was distinctively the creation of the state, being the armed force of a free trading nation. Fierce wars at sea grew out of this rivalry; and Capt. Mahan's account of these conflicts is decidedly the best we have ever read. The naval battles of this age have two special features: the orderly manoeuvres of the eighteenth century were not the habitual mode of tactics; instead of exchanging broadsides in well-arranged lines, fleets closed with each other in deadly strife; and fireships were a powerful auxiliary force, which, in some instances, wrought fearful havoc. These mêlées of the deep were, therefore, very different from the methodical combats of a later day: they were more fierce, more terrible, and far more bloody; but it is a mistake to suppose that they did not give scope to powers of the highest order on the part of the chiefs. The tactics, in fact, of Monk and De Ruyter—Capt. Mahan might have added, of Blake—had far more in common with those of Nelson than with those of 1720-1770; they foreshadowed St. Vincent, the Nile, and Trafalgar; and they frequently exhibited rare skill and genius. In these hard-fought engagements the English and Dutch fleets beyond dispute carried off the palm. It is significant that De Ruyter always opposed, in the arduous struggle of 1672, a small force to the French squadrons; and though Tourville was a capable man, feeble as he was after Beachy Head, he is not to be compared to the famous Dutchman. The French navy, in truth, even in those days—the best it has seen—was an artificial product; the officers were good, but the sailors poor; unlike the English and Dutch, it was not of spontaneous growth, and did not exhibit the national genius. Capt. Mahan has not dwelt enough on this; we should add his remarks on the age of fireships, and on their disuse in a subsequent age, are valuable as regards the part which torpedoes may possibly play in modern naval warfare.

The powers at sea of the maritime states was definitely settled, for many years, at the close of the War of the Spanish Succession. The resources of Holland had been exhausted in the maintenance of a great standing army; her navy had been immensely reduced; and she ceased to be a rival of England on the seas. The same may, in some measure, be said of France; her fleets had dwindled away, or had been destroyed; and her maritime trade had well-nigh perished. On the other hand, England had begun to possess the rule on the waves she had long claimed; she bridled the Mediterranean from Gibraltar; she had become dangerously near Canada, and her navies, military and commercial, had largely increased. This condition of affairs continued to go on. Through the little wars after the Peace of Utrecht, the greatness of England at sea grew with a steady growth; and when the Seven Years' War began, she was unquestionably the dominant power on the ocean. A change, however, had occurred in naval tactics, and in the naval battles of the age; and it survived even the inter-necine struggle of 1756-63. War at sea—and this, too, was seen on land—became more methodical and less daring; fleets encountered each other in parallel lines, and seldom came into close collision; and the fierce onslaughts of the seventeenth century were replaced by engagements fought at a distance. English seamanship and skill, as a rule, prevailed, and came off victorious in these conflicts; but the results, decisive in the long run, were seldom striking or even brilliant—there was nothing like the battles of the Four Days, or the Texel. The superiority, however, which England maintained was due not only to the great number and efficiency of her squadrons afloat; it was attributable, too, to a double circumstance. The English admirals, as a rule, assumed the offensive, the French stood timidly on the defensive; and this difference almost assured the result. Yet, as we have said, great battles were not frequent; and even the destruction of Conflans's fleet by Hawke was largely caused by superior seamanship. The French, too, had committed themselves to the system of subordinating naval to military ends, which continued down to the present century. A fleet with them supported an army, and was not an independent armed force; and the consequences were not seldom disastrous. At the close of the Seven Years' War, England was as supreme at sea as she was after the day of Trafalgar; the French flag had almost disappeared; and France, we have said, had lost a great colonial empire.

The next great naval war is of the highest interest, and was waged under conditions wholly different from that which ended in 1763. France was not embarrassed by a continental struggle, as had been the case in the Seven Years' War; and she had made immense exertions to increase her navy. Under the government, too, of Charles III., the fleets of Spain, which had sunk to nothingness, had become, to a certain extent, powerful; and the Family Compact made the two powers combine in an effort to avenge the disasters they had suffered at sea twenty years before. On the other hand, Pitt was no more supreme; the English navy had declined under weak ministries; and the maritime strength of England was tasked and divided by the great revolt of the American colonies. The French and Spanish fleets, in numbers at least, were superior to those of their ancient enemy; and the belligerents were not far from equal at sea. The strategy of the contest that followed, Capt. Mahan thinks, was on both sides bad; D'Orvilliers did nothing while he held the Channel; the long siege of Gibraltar was a wasteful mistake; and though the surrender of Yorktown was due to De Grasse, the French lost opportunities over and over again, and made their operations at sea depend on the land. The combinations of the English were, however, faulty. It was discreditable that our shores were not better guarded; no use was made of the line of the Hudson and little of the Virginian Bays; and our admirals overrated their foes, and stood on the defensive when it was weak to do so. The tactics of the contending navies, in the main, followed the old model: that is, battles were fought on parallel lines; and though the seamanship of the English was very superior, it did not lead to decisive results. But, whatever Capt. Mahan may say, signs were not wanting of a new and coming era. The author is scarcely just to the illustrious Rodney. It may be that he did not design the famous manoeuvre of breaking the line, the prelude of a revolution in tactics at sea, in his famous encounter with De Grasse; but we see something of the kind when he met De Guichen; and we would place him far above the chiefs of the old school, if we except Hawke, and perhaps Boscawen. On the French side Suffren stands proudly eminent. Capt. Mahan's account of his contest with Hughes is an admirable passage in naval history; but though Suffren was a man of genius, we should say that he was rather a chief of great resource, than a naval tactician of the first order. His real merit, and this was very great, was that he broke with the later traditions of the French navy; that he always assumed a bold offensive; that, like Nelson afterwards, his great object was to destroy or cripple the enemy's ships.

Capt. Mahan's book, we have said, stops before the era of the great war with France. Two causes concurred to secure for England complete supremacy at sea once more. The Revolution was ruinous to the French navy, and Nelson was a man of commanding genius. These conditions, however, will hardly recur; and though England still has a more powerful navy than that of any continental state, and probably in these days of iron and coal has special advantages for naval warfare which she did not possess a century ago, she may perhaps not again boast of a Nile or a Trafalgar fought in years that lie in the womb of the future. Her maritime position is not free from danger. She cannot feed her millions from her own products, and must draw necessities of life from abroad; her commerce afloat is of enormous volume, and offers a tempting prey to a daring enemy; and her democracy may not have the careful forethought steadily to provide for all that she requires at sea which her aristocratic rulers of the past displayed. These are problems, however, that have to be solved. We shall merely remark that "race," in the new circumstances of naval warfare, will more than ever make its superiority felt. We wish we could dwell on the admirable remarks of the author on the relations between the strategy and the tactics of war at sea in past ages and at the present day. The first, he truly says, are not much modified; the last have necessarily been greatly changed; but strategy and even tactics will always have some principles in common which deserve attention.

We have outrun our limits, and commend this book to our readers as a most excellent one.

WILLIAM O'CONNOR MORRIS.

My Lady Nicotine. By J. M. Barrie. (Hodder & Stoughton.)

It may be doubted if Mr. Barrie has acted quite wisely—although he is only following the multitude of modern essayists of the light-horse order—in publishing a volume of humorous papers so shortly after the majority of them have already done duty in a daily newspaper. For one thing, it is extremely difficult to get a title under which they can all be properly placed. It may be allowed that there is a strong odour of tobacco about most of the papers that appear in this collection. But not about all. Take, for example, the school-boy chapters—the nineteenth and twentieth—giving an account of Primus and his letters to his uncle. They are perhaps the best in the book; the fun in them is extra sec. But they are blameless of nicotine, although Primus makes a telephone out of tobacco-tins and has a passion for "snipping cigars." Then the various dreams, which are recorded in full—especially that excellent bit of fooling about the man who commits suicide because he has to prepare two volumes of Jubilee odes for publication—have a very remote connexion with what is supposed to be the central idea of the book. Mr. Barrie would probably have done better had he taken the course adopted by most devotees of discursiveness, and republished his papers in the form of a book to be dipped in and gloated over at odd moments, and made no pretext of their being connected by any thing but the spirit in which they are written.

This, however, by way of protest, merely. Take My Lady Nicotine as it stands, and it is not too much to say of it that it is the funniest book—I say "funniest" advisedly, though reluctantly—of its kind that has been published for a quarter of a century. It is not comedy in the present or even in the Douglas Jerrold sense, although, by the way, I am inclined to think that if any man alive is fit to take up the work of the author of

"Beneath this weeping willow's shade,
Here, reader, lies a lady's maid,"

Mr. Barrie is the man. There is no doubt a want of humanity about his fun. His Pettigrews, and Scrymgeours, and Moggridges do not seem to be beings of flesh and blood: they do not eat sausages or Welsh rarebits; they have a soul above green peas; with them courtship is a farce and marriage a comic opera. They care for nothing but their Arcadia Mixture and the fancies it breeds. In these fancies the world is prettily and noiselessly topsyturveyed. If one persists in reading them right through, as they are arranged in chapters, one is sure to find them tedious. The best thing to do is to take them in evening pipefuls. For my part, I prefer to open the volume at random, and then I get such a whiff from an irreproachable Bohemia as:

"Scrymgeour was an artist and a man of means, so proud of his profession that he gave all his pictures fancy prices, and so wealthy that he could have bought them. To him I went when I wanted money—though it must not be thought that I borrowed. In the days of the Arcadia Mixture I had no bank account. As my cheques dribbled in, I stuffed them into a torn leather case that was kept together by a piece of twine; and when Want tapped at my chamber door, I drew out the cheque that seemed most willing to come, and exchanged with Scrymgeour."

Or I come upon such comic commonsense as this:

"If you are at a dinner table of men only, take your host aside, and in a few well-considered sentences find out from him what kind of men you are to sit between during dinner. Perhaps one of them is an African traveller. A knowledge of this prevents your playing into his hands by remarking that the papers are full of the relief of Emin Pasha. These private inquiries will also save you from talking about Mr. Chamberlain to a neighbour who turns out to be the son of a Birmingham elector. Allow that man his chance, and he will not only give you the Birmingham gossip, but what individual electors said about Mr. Chamberlain to the banker or the tailor, and what the grocer did the moment the poll was declared, with particulars about the antiquity of Birmingham and the fishing to be had in the neighbourhood. What you ought to do is to talk about Emin Pasha to this man, and to the traveller about Mr. Chamberlain, taking care, of course, to speak in a low voice."

Or I come upon this letter written to Mr. Burnand by Moggridge in his assumed character of editor of Punch:—"Sir,—The jokes which you forwarded to Punch on Monday last are so good that we used them three years ago."

It is to be hoped that Mr. Barrie will take to heart these too true words which appear in Mr. W. E. Henley's new volume: "It is an age of easy writing and still easier reading; our authors produce for us much in the manner of the silk-worm—only their term of life is longer." It would be no difficult matter for Mr. Barrie to become a silk-worm—a producer of airy nothings at so many guineas each. But he is a connoisseur first and a writer of humorous sketches only next. Therein, let us hope, he will find and keep salvation.

WILLIAM WALLACE.

Notes on the Hebrew Text of the Books of Samuel. By S. R. Driver, D.D. (Oxford: Clarendon Press.)

THE announcement of a Commentary on the Books of Samuel from the pen of so eminent a scholar as Prof. Driver was sure to excite much interest and expectation; for to these Books attention has been in no small degree directed in recent controversy concerning the religious history of Israel. Indeed, on the very threshold, in the first three chapters of the First Book, we are confronted by the problems relating to the tribal and family limitation of the sacerdotal orders, the authenticity of the history of the tabernacle, the disordered condition of the text and the probability of intentional interpolation. Thus, in the very first verse, though Samuel was destined to sacerdotal functions, his father appears as an Ephraimite. True, the Chronicler (1 Chron. vi.) traces Samuel's descent from Levi; but, as is well-known, in relation to all matters pertaining to the priesthood and sacred service, the statements given in the Chronicles require to be received with great caution. As Prof. Driver observes:

"The addition Ephrathi seems to show that the narrator has no consciousness of Samuel's Levitical descent." "It is a question whether the traditions embodied in Chronicles have been handed down uniformly in their original form, and whether in some cases the genealogies have not been artificially completed. The supposition that Samuel was really of Ephraimite descent, and was only in later times reckoned as a Levite, appears to be the simplest explanation of the divergence."

Nor is it merely Samuel's legitimate descent which is questionable, even that of the high priest Eli may well be matter for doubt.

But in relation to the sanctuary at Shiloh, questions present themselves of still greater interest. If the Pentateuchal history is to be taken as fully authentic, it would seem that this sanctuary must have been the sacred tent, with its curtains of linen and blue and purple and scarlet. But the language of 1 Sam. i. 9, which brings into view Eli sitting by a doorpost of the temple, indicates a different and more substantial erection. The explanation that the sacred tent or tabernacle had become encased with buildings, and now stood in the centre of a quadrangular erection of more solid materials, called the temple or hekal, though it may in itself be conceived as possible, does not unfortunately harmonise with the facts. Not to press the statement that Samuel opened the doors in the morning, we may find that it was in the temple or hekal, which in this case was clearly no external structure, that the sacred lamp, "the lamp of God," was burning. And here, too, Samuel lay down to sleep, a fact which, it need not be said, would have been entirely abhorrent to the provisions of the Levitical code. For the passage (iii. 3) must not be interpreted as meaning that Samuel slept in a chamber forming part of the neighbouring outward enclosure. Prof. Kirkpatrick adopts this explanation ("Cambridge Bible for Schools"); but at the same time he more justly observes that the order of the Hebrew requires the translation that "Samuel was lying down in the temple of Jehovah, where the ark of God was." It is clear enough that the narrator did not intend us to understand that Samuel was sleeping in some outer contiguous chamber, but rather in close proximity to the ark itself. There is no indication of a specially holy place reserved for the ark, and in some manner separated from the rest of the sanctuary, though the probability is that such a separation, if it existed, was effected by doors. And I may observe that it is in connexion with the mode of separating the most holy place that there arises an argument of no slight cogency in favour of the theory which regards as unhistorical the account of the origin of the Tabernacle given in the Pentateuch. In Solomon's Temple, it is clear, the separation was effected by doors (1 Kings vi. 31). Of the existence of a veil there is here no mention whatever. Similarly Ezekiel, having in view, no doubt, the arrangements of the temple with which he had been familiar, says nothing of a veil, but speaks merely of doors (Ezek. xli. 23, 24). When, however, we turn to the description which the Chronicler gives of Solomon's Temple, we have no longer any indication of dividing doors; but instead of these there is a veil (2 Chron. iii. 14), and the description of the veil, with its "blue, and purple, and crimson," and its figures of cherubim, agrees substantially with that given of the veil of the Tabernacle in Exod. xxxvi. 35. But both the divergence and agreement are fully accounted for by the theory above alluded to, and now so rapidly gaining acceptance among more serious students of the Old Testament.

According to this theory, the Chronicler wrote after the Pentateuchal account of the Tabernacle had come into existence, and adapted his history thereto. But, as I have said, the narrator in Samuel tells us nothing of the screen which separated the holy of holies from the rest of the sanctuary.

It should not, however, be by any means overlooked that in 1 Sam. ii. 22 there is clearly what is intended as a mention of the Tabernacle, though there are good grounds for assenting to the opinion of Prof. Driver, that the clause in which it occurs "is probably not part of the original text":—

"Now Eli was very old; and he heard all that his sons did unto all Israel, and how that they lay with the women that did service at the door of the tent of meeting" (R. V.).

Not only does the context speak not of a tent, but of a hekal, or of a house with doors, the Septuagint also in this place knows nothing either of the "tent of meeting" or of what occurred there. Moreover, there is a very remarkable resemblance between the language employed in this verse and that of Exod. xxxviii. 8, which tells of the brazen laver made from the melted mirrors of the serving-women. It is perhaps also worthy of mention that the fault spoken of in Samuel is quite in accord with the love of personal decoration shown by the possession of so many mirrors.* Wellhausen rejects also the threatening of the nameless man of God (1 Sam. ii. 27 sqq.) consequent upon the sin of Eli's sons, observing that nameless men of God are always foisted in (ingeschoben) to utter their oracles and then to vanish.

But perhaps the clearest and most obvious indication of a disordered or composite text presents itself when the account of David's introduction to Saul in 1 Samuel xvi. is compared with that to be found in the following chapter. Prof. Driver observes: "The two narratives are, in fact, two parallel, and, taken strictly, incompatible accounts of David's introduction to the history." In the first, David comes before us as a valiant man of war; in the second he is, when he accepts the challenge of Goliath, a mere youth, skilled only in the concerns of the pasture and the sheepfold. The Septuagint (Cod. B) lessens to some extent the difficulty by omitting a considerable portion of chap. xvii. Prof. Driver, however, appears to regard with favour the opinion that the verses in question were already in the Hebrew text, but that "the translators—or more probably, perhaps, the scribe of the Hebrew MS. used by them—omitted the verses in question from harmonistic motives."

Prof. Driver speaks cautiously as to the riddle which presents itself when 1 Samuel xvii., with its account of David's victory over Goliath, is compared with 2 Samuel xxi. 19 and 1 Chron. xx. 5. To say the least, the name of "Lahmi, the brother of Goliath," wears a suspicious appearance to the student conversant with the Hebrew text; and there is a pretty obvious relation between the introduction of Lahmi and the historical character of David's great exploit.

* No translation of the word maroth other than "mirrors" seems at all admissible.

In using Prof. Driver's book the reader, of course, is supposed to have the Hebrew text open before him, and on this account there is some difficulty in dealing adequately with the work in a review. To say that it contains very much that is valuable and important is almost superfluous. No doubt the critic may sometimes incline to a divergence of opinion. For example, it may be perfectly true that both A. V. and R. V. are wrong when they tell us that the men of Beth-shemesh "looked into the ark" (1 Sam. vi. 19), and that the Hebrew phrase employed cannot bear the meaning "look into;" but there is clearly ground for demurring to Prof. Driver's suggestion that to express this sense the writer would have been likely to use raah el tok. Then, again, it may seem that there should have been some indication of the probable connexion of hekal with the Accadian egal and the Assyrian ekallu—a connexion which Oppert has the credit of having pointed out. Possibly, like some other Semitists, Prof. Driver may not regard the results of Assyriology with pre-eminent favour, though, of course, the omission may proceed from another cause.

I ought to add that the Commentary is preceded by a considerable Introduction, the first section of which gives an interesting account of "The Early History of the Hebrew Alphabet," illustrated by admirable collotype facsimiles of the Siloam Inscription, the Carpentras Stele, an Egyptian Aramaic Papyrus in the British Museum, and a recently discovered Inscription of Tabnith, King of Zidon. There are sections, also, on Early Hebrew Orthography, the Chief Ancient Versions of the Old Testament, and Characteristics of the Chief Ancient Versions of Samuel. There is also an Appendix to the Introduction, with a translation of the Inscription of Mesha on the Moabite stone.

THOMAS TYLER.

TWO TRANSLATIONS FROM THE GERMAN.

Goethe's Reineke Fuchs, West-Eastern Divan, and Achilleid. Translated by Alexander Rogers. (Bell.)

Heine as Novelist and Dramatist. In English, by R. McLintock. (Roper & Drowley.)

WHY is it that, with the exception of Faust, Goethe's poetry hardly takes hold of the normal English mind as that of Schiller does? The question is easier to ask than to answer: perhaps the saying—Wordsworth's, if I remember rightly—that Goethe's poetry is "not inevitable enough," supplies us with a hint towards a solution. In an English dress, Goethe's poetry often seems so much more meditative than fiery, so much more learned than inspired, that English readers are apt to think that he is to Schiller as Jonson is to Shakspeare, or Tennyson to Shelley. I do not defend this opinion; but any one, I think, who reads Mr. Rogers's version of Reineke Fuchs, and of the West-östliche Divan, will understand how such a judgment comes to be entertained.

Reineke Fuchs, we all know, was begun just after Goethe's military experiences with Brunswick's army, and finished after the capitulation of Mainz. It was, says Mr. Lewes,

"commenced as a relief. It was turned to as an 'unholy world-bible,' wherein the human race exhibited its unadorned and unfeigned animal nature with marvellous humour, in contrast to the bloody exhibition which the Reign of Terror then offered as a spectacle to the world."

No doubt Mr. Lewes is right in his facts; but perhaps he lays too much stress on the contrast, too little on the likeness. After all, there is a kinship between the triumph of knavery and that of anarchy: some Reineke generally emerges out of the latter, and plays pranks to the distress of the world—perhaps for twenty years—till Malepartus is stormed at last.

But if Reineke Fuchs is too leisurely and long—if it sometimes tempts us to say that if it were one-third shorter it would be three times as good—it is nevertheless delightful reading; and so, we think, Mr. Rogers has found it. The knave is so irrepressible, so resourceful, so charmingly hypocritical, so dexterously penitent on the gallows ladder! The fourth Canto is delightful, and Mr. Rogers has risen to the occasion, I think; e.g., in Reineke's humble confession (p. 54, ll. 199-212):

"Forthwith availing himself of the respite allowed him, he thus spoke:

'Spiritus Domini, help me now! in all this assemblage

No single man do I see whom I have not injured in some way,

First, when only a little fellow I was, and was hardly Weaned from my mother's breasts, I followed the bent of my craving,

Roaming among the lambs and kids that out in the open

Near to the herd were scattered. I heard the bleat of their voices

Far too gladly; a longing for daintier nourishment seized me.

Quickly I learned to know them. To death did I worry a lambkin,

Licked up its blood—it tasted so nice—and four of the youngest

Kidlings I killed and ate them up, and gained greater practice;

Neither birds nor geese did I spare, nor ducklings nor chickens,

Wheresoever I found, and many of those that I slaughtered

Buried in sand, when to eat them all I'd no inclination."

This is certainly not faultless, in a metrical sense. It is not easy to persuade the fourth line and the last to run affably as hexameters; but it conveys very well the seemingly artless candour of the original. The death of Lampe, in Canto VI., and the finale, in Canto XII., are both well rendered.

I am not aware if the entire West-östliche Divan has been translated into English by anyone except Mr. Rogers, though scattered poems have certainly been rendered. Old age, it appears to me, is visible in the collection as a whole, not only in the sense that mellow learning and wisdom so often take the place of poetry, but in the inequality of the poems, and the spark-like brevity of the inspiration. The "Book of the Singer" is delightful, and the "Book of Hafiz" and "Book of Love" hardly less so; but the "Book of Reflections" certainly hangs rather heavily. Here is a little poem from the first-named, which shows Mr. Rogers at his best (p. 210):

"SELF-CONFIDENCE.

"In what is all the secret found
That man should healthy be?
Each should delight to hear the sound
That tends to harmony.

"Away with what disturbs thy course!
Away with gloomy strife!
Before he sings, or ceases song,
The poet must have life.

"Then, though the brazen clang of life
May through the spirit roar,
Poets will reconcile themselves,
Though they at heart be sore."

And here is another (p. 202) which might almost seem to have given the hint for Browning's "Through the Metidja to Abdel-Kadr."

"SENSE OF FREEDOM.

"Let me exulting in my saddle ride!
While in your tents and huts ye may abide;
And joyfully I'll ride afar,
Nought o'er my turban, but the star.

"The stars as guides on land and seas
He places in the sky,
That ye yourselves with them may please
Whene'er ye look on high."

The Achilleid is so purely a fragment that its chief interest lies in its being the written record of Goethe's design of linking the Iliad to the Odyssey. The best passage in the translation is, perhaps, the speech of Athene (p. 372) beginning, "Schickliches hast du gesprochen." But, whatever may be said against Goethe's hexameters, is not "Mnemosyne wird eh mit ihren herrlichen Töchtern" better than

"Sooner will Mnemosyne, with her glorious daughters"?

On the whole, Reineke Fuchs seems to suit Mr. Rogers best.

Mr. McLintock, in endeavouring to present Heine to us as novelist and dramatist, stands at this disadvantage, that most people who have fallen in love with Heine have been fascinated either by the "Buch der Lieder" or by the "Reisebilder." Such people are very unlikely to be charmed by "Almansor," or even by "William Ratcliff"; and if "The Rabbi of Bacharach" has touches in it that recall some of the happiest parts of the "Reisebilder," it has also a leaving-off—one cannot say an end, for it is absolutely fragmentary—which reminds one of some of the sickening parts of the Lucca Journal. The interview of Don Isaac with Elle Schnapper will certainly not be denounced by me as immoral; it is nothing so vigorous as that, but disgusting—calculated to make a plough-boy laugh. Sterne and Heine are alike in this, that neither knows when humour is being suffocated in a bad smell. As it was in the Book of Fate that the "Rabbi of Bacharach" should be burnt in manuscript by accident, all but the first three chapters, and never re-written, it is almost a pity that Fate did not take half a chapter more. Yet one longs to know what came to the Rabbi and Beautiful Sara, and wonders what the sardonic spirit of Heine would say if informed that some parts of Europe are still struggling in the grasp of a belief that Jews sacrifice a Christian child at the Passover, and that very high ecclesiastical dignitaries indeed welcome the literature of this loathsome mediaeval dream.

But while the "Rabbi of Bacharach" is a fragment that might have become a novel, nothing would make "Almansor" a real tragedy. The whole thing is subjective; the scorching drops of his reluctant and unbelieving baptism seem as if they were already on Heine's brow; there is not a character in the whole piece, but only the pathos of a thwarted love, and the wrangling of people converted against their will. Autobiographical interest it has, but not dramatic interest; and the spasmodic style is sometimes insufferable, e.g. (p 114):

"Falling, I hear

Thy mocking laughter, see thy magic shell
Turn to a flame-wheeled coffin, and thy doves
To dragons, whom with black viper bridle-reins
Thou guidest, while I, shrieking awful curses,
Plumb down to hell's gulf fall; the very devils
Grow fearful and turn pale to hear my words
And meet my glance of madness! I must go—
There is a curse yet, which if I should speak
Eblis himself must pale," &c., &c.

It is really more like the desperation of some hero of Werner's than the work of a man of first-rate genius. "William Ratcliff" is better, though almost more ghostly; there is real power in the duel scene, where the spirits of his previous victims parry Ratcliff's thrusts, and secure the victory to Douglas. But I repeat that Heine's reputation as a poet cannot be raised by these dramas.

Mr. McIntock has added, at the end of the book, versions of six poems—"Vitzliputzli," "The Slave Ship," "Sir Olaf," "The Villain of Bergen," "The Poet's Last Vision," and "Bimini." Of these, "Sir Olaf," and "The Poet's Last Vision" are much the best—indeed the last-named, painful as it is, is supremely powerful. The "Slave Ship" is rather hideous than painful. All through the book, Mr. McIntock shows vigorous power of versification. Would he not do well to spend it (if on translation at all) on the translation of masterpieces?

E. D. A. MORSHEAD.

The Rev. J. G. Wood: his Life and Work.
By the Rev. Theodore Wood. (Cassell.)

THE life of a father by his son is one that disarms a reviewer as much as it must embarrass the author. Pudor tam cari capitis naturally prompts the latter to refrain from laying dark shades upon his canvas, while the reviewer shrinks from anything that savours of seething a kid in its mother's milk.

As might be expected, therefore, the life of the naturalist is here subordinated to his work. Little or nothing is said of the thousand little points at which one character is ever touching and acting upon others; the history of Wood's inner life, its moral or spiritual experiences, the growth of his mind, the multitudinous lights and shadows which a perfect portrait demands, are entirely passed over. Hardly any of his letters enable us to form a fuller notion of the man apart from the naturalist, and what are inserted are of small value. Mr. Wood died in February 1889, so that sufficient time has scarcely elapsed to enable anyone to pronounce a true judgment on the value of his life-work.

Readers will be most impressed with this book as a record of hard work. Day by day and every day, often from half-past four or five in the morning until half-past eleven at night, with brief intervals for meals and exercise, Wood sat at his desk writing, correcting proofs, and amassing facts. Then came the determination to lecture. This involved laborious work in making arrangements, travelling, setting up his apparatus, catching trains for another engagement, and—what in such cases presses with such weight upon most men—making and amusing fresh acquaintances. All over the United Kingdom Wood thus travelled and lectured, seemingly for ten years. Twice he visited America to lecture. The misfortune was that literary work fell back while he lectured, and any intermission of lectures meant loss of interest in them on the part of his audiences and consequent loss of money to himself. To carry on the two activities together was incompatible with human strength. The attempt to do so threw Wood into bad health, broke him down gradually; and at length he naturally collapsed under the strain. It seems a hard, cheerless life, but it doubtless had its consolations for Wood. It certainly has lessons for all who hear it told, though perhaps not those which the naturalist would have desired it should impress. Work, indeed, was a necessary of life for Wood. During 1876 and 1878, when great depression in the book trade forbade much encouragement from publishers to authors, partly from absence of work and partly from the reaction consequent upon previous labours, he became seriously ill. Repression of bodily and mental energy meant for him misery.

It is curious to find from Mr. Bradley that Wood, when a young man, sat as a gymnast for his character of "little Mr. Bouncer" in Verdant Green. From Oxford he passed to Erith on being ordained, and here most of his regular clerical work was performed. As Precentor of the Canterbury Choral Union he did good service in inculcating reverence among the singers and in organising church music and choirs. Then came literature and lectures, the latter of which are dwelt upon at too great length in this book. His first American tour was a success, the second a comparative failure. Wood was a proficient in all games of skill; a great reader, but no politician; devoted to pets of all kinds—dogs, cats, slugs, chameleons, birds out of doors, lions and tigers in menageries, over whom he acquired ascendancy by sprinkling a few drops of lavender water on a rolled-up ball of paper and throwing it into their dens. One of these pets, a vicious raven, was not mourned at its death.

"Grip died of too much linen, a couple of towels having been blown from a neighbouring clothes' line upon his run, and promptly torn to rags and demolished before they could be rescued. The bird did it out of pure mischief, and only ate the torn strips because he knew that he was doing wrong, and took a fiendish delight in doing it."

These stories of pets are among the pleasantest parts of the book.

Mr. J. G. Wood will be remembered as an observant naturalist who popularised the science of animated life, and, in particular taught men that such common insects as the cockroach or bluebottle formed arguments of creative love, and were replete with instruction on whatever side they were viewed. He was not a discoverer; he cared little or nothing for scientific nomenclature and arrangement; but he had a strong attraction from a boy to the lower forms of life, and the exigencies of his position compelled him to dwell upon and introduce these to the notice of persons who had little or no knowledge of natural history. It is absurd of his son to claim that "his father's great distinction" was that of being the pioneer in the work of popularising natural history"; this is to ignore the work of Jesse, of Frank Buckland, and others. Wood was not a great writer, but he wrote several useful books, such as his Natural History and The Common Objects of the Seashore. His log on board the Atlantic steamers contains nothing original. Mr. Wood's life will long point the moral of indomitable industry and energy, while his death, owing to excessive devotion to work, is certain to be forgotten at once by all who are exposed to the same temptations. For the rest, Mr. Theodore Wood has lucidly written his father's life, if there are repetitions here and there. Whether that life needed writing perhaps admits of a question, but he has at all events given us a bright and pleasant book.

M. G. WATKINS.

NEW NOVELS.

The Man with a Secret. By Fergus Hume. In 3 vols. (White.)

In the Sunlight. By Angelica Selby. In 2 vols. (Warne.)

Thyme and Rue. By Margaret B. Cross. In 2 vols. (Hurst & Blackett.)

Toxar. By the Author of "Thoth." (Longmans.)

Saint Monica. By Mrs. Bennett-Edwards. (Bristol: Arrowsmith.)

Hidden in the Light. By Eugène Stracey. (Digby & Long.)

Jacquetta. By S. Baring-Gould. (Methuen.)

The Mystery of a Woman's Heart. By Mrs. Edward Kennard. (White.)

The Handsome Examiner. By R. St. John Corbet. (The Leadenhall Press.)

The Tragedy of Captain Harrison. By R. C. J. (David Nutt.)

TAKEN all round, The Man with a Secret does fair credit to Mr. Hume's powers. It is not quite so full of the subtle plot-weaving which distinguished this writer's earliest book, The Mystery of a Hansom Cab; but it is a strong sensational novel nevertheless, and Mr. Basil Beaumont, the moving spirit of mischief, is as Mephistophilean and melodramatic a villain as could well be desired. In the place of rapidly-evolved action, we have a good deal of quiet family-life portraiture, together with an elaborated comic element, in which the author does not altogether appear at his happiest, though Dr. Larcher, with his felicitous Horatian quotations, Miss Cassandra Challoner, an elderly spinster, and Ferdinand Priggs, a youthful poet, are fairly amusing in their way. As is the case with a large number of present day novels, hypnotism forms a feature in the plot; but it is introduced almost episodically, and is not worked to death.

In the Sunlight is a commendably thoughtful and well-written book. Possibly, the thoughtfulness is a little overdone. There is rather too much effort to dive below the surface of humanity to a point where light fails and the play of motives and emotions becomes obscure, so that the exact reasons for the changeable and wayward phases of mood exhibited by some of the characters are not always apparent. However, one gathers a general sort of moral, that the emotional nature is strengthened and deepened by being tried in the furnace—though to the credit of the author it should be stated that, to the best of one's recollection, this time-honoured old metaphor nowhere appears in her pages. As usual with ladies' novels, the dialogues are models of polished elegance and replete with professorial turns of expression. This vice is too common, and too well fortified by examples in high quarters, to be attacked with much chance of success. For the rest, there is no reason why In the Sunlight should not find an appreciative circle of readers. Miss Selby is wise in selecting fairly well known types of character; she describes easily and naturally, and ought to make her way as a novelist.

Originality is rare indeed in modern plots; and the author of Thyme and Rue must be congratulated on having lighted upon a vein which, if not absolutely unknown, has seldom been worked with any remarkable success. Christopher Scott, a brilliant university scholar, has become, as a widower of fifty, a half-crazed idealist. When first introduced to us, he occupies a secluded country retreat, where, having for neighbour a widow whom he has indoctrinated with his views upon the evils of complex social organisation, he is giving practical effect to his theory of the simple life. His daughter, Juliet, has been betrothed to Harry Neville, only son of the aforesaid widow; and it is hoped that their union may inaugurate a generation pledged to the propagating of the new gospel. How the young couple escape the fate in store for them, and become initiated into the mysteries of social life, forms the subject of the novel, which is exceedingly pleasant reading from beginning to end. The characters are all well drawn, and the author is not deficient in either humour or pathos.

The author of Thoth, having in his second work, A Dreamer of Dreams, exhibited his skill in the construction of an analytical and introspective novel, has now resumed his rôle of story-teller. In his latest book, Toxar, he relates how Antinous, a wealthy young Greek of debauched habits, repented at the age of thirty of his evil courses, and turning philosopher led forth a body of his countrymen to found a colony, which should be governed upon the most approved ideal principles, and present to the world a spectacle of corporately virtuous life. Unfortun-nately for him, he owns a fatal possession in the person of his slave, Toxar, who is gifted with the power of finding means for the successful accomplishment of all his master's wishes. The author, writing in the character of the philosopher Xenophilos, has creditably succeeded in his attempt to impart a Greek flavour to the narrative. The treatment, it is true, is necessarily more discursive in regard to details than would be the case with a Hellenic writer, but in simplicity of language, and undisguised plainness of moral, it has a genuinely classical ring, and reminds one at every turn of the familiar old Herodotean illustrations of Nemesis ever attendant upon perfectly gratified desire, as in the cases of Croesus, Polycrates, and others.

Saint Monica is a society novel remarkable alike for originality and power. Veronica, wife of Will Connyston, a popular and wealthy young artist, overhears from behind a curtain her husband's declaration of love for Monica, daughter of Lord Harcastle. Nothing, however, takes place in the shape of a conjugal quarrel, nor even a scheme of revenge; her action is of another order. She prevails upon a former lover, George Westbury, to elope with her, not—as might be supposed—to pique her husband, but to secure his happiness. The elopement is to be conducted in a merely friendly sort of way, and under conditions of the strictest propriety—excepting the circumstance of the pair living under the same roof, for the purpose of establishing legal presumption of her infidelity. This is done in order that her husband may obtain a divorce, and then be made happy for life in possession of Monica. It may easily be understood that the excesses of devotion and self-abandonment exemplified in Veronica and George Westbury respectively require a good deal of ingenious writing-up to bring them within the limits of credibility. However, Mrs. Bennett-Edwards has proved herself equal to the task, and must be regarded as a clever, as well as daring, manipulator of subjects decidedly risky in treatment.

On the other hand, Hidden in the Light summons religion and philosophy to its aid in condonation of the undoubted guilt of two lovers. The assertion on the title-page that "There is a destiny that shapes our ends, rough hew them how we will"—which, by the way, is not a quotation from any known English author—serves to indicate the teaching of the book in a way which no properly worded extract from "Hamlet" would have succeeded in doing. A fatalist theory undoubtedly has its attractive side for those who would commit robbery or murder, or—as in the present story—elope with their neighbour's wife, without incurring moral responsibility. So that when Henri Beresford, poet and Buddhist, retires with Violet, wife of his friend, Baron Raoul de Villebois, to the Himalayas, and the erring pair console themselves with the reflection that the whole proceeding has been a case of "Kismet," it is not impossible to believe in the sincerity of their conviction; while, at the same time, one can hardly fail to remember how, in answer to a prisoner's plea that the theft of which he had been guilty had been preordained from all eternity, the judge remarked that the six months' sentence he was about to pass had been equally a matter of predestination. The book is French in tone and manner, which may, perhaps, account for the peculiarity of some of its views.

Jacquetta is the name given to a volume containing reprints of three stories by S. Baring Gould, named respectively "Jael," "Jacquetta," and "Moth-Mullein." Having already appeared in the pages of magazines, these productions have to some extent secured the verdict of public opinion; but there is a quaint originality of conception about them—especially in regard to the first and the third—which no doubt justifies their reappearance in book form. The second story, which gives its name to the entire volume, is a pretty narrative of the troubles of an English girl of rather plebeian birth and connexions, who marries into an aristocratic old French family.

Mrs. Edward Kennard's last work is pleasant reading, for two reasons. In the first place, The Mystery of a Woman's Heart is a very agreeably written novel; and, though hypnotism has become rather used up of late by fiction writers, there is a fresh application of it here which is a welcome change from the ordinary way in which it is utilised. Instead of exhibiting misuses of mesmeric power, productive of dangerous complications or fatal consequences, and employed only to further schemes of villainy, Mrs. Kennard here describes its beneficent use as an anaesthetic and restorer in dangerous surgical operations. The other pleasant feature is that Mrs. Kennard has accomplished what is for her the unusual feat of managing to describe, in the character of Dr. Kenyon Thorneycroft, a hero who is neither a brute, nor a selfish voluptuary, nor a fool, nor in any other way contemptible. Of the other characters, Fay Fairfax will be pronounced a very charming heroine; and Lady Flora Morton, her aunt, an excellently drawn picture of a vain and foolish, but not unlovable, old lady of fashion.

A book full of genial banter and humour is The Handsome Examiner, containing an account of that remarkable man's adventures in learning and love. Its subject-matter is, no doubt, a little over the heads of the un-academical public; but few who are conversant with university life and learning will fail to relish its good-natured caricature of certain aspects of modern higher education, and its entertaining jumble of love, original thought, classics, science, professorial pedantry, and feminine manoeuvring. To this appreciative class of readers we may leave the fortunes of Agnes Mitfield, Original Thinker, Sir Benjamin Mitfield, F.R.S., D.C.L., LL.D., her father, and other worthies with suffixes equally portentous.

The Tragedy of Captain Harrison is neither a novel nor a strictly historical record, but a sort of combination of the two. The author, finding it impossible to reconcile the evidence given at the trial of Captain Harrison for the murder of Dr. Clenche, of Brownlow Road, Holborn, on the night of January 14, 1691, with the dying statement of the condemned man, has undertaken to write a story founded upon a careful comparison of both, and has only filled up those portions of it which needed connexion with a few subordinate persons evolved out of imagination. The other characters are real, though the dialogues are, of course, imaginary. The book gives a good idea of seventeenth-century London life, and is fairly, but not absorbingly, interesting.

J. BARROW ALLEN.

HISTORICAL BOOKS.

Blunders and Forgeries: Historical Essays. By the Rev. T. E. Bridgett (Kegan Paul, Trench & Co.) An historical student who prefers minute accuracy to fine writing is a phenomenon in these days worthy of careful attention. Whether history be a science or no depends much on the meaning we give to the word "science." It will be on all hands conceded that the men of the picturesque school treat it in an entirely unscientific manner. Mr. Bridgett's work consists of two parts. The pages devoted to Blunders are by far the more amusing, but we are by no means sure that they will be the most useful to the serious reader. All historians have made blunders—perfect accuracy is impossible of attainment; but there is little excuse to be made for anyone, whose path is crossed by something which is to him unfamiliar, who dashes down on paper his first thoughts instead of consulting some expert who will probably be able to keep him in the right course. This is conceded in the physical sciences, and we can see no valid reason why an equal amount of care should not be given to historical facts, and even to theology where it touches on the historic domain. One of the most absurd blunders we have ever met with in the course of our reading consists of the mare's nest about the priest who had two wives. The whole question of clerical marriage in the early ages is beset with difficulties; but we should have thought that anyone who had but a smattering of ecclesiastical knowledge would have been aware that at no period of English Christianity could it have been possible for a priest to be legally joined in the bonds of matrimony to two women at the same time. This is how the mistake came about: Ralph Neville was Bishop of Chichester from 1222 to 1244. Part of that time he was also Lord Chancellor. During this period an ecclesiastic acted as his steward, who seems to have been an important person. He was usually employed in secular concerns, looking after the bishop's estates, &c. Now and then he gives bits of local gossip, which would no doubt be acceptable to the bishop in days when newspapers were not. To a person who reads these letters with attention there is much in them that is valuable for the social history of the time. We hear, for instance, of the erection of a windmill, which was probably an object of no little admiration to the neighbours if, as Mr. Kenelm Henry Digby has informed us, these useful machines were first used by Benedictine monks in the eleventh century. We do not remember an earlier mention of the molendinum rotatorium being used in England than this of Bishop Neville's. The chaplain and the bishop seem to have been on intimate terms of friendship. On one occasion the chaplain records a report that the Vicar of Mundeham has two wives, and that he professes to have letters from the Pope permitting this—

"Quidam capellanus, Willielmus Dens nomine, vicarius ecclesie de Mundeham, duas habet uxores, ut dicitur. . . . . Qui quidem Willielmus litteras detulit a summo pontifice, ut dixit" (Letters Illustrative of Reign of Henry VIII., Ed. W. W. Shirley, vol. i. p. 277.)

We suppose that there is now no one so simple as to believe that the Pope would grant his licence for such an atrocious violation of moral order. Yet Dr. Shirley seems to have thought there really was a talk in the neighbourhood that this disreputable vicar had two wives at once. Mr. W. Stephens, in his Memorials of the South Saxon See of Chichester, writes as if he believed that the vicar of Mundeham was an open bigamist. The whole of the error has arisen from Dr. Shirley not understanding the figurative language of the middle ages. Had the steward, when he wrote to the bishop, meant literally what he said, we may be sure that he would have used different and far stronger language. What the writer meant is clear enough to anyone who knows the symbolical mode of speaking common in those days. "Duas habet uxores" meant that Mr. Dens held two livings. Mr. Bridgett gives many instances of this form of speech, and a few hours in a great library would enable us to far more than double them. The reference to the "litterae" of the Pope makes the matter absolutely certain. No pope has the power of granting permission to men, whether lay or ecclesiastic, to have two wives at once; but when a general council had prohibited ecclesiastics from holding two livings it was distinctly provided that when needful the Pope might dispense from the canonical obligation. These papal letters were often obtained, and sometimes by misrepresentation and fraud, in which case they were of course invalid. The correspondent of Bishop Neville probably did not doubt the existence of the parchment, but the validity of the dispensation which it contained. It will be remembered that some years ago Dr. Lyon Playfair, trusting to worthless authorities, stated that "for a thousand years there was not a man or woman in Europe that ever took a bath." He was laughed at at the time for this wild assertion, but we do not call to mind that anyone ever thought it worth while to seriously refute him. Mr. Bridgett has at length done so in an article that is singularly amusing. No one who has read much of the mediaeval literature of any part of Christian Europe can doubt for an instant that the bath was constantly called into requisition. Some years ago the late Mr. Edward A. Bond communicated to the Society of Antiquaries a learned paper on "The Last Days of Isabella, Wife of Edward II." Among other payments there is an entry of a payment for "repairs of the Queen's bath and gathering of herbs for it." In a narrative of the arrival of Louis of Bruges, created Earl of Winchester in 1472, we find among other comforts provided for him that, in the third chamber, there "was ordered a Bayne or ij, which were couered with tentes of white clothe" (Archaeologia, vol. xxvi. p. 279; vol. xxxv. p. 465). Mr. Dickson, the learned editor of the Accounts of the Lord High Treasurer of Scotland, tells us in the preface to the first volume that "bathrooms were not uncommon in the houses of the great, and even the luxury of baths in bedrooms was not unknown. The accounts show two payments for broadcloth to cover a 'bath-fat'—that is, to form a tent-like covering over it" (p. cciii.). The Abbé Thiers, in his Traité des Superstitions, mentions certain days on which silly people fancied that it was wrong to bathe, a notion which would never have arisen had not bathing been a common practice. The portion of Mr. Bridgett's book devoted to Blunders is highly entertaining, but it is not until we arrive at the section headed Forgeries that we find what is really of great importance for the historian.

The man who makes mistakes is an object of pity; but the deliberate forger, who does his dirty work for the object of fanning popular fury against a body of men who are in danger of death, deserves the strongest form of censure that we are permitted to use. Sir James Ware was a well-known antiquary and historian. His writings have always been considered trustworthy, and we are not aware that anyone, either of his own time or the present day, has ever cast doubt on the honesty of his character. He had, however, the misfortune of having a son, Robert Ware, who became the possessor of his father's voluminous collections. About the time of Titus Oates's plot this man began to publish pamphlets and books, all of which were in antagonism to the Church of Rome. In these books and pamphlets are many documents which the public were informed had been taken from Sir James Ware's papers. This gave to them a high degree of authority; and they found their way into the works of historians of well-recognised merit such as Strype and Collyer, and into the controversial works of divines of much later times. Now if Mr. Bridgett's conclusions be true, and we see no means of overturning them, these strange things are one and all Robert Ware's forgeries inserted in his own hand in the blank leaves of his father's MS. collections. The latter are still extant, some in the Bodleian, others in the British Museum. The matter should not be permitted to remain as it now stands. If Mr. Bridgett's discoveries are not founded on mistake, some important chapters of our national history will have to be entirely re-written. If he has been led astray—which we can hardly believe to be possible—the sooner the veracity of the incriminated documents be re-established the better.

POPULAR COUNTY HISTORIES.—Cumberland. By Richard S. Ferguson. (Elliot Stock.) For upwards of a century and a half the North of England has possessed a school of local historians of which the Border lands may well be proud. Not to mention those of earlier date, the names of Whitaker, Surtees, Hunter, and the elder and younger Raine, bring before our minds laborious works which will never die. The lesser labourers in the same field—too numerous to record—have left behind them traces which show that it was lack of opportunity rather than weakness of will that condemned those to do hodman's service who ought to have been architects. Mr. Ferguson has for many years worked laboriously on the history of his native county. No one probably, except the author himself, knows how many papers and essays he has produced dealing with the history of the North-West of England. The volume before us contains the pith of many studies which are widely scattered. We can give unstinted praise to every chapter, almost indeed to every page; but when we think on the extent of his knowledge, and cast our eyes on the stately folios of his predecessors, we cannot but wish that he had undertaken a history of Cumberland on a larger scale than a single octavo volume. For popular reading, it is all that can be desired; but we long for a history of his native county which shall deal with every parish in detail. It may be that such a work is in preparation, and that the book before us is only the introduction to a parochial history. Such a work would entail immense labour; but record offices are now open, and a modern topographer has many advantages that were denied to the antiquaries of the beginning of the century. Unlike those historians who slur over early times, and pour out all their tediousness on the unpicturesque and unprofitable reigns of the Georges, Mr. Ferguson has given more space to the early days when England was a-making than to those periods when parliamentary struggles were the most exciting events that occupied men's minds. Cumberland—Carlisle, indeed, we might say—has one claim on our attention superior to that of any other county. It has been the fashion to say that Sedgemoor was the last battle fought in England. This is an error. Clifton, near Carlisle, where Prince Charlie's men engaged the forces of him whom they called the Elector, when they avoided a more opprobrious epithet, certainly merits that distinction. Both sides claimed the victory. The Jacobite army fought with the aim of saving their guns, and were so far successful; but the Duke of Cumberland drove the Highlanders out of the village, and remained master of their position. After the crushing defeat of Culloden, Carlisle was filled with prisoners. They were, the friends of the lost cause asserted, sent over the Border to be tried because the English law of high treason was more bloody than that of the sister kingdom. Three hundred and eighty-two poor creatures were tried or pleaded guilty. Ninety-six were condemned to death, and thirty-one were actually executed with all the atrocious cruelties which then formed the penalty for high treason. The heads of some of them were fastened on the Scotch gate of the city, and remained there for many years "looking towards Scotland." This was the last time the old treason punishment was put in force, though the law remained unrepealed for many years later. A reviewer is held to have neglected his duty if he does not find something to censure. We will therefore add, by way of conclusion, that the chapter dealing with the Tudor time might well have been expanded. Mr. Ferguson is not in the habit of making rash statements; therefore, when he says that before the Reformation the Cumbrian clergy were probably "the most ignorant in England," we have no doubt he has some ground for the statement. We wish, however, that the evidence had been given. The fact that the inhabitants joined in the Pilgrimage of Grace shows that the old religion had not lost all influence.

RULERS OF INDIA: Akbar. By Col. Malleon. (Oxford.) The useful series conducted by Sir W. Hunter has now received a fresh instalment. The subject is the life and reign of Akbar, "the Great Moghul," though, out of a total of about two hundred pages, ninety are devoted to Akbar's grandfather and father. Col. Malleon is so skilful and practised in Indian history that one can only wish that his pen had found a more congenial theme and period. For his mind is essentially modern; and, however well he might get up such a subject as Akbar, he would never perhaps find himself in harmony with the mediæval ruler. In his last page he says that he has "spoken of Akbar and his achievements as though I were comparing him with the princes of our own day." That is the false note throughout. The author has applied to an oriental barbarian of the sixteenth century the ideas that arose long afterwards in a totally different condition of the human mind. To read this book one might fancy oneself studying Indian questions as they exist and are studied to-day. The India of Akbar, however, was a welter of anarchy; and Akbar himself only an illiterate warrior of unusual mental activity. The best parts of his administration were due to Raja Todar Mal, an official who had graduated in the school of Sher Sháh, the great Pathan Sultan. His literature he took from Faizi, his philosophy from Abul Fazl. He persecuted the Mahometans with the rancour of a renegade, and in fits of ill-temper was guilty of unpardonable cruelties. Still, and for all that, he formed a remarkable feature of his time and place; and it is a pity that his story has not been better told.

The second part of Mrs. Everett Green's Calendar of the Proceedings of the Committee for Compounding, 1643-1660 (Printed for H.M.'s Stationery Office), displays the unwearied industry which is the distinguishing feature of all Mrs. Everett Green's work. To the minute investigator into the details of family history, and even to the general historian, its evidence on the position of the landed gentry during and after the Civil War is invaluable.

NOTES AND NEWS.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN—who have just issued a well-printed volume of English Lyrics, selected from Mr. Alfred Austin's poetry by Mr. William Watson, himself no mean poet—will publish in October a collected edition of Mr. Austin's poetical works, in six volumes.

MR. JOHN MURRAY will publish in October a volume of Academical Addresses, by the late Dr. Döllinger, translated by Margaret Warre, and illustrated with a portrait.

MESSRS. WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS will publish immediately A Sketch of the History of Life and Kinross: a Study of Scottish Life and Character, by Mr. Aeneas J. G. Mackay, formerly professor of history at Edinburgh, and now sheriff of those two counties.

MESSRS. LONGMANS will publish shortly a new novel by Mrs. Deland, author of "John Ward, Preacher," entitled Sydney. The same publishers also have in the press volumes of stories by Jean Ingelow, Mrs. Molesworth, Agnes Giberne, L. T. Meade, and Mrs. O'Reilly.

The next publication of the Incorporated Society of Authors will be The Various Methods of Publication, by the secretary, Mr. S. Squire Sprigge. It is compiled mainly from documents in the office of the society; and is intended to give a complete conspectus of all the several agreements proposed by publishers, with the corresponding advantages or disadvantages to authors. The book will be issued in October.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN will issue next week a volume of poetry, by Mr. Herbert Burrows, entitled The Prelude.

MESSRS. HENRY & Co. are about to publish A Book about London: its Memorable Places, its Men and Women, and its History, by Mr. W. H. Davenport Adams. The same firm also have in the press a new tale of adventure, by Lady Florence Dixie, entitled Aniwee; or, the Warrior Queen.

MR. QUARITCH will publish in October Smokiana, by Mr. R. T. Pritchett, consisting of fifty sketches, printed in colours, of the pipe and styles of smoking of all civilised and barbarous nations.

The next volume in the series of "Foreign Classics for English Readers," to be issued immediately, will be Alfred de Musset.

The second volume of the new edition of Boyer's Trade Tokens of the Seventeenth Century, edited by Mr. G. C. Williamson, will be published by Mr. Elliot Stock shortly. This completing volume will contain no less than ten separate indices—of counties, places, surnames, Christian names, initials, devices and arms, merchant marks, shapes, values, and peculiarities.

A CHEAP edition of Quiet Folk, by the Rev. R. Menzies Fergusson, author of "Rambles in the Far North," will be issued shortly by Messrs. Simpkin, Marshall & Co. It is illustrated by Mr. John Lochhead.

Lux Mundi has now reached its ninth edition, though it has not yet been reduced to a popular price.

The firm of Field & Tuer is dissolved, Mr. Field retiring. Mr. Andrew Tuer will continue the publishing and printing businesses under the style of The Leadenhall Press.

ON Monday and Tuesday of next week, Messrs. Sotheby will sell a collection of autographs and MSS., among which the most important are a series of letters by Mrs. Piozzi in her old age, and several written by Warren Hastings to various relatives. (By the way, the person called his brother in the catalogue is evidently his brother-in-law, Henry Woodman, who married his only sister, and whose descendants are the present representatives of the Hastings family.) There is also included in the sale a silver flask used by Lord Byron in his travels.

ON Friday, the same auctioneers will disperse the library of the late Rev. E. Bradley ("Cuthbert Bede"), which includes a number of books relating to university history, and also the original MS. of Verdant Green.

ALL the slips for the Chaucer Concordance, with the exception of the "Friar's Tale," fifteen pages of the "Parson's Tale," book iii. of "Troilus," and the "A. B. C.," are either written or in progress. Mr. W. Graham, 7 Gloucester Terrace, Maidenhead, will be glad to hear from anyone who will help him to complete this part of the work.

THE subscriptions promised towards the scheme of purchasing Dove Cottage as a national memorial of Wordsworth now amount to about £450. The total sum required is estimated at £1000. The subsidiary project of establishing also a Wordsworth museum, suggested in Mr. Stopford Brooke's little book, has been abandoned. The hon. treasurer of the fund is Mr. George L. Craik, 29 Bedford-street, Covent-garden.

WE have received two more volumes of the "Quatuor Coronatorum Antigrapha," or Masonic reprints of the Lodge Quatuor Coronati, No. 2076, London, edited by the secretary, and printed at Keble's Gazette office, Margate. This Lodge, we may remark, was formed in 1884, mainly for literary purposes, and has also a "correspondence circle," numbering nearly nine hundred associates. Vol. ii. contains facsimiles and transcripts of three Masonic documents in the British Museum, edited by Mr. Speth. One of these—Add. MS. 23,918, known among Masons as "the Matthew Cooke MS.," from having been published by Mr. Matthew Cooke in 1861—seems to possess considerable historical interest. Mr. E. A. Bond, late principal librarian of the British Museum, assigned it to the first half of the fifteenth century. The present editor distinguishes two parts, of which the second is the oldest and purest version that has yet come to light of the Book of Charges, or MS. "Constitutions of Masonry." The other two documents—Lansdowne MS. 98, art. 48, f. 276 b; and Harleian MS. 1942—are of much later date, both probably belonging to the beginning of the seventeenth century; and concerning these the uninitiated reader will be disposed to adopt the comment of Sir Henry Ellis: "A very foolish legendary account of the original of the order of Freemasonry." Vol. vii. consists of a facsimile reprint of the second edition (1738) of the Rev. Dr. James Anderson's New Book of Constitutions, with an introduction by Mr. W. J. Hughan. The facsimile, of about 230 pages, has been admirably made by Mr. Charles Praetorius; and the introduction gives a careful bibliography of this class of literature.

WE have received vol. i.—Anales del Reino de Navarra—of the new edition of the complete works of Father José de Moret, now publishing by E. Lopez, Tolosa, Guipuzcoa. This edition will be enriched with inedited matter from MSS., and with essays by Don Arturo Campión and others. It is well printed, strongly bound in cloth, and will consist of ten or twelve small quarto volumes, at a subscription price of fifty pesetas, or francs, for the whole.

WITH reference to a review of Love's Loyalty, by Cecil Clarke (Griffith, Farran & Co.), in the ACADEMY of last week, the author writes to deny the conjecture that he is of the female sex.

FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES.

THE Oxford university branch of the Christian Social Union intend to publish a quarterly review for the consideration of social and economic questions. The review will be concerned chiefly with modern economic difficulties as they bear upon the whole of life; but it will also include more technical articles dealing with special aspects of our industrial system, or treating of the historical condition and development of some particular period. The first number of the Economic Review will appear in October, and the annual subscription will probably be ten shillings. Intending subscribers or contributors may send their names to the Rev. J. Carter, Pusey House, Oxford.

THE Asiatic Quarterly Review will henceforth be published by Messrs. Swan Sonnenschein & Co. The forthcoming number will open with an important article on "The Regeneration of Persia," by a well-known authority on the subject who signs himself "Persicus." Mr. Frederic H. Balfour writes on "Chinese History"; Mr. R. N. Cust on "Morocco"; Mr. Stephen Gray on "Job Charnock"; Mr. Hyde Clarke on "The English Language in the East"; and Dr. G. W. Leitner on "The Healing of the Schism among Orientalists."

MR. EDWARD MARSTON, of the firm of Sampson Low & Co., has contributed to Scribner's Magazine an article entitled "How Stanley wrote his Book," which gives an account not only of the actual process of composition at Cairo, but also of the method of making notes adopted by Mr. Stanley in the course of his travels.

THE August number of the English Illustrated Magazine will contain three seasonable articles: "Heligoland," by Mr. Walter Armstrong, illustrated by Mr. Hamilton; "An August Ramble down the Upper Thames," by Mr. Reginald Blunt, illustrated from photographs taken by the writer; and "Cowes Castle," by Lady Fairlie Cunningham. Mr. Rudyard Kipling contributes a poem; and the frontispiece is an engraving, by Mr. O. Lacour, of Moroni's well-known portrait of an Italian nobleman in the National Gallery.

THE United Service Magazine for August will contain articles on "National Insurance," by Mr. J. Gibson Bowles and Admiral Lord Clarence Paget; "The Present State of the Powder Question"; "A Summer Night's Dream"; and the first of two articles on "The War Training of the Navy," by Admiral of the Fleet Sir J. Phipps Hornby.

AN illustrated article on the "Perils and Romance of Whaling" will appear in the August number of the Century. The author, Mr. Gustav Kobbé, has had access to many interesting log-books, &c., in the collection of Mr. F. C. Sanford.

"THE Higher Education of Girls in America" is the title of an article in the August number of the Leisure Hour, by Dr. Aubrey. It is chiefly devoted to a description of the methods pursued in the famous Wellesley College near Boston.

THE Yorkshire County Magazine, an illustrated monthly, will shortly supersede the four quarterlies issued by Mr. J. Horsfall Turner, Idel, Bradford, under one cover, viz., the Yorkshire Notes and Queries, Genealogist, Bibliographer, and Folk-lore Journal, which have had a successful run for about six years. More space will thus be acquired for articles and illustrations, though the price is to remain at 5s. per annum.

THE Critic, which claims to be the oldest weekly newspaper in the world, has this week been incorporated with Society, which will in future be illustrated and enlarged to twenty-four pages.

VERSE.

NOTES AT FLORENCE.

I.

Christ rising from the Tomb (Botticelli).

CHRIST—who doth break
For the world's sake
His tomb, yet still in outstretched sleep is hid
At the tomb's lid—
Behold Him to our gaze complete
In wounded hands and feet,
While soft His rest
As John's on His own breast.

II.

The Vision of St. Augustine (Botticelli).

God's Saint, and of His kingdom mild
The humblest child,
By hollow of a cool
Sky-drinking pool:
What shall they say, how understand
The sweetness of the dawn-bathed land,
Those mated souls that pause
Under God's laws,
And find it sweeter than the honeycomb
Beneath their tabature to roam?

III.

Flowers at the Foot of the Crucifix (Signorelli).

A circled mesh
Of flowers given to refresh
Our eyes that bend
Away from that fierce manhood's end:
Wild little border—
And in disorder—
Of country flowers;
Strawberries that link
With spires of scarcely-coloured pink,
Herb-Robert; close against the soil
Yellow trefoil,
With pansies, daisies; in a spot
By Magdalen's robe forget-me-not:
Embroidered bed,
Shine forth beneath the shadowed head,
And let the lizard pry
About the dull
Teeth-terrace of the skull
At the crossfoot! For why?
It is so natural to die.

MICHAEL FIELD.

OBITUARY.

GENERAL PLANTAGENET HARRISON.

I CRAVE space to point out in the ACADEMY how the very serious loss which students of genealogy have sustained through the death of General Plantagenet Harrison may be lessened if proper steps be taken to secure his MSS. for the nation.

Few men have devoted so much time and energy to the elucidation of the ancient Court Rolls; and very few who have been so industrious have left so little in print to justify their labours. General Harrison was a self-taught man. He devoted himself to the study of our early records after the close of a military career, when the little Latin which he probably learnt as a boy must have become as rusty as his well-used sword; and it is very much to his credit that he recovered so much of that tongue, and with it acquired the art of deciphering the varieties of early handwriting, together with a good understanding of ancient law, without which the best scholarship and the most intimate knowledge of early caligraphy is useless. With indomitable perseverance he waded through the almost intermin-able series of our Court Rolls, and he has left behind him a great number of MS. volumes, the result of his labours. Anyone who is acquainted with Agard's work, which was published some fifty years ago under the title of "Placitorum Abbrevatio," or something of that kind (his work was a selection, and not an abbreviation), may calculate the value of General Harrison's MSS. when informed that the bulk is quite ten times as large, and the matter chiefly applicable to one county—Yorkshire.

Poor General Harrison published one folio volume, which some critics derided, though it was a work of real merit, and which sold so badly in consequence that it involved the author in pecuniary loss and a consequent quarrel with his publishers. I believe he only sold fifteen copies at the sale price, the rest were forced upon the market almost at the value of waste paper. Several other volumes are ready for publication, but it is extremely unlikely that they will ever see the light in print; nor perhaps is it very desirable, for very few men are capable of carrying out the work, and a man capable of such labour would prefer to collect his own material. The great value of the MSS. is in the material from which General Harrison was compiling his history. This is a transcript (abbreviated, no doubt) of all the entries which he could find upon the Rolls relating to Yorkshire land and Yorkshire landowners—truly the labour of a life.

General Harrison was extremely eccentric—so much so that upon some questions his sanity might almost be doubted. But a kinder-hearted man never lived, and he was ever ready to aid his fellow-workers. When puzzled upon any question of Yorkshire history, I never scrupled to apply to him; and at all times I met with the most kindly assistance. Very recently, when I was compelled to criticise the Vernon-Harcourt pedigree, General Harrison's MSS. produced the true descent of the family. I often enjoyed the privilege of consulting his MSS. myself, and I always found them workable. In his printed work he, for his own reasons, abstained from giving references; but his transcripts from the Rolls are in admirable order, and refer readily to the originals.

There is some talk of buying General Harrison's MSS. for the library of the Record Office, but the admirably managed MS. department of the British Museum is the only place fit for their reception. And this would be a fitting revenge of the whirligig of time; for, by a miserable piece of folly and misunderstanding, the poor old General was prohibited from entering the Museum; and it is certainly very much to the credit of the late Master of the Rolls that he permitted him to search there, although the ground upon which he was excluded—that he claimed to be de jure Duke of Lancaster—applied equally to his exclusion from both institutions.

PYM YEATMAN.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE principal paper in the current number of Mind is on "Our Space Consciousness," by Mr. Herbert Spencer. It is a noteworthy addition to that writer's able derivation of the perception of space from simpler psychical elements. Mr. Spencer sees quite well that to our adult consciousness space appears something quite simple and unanalysable; but instead of regarding this fact as conclusive of its primordial simplicity, he sets about explaining how the perception comes to assume this apparent simplicity, with individual and racial evolution. Here lies the merit of this answer to his critics. The space perception is for him an instance of a process of transformation, which he shows very clearly to take place in other cases also.

Students of psychology will rejoice to find that Mr. Spencer's hand has lost none of its cunning. Another valuable article for the English student of psychology is a careful account of the first part of Volkmann's Lehrbuch der Psychologie, by Mr. T. Whittaker. Volkmann's work is justly regarded as the most systematic presentment of the Herbartian doctrine, and it is well that it receives this special notice in an English journal of psychology. The other articles are an examination of the logical method of the Ethics of Evolution, by Mr. W. Mitchell, and a study on "The Antinomy of Thought," by Mr. A. F. Shand.

The new number of The American Journal of Psychology contains only two or three short principal articles. The most important of these is a continuation of the editor's study of the History of Reflex Action, by Dr. C. F. Hodge. For the rest, the number is noteworthy for the fulness of its record of contemporary work in the domain of experimental psychology, and the allied provinces of mental pathology (psychiatry), the physiology of the nervous system, and evolutionary biology. Now that the science of psychology has been broadened out, by being brought into fruitful connexion with physiology, this extensive view of its literature is of the greatest use to the student. This number of the journal, by-the-by, contains accounts of psychological study and research at various American universities, from which one would be disposed to say that the subject has obtained much fuller recognition in the higher curriculum of studies on the other side of the water than it has as yet obtained here.

The current number of Brain contains an article of special interest to the psychological student, viz. a study of the psycho-physical process of Attention, by Mr. J. Sully. The writer claims that the importance of attention as a factor in psychical processes has been underestimated by physiological psychology—at least in this country. He endeavours to bring out its importance, and, at the same time, to examine critically the current hypotheses respecting the correlated nervous processes.

MEMORIAL TO THE AUTHOR OF "JOHN HALIFAX, GENTLEMAN."

SOON after the death of Dinah Maria Mulock (Mrs. Craik) in 1887, a scheme for the erection of a suitable memorial of her work was started by some of those who prized that work, the committee including the names of Lord Tennyson, Robert Browning, Matthew Arnold, Sir Frederick Leighton, Sir John Millais, Mr. John Morley, Prof. Huxley, Mr. J. Russell Lowell, Mrs. Oliphant, Mme. Guizot de Witt, and Miss Yonge. It was decided that the memorial should take the form of a marble medallion in Tewkesbury Abbey. Tewkesbury was the place selected by Mrs. Craik as the home of "John Halifax," and it was the last place visited by her before her death; and this association of Tewkesbury with Mrs. Craik's best known work led the committee, with the consent of Canon Robeson, the vicar of Tewkesbury, to decide upon the Abbey as the most fitting site for the contemplated memorial.

The memorial has now been placed in the Abbey. It is the work of Mr. H. H. Armistead, and is designed to indicate the "noble aim of her work." Above the cornice is placed a group illustrative of Charity; while in the architectural member is a winged laurel wreath, surmounted by an alto-relief, containing the figures of Truth and Purity. A central shield bears the quotation from John Halifax, Gentleman, "Each in his place is fulfilling his day, and passing away, just as that Sun is passing,

Only we know not whither he passes; while whither we go we know, and the way we know—the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever." A medallion portrait is contained in a circular moulding, supported by Corinthian pilasters, on which are borne the maiden and married names of the authoress, "Dinah Maria Mulock—Mrs. Craik." The inscription on the frieze runs, "A tribute to work of noble aim and to a gracious life."

SHAKSPERE'S SONNETS IN ITALY.

SIG. GUISEPPE CHIARINI has issued a reprint from the Italian review La Nuova Antologia for March, April, and May, of three articles written by him under the title "Il Matrimonio e gli Amori di Guglielmo Shakspeare." In opposition to what Major Walter has recently asserted (Shakspeare's True Life) and others had said before him—about the proof of Shakspeare's marriage with Anne Hathaway being "a happy union," as shown by the Sonnets which speak of "the marriage of true minds," where love knows no alteration, &c.—Sig. Chiarini fails to find any laudatory allusion to Anne Hathaway in these places or in any of the Sonnets. The marriage in his judgment was not happy, though he does not attach very great importance to the interlined bequest, in the will, of "the second best bed." The idea of Halliwell-Phillipps and other defenders of Shakspeare's matrimonial felicity—that previous to the marriage there had been a betrothal regarded as of a validity resembling that of the formal ceremony—finds little favour with Sig. Chiarini; and he cites, as unfavourable to this view, the warning of Prospero to Ferdinand as to his conduct before the marriage ceremony should "with full and holy rite be ministered." Mr. Saintsbury's criticism—that there is nothing really mysterious in the matter of the Sonnets, and that to him the question whether they were or were not addressed to Herbert and Mary Fitton appeared neither interesting nor important—is not at all acceptable to the Italian critic. Mr. Tyler's recent book on the Sonnets is highly commended; but, though it is very probable that Mary Fitton was the fascinating brunette loved by both Shakspeare and Herbert, this is regarded as requiring additional evidence. If, however, the problems of the Sonnets are not yet entirely solved, at least an approximation to the solution has now been made. Prof. Olivieri's recent translation of the Sonnets (the first in Italian) is regarded as not altogether satisfactory. But translating the Sonnets into prose is a difficult affair, more difficult perhaps than in verse. At any rate, faults which would be overlooked in verse are not so easily pardoned when detected in a prose translation. Moreover, it was scarcely judicious, Sig. Chiarini thinks, for a translator of Shakspeare to make a beginning with Shakspeare's most difficult work.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- BARTHÉLEMY-SAINTE-HILAIRE, J. Etude sur François Bacon. Paris: Alcan. 2 fr. 50 c.
BORELLI, Jules. Ethiopie méridionale: journal de mon voyage. Paris: Quantin. 30 fr.
BOURGET, Paul. Un cœur de femme. Paris: Lemerre. 3 fr. 50 c.
EHRLE, F. Historia Bibliothecae Romanorum Pontificum tum Bonifatianae tum Avenionensis enarrata etc. Tom. I. Rome: Loescher. 30 fr.
GEVAERT, F. A. Les origines du chant liturgique de l'église latine. Paris: Picard. 5 fr.
GUILLAUME, J. Pestalozzi: étude biographique. Paris: Hachette. 3 fr. 50 c.
RENAN, E. Pages choisies à l'usage des lycées et des écoles. Paris: Calmann Lévy. 3 fr. 50 c.
RIGAL, Eug. Alexandre Hardy et le théâtre français à la fin du 16<sup>e</sup> siècle. Paris: Hachette. 15 fr.
THIERRY-POUX, O. Premiers monuments de l'imprimerie en France au 16<sup>e</sup> siècle. Paris: Hachette. 60 fr.

- WEISSLOVITS, N. Prinz u. Derwisch. Eine ind. Roman, enth. die Jugendgeschichte Buddha's in hebr. Darstellg. aus dem Mittelalter, nebst e. Vergleich. der arab. u. griech. Paralleltex. München: Ackermann. 5 M. 40 Pf.
WILLOCKI, H. v. Volksdichtungen der siebenbürgischen u. südungarischen Zigeuner. Wien: Gracser. 6 M.

THEOLOGY, ETC.

- MALTZEW, A. Die göttlichen Liturgien unserer heil. Väter Johannes Chrysostomos, Basilios d. Grossen u. Gregorios Dialogus. Deutsch u. slawisch unter Berücksicht. der griech. Urtexte. Berlin: Siegmund. 6 M.

HISTORY, ETC.

- BOGUSLAWSKI, V. Der Zug der Engländer gegen Kopenhagen im Frühjahr 1801. Berlin: Mittler. 1 M.
BREITENBACH, Das Land Lebus unter den Piasten. Fürstentwald-Spree: Geelhaar. 1 M. 50 Pf.
BRUTAILL, J. A. Documents des archives de la chambre des comptes de Navarre. Paris: Bouillon. 6 fr.
CORRESPONDENZ, politische, Friedrich's d. Grossen. 18. Bd. 1. Hälfte. (Jan.—Juni 1759.) Berlin: Duncker. 10 M.
COULANGES, Fustel de. Les origines du système féodal: le bénéfice et le patronat pendant l'époque Mérovingienne. Revu et complété par Camille Jullian. Paris: Hachette. 7 fr. 50 c.
JUNGPER, J. Der Prinz v. Homburg. Nach archival. u. a. Quellen. Berlin: Brachvogel. 2 M. 40 Pf.
MAURES DE MALARTIE, le Comte de. Journal des Campagnes au Canada de 1755 à 1760. Paris: Plon. 8 fr.
NOTTBECK, E. v. Das zweitälteste Erbbuch der Stadt Reval (1360—1383). Reval: Kluge. 4 M. 50 Pf.
SIMONSKELD, H. E. deutsche Colonie zu Treviso im späteren Mittelalter. München: Franz. 2 M. 80 Pf.
STÜRLER, M. v. Der Laupenkrieg 1339—1340. Kritische Beleuchtung der Tradition als Beitrag zur Lütetung der älteren Berner Geschichte. Bern: Huber. 1 M. 80 Pf.
URKUNDEN u. Actenstücke zur Geschichte d. Kurfürsten Friedrich Wilhelm v. Brandenburg. 13. Bd. u. 14. Bd., 1. Thl. Berlin: Reimer. 20 M.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE.

- THOULET, J. Océanographie (statique). Paris: Baudoin. 10 fr.

PHILOLOGY.

- BRUGSCH, H. Die Aegyptologie. Abriss der Entziffern. u. Forschgn. auf dem Gebiete der ägypt. Schrift, Sprache u. Alterthumskunde. II. Abth. Leipzig: Friedrich. 14 M.
WEBSTER, H. L. Zur Gutturalfolge im Gotischen. Leipzig: Fock. 4 M.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A MEMORIAL TO RICHARD JEFFERIES.

Taunton: July 18, 1890.

It may interest your readers to learn that this unrivalled delineator of country life is no longer to remain unhonoured. A wish has been expressed of late by many that some memorial of Richard Jefferies should be erected; and inasmuch as he was a native of Wilts and fond of his county, Salisbury Cathedral appeared to be the most appropriate spot for that purpose. Mr. Charles Longman, an attached friend of Richard Jefferies and Mr. Walter Besant, the happy author of the "Eulogy," regarding the proposal with favour, a committee has been formed for placing a marble bust of the prose poet of the Wiltshire Downs in this grand old cathedral. The Bishop of Salisbury and the Dean having most cordially given their assent to this project, the execution of the proposed memorial has been intrusted to Miss Margaret Thomas, an artist of acknowledged ability. The estimated cost of this work will be about £150. It is believed that little difficulty will be experienced in raising this small fund among the admirers and "readers of the most remarkable man produced in the diocese of Salisbury for many years."

The committee consists of the Bishop of Salisbury and the Dean, Mr. Burdett-Coutts, Mr. Walter Pollock, Mr. Andrew Lang, Mr. Rider Haggard, Mr. J. W. North, Mr. George Smith, Mr. Andrew Chatto, Mr. Alfred Buckley, Mr. Osborne, Mr. C. P. Scott, Mr. F. G. Heath, Mr. Walter Besant, and Mr. Charles Longman. The two latter gentlemen will act as honorary secretaries, and I have willingly accepted the office of treasurer, and opened an account with Stuckey's Banking Company, Taunton, for subscriptions.

ARTHUR KINGLAKE.

NOTES FROM RENNES.

London: July 12, 1890.

THANKS to Prof. Loth, during a recent visit to Rennes I saw the MS. of the famous Cartulary of Redon, and copied one of the Latin inscriptions found last April in digging the foundations of the new Bazar Parisien.

The MS. is now kept, like any ordinary volume, in the library of a local fabrique de prêtres. The ink is still so unfaded that there would be no difficulty in photographing the whole of the 142 leaves of which the codex now consists. Its contents would then practically be saved from the risk of loss by fire; and scholars would be able to control De Courson's edition, the faultiness of which has been fully proved in Prof. Loth's Chrestomathie Bretonne, Paris, 1890, pp. 105, 108, 109, 111, 112, &c.

The inscription has not, so far as I know, hitherto been published. It is in good Roman letters of the third century, and runs as follows:

IMP. C. M.
PIAVVO
NIO VIC
TORINO
P.F. INV. (pio felici invicto)
AVO. (augusto)
C. R. (civitas Redonum)
L. IIII. (leugae quattuor).

The M. PIAVVO Victorinus above mentioned was one of the thirty tyrants, and is supposed to have been slain A.D. 268, after he had reigned in Gaul, and probably also in Britain, for somewhat more than a year. The date of the inscription is thus fixed to a nicety. The gentile name is spelt with one v on a Lincoln milestone, Eph. Epigr. vii., No. 1097, for a reference to which I am indebted to Mr. Haverfield. Mr. Haverfield also informs me that Allmer (Revue épigraphique, 1888, p. 372) argues that this name is really Pi(us) Avonius, just as Piesuvius (so Tetricus is sometimes styled) is pretty certainly Pius Esvivius.

To me, however, the chief object of interest at Rennes was the fifteenth-century MS. containing (inter alia) the oldest Gaelic version of Maundevile's Travels, the unique Life of S. Colman mac Luachain (of which I transcribed about a third), and a beautifully written copy of the Dinnsenchas, which has been photographed for me by M. Collet. Of this MS. an account has been published in the Proceedings of the Royal Irish Academy (Irish MSS. Series, vol. i., pp. 66-81). The following corrigenda may be useful to the owners of that publication:

The Proceedings.	The MS.
P. 71, l. 9, cof[ur]tach-taigi	co fortachtaigi
l. 10, mobeirti (of my work)	m'oibrigti
72, l. 3, se cumgill dege (sixteen conditions)	se cuingill dege
l. 4, inti	indti
ll. 7, 8, quinta de intencione	quingta tescincione (i.e., quinta distinctione)
ll. 19, 20, do niis faeisind (makes his confession)	doni a fæisidin
73, l. 7, dho	d6
l. 22, iudaighe	Idhal
74, l. 6, no gabais	n6 gabad
l. 18, do daingnid	do daingnig
75, l. 1, Donnchad og mac Toirdealbaigh	Donnchad og mac Dondchada oscinn Ealla, 7 Concubar mac Toirdealbaigh
l. 28, nach rimtar ar daig chuimne (who are not reckoned for commemoration)	nach rimtar ardháig chuimne (who for brevity's sake are not reckoned)
80, l. 1, Emaind (nom. sg.)	Emand
l. 2, ain baile	a baile
l. 6, creochas	ereochas.

So much for textual errors. The account is wholly silent as to the Biblical history, which occupies ff. 37b 2-43a 1 of the MS., and the legend of S. Brenainn, fo. 74a 2. I will add (from p. 79 of the Proceedings) only one specimen of the description of the contents of the MS.:

"Fol. 69 a., col. 1—Here follows a religious tract of no historical interest, to fol. 74 a."

The "tract" thus summarily disposed of is a copy of The Evernew Tongue (Tenga Bithnua), one of the most curious and (to folklorists) most interesting compositions in Early Middle Irish. It is a dialogue between the Hebrew sages, assembled on Mount Zion, and the spirit of Philip the Apostle, who is called by the household of heaven "The Evernew Tongue," because when he was preaching to the heathen his tongue was nine times cut out and nine times miraculously restored. In answer to questions put by the sages, the Evernew Tongue tells them all about the creation of the universe, and especially about certain seas, wells, rivers, precious stones, trees, stars, &c. It, lastly, describes hell, doomsday, and heaven. There are at least five other copies, one in the Bibliothèque Nationale, Celt. et B. 1, ff. 24a-27b; another in the Book of Lismore (a MS. belonging to the Duke of Devonshire), ff. 46a-52a; a third in the British Museum, Egerton 171, pp. 44-65; a fourth at Cheltenham, in the Philipps Library, No. 9754, ff. 7a-9a; a fifth in the library of Trinity College, Dublin, H. 2. 16, col. 700-707. From a statement by O'Curry (Lectures, p. 532), there would seem to be a sixth copy in the Liber Flavius Fergusorum. Where that MS. now is I cannot say, and should be glad to learn.

WHITLEY STOKES.

COCKNEY.

Oxford: July 19, 1890.

I do not often agree with Mr. Wedgwood's method of etymology. But he may like to know that I still remember, though it is a long time ago, how in our nursery we spoke not only of a Hotto-pferd, a Motsche-kuh, a Bah-lamm, a Mietze-katze, but likewise of a Cack-ei; but that had nothing to do with Hahn enei.

F. MAX MÜLLER.

OLD FRENCH "ENCREMENT"—"LA GOULE D'AOUST."

Stanhoe Grange, Norfolk: July 15, 1890.

(1) The word encrement, of the use of which only two instances are given by Godefroy—both from the "Livre des Rois"—is employed as an intensive adverb in the sense of "extremely." Its origin is doubtful. Is it possibly the Latin incrementum used adverbially?

It more probably comes from Latin acrimente, in which case cf. the similar intensive use of durement in O.F., which is somewhat analogous to the slang use of "awfully," "frightfully," and the like in modern English.

For encrement = acrimente (which would make it a double of aignement), cf. O.F. engrot = agrotum, engrés = agrestem, heingre = aeग्रum (whence malingre, English malingre), anquelié (modern encolie) = aquilegium, and such well-known instances of intercalated n in modern French as languoste = locustum, Angoulême = Iculisma, convoyer = cupitäre, &c., &c.

The word is not mentioned by Burguy; nor is there any Latin equivalent for it in the passages in which it occurs.

(2) In "La Maniere de Langage," printed by M. Paul Meyer from MS. Harl. 3988 in Brit. Mus., occurs the phrase "jusques a la goule d'aoust." The customer says to the cloth merchant: "Je vous paierai tres lien . . . si que vous me donnez jour de paiement jusques a la goule d'aoust"; that is: "I will pay, if I may defer payment until August 1." As M. Paul Meyer points out, on this day falls "La Saint Pierre aux liens," often called "Saint Pierre engoule août," or "goule août." Later on the customer repeats that he will faithfully pay "ou feste du Saint Pierre la noele prochain qui venra"—so M. Meyer prints the passage, adding in a footnote that the reading is doubtful, but looks like la vincele. The phrase evidently is "Saint Pierre la vincele (vincle)," a rendering of "S. Petrus ad Vincula" ("St. Pierre aux liens"), whose day falls on August 1.

PAGET TOYNBEE.

"HETMAN" AND "HAUPTMANN."

Taylorian Institution, Oxford: July 21, 1890.

Mr. R. Nisbet Bain having questioned any relation between the Slavonic "Hetman" and the German "Hauptmann," at the end of his review of Mr. Morfill's Story of Russia (ACADEMY, July 19), perhaps I may be permitted to advance a word in defence of this connexion.

In the first place, it is not denied by Linde, the great authority on the Polish language (cf. his Polish Dictionary); nor by Jungmann in his Cekh Dictionary (s.v. "Heytman"); nor by Miklosich in his Etymological Slavonic Dictionary. Secondly, while "Hetman" is not to be found in Old-Slavonic, it does occur in most of the modern Slavonic dialects, especially in Polish and Malo-Russian, where it has assumed, also, the derivative forms Atamán and Otamán, as well as in Lithuanian Atmonas and Elmonas, denoting a leader of the Cossacks. Thirdly, considering the close military connexion and political union between Austria and Poland, especially towards the end of the sixteenth century, when Stephen Bathory, crowned king of Poland at Cracow in 1576, granted the Cossacks of Southern Russia the privilege of choosing a Hetman (or chieftain) out of their own people, there seems little reason to reject the supposition that "Hetman" may be a German loan-word in Polish, derived from the German "Hauptmann," like several other terms of military rank, but phonetically adapted to the Polish and Slavonic pronunciation. Lastly, it deserves to be stated that the title of "Hauptmann," when used in documents of the fifteenth and sixteenth century, is not confined to a military officer, but often refers to a civil official, whose duty it was to collect the rents and taxes of his district and deliver them to the feudal lord (cf. Grimm's Deutsches Wörterbuch, s.v. "Hauptmann").

H. KREBS.

FITZGERALD'S "OMAR KHAYYÁM."

Howth, Dublin: July 23, 1890.

Messrs. Hodges, Figgis, & Co., of Dublin, from whom I procured my copies of the American "Omar," inform me that, previously to the announcement of Fitzgerald's Life and Letters by Messrs. Macmillan, no objection was made by any British publisher to their importing as many copies as they required. Subsequently, however, an objection was made, and the practice has been discontinued.

It has been asked again and again why Mr. Quaritch never reprinted a book which people were content to send to America for. And the problem seems to be getting beyond solution. For it was formerly whispered that Mr. W. A. Wright, as literary executor of Edward Fitzgerald, declined to give permission for the separate publication of the Rubáiyát. This seemed a little hard on Mr. Quaritch, when one remembered the pretty story of Fitzgerald's going to him and making him a present of the MS., and when one further remembered the terrible fate of the first edition. It seemed severe, but not impolitic; for the literary remains (including, of course, the Rubáiyát) duly issued from the hands of Mr. Wright. And so the existing copies of the Quaritch edition circulated at high prices; while those who had not the good fortune to get one, imported copies from America, or (who knows?) revelled in Mr. McCarthy's prose version. All this suggests the question: Did Mr. Wright really decline to give permission for any further separate publication of the Rubáiyát? It is, indeed, none of my business; but if this question is answered in the affirmative, some inquisitive people who have been so long kept out of their "Omars" (and naturally Mr. Quaritch, who has come in for the blame) will like to know whether Mr. Wright, in thus acting, was carrying out the desires of Edward Fitzgerald or merely exercising his own discretion.

CHARLES WEEKES.

"THE BONDMAN" AGAIN.

London: July 22, 1890.

In my former letter, I did not venture to place The Bondman on the same level as one kind of Sagas—namely, the Skrök-Sögur or Lyga-Sögur—fabulous or fictitious Sagas, fabricated in Iceland in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries (see Vígfússon's Dictionary). If Mr. Hall Caine wishes his novel to be classed with these productions, let it be so.

Further, Mr. Hall Caine says that I am wrong in my detailed criticism on all points except one. Accordingly, he must be right on all these points and I apologise.

I was only the mouthpiece of my countrymen who still think, having lived in Iceland all their lives, that they know something about their own country and its literature.

JÓN STEFÁNSSON.

SCIENCE.

An Arabic-English Dictionary on a New System. By H. Anthony Salmoné. In 2 vols. (Trübner.)

AN undertaking to produce an Arabic lexicon worthy of the name, and yet of portable dimensions, may well be regarded as an attempt to grapple with a problem in its very nature impossible of solution. Such, nevertheless, is the task Prof. Salmoné has sought to accomplish, and which he has completed with a result upon which Arabic scholars will ere long pronounce their final judgment. It is not, it must be confessed, easy to form, with anything like confidence, a forecast of what that judgment will eventually be. To the most impartial mind, objection cannot fail to present itself when the book is first opened, and the eye is caught by its bristling array of figures. And the objection, it is to be feared, will lose little of its force on examination of the author's Introduction, in which we are confronted with elaborate tables of Arabic derivatives, and with explanatory notes which, taken together, summarise the knowledge to be acquired from a not unlaborious study of Arabic etymology, the whole compressed within the compass of less than a dozen pages. A brief explanation of the system adopted by Mr. Salmoné will, however, enable readers of the ACADEMY to apprehend the reasons that may operate in its favour.

Arabic verbs, as is generally known, are, for the most part, tri-literal, that is to say, composed of three radical letters. Quadri-literals are very few in number; and their inflections being based upon the same general rules as are those of the more common class, it will be unnecessary for our purpose to make any further reference to the distinction. From the original verb—or what, for the grammarian's purpose, may be regarded as such—certain derived forms are produced by the addition generally of one or more incremental letters, themselves seven in number. The derived forms in common use do not exceed ten. As a general rule, no individual verb is capable of assuming more than two, three, or four of these forms; and, with more or less directness, their signification is based, though not without exception, upon that of the "naked" verb, as it is termed by the Arab grammarians. Thus, from malaka, to possess, are derived the second and fourth forms—mallaka and amlaka, to put in possession. In the fifth form tamallaka signifies to be or to assume the demeanour of one in possession, or of a king. In the sixth form, tamālaka to master or restrain one's self. But in addition to the derived verbs, there is another and very numerous class of words, nouns and adjectives, that is to say, likewise formed on the model of certain specified exemplars, from the "naked" verb. Thus malik, possessor or king; milk, property; mamlakah, a kingdom; mamlūk, a slave. In the construction of an Arabic dictionary, the general plan is to enter the "naked" verbs in alphabetical order, each forming the heading under which the "augmented" derivatives are to be found. The derived verbs are indicated by numbers—first, second, third, and so forth. The verbal nouns and adjectives, modelled as they are on a far greater variety of forms, are inserted in full; and as each must not only be printed in the native character, but must bear its appropriate vowel marks, it is easy to conceive how much they contribute towards inflating both the size and the cost of the book.

Attempts have been made, both abroad and in this country, to disregard, more or less completely, that system of classification, and to conform with the plan used in the case of European languages, where each word is to be sought under its initial letter. The gain to be derived from an adoption of that system is, however, of a very doubtful character. It not only tends to increase rather than reduce the bulk of the book, but it deprives the student of the advantages of seeing words grouped together under the heading of their original form, as the Arab grammarians call it, and of becoming familiarised with their etymological structure. A contention that such a system is of advantage to learners has not, to our mind, much more than plausibility in its favour. No dictionary worthy of the name can be of service to a learner so deficient in knowledge of the most elementary character as to be unable to distinguish the "naked" form of such words as mamlūk, mamlakah, tamlīkah, specimens, as these are, of a perfect host of others equally simple. And the inconsistency is, at the same time, accepted of supposing the beginner to be able to recognise other words far more completely disguised by the disappearance, under certain rules of grammar, sometimes of their first, at others of their second, and at others again of their third radical letter. If it be urged that certain forms, generally derivatives of irregular verbs, will at times present equal or almost equal difficulty to the student, it may be answered that the solution of such difficulties will at least afford him an exercise of a very wholesome kind.

Prof. Salmoné has adopted the direct opposite to the system of which we have just spoken. He not only represents the derived verbs by Roman numbers, in the usual manner, but the verbal nouns and adjectives are likewise represented by figures. These figures refer the reader to a table of paradigms at the commencement of the book, reprinted, for convenience sake, on a loose sheet. The precise orthographical form of each word is there found, and its signification is given in the body of the book, immediately after the number. The table comprises the ordinary verbal nouns, corresponding generally with the European infinitive used as a substantive, forms of the broken or irregular plurals, of intensive adjectives, of nouns denoting the time or place when or where an action is done, and so forth. Of the last mentioned I may cite as an example the word makhzan, whence our own familiar word "magazine," the place, that is to say, where things are stored and preserved.

The advantages presented by Prof. Salmoné's system are easy to recognise. But, on the other hand, his table of paradigms contains no less than seventy distinct forms; and it may well be imagined that the mind of a student who glances over the table, under the idea that he must search through its columns every time he has occasion to find the meaning of a word, is only too likely to be filled with dismay at the prospect. But even in the case of an Arabic lexicon, things are not always what they seem. A minor though not unimportant point, is that the classification of the derivatives greatly simplifies the task of finding any particular form. A more important one is that, as a matter of fact, only a very small number of these seventy forms are in common use. Others are met with at more or less infrequent intervals, and some again are exceedingly rare. It is evident, therefore, that the number in Prof. Salmoné's table might have been largely reduced without any material addition to the pages of his book; and we think it is to be regretted that he did not adopt that course. It is, however, only fair to add that the importance of this objection may be easily overrated. The student may, indeed, form a list of his own, composed of a score, or a dozen, or even a smaller number of the commonest forms. Others, he will find, are more or less rarely required; and the smaller number in common use, along with their distinguishing numbers, cannot fail soon to become so impressed upon his memory—and that, let it be added, with great advantage to his knowledge of the language—that they must soon cease to give him trouble.

Prof. Salmoné's familiarity with the Arabic language, as being his native tongue, has no doubt contributed to lighten the work he has undergone; but throughout the pages of his book there is ample sign of the painstaking labour he has bestowed upon the performance of his task. From the typographical point of view the book is all that could be desired—the paper of excellent quality, the type remarkable for its clearness, and certainly not inferior to the product of any European press in point of elegance of form. Every Arabic word is not only printed in the native character, but is fully pointed with its vowels. In the tables the precise nature of the alterations in the derived forms is shown at a glance by the simple expedient of printing the incremental letters and altered vowel marks in red. The compactness of the book, together with its comprehensiveness—its most obvious, though not its only merit—will make it valuable to travellers in Muhammadan countries, who, if they have literary or bibliographical objects in view, will find it a most useful as well as an untroublesome companion.

Students will not expect to find in this that which no book can give, namely, a royal road to learning. They must not only acquire a knowledge of the alphabet, of itself a simple enough matter; but a preliminary grounding in the first principles of Arabic grammar is absolutely indispensable for the use of any dictionary whatsoever. But once that is accomplished, they may do worse than give Prof. Salmoné's a fairly patient trial. Of this they may safely be assured, that whatever time they may spend over it will not be wasted, but will, on the contrary, be attended with unquestionable and permanent profit to themselves.

HENRY C. KAY.

SOME BOOKS ON PHYSICS.

Electrical Influence Machines. By John Gray. (Whittaker.) The book is divided into three parts. The first, which is devoted to a general exposition of static electricity, the author hopes will make the reader independent of a text-book on the subject. We hardly think that anyone requiring such independence would be likely to become a reader of a work on influence machines, and the book would be decidedly improved by its omission. Presumably, in order to render the theory of static electricity easy of comprehension, few attempts are made at definition, or at using terms in senses consistent with modern usage or with themselves. Thus, electricity is regarded as a primary conception (p. 7), electrical density is nowhere defined, but is measured (on p. 8). The common definition of potential is given on p. 12, but is mentioned with some contempt; in the next page but one, not only the term potential, but also equipotential surfaces are treated as primary conceptions. Electromotive force, sometimes written in full, at others contracted to E. M. F., is used in various senses, but never in the usual one. Thus, on p. 24 E. M. F. is stated to be the rate at which potential diminishes; on p. 22 "positive and negative electrification is simply positive or negative electromotive force with reference to the surrounding field," while on p. 113 the electromotive force is referred to as being the intensity of the electrification. The meaning of the statement on p. 15, that the electrical fluid would appear not to be the luminiferous ether, but some fluid in a higher degree of tenuity, we have not succeeded in fathoming. It is a great relief to turn to the second part of the book, which is devoted to an historical sketch of the development of influence machines, and an explanation of their action. Here the author has wisely availed himself to a considerably extent of Prof. Silvanus P. Thomson's researches, and the descriptive part leaves very little to be desired. The line of influence machines that have descended by a kind of process of natural selection from Volta's electrophorus is followed, and the illustrations are excellent; the practice of putting the + sign upon one side of the glass, and the - sign upon the other, when the electricity in both cases is upon the same side, as in the diagrams on pp. 111, 115, 154, &c., is the only fault to be found. The explanatory part is fairly good, but the author is hampered by his exceeding care to avoid such terms as "potential" and "capacity," and two points of great interest in influence machines—viz., the frequent reversal of polarity of the Holtz and Voss machines, and the regenerative action of the Wimshurst are unsatisfactory, the explanation given of the first action being scarcely correct, and none at all being given of the second. The third part of the book contains hints upon practical construction, which will be useful to those wishing to make their own machines.

Elementary Dynamics of Particles and Solids. By W. M. Hicks. (Macmillan.) This is a valuable elementary treatise, written by one who has had considerable experience in the kind of knowledge which it is possible to put into the average youth who attends the lectures of a country college. It will enable such a youth, if fairly diligent, to pass the examinations for an ordinary degree in the dynamical branch of what the wiseacres of Burlington House term "mixed mathematics." Principal Hicks prefers analysis to geometry, and belongs to the school which still devotes a chapter entitled "Machines" to the inclined plane, the lever, the wheel and axle, the pulley, and the screw. But if he is somewhat old-fashioned, he is at any rate clear, which is much more than can be said of some of the writers of recent text-books. His treatment of moments of inertia deserves special notice; and the clear type and wide range of problems of his volume ought to obtain for it a considerable circulation among teachers with a preference for analytical methods.

A Syllabus of Elementary Dynamics: With an Appendix on the Alternative Mode of Regarding Symbols in Physical Equations. By W. N. Stocker. (Macmillan.) There is nothing to call for special comment in this syllabus. It presents no originality of treatment or of ideas in the sections devoted to mass and force; and this may be fairly taken as a test of the claim on our notice of any of the innumerable works recently issued dealing with dynamics. The word "quickening" is advantageously used for speed-acceleration. The syllabus will probably be useful to Prof. Stocker's own pupils, but it will hardly have a wide circle of readers.

SCIENCE NOTES.

THE last part of the Transactions of the Seismological Society of Japan is entirely devoted to papers on the eruption of Bandai-san, which occurred in 1888. As soon as the news of the terrible catastrophe reached Tokyo, the president of the Imperial University deputed Messrs. Sekiya and Kikuchi to proceed thither, and undertake a thorough investigation of the phenomena. Their elaborate report, with illustrations, is here published, accompanied by a paper on the same subject by Profs. Cargill Knott and Michie Smith. It is supposed that Bandai-san had not been in a state of eruption for 1000 years; but it was recognised as dormant rather than extinct, and hot springs occurred in its vicinity. On July 15, 1888, a series of terrific explosions occurred, accompanied by the ejection of enormous columns of steam and vast showers of stones and dust, but without the eruption of lava or pumice. It appears that the volcanic ashes and dust were formed chiefly of fragments of pre-existing rocks, mechanically triturated by the explosions.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

M. CHARLES DELAGRAVE, of Paris, has issued this week the first fascicule of the long-expected French Dictionary of Prof. Adolphe Hatzfeld and the late Arsène Darmesteter. The work was begun nearly nineteen years ago; and a considerable portion was in type at the time of the lamented death of M. Darmesteter, in November, 1888. His place as editor has been filled by one of his pupils, M. Antoine Thomas, lecturer in Romance philology at the Sorbonne. The full title of the work is "Dictionnaire Général de la Langue Française du Commencement du XVII<sup>e</sup>. Siècle jusqu'à nos Jours, précédé d'un Traité de la Formation de la Langue." The special character of the work will only be manifest from this "Traité," which will not appear until the conclusion of the publication. But it may here be stated generally that the object of the editors has been to trace both the historical and the logical growth in the usage of words, as exemplified in M. Arsène Darmesteter's little book, La Vie des Mots (1887). The mode of publication is in fascicules of eighty pages, to appear at intervals of two months, at the price of one franc each; and it is estimated that the whole will be completed in about thirty fascicules. The first contains an introduction (pp. xxviii.), and sixty-four pages of text, from "A" to "Ajournement." The typography is clear, and the method of arrangement both simple and instructive.

THE July number of the Scottish Review prints the second of Prof. Rhys's Rhind lectures on the early ethnology of the British Isles, treated from the point of view of language. The special title of this lecture is "Traces of a Non-Aryan Element in the Celtic Family," and the material is taken almost entirely from personal names. Prof. Rhys first explains the normal mode of formation of personal names which is common to the entire Aryan group. He then points out traces of a different system of nomenclature, to be found chiefly in Ireland, and also in the Pictish or northern districts of Scotland. This other system he is inclined to attribute to the non-Aryan element, which likewise influenced the language of the Goidelic or Q Celts. Finally, he brings forward a large amount of evidence from the same class of personal names, as tending to prove a totemistic system among this non-Aryan element. The totem chiefly discussed is the dog. Prof. Rhys further expresses his belief that the Aryans also once had their totems, but at so early a date as to be beyond the reach of philology. The summaries of foreign periodicals continue to form a valuable feature in the Scottish Review; but some of the other articles are open to criticism. For example, in the current number one contributor talks of "Ferishtá, a Hindu historian" (p. 99); and another contributor writes: "The language [of Heligoland], which is unwritten, is generally called Frisian, but is pronounced by the learned to be Anglo-Saxon" (p. 161).

THE current number of the Journal of the China Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society is made up of two highly interesting papers. The first is an essay on "The Manchu Language," by Herr P. G. von Möllendorff; and the second is an "Abstract of Information on Currency and Measures in China," by Mr. H. B. Morse. The only complaint we have to make of Herr von Möllendorff's paper is as regards the title. A more descriptive title would have been "A Catalogue of Manchu Literature." Manchu literature is comparatively a thing of yesterday. It was not until the year 1599 that the Manchus possessed an alphabet. At that time the sovereign, who was afterwards known as Tien-ming, directed two officials to adapt the Mongolian letters to the Manchu pronunciation. So soon as this was accomplished, other scholars were appointed to translate Chinese works into the native language; and from this beginning the literature, which is essentially a literature of translations, took its rise. At the present time the Manchu language has almost entirely given way to Chinese. Little or no printing is being done in it, and the probability is that before long such catalogues as that of Herr von Möllendorf will be the most complete records which we shall possess of the literature. Herr von Möllendorf enumerates 249 works, which is by far the largest number which have ever hitherto been described in one catalogue. It would naturally be thought that the question of currency and measures in China would have been one of interest to the mercantile community in that country; but in response to inquiries issued by the China Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society on the subject, not a single reply was returned from any merchant. The whole of the extremely interesting and valuable information contained in Mr. Morse's "Abstract" has been contributed by missionaries and consular officers. The varying values and names of the tael in different parts of the country, and the relative value of the copper cash, are all carefully set out; and there is further a series of most important notes on the paper currencies of China. The article is one which should be carefully studied by travellers and by merchants, if they have sufficient energy to read it.

FINE ART.

AN ILLUSTRATED RECORD OF MARIE ANTOINETTE.

La Reine Marie Antoinette. Par Pierre de Nolhac. (Paris: Boussod, Valadon et Cie.)

THE ill-fated Austrian Princess who for about a score of years was Queen of France has long been the subject of a cult. Joan of Arc in the dim past, and the Stuarts more recently, are among the few whose romantic history has been received, pondered, enlarged upon, with something of a like interest.

The present book—which is very readable, though not distinguished in regard to its text, and which is very engaging as to its illustrations—is, on the whole, the charming and necessary complement of a volume of Lord Ronald Gower's which we reviewed in the ACADEMY some years ago, and in which, along with the fullest account that is ever likely to be given of the many portraits of the Queen—portraits of chronicle, portraits of flattery, and portraits of caricature—there was interwoven, inevitably, much of her personal history. But Lord Ronald Gower, of course, treating his matter above all from the point of view of collector and curieux, did not aim to be exactly readable by the large public. M. de Nolhac, on the other hand, in the volume before us, has never forgotten the public for a moment, and has remembered perhaps most of all the public of boudoir and drawing-room. He has at the same time not neglected to derive from all available sources the information which he has popularised; and on the reign of Marie Antoinette—if her brief social rule can be called precisely a "reign"—on the court and its fêtes, on her intimate life, and on Le Petit Trianon, he has written fully and authoritatively from manuscripts, as well as from printed documents and accepted volumes. And, like a good Frenchman in whose genial nature no desire is so prominent as le désir de plaire, he has been at pains to gild his pills, and to sweeten or make piquant his potions. All is presented in a form in which we can receive it.

The illustrations to the volume are sufficiently numerous, and are, speaking generally, worthy of the subject—many of them being executed with the skill and the variety of resource which Messrs. Boussod, Valadon et Cie. are known to have at command. One incongruity, however, I shall permit myself to point out; and that is the appearance, in the chapter on Le Petit Trianon, of ordinary photographs of garden and villa—mere views, one may say—closely following the charming and accurate reproductions of prints into which the gifted eighteenth century has thrown so much of the most agreeable of its art. These photographs—appearing where they do—are, to speak roundly, detestable. But there my reproaches end. One can have nothing but praise for the other illustrations—the book's true ornaments—whether the richly coloured frontispiece, a bordered portrait of Marie Antoinette (a facsimile of Janinet), or the reproduction of the exquisitely conceived portrait by Mme. Vigée Lebrun of Yolande Gabrielle Marline de Polastron (that Duchess de Polignac who was so good and so pretty a young friend to many excellent gentlemen in need of the consolations of picturesque friendship and of remunerative place), or that charming picture of a "serene bourgeoise," Marie Antoinette as la belle fermière; or, to make an end where the end is not really reached, the portrait of the Queen with her children, and the elegant compositions, half history and half allegory, which we owe to the pencil of one of the finest, most precise, alert, and piquant draughtsmen of that time—Moreau le jeune. Only the first illustration is in colours; the rest are in black and white—charming themes for the most part, and presented with an unusual subtlety of gradation.

No student of the epoch can deem himself quite fully equipped if he does not make himself the possessor of this agreeable record of a famous woman, and of the period in which her lot was cast.

FREDERICK WEDMORE.

MR. FLINDERS PETRIE'S EXCAVATIONS IN PALESTINE.

WE quote, from the annual report of the general committee of the Palestine Exploration Fund, the following account by Mr. Petrie of his recent excavations on the site of Lachish:—

"After lengthy delays, officially, I was able to begin excavation for the Palestine Exploration Fund in the middle of April. Unfortunately, nothing was known of the history of pottery in Syria, and therefore nothing had been done in past surveys and explorations towards dating the various tells and khirbehs. It had been necessary, therefore, on applying for a site, to trust to the identification by names; and there seemed little risk in expecting that Umm Lâkis and 'Ajlân would—one or other, if not both—prove to be Amorite towns, Lachish and Eglon. Some other ruins were included in the legal limit of area for the permission. Among them, most happily, was Tell Hesay.

"So soon as I arrived and could examine our ground, I saw, from my Egyptian experience, that every site, except Tell Hesay, was of Roman age, and unimportant. At Umm Lâkis, three days' work amply proved its late date; and 'Ajlân was a still more trivial site. I therefore attacked Tell Hesay, a mound of house-ruins sixty feet high and about 200 feet square. All of one side had been washed away by the stream, thus affording a clear section from top to base. The generally early age of it was evident, from nothing later than good Greek pottery being found on the top of it, and from Phœnician ware (which is known in Egypt to date from 1100 B.C.), occurring at half to three-quarters of the height up the mound. It could not be doubted, therefore, that we had an Amorite and Jewish town to work on. My general results are as follows:—

"Topographically, this place and Tell Nejileh, six miles south, are the most valuable possessions in the low country, as they command the only springs and watercourse which exist in the whole district. From their positions, their early age, and their water-supply, it seems almost certain that they are the two Amorite cities of the low country, Lachish and Eglon. The transference of the names in late times to settlements a few miles off is probably due to the returning Jews not being strong enough to wrest these springs from the Bedawin sheep-masters.

"Historically, this town began as an immensely strong fort, with a wall 28 feet thick, on a knoll close to the spring. This is certainly pre-Jewish, by the relative position of Phœnician pottery; and approximately its age would be about 1500 B.C., agreeing well to the beginning of the Egyptian raids under Tahutmes I. This fort, after repairs which still exist as solid brickwork over 20 feet high, fell into complete ruin. No more bricks were made; rude houses of stones from the stream were all that were erected; and for long years the alkali burner used the deserted hill, attracted by the water-supply to wash his ashes with. This corresponds to the barbaric Hebrew period under the Judges. Then, again, the town was walled, Phœnician pottery begins to appear, and some good masonry—evidently the age of the early Jewish kings. Successive fortifications were built as the ruins rose higher and the older walls were destroyed; Cypriote influence comes in, and later on Greek influence, from about 700 B.C. and onwards. The great ruin of the town was, about 600 B.C., that by Nebuchadnezzar; and some slight remains of Greek pottery, down to about 400 B.C., show the last stage of its history. Happily the indications can be interpreted by our literary records, otherwise we could have discovered little about a place in which not a single inscription or dated object has been found.

"Architecturally, though little has come to light, it is of the greatest importance. In a building which is probably of Solomon's age, or certainly within a century later, were four slabs, each bearing half a pilaster in relief. These pilasters have a quarter-round base, a very sloping shaft, and a volute at the top, projecting, without any separate capital or line across the shaft. The volute seems derived from a ram's horn. We now see the early date and Asiatic nature of the Ionic style; and we have some definite ground for the temple architecture. A special key to the age of masonry is in the methods of stone-dressing. The use of the 'claw-tool,' more intelligibly called the 'comb-pick,' is distinctive of Greek work in Egypt, and it is known in early work in Greece. As now, on examining the stone-dressing of 1000 B.C., and a gateway and steps of about 750 B.C., there is not a trace of this tooling, it seems almost certain that it is as much of Greek age in Syria as in Egypt. Hence we must attribute the whole of the known walls of the Haram area to Herod and later builders. The use of drafted masonry, with an irregular bump on the face, is fixed to as early as 750 B.C. by the gateway just named; and the use of flaked-dressing (as I may call it), is fixed to 1000 B.C. by the pilaster slabs, agreeing with the work of the supposed Solomonic column by the Russian Church at Jerusalem.

"Pottery is now pretty completely known, and we shall be able in future to date the ages of towns at a glance, as I can in Egypt. Without entering on details, we may distinguish the Amorite by the very peculiar comb-streaking on the surface, wavy ledges for handles, and polished red-faced bowls, decorated by burnished cross-lines. These date from about 1500 to 1100 B.C., and deteriorate down to disappearance about 900. The Phœnician is thin hard black or brown ware; bottles with long necks, elegant bowls, and white juglets with pointed bottoms. Beginning about 1100, it flourishes till about 800 B.C. It develops into the Cypriote bowls, with V-handles, painted in bistre ladder patterns, which range from about 950 to 750 B.C. Due also to Phœnician influence seem to be the lamps from about 900 to 750 B.C., formed by open bowls pinched in at the edge to form a wick-spout. These were succeeded in the time of Greek influence, from 750 B.C., by the same pinched type, but of Greek ware, and with a flat brim. The Greek influence is also seen in the massive bowls of drab pottery, like those of early Naukratis, and the huge loop-handles, such as belong to both Naukratis and Defenneh before 600 B.C. All these approximate dates are solely derived from the levels of the walls and the thickness of the deposits; but they agree well with what is otherwise known.

"As unfortunately the Turkish Government claims everything, all the perfect pottery has been taken by the officials, and the stone-work is left to be destroyed by the Bedawin. Casts, photographs, and potsherds (such as any visitor can pick up here) are all that may be brought to England. These will be exhibited this summer in London, probably along with my Egyptian collections of this season.

"It is much to be hoped that some fresh explorer will come forward to take up this Syrian work, of which we have only been able to lay some of the foundations by the excavations of this spring. Much more has to be done before we can settle the historical problems which await solution in this land."

CORRESPONDENCE.

SCULPTURED SLABS FROM MESOPOTAMIA FOUND IN EGYPT.

Queen's College, Oxford: July 22, 1890.

In the current number of the Classical Review Mr. Budge draws attention to an article by M. Heuzey in the March number of the Revue Archéologique in which the French savant describes a curious fragment of green schist covered with figures in a peculiar style of art and in low relief. Mr. Budge states that the British Museum possesses three other fragments of the same type, and conjectures that they were brought to Egypt from Mesopotamia in the time of Amenophis III. Neither he nor M. Heuzey seems to know in what part of Egypt the fragments were discovered.

Now in the winter of 1883 a similar fragment was offered to me for sale; and though my recollection of the scene sculptured upon it has become somewhat dim, I am inclined to think that the fragment was identical with that which has found its way into the Louvre. The fragment in question was discovered at Abydos, and formed the half of a larger slab. The other half I was assured had strange characters inscribed upon it, but owing to a quarrel on the part of the finders was thrown into the Nile. I am told that Tigran Pasha possesses another sculptured slab of the same kind.

A. H. SAYCE.

EGYPTIAN JOTTINGS.

PROF. MASPERO has in the press a first volume of "Récits d'Histoire Ancienne" for young people, and a second volume in progress, which he hopes to have ready for publication early in October. These "Récits," which are confined to Egyptian and Assyrian subjects, will certainly be as interesting to most grown-up readers as to the children for whom they profess to be written. M. Maspero's catalogue of the Egyptian collection in the museum of Marseilles has been ready for publication for more than a year; but is held back by the municipal authorities of the city till the catalogue of Greek and Roman objects shall also be ready, much to the disappointment of specialists and the public.

THE work of the French School of Archaeology at Cairo progresses apace. It is the self-imposed law of this studious and learned body that each member of the school shall annually make a full and complete copy of some one monument of ancient Egypt, small or large, temple or tomb. In certain cases, where the task is too great for the limit of time, two or more years may be devoted to it. The school proposes this year to attack the multitudinous texts of the Great Temple of Edfu—a gigantic undertaking, and one which will surely give employment to more than one student for at least some years. In the meanwhile, M. Bédédite has transcribed all the texts and copied all the bas-reliefs at Philæ, and it is hoped that his Mémoire may be ready for publication in 1892. M. Bouriant is progressing fast with Mémoires Habû, where he has been at work for the last two years. The forthcoming numbers of the Mémoires of the school will contain, inter alia, the end of M. Ravaisse's monograph on the old palace of the Fatimite Kaliphs at Cairo, some important Coptic texts, and transcripts of several historic tombs at Thebes, including that of Queen Titi with illustrations in chromolithography.

FROM Thebes there comes intelligence of the discovery this spring of a headless statue of Seti II. of heroic size and archaic style. It was found at a depth of two feet below the surface level of the mud deposit which covers the floor of the great Hypostyle Hall. Greeks and Europeans, meanwhile, are carrying on an extensive system of plunder at Ekhmin and other places.

AMELIA B. EDWARDS.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

MR. JOHN MURRAY will publish in October a new and revised edition of Mr. A. S. Murray's History of Greek Sculpture from the Earliest Times, in two volumes, with about 130 illustrations.

THE exhibition of the works submitted for the national art competition, 1890, by the Schools of Art throughout the kingdom will be opened to the public on Monday next, July 28, and will remain open until the end of August. The works will be on view in the Enamels Gallery of the South Kensington Museum.

IN the sale of "Cuthbert Bede's" library, to take place on Friday next, is included a miniature of Mary Queen of Scots, which is attributed to Jehan de Court. It is painted on copper, and represents her in the dress of a French widow. A similar miniature was sold at the Blenheim sale in 1885.

THE beautiful "Ecce Homo" recently acquired by the National Gallery at the sale of the Perkins collection has now been placed on a screen in the great Venetian room. Originally catalogued—with an ineptitude so enormous as to be comical—as a Carlo Dolce, it was at the time of the sale recognised as being the work of a North Italian painter, practising circa 1500, and as revealing clearly the influence of Antonello da Messina. The learned director of the gallery has now boldly, and without any note of interrogation, labelled his trouvaille as from the hand of Giovanni Bellini himself—an attribution, as it appears to us, insufficiently warranted by the technical characteristics of the picture. Now that a full opportunity is afforded for comparing the "Christ" with the numerous examples of the same school and period contained in the national collection, there appears to be little doubt that it is a splendid example of the earlier and more earnest manner of Cima da Conegliano. The modelling—not precise or searching enough for Giambellino—resembles that of his gifted pupil, the parted lips being one of his especial characteristics, as may be noted in the great "Incredulity of St. Thomas" hard by. The treatment of the heavy wig-like masses of the hair, with its fine lines, is very similar to that of the Saviour's parted locks in the larger work, while a certain want of flexibility in the muscles of the face is also a distinguishing mark of the master. More striking still is the coincidence that from the head of Christ issue in both instances single rays, disposed in three distinct and separate fasciculi—an arrangement, not found, so far as we are aware, in the works of Giovanni Bellini, and never common in Italian art. The peculiarly brilliant blue of the drapery is paralleled by that of the little "St. Jerome" from the Hamilton Palace collection, and approached by that of the "Virgin and Child" on a neighbouring screen—both these panels being sufficiently representative examples of Cima. Comparison has in these remarks been restricted to works in the National Gallery, as being most readily available for purposes of verification. The influence of Antonello—from whom Bellini himself borrowed so much—is, in the new acquisition, undeniable, and may account for a virility and an intensity of pathos not often reached even in the better productions of the sympathetic Bellinesque painter, to whom we would attribute it.

THE first exhibition in connexion with the art classes held at the Athenaeum, Highbury New Park, took place on Friday and Saturday of last week. In the studies from the life in oils, mention should be made of the work of Miss Conder and Miss Bell as being good in tone and colour. There was also a good show of chalk heads from the life—those by the Misses Harris and Barber were particularly well drawn and modelled; and some fair specimens of drawings from the antique. Among the still-life studies in oil and water-colour, the work of the Misses M. and C. Harrison, Turner, and Andrade, was noticeable for the freshness of the colouring and clever composition. An interesting portion of the exhibition was the work of the Sketching Class—the interior of St. Bartholomew's; and also the many pretty bits of landscape work from the gardens of Fairseat, Highgate. The studio was tastefully decorated with flowers and plants, and with Turkish draperies lent by Mr. Warner, of Highbury.

AT a recent meeting of the Académie des Beaux-Arts, M. Français was elected a member, in the section of painting, in the room of the late Robert-Fleury. M. Français—who is better known as a lithographer than as a painter—obtained nineteen votes in the final ballot, as against fifteen given for M. Jules Lefebvre and two for M. Detaille.

THE portrait statue of Sancho el Fuerte, of Navarre, one of the victors at Las Navas de Tolosa (1212), which had been buried in the church of Roncesvalles since 1622, was disinterred by the prior and canons on June 17. The statue was found almost perfect, in the spot indicated in the MS. of Huarte (preserved in the convent), an eye-witness of the hiding of the sculpture now brought to light.

THE STAGE.

STAGE NOTES.

THE performances of "As You Like It" at the Lyceum Theatre have been a great success, though they cannot be continued more than a week or two. It is recognised that, though here and there an individual interpretation may be weak, the Daly Company, as a whole, is not unqualified to grapple with the difficulties of a far more poetic Shaksperian work than the one with which the fame of their principal comedian has hitherto been so much associated. Mr. Drew is perhaps, the actor who, next to Miss Ada Rehan, may be said to have scored by his appearance in this latest Shaksperian revival; and he has an advantage denied perhaps to Mrs. Gilbert and Mr. Lewis—his acting is versatile; there is no uniformity in his presence. Curiosity, nevertheless, has not unnaturally centred in the assumption of Rosalind by Miss Ada Rehan. Let us say of this performance at once that even Mrs. Kendal's greatest admirers—and we consider ourselves among them—have seen that in certain essential points the only great English actress of the day who, to our knowledge, has essayed Rosalind at all finds herself surpassed by the extraordinary vivacious comedian whom America has sent to us. But Rosalind was never reckoned among the capital successes of our great English actress of emotional parts. The character lay, almost obviously, much more within the range of the American artist. And Miss Rehan has endowed it with a certain realism, a certain actualité. Her own remarkable personality—stamped as it is upon the major part of her assumptions—was never absent from her Rosalind. The performance accordingly was intensely womanly, and exceedingly humorous, full to the brim of ingenuity. But it was not intensely poetic, though sufficiently poetic it may indeed have been for many people. We do not propose to follow it in detail. It is impressive, girlish, and apparently spontaneous from end to end; but nothing could be more tiresome than to dwell upon the small points which this latest performer of the part works out in a manner deliberately different from that of her fore-runners. Intelligent as the actress is, the real, the substantial differences that divide her Rosalind from those that have gone before it are the differences which arise from her own potent personality. The Rosalind of "Miss Faucit"—which we had never the privilege of seeing—was, in all probability, a performance better suited, with all its admirable qualities, to another generation than to the playgoer of our day. By its very insistence upon the purely ideal side of the character—an insistence easily explained, again, by the personality of Lady Martin—its appeal must have been strongest to a generation which sought generally in its art relief from the pressure of the actual. Our own generation has few ideals, even when it witnesses an interpretation of Shakspeare. Hence in part the curiosity of its acceptance of the realism of Mrs. Kendal—but a few years ago—and the enthusiasm of its acceptance of the very different realism of Miss Rehan to-day. For ourselves, we are not sure that we shall ever see quite the Rosalind of our dreams. The Katherine of our dreams—and something even better than that—is embodied by Miss Ada Rehan; and that is still perhaps the part by which we shall most wish to remember her. We are glad to know that Miss Eleanor Calhoun—who, considering that she has never failed upon the London stage, has been seen upon it far too little—is about to return to a metropolitan theatre of the first importance. Miss Calhoun, after an absence in France, will almost immediately assume, at the Shaftesbury Theatre, the part of Vashti Dethic, which has been played hitherto very strikingly by Miss Olga Brandon.

MUSIC.

MUSIC NOTES.

AMBROISE THOMAS'S "Hamlet" was revived at Covent Garden on Monday evening. On the whole the performance was extremely good. Mr. Lassale (Hamlet) was flat at the commencement; but in the Spectre scene, and in the one with the Queen, he acted and sang splendidly. Mme. Melba was particularly well suited with her part of Ophelia, and she was in excellent voice. In the mad scene, the difficult and high florid passages came out with extraordinary clearness. Mlle. Richard was most successful; her great declamatory power was shown in the scene with Hamlet. The staging was very effective.

MASTER MAX HAMBOURG gave a second pianoforte recital on Monday afternoon. He played two Bach Preludes and Fugues in a remarkably neat and intelligent manner. But the greatest success of the afternoon was his performance of the Haydn Variations in F minor; the tone was beautiful and the phrasing admirable. But the young pianist must unlearn his sensational tricks as soon as possible. Playing in public at present will only spoil him. He ought to be the Rubinstein of the future.

Just published, 8vo, cloth, price 2s.

ANNIE OF THARAU: a Song of Olden Times. Translated from the German of FRANK HIRSCH, by C. ADOLF REHDER.
London: AUGUST SIEGEL, 30, Lime Street, E.C.

W. H. SMITH & SON'S SUBSCRIPTION LIBRARY, 186, STRAND, LONDON, and at the Railway Bookstalls.

1.—This Library is established in connexion with Messrs. W. H. SMITH & Son's numerous Railway Bookstalls; it embraces all the most important Works of History, Biography, Travel, Fiction, Poetry, Science, and Theology, as well as the leading Magazines and Reviews, and gives greater advantages to Subscribers than any other existing Library, from the fact that there are 500 Bookstalls in England and Wales, and to any of these Depots a Subscriber may be transferred free of charge.

2.—Subscribers can only change their Books at the Depot where their names are registered, but they may transfer the place of exchange by giving notice to the Clerk in charge of the Depot at which they obtain their Books. Of the current periodicals, one only at a time is allowed to a Subscription under Five Guineas, and Subscriptions will not be accepted for the supply of Magazines and Reviews only.

3.—The Books are delivered at the Bookstalls, carriage free. A Subscriber may exchange once a day; the Clerk in charge will obtain from London any Work in the Library which a Subscriber may desire to have. NOVELS exchanged only in unbroken and complete Sets.

4.—London Subscribers transferring their Subscriptions to a Country Depot will be entitled only to the number of volumes which the Country terms assign to the amount they subscribe; similarly, Country Subscriptions transferred to Town become subject to the London regulations.

5.—Subscriptions may commence at any date, and are payable in advance at any of the Railway Bookstalls.

6.—Messrs. W. H. SMITH & Son beg to impress upon their Library Subscribers the fact that much disappointment and inconvenience would be avoided if they would, in all cases, give to the Clerk in charge a list comprising at least twice as many titles of works as they wish to exchange.

I.—FOR SUBSCRIBERS OBTAINING THEIR BOOKS FROM A LONDON TERMINUS.

		6 Months	12 Months
		£ s. d.	£ s. d.
For One Volume at a time ...	...	0 12 0	1 1 0
For Two Volumes ...	...	0 17 6	1 11 6
For Four " " ...	...	1 3 0	2 2 0
For Eight " " ...	...	1 15 0	3 3 0
For Fifteen " " ...	...	3 0 0	5 5 0

II.—FOR SUBSCRIBERS OBTAINING THEIR BOOKS FROM A COUNTRY BOOKSTALL—

		6 Months	12 Months
		£ s. d.	£ s. d.
For One Volume at a time ...	...	0 12 0	1 1 0
For Two Volumes ...	...	0 17 6	1 11 6
For Three " " ...	...	1 3 0	2 2 0
For Four " " ...	...	1 8 0	2 10 0
For Six " " ...	...	1 15 0	3 3 0
For Twelve " " ...	...	3 0 0	5 5 0

III.—FOR COUNTRY BOOK CLUBS, READING SOCIETIES, &c.

For Twenty-four Volumes at a time ...	...	5 5 0	9 9 0
For Thirty-six " " ...	...	8 0 0	14 2 6
For Forty-eight " " ...	...	10 10 0	18 16 0
For Sixty " " ...	...	13 0 0	23 9 0
For Seventy-two " " ...	...	15 10 0	28 2 0
For Eighty-four " " ...	...	18 0 0	32 15 0

For every additional Twelve Volumes, £4 12s. 6d.

A Catalogue of Surplus and New Books, offered at greatly reduced prices, is published Monthly, and can be had upon application at the Bookstalls. Also a Catalogue of Books in elegant bindings, for Gentlemen's Libraries.

THEATRES.

AVENUE THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 9, DR. BILL.
Messrs. George Alexander, Benjamin Webster, G. Capel, H. Grattan, and Albert Chevalier; Mesdames Elizabeth Robins, Carlotta Leclercq, Leston, Marie Linden, Laura Graves, Edith Kenward, Lillie Young, and Fanny Brough.
Preceded, at 8.30, by MISS CINDERELLA.

COMEDY THEATRE.

Manager, Mr. CHAS. H. HAWTREY.
Every Evening, at 9, NERVES.
Messrs. H. Kemble, Edward Righton, and Charles Hawtre; Mesdames Maud Millett, Sophie Larkin, Lydia Cowell, Ethel Matthews, and Lottie Venne.
Preceded, at 8.15, by A BAD PENNY.

COURT THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 8, THE CABINET MINISTER.
Messrs. Arthur Cecil, Weedon Grossmith, Herbert Waring, Brandon Thomas, Allen Aynesworth, Saunders, Farren, and Clulow; Mesdames Le Thière, Rosina Filippi, Tanner, Eva Moore, Caldwell, Isabel Ellissen, Harrington, Edmund Phelps, and John Wood.

CRITERION THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. CHARLES WYNDHAM.
This Evening, at 9.20, SOWING AND REAPING.
Messrs. Charles Wyndham, Geo. Giddens, W. Blakeley, and S. Valentine; Mesdames M. A. Victor, E. Leyshon, E. Vining, and Mary Moore.
Preceded, at 8.30, by DELICATE GROUND.
At 8, Comedietta, THE WALL OF CHINA.

GAIETY THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 8.20, A GOLD MINE.
Messrs. Nat Goodwin, William Farren, Charles Glenny, Harry Everfield, Eric Thorne, and Fred Wood; Mesdames Kate Forsyth, Jenny McNulty, and Carlotta Leclercq.

GARRICK THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. JOHN HARE.
Th Evening, at 8.50, A PAIR OF SPECTACLES.
Messrs. John Hare, C. Groves, R. Cathcart, S. Brough, C. Dodsworth, and R. Harding; Mesdames Webster, F. Hunter, and Kate Rorke.
Preceded, at 8, by DREAM FACES.
Mr. J. Forbes Robertson and Miss Carlotta Addison.

GLOBE THEATRE.

This Evening, at 8, ROMEO AND JULIET.
Miss Adelaide Moore, Juliet; Mr. Otis Skinner, Romeo.
Messrs. J. Nesbitt, G. F. Black, J. F. Graham, E. Wilde, J. Humphries, J. H. Manley, S. C. Henry, F. Wells, G. B. Phillips, M. Baker, E. Boddy, and Mark Quinton; Mesdames May Prothero, Nellie Duncan, and Charles Calvert.

LYCEUM THEATRE.

Mr. HENRY IRVING, Sole Manager.
Mr. AUGUSTIN DALY'S COMPANY OF COMEDIANS, every evening, at 8.15 (precisely) in AS YOU LIKE IT.
Miss Ada Rehan as Rosalind, Mr. Drew as Orlando, Mr. Lewis as Touchstone, and Mr. Clarke, Mr. Fisher, Miss Prince, Miss Irving, &c.

PRINCE OF WALES' THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. HORACE SEDGER.
This Evening, at 8.15, MARJORIE.
Messrs. C. H. Hayden Coffin, Joseph Tapley, H. Ashley, Templer Saxe, Wood, James, Shale, Hendon, and H. Monkhouse; Mesdames Phyllis Broughton, Amadi, and Miss Camille D'Arville.
Preceded, at 7.30, by ALL ABROAD.

SHAFTESBURY THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, E. S. WILLARD.
Every Evening, at 8.30, JUDAH.
Messrs. Willard, Royce Carleton, F. Kerr, Sant Matthews, C. Fulton, H. Cane, Harting, and Thomas; Mesdames Bessie Hutton, Gertrude Warden, A. Bowering, and Olga Brandon.

TERRY'S THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 9, THE JUDGE.
Messrs. W. S. Penley, Wm. Herbert, F. H. Fenton, M. Kinghorne, G. Belmore, and W. Lestock; Mesdames E. Thorne, E. Chester, H. Leyton, and C. Grahame.
At 8.15, NEARLY SEVERED.
Messrs. W. Lestock and J. Nelson; Mesdames H. Leyton and M. A. Giffard.

TOOLE'S THEATRE.

Manageress, Miss VIOLET MELNOTTE.
Lessee, Mr. J. L. TOOLE.
Every Evening, at 9, a new Military Farce, in three acts, by J. H. Darnley, entitled THE SOLICITOR.
Preceded by THE BAILIFF.

VAUDEVILLE THEATRE.

This Evening, at 9, MISS TOMBOY.
Messrs. Thomas Thorne, Cyril Maude, Frank Gilmore, J. S. Blythe, O. Yorke, F. Grove, Harbury, and Fred Thorne; Mesdames W. Emery, Hanbury, Collette, and Sylvia Holson.
Preceded, at 8, by MEADOW-SWEET.

NATIONAL

FOR MUTUAL

LIFE ASSURANCE.

48, GRACECHURCH STREET, LONDON.

PHENIX FIRE OFFICE.

19, LOMBARD STREET, E.C., and 57, CHANCERY CROSS, S.W.

Established 1782.

Moderate Rates. Absolute Security.

Liberal Loss Settlements.

Prompt Payment of Claims.

Joint Secretaries—W. C. MACDONALD and F. B. MACDONALD.

LOSSES PAID OVER £17,000,000.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

THREE per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS, repayable on demand.

TWO per CENT. INTEREST on CURRENT ACCOUNTS calculated on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.

The Bank undertakes for its Customers, Free of Charge, the Custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuables; the Collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons; and the Purchase and Sale of Stocks, Shares, and Annuities. Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post-free, on application. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND &amp; CO'S AI SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS,

and

POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME

PIES. Also,

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—

11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET, MAYFAIR, W.

TO STOUT PEOPLE.

Sunday Times says: "Mr. Russell's aim is to eradicate, to cure the disease, and that his treatment is the true one seems beyond all doubt. The medicine he prescribes does not lower, but builds up and tones the system." Book (128 pages), with Recipe and Notes how to pleasantly and rapidly cure obesity (average reduction in first week is 3 lb.), post-free, Eight Stamps.

F. C. RUSSELL, Woburn House, Store Street, Bedford Square, London, W.C.

GOLD PEN,

WITH DIAMOND POINT.

Anti-corrosive—Flexible—Durable—Adapting itself to any Handwriting.

Price 6d. each; post-free, 7d.

ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, 27, CHANCERY LANE, LONDON.

FRY'S

Lancet—"Pure and very soluble."
Medical Times—"Eminently suitable for Invalids."

PURE CONCENTRATED

Sir C. A. Cameron—"I have never tasted Cocoa that I like so well."
President Royal College of Surgeons, Ireland.

Paris Exhibition, 1889: GOLD MEDAL awarded to J. S. FRY &amp; SONS.

COCOA

See Prospectus, page 17, for particulars of Endowment Assurance Policies combining Life Assurance at Minimum Cost with Provision for Old Age.

INVESTED FUNDS, £4,400,000.

INSTITUTION.

ESTBD. 1835.

FURNISH your HOUSES or APARTMENTS THROUGHOUT

MOEDER'S HIRE SYSTEM.

The original, best, and most liberal. Suits all.

FOUNDED A.D. 1868.

Furnish direct from the Manufacturer, from £10 to £10,000.

Cash prices. No extra charge for time given.

Catalogues, Estimates, Press Opinions, Testimonials Post Free.

F. MOEDER,

248, 249, 250, Tottenham Court Road, W. Also for HIRE ONLY.

Books produced at a fixed price for Printing, Paper, and Binding, and terms arranged for Publishing.

Authors advised with as to Printing and Publishing. Estimates of Cost of Printing and Binding.

ALEXANDER &amp; SHEPHEARD,

Publishers, Printers, and Binders,

FURNIVAL STREET, HOLBORN, and 27, CHANCERY LANE, LONDON.

THE SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

THE ORGAN OF BOTH BRANCHES OF THE LEGAL PROFESSION.

ESTABLISHED 1857.

Published every Friday. Price 6d.

Of the general contents of the JOURNAL the following statement will afford some idea:—

CURRENT TOPICS.—LEADING ARTICLES.—RECENT DECISIONS—CASES OF THE WEEK—CASES BEFORE THE BANKRUPTCY REGISTRARS—SOLICITORS' CASES—REVIEWS—NEW ORDERS—GENERAL CORRESPONDENCE—COURTS—PARLIAMENT AND LEGISLATION—APPOINTMENTS AND OBITUARY—SOCIETIES AND INSTITUTIONS.

A Careful Summary is given of all the Legal News of the Week, and special attention is bestowed on Furnishing Early Copies of all Court Papers.

ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTIONS.

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL ONLY, 26s.; by post, 28s., when paid in advance. Single Number, 6d.

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL and WEEKLY REPORTER £2 12s., post-free, when paid in advance.

WEEKLY REPORTER, in Wrapper, £2 12s., post-free. Single Number, 1s.

The Solicitors' Journal and Reporter can be ordered from any date.

Cheques and Post Office Orders payable to H. VILLERS.

OFFICE: 27, CHANCERY LANE, W.C.

MACMILLAN &amp; CO.'S LIST.

THE PRINCIPLES of ECONOMICS.

By ALFRED MARSHALL, M.A.,
Professor of Political Economy in the University of Cambridge,
Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge, sometime
Fellow of Balliol College, Oxford.
2 vols., 8vo. Vol. I., price 12s. 6d. net.

THE HISTORY of the SCIENCE of POLITICS, AN INTRODUCTION to. By Sir FRED-ERICK POLLOCK, Bart., M.A., LL.D. Edin., Corpus Christi Professor of Jurisprudence in the University of Oxford; Author of "Essays in Jurisprudence and Ethics," "The Land Laws," &c. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

MR. MONTAGU WILLIAMS'S REMINISCENCES.
POPULAR EDITION.

LEAVES of a LIFE. Being the Reminiscences of Montagu Williams, Q.C. Eleventh Thousand. Crown 8vo, paper covers, 2s. 6d.; cloth, with Portrait, 3s. 6d.

ENGLISH LYRICS. By Alfred Austin.
Edited by WILLIAM WATSON, Author of "Wordsworth's Grave, and other Poems." Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

NEW NOVELS.

THE TRAGIC MUSE. By Henry
JAMES, Author of "The Europeans," "Daisy Miller,"
"A London Life," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo, 31s. 6d.

PLAIN TALES from the HILLS. By
RUDYARD KIPLING. 3rd Edition. 1 vol., cr. 8vo, 6s.

A SOUTH SEA LOVER: a Romance.
By ALFRED ST. JOHNSTON, Author of "Camping
among Cannibals." 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

MACMILLAN'S 3s. 6d. NOVELS.—New Vols.

THE SQUATTER'S DREAM. By ROLF BOLDREWOOD.

WHEAT and TARES. By Sir Henry
CUNNINGHAM, K.C.I.E.

LOUISIANA; and That Lass o'
LOWRIE'S By FRANCES HODGSON BURNETT.

SIXPENNY EDITION.

CHARLES KINGSLEY'S NOVELS.
Sixpenny Edition, Medium 8vo. A Reissue of this Popular Series, as under:—

WESTWARD HO! [Ready.]	ALTON LOCKE.	[Oct.]
HYPATIA. [Aug.]	TWO YEARS AGO.	[Nov.]
YEAST. [Sept.]	HEREWARD.	[Dec.]

THE THEORY of LIGHT. By
THOMAS PRESTON, M.A., Trinity College, Dublin;
Lecturer in Mathematics and Mathematical Physics,
University College, Dublin. 8vo, 12s. 6d.

SHORT STUDIES of SHAKE-SPEARE'S PLOTS. By CYRIL RANSOME, M.A., Professor of Modern Literature and History in the Yorkshire College of the Victoria University. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

MACMILLAN'S MAGAZINE.

Price 1s. No. 370, for AUGUST, contains—

1. THE TWO MR. PITTS. By GOLDWIN SMITH.
2. CHAPTERS from SOME UNWRITTEN MEMOIRS. II. My Musician.
3. SCOTT'S HEROINES.
4. THE WEST-BOUND EXPRESS. By GEORGE FLAMBORO.
5. MODERN SCHOOL-BOOKS. By ARTHUR GAYE.
6. AN OBSCURE SECT and its FOUNDER.
7. PIRANESI.
8. KIRSTEEN. By Mrs. OLIPHANT. (Concluded.)

THE ENGLISH

ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE,

- For AUGUST profusely illustrated, price 6d. by post 8d., contains—
1. PORTRAIT of an ITALIAN NOBLEMAN. After MORONI.
THE GIFT of the SEA. RUDYARD KIPLING.
  2. HELIGOLAND. WALTER ARMSTRONG.
  3. OVERLAND from INDIA. Sir D. MACKENZIE WALLACE, K.C.I.E.
  4. AN AUGUST RAMBLE down the UPPER THAMES. REGINALD BURY.
  5. THE ROMANCE of a GRANDE DAME. MARY MATHER.
  6. COWES CASTLE. Lady FAIRLIE CUNNINGHAM.
  7. THE PROSPECTS of MIDDLE-CLASS EMIGRANTS. HOWARD HODGKIN.
  8. AUGUST. A Decorated Page. HETWOD SUMNER.
  9. THE GLITTERING PLAIN; or, The Land of Living Men
Chaps. XIII-XVIII. (To be continued.) WILLIAM MORRIS.

MACMILLAN & CO., LONDON.

BOOKS FOR THE HOLIDAYS.

Just Published.

TRUTH with HONOUR. By C. R.
COLERIDGE and BRAMSTON. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

"Written in a crisp and spirited style, and has the great merit of not being too long."—Scotsman.
"A pleasantly written story of quiet English life."
—Scottish Leader.

NATURE and WOODCRAFT. By JOHN WATSON, Author of "Sylvan Folk," "A Year in the Fields," &c. Illustrated by G. E. Lodge. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

"Is written with real ability, as well as adequate knowledge."—Leeds Mercury.

"Those who know the open air and the life of animated nature, will enjoy the skill with which Mr. Watson translates its aspects and its actions into literary expression. Those who dwell in cities will enjoy it, because the papers induce the illusion that one is in the country."—Scotsman.

"Mr. Watson is a naturalist of high order, and gives his ideas to the reader in a most congenial style."
—Newcastle Chronicle.

"As an observer, pure and simple, and as a bright and pleasing recorder of observations, Mr. Watson can hold his own with anybody."—Manchester Examiner.

"The illustrations by Mr. G. E. Lodge are admirable."
—Perthshire Advertiser.

"The best written and most valuable of Mr. Watson's books. Some portion of the mantle of Jefferies has fallen on his shoulders; boundless enthusiasm for the lower animals, a happy knack of observing minor traits, and literary skill in describing them are marked characteristics of both authors."—Academy.

STORIES BY POPULAR AUTHORS.

BY J. A. LEFROY.

MISS MARGERIE'S WAYS. With
Illustration. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

"We are obliged to the author for allowing us to make her acquaintance."—Spectator.

"The book is charming."—Literary Churchman.

"A most delightful story. Children will delight in this book, and their elders will be found reading it also."
—Ecclesiastical Gazette.

WINGS without FEATHERS. Fcap.
8vo, 2s. 6d.

"One of the most entertaining little books that has ever come in our way. The hero of the story is a quite delightful child; to read about him is almost incomparable."—Spectator.

"A capital tale for children, by one who understands children."—English Churchman.

BY C. R. COLERIDGE.

MAKERS of MULLING. By C. R.
COLERIDGE. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

"A collection of pleasantly-told tales."—Athenaeum.

"Merits the most cordial praise and welcome."—Graphic.

FACE of CARLYON. Crown 8vo,
3s. 6d.

THE CONSTANT PRINCE. Crown
8vo, 2s. 6d.

A PLUNGE into TROUBLED
WATERS. 8vo, 2s. 6d.

ANGELA: a Sketch. By Alice

WEBER. 4to, parchment wrapper, with illustrations by T. Pym, 2s. 6d.

"A pretty story. Miss Weber paints her characters with a skillful and delicate hand. The book is a study, and certainly an interesting one."—Spectator.

"Ought to be one of the most popular books this season.
Is thoroughly religious, without the least suspicion of goody-goody about it. Full of both tender and humorous little touches."—Church Review.

THREE SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "TIP CAT," &c.

LIL. Crown 8vo, cloth.

"A bit of delightful reading."—Scottish Leader.

"Full of genuine interest."—Manchester Guardian.

"Lil," whose story is most charmingly told, by the author of "Tip Cat."—Graphic.

TIP CAT. Cheap Edition, with Two

Illustrations. By RANDOLPH CALDECOTT. Small crown 8vo, cloth.

"We welcome another tale by the anonymous author of 'Liddle.' In this unassuming story genuine humour, pathos, and much observation of human, and especially children's nature, are displayed together with a delightful style."
—Times.

OUR LITTLE ANN. With Two

Illustrations. Small crown 8vo, cloth.

"Her character is one of the most beautiful things we have lately met in fiction ..... altogether genuine, refreshing and delightful."—Scotsman.

LONDON: WALTER SMITH & INNES,
31 & 32, BEDFORD STREET, STRAND, W.C.

A NEW GRAND MONUMENTAL WORK.

Cyclopedia of Painters and Paintings.

Edited by JOHN DENISON CHAMPLIN, Jun.

Critical Editor, CHARLES C. PERKINS, Corresponding Member of the French Institute.

4 vols., 4to, with more than 2,000 illustrations; a full Biographical Dictionary of the Painters of all times and schools, half-bound morocco, £5 5s.
New York, 1888.

This book is an Encyclopedia of the Great Pictures of the World, containing special articles on all famous paintings under their own names; it is a guide to the entire literature of the art through its lists of authorities upon each topic, and has a superb collection of illustrations of its subject.

An art critic writes on this work:—"My dear Mr. Quaritch,
I like the Dictionary very much. The designs are charming and mostly, I fancy, very true, the designs of groups are wonderfully delicate and graceful, and the scope of the work most liberal."—A. C. S.

London: BERNARD QUARITCH, 15, Piccadilly.

THE

NEWBERY HOUSE MAGAZINE.

ILLUSTRATED. Price ONE SHILLING.

CONTENTS for AUGUST.

THE DECAY of NONCONFORMITY. By Rev. R. FREE, M.A.
THE MINOR ORDERS and OFFICES of the PRIMITIVE CHURCH. By Rev. E. J. BOYCE, M.A.

THE LATE DEAN of MANCHESTER. By AMICUS AMICO.

EMINENT CHURCHMEN.—II. George Herbert (concluded). By W. H. DAVENPORT ADAMS.

EARLY ECCLESIASTICAL MUSIC in the WESTERN CHURCH.
By W. J. BIRKBECK.

THE HISTORICAL CHURCHES of ENGLAND.—I. Tewkesbury
Abbey. (Illustrated.) By Rev. H. HAYMAN, D.D.

A FEW WORDS about PLANTIN and the PLANTIN-MORETUS MUSEUM. By Madame DE GOKY.

"VIRGINIE'S HUSBAND."—Chapters III., IV., V. By ESMÉ ST. AUNT.

"RUBY, V.C." By Amy WILSON.

SOME CURIOUS FISHES. By ANDREW WILSON.

SOME NOTES on the HISTORY of BOOKS for CHILDREN.—
I. Prior to the Invention of Printing. (Illustrated.) By CHARLES WELSH.

POPULAR ASTRONOMY.—Chapter V, The Sun. (Illustrated.) By H. CLEMENTS.

"CHANGED LOTS; or, Nobody Cares."—Chapters III., IV
(Illustrated.) By FRANCES ARMSTRONG.

STORIES of the SAINTS for CHILDREN.—Chapter II., By Mrs.
MOLESWORTH.

Sermon Outlines.—Instructions on the Creed—Biblical Questions—
Reviews—"Useful Books" List.

GRIFFITH FARRAN OKEDEN & WELSH, London.

THE EDINBURGH REVIEW

No. 331.—NOW READY.

CONTENTS.

- I.—THE HADDINGTON MEMORIALS.
- II.—THE JOURNAL of MARIE BASHKIRTSEFF.
- III.—PROGRESS in JAPAN.
- IV.—THE LIFE and WORKS of LAVOISIER.
- V.—THE ORIGIN of ALPHABETS.
- VI.—MONTCHRESTIEN, the FIRST FRENCH ECONOMIST.
- VII.—RELIGIOUS PERSECUTION in RUSSIA.
- VIII.—BIRDS in GREAT BRITAIN.
- IX.—CHARLES, PRINCE de LIGNE.
- X.—THE CAMPAIGN in the SUDAN.
- XI.—THE HOUSE of COMMONS FOILED.

London: LONGMANS, GREEN, & CO.

PRICE ONE SHILLING.

MURRAY'S MAGAZINE.

CONTENTS for AUGUST.

- OUR HOSPITALS—
1. THE HOUSE SURGEON. By JOHN H. MORGAN.
2. A PRACTICAL VIEW of NURSING. By ISLA STEWART.
- MARCIA. Chaps. 29-32. By W. E. NORRIS.
- EARLY DAYS RECALLED. By Mrs. ROSS. (To be concluded.)
- PIERRE LOTI. By Mdlle. BLAZE DE BURY.
- OLD LORD KILCONNELL. By Hon. EMILY LAWLESS.
- THE LEGEND of the BRIAR ROSE.
- HELIGOLAND in 1890.
- THAT FIDDLER FELLOW. (Conclusion.) By HORACE HUTCHINSON
&c. &c. &c.

London: JOHN MURRAY, Albemarle Street

Third Edition, crown 8vo, cloth, price 1s. 6d., post-free.

LESSONS from the RISE and FALL of the ENGLISH COMMONWEALTH. By J. ALLANSON
PITON, M.A., M.P.

CONTENTS: Introductory.—Treason and Loyalty.—The Limits of Moral Force.—The Limits of Physical Force.—
The Sources of Popular Enthusiasm.—"Republicanism: Form and Substance."

PEOPLE'S EDITION.—Price 6d., with PORTRAIT.
(Special terms for quantities.)

JOSEPH MAZZINI: a Memoir by E. A. V. with two Essays by MAZZINI: "THOUGHTS on DEMOCRACY" and "THE DUTIES of MAN."

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD,
21, FURNIVAL STREET, HOLBORN.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 952.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, AUGUST 2, 1890.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper]

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

	PAGE
THE CORRESPONDENCE OF MMR. DUNOYER, by F. HAWKINS	83
THACKERAY'S TRANSLATIONS FROM PRUDENTIUS, by ROBINSON ELLIS	84
WARREN HASTINGS IN THE INDIAN STATE PAPERS, by H. G. KEENE	85
COL. WOOD-MARTIN'S HISTORY OF SLIGO, by R. DUNLOP	86
NEW NOVELS, by G. COTTERELL	87
SOME THEOLOGICAL SERIAL PUBLICATIONS	88
SCANDINAVIAN BOOKS	89
NOTES AND NEWS	90
TRANSLATION: AFTER THE DANISH OF INGMANN, by K. F. AND F. P.	91
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	91
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS	91
CORRESPONDENCE:—
Wynkyn de Worde's "Morte Darthur," by Miss A. R. Brown; "Encrement"—"La Goule d'Amont," by the Rev. A. L. Mayhew; "Olamán," "Atamán," "Hetman," and "Hauptmann," by R. Nisbet Bain; "The Sagan," by Hall Cairns	91
JEVONS'S PURE LOGIC AND OTHER MINOR WORKS, by Prof. EDGEWORTH	92
RECENT BOTANICAL LITERATURE	93
CORRESPONDENCE:—
Hebrew Inscriptions of the Pre-Exilic Epoch, by Prof. SAYCE	94
SCIENCE NOTES	94
PHILOLOGY NOTES	94
SOME BOOKS ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	94
THE DANBART REMBRANDT, by COSMO MONKHOUSE	95
CORRESPONDENCE:—
British Inscriptions of the Emperor Victorinus, by Prof. Westwood	95
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	96
ARCHER'S LIFE OF MACRABY, by F. WEDMORE	96
MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS, by J. S. SHEDLOCK	97

TYPE-WRITING.

TYPE-WRITING.—MSS., Scientific, and of all descriptions. Legal Documents, Specifications, Plays, &c. COPIED with speed and accuracy. Dictations taken in shorthand or Type-writing by expert Type-writers. Special success attained in work requiring delicacy and care. Highest testimonials. Pupils taught. Misses E. B. & I. FARRAN, 4, Southampton Street, Strand, London.

CATALOGUES.

BAEDEKER'S & BADDELEY'S GUIDE-BOOKS.
New Detailed CATALOGUE, now ready, sent post free on application.
DULAU & Co., 37, Soho Square, London.

TO AUTHORS.

MESSRS. DIGBY & LONG, PUBLISHERS,

18, BOUVERIE STREET, FLEET STREET, LONDON, E.C.
Are prepared to receive and give careful consideration to all MSS. and arrange terms for their PUBLICATION. Messrs. DIGBY & LONG have also every convenience and ample facilities for the Publication of Magazines. Editorial offices if required. New Catalogue post free.

TO PUBLISHERS.—The Advertiser is OPEN to an ENGAGEMENT as Manager or other responsible position. Thoroughly conversant with all the details of Paper, Printing, Binding, Advertising, &c. First-class references.—Address, C. S., 100, Mercer's Road, Tufnell Park, N.

THE LECTURE AGENCY LIMITED (late of Birmingham), 3, GEORGE YARD, LOMBARD STREET, LONDON, E.C., act as AGENTS for the most distinguished Lecturers and Entertainers in Great Britain.

STAMMERERS should read a book by a gentleman who cured himself after suffering nearly forty years. Price 13 stamps.—R. BRASLEY, Brampton Park, near Huntingdon.

LIBRARIAN.—The LIBRARY COMMISSIONERS for STOKES NEWINGTON require a LIBRARIAN. Applicants are requested to state age and previous experience in a public library (which is indispensable). Salary commencing at £80 per annum. Apply by letter only, with Testimonials, by the 15th AUGUST, 1890, to G. W. KERR, Clerk to the Commissioners, The Vestry Office (126, Church Street), Stoke Newington, N.

MESSRS. DRUMMOND & CO., 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C. are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HAUFSTAENGL, of Munich, the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY. There is a steadily increasing demand for reproductions by this justly celebrated process for large plates and editions de luxe. For ordinary Book Illustrations, Catalogues, Advertisements, &c., Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. have the latest and most improved processes. Specimens on view. Prices on application.

LIBRARY of a well-known Provincial Collector.
MESSRS. PARSONS & ROBJENT will SELL by AUCTION nearly 2,000 volumes of Miscellaneous BOOKS from a Private Library, at the ALBERT HALL, NEWPORT, MONMOUTHSHIRE, on TUESDAY, the 12th of AUGUST, at 12 o'clock (noon).
Books on View, Monday, 11th August, till 9 p.m., and on the morning of the Sale.
Catalogues may be had about 8th August.
Commissions may be sent to the Auctioneers.

Now ready, 1s. 6d., post free, New Edition.
TAYLOR'S SYSTEM OF SHORTHAND.
Edited by MATTHIAS LEVY.
London: 5, Mitre Court, Fleet Street, E.C.

SCHOOLS, COLLEGES, &c.

QUEEN'S SERVICE ACADEMY, 3 and 4, ELY PLACE, DUBLIN.—The oldest, and among the most successful in the United Kingdom: over 2,000 have passed.
I. All Army Examinations.
II. Civil Service of India, Universities, &c.
III. R. I. Constabulary Cadetships.
There is not a Corps in the Services or a Department under Government that does not owe some of its Officers to the QUEEN'S SERVICE ACADEMY, DUBLIN. No attempt at cramming; unsurpassed Staff of Specialists under personal direction of W. J. CHETWODE CRAWLEY, LL.D., D.C.L., F.R.G.S., F.G.S., F.R.Hist.Soc., &c.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, BRISTOL.

The Council invite APPLICATIONS for the post of LECTURER in MATHEMATICS. Salary £150.
Applications, with Testimonials, to be sent not later than 25th AUGUST. Further information may be obtained on application to JAMES RAFTER, Secretary.

INEXPENSIVE Sound EDUCATION at SCHORNE COLLEGE, WINSLOW.—Over 40 Army and Navy Boys. Clergy Sons, Medical, &c. have been educated in either the Classical or Modern side, and the School has a good record. 30 guineas a year; reduced to brothers and orphans. Entrance fee, 5 guineas.—Address Rev. Dr. JAMES.

SIR JOHN SOANE'S MUSEUM, 13, LINCOLN'S INN FIELDS.

ANTIQUITIES, PICTURES, AND SCULPTURE.
OPEN FREE, from 11 to 5, on TUESDAYS, WEDNESDAYS, THURSDAYS, and SATURDAYS IN AUGUST.
Cards for Private Days and for Students to be obtained of the CURATOR, at the Museum.

ROYAL SOCIETY OF PAINTERS in WATER COLOURS.

The PRESENT EXHIBITION will CLOSE on SATURDAY, AUGUST 2nd.—5, Pall Mall East, from 10 till 6. Admission 1s. Catalogue 1s. ALFRED D. FRIPP, R.W.S., Secretary.

LITERARY CURIOSITIES.

CHARLES LOWE, Book Dealer, New Street, Birmingham, offers exquisitely painted Miniature of John Milton and Mary Powell, in plain oral old silver case, £25.—Choice original set of Punch, 28 vols., new half-polished Levant morocco, £40.—"Dickens," nice picked collection of first editions, uniform, half-morocco, £28, 25 vols.—Nice uncut Nash's "Worcestershire," 2 vols., £13.—Bowler's "History of England," lovely plates, 10 vols., folio, £2 10s.—"Memoirs of Grimaldi," gem of a copy, £10.—Abbott's "Scott," 12 vols., rich, full morocco, £18.—Useful mahogany Bookcase, 3 doors, and 8 cupboards under, £7 7s. cost, £15 10s.—Lecky's "History of England," Library Edition, 6 vols., handsome half-calf, £6.—Catalogues gratis. Libraries or Parcels of Books Purchased. Established 40 years.

CHARLES LOWE, NEW STREET, BIRMINGHAM.
Ready August 5, price One Shilling, small 8vo, pp. 120, with 4 Maps.

UNIVERSITY EXTENSION: HAS IT A FUTURE?

By H. J. MACKINDER, Reader in Geography in the University of Oxford, and
M. E. SADLER, Student and Steward of Christ Church, Oxford.
London: HENRY FROWDE, Oxford University Press Warehouse, Amen Corner.

THE NEW REVIEW.

AUGUST.—Price Sixpence.
BRITISH SOUTH-CENTRAL AFRICA. (With Map.)
I. By H. H. JOHNSON (British Consul at Mozambique).
II. By RALPH CH. WILLIAMS (Late British Agent in the South African Republic).
A TRAGEDY without WORDS: Poem. By EDMUND GOSSE.
A LECTURE IN DEFENCE OF LECTURES. By Prof. MAX MÜLLER.
TWO VOICES. By FREDERICK GREENWOOD.
A RADICAL PROGRAMME. Part II. By the Right Hon. Sir C. W. DILKE, Bart.
THE WORLD'S DESIRE. Book II. Chaps. III., IV., V., VI. By H. RIDER HAGGARD AND ANDREW LANG.
London: LONGMANS, GREEN, & Co.

THE FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW.

AUGUST.
RUSSIA: an Ode. By ALGERNON CHARLES SWINBURNE.
THE LATEST DISCOVERIES IN HYPNOTISM—II. By Dr. J. LEYS.
THE STRONGHOLD OF THE SPHAKIOTES. By JAMES D. BOURCHIER.
MICKIEWICZ, the NATIONAL POET OF POLAND. By E. J. DILLON, Ph.D.
HOGARTH'S TOUR. By AUSTIN DOBSON.
ETHICS and POLITICS. By Sir ROWLAND BLENNERHASSETT, Bart.
LABOUR DISPUTES IN AMERICA. By Dr. W. H. S. AUDREY.
THE EDUCATIONAL OUTLOOK. By the Rev. J. R. DUGGLE.
ARMENIA and the ARMENIAN PEOPLE. By E. B. LANS.
WAR IN THE FUTURE. By Col. W. W. KNOLLYS.
THE CHANGE OF GOVERNMENT IN GERMANY.
THE CHOCOLATE MAKERS' STRIKE. By CLEMENTINA BLACK.
THE LONDON STAGE. By OSWALD CHAWFURD, C.M.G.
CHAPMAN & HALL, Limited.

EDWARD STANFORD'S NEW PUBLICATIONS.

A NEW BOOK FOR THE HOLIDAYS.
Ready next week, crown 8vo, cloth, with Frontispiece and 20 Maps, 10s. 6d.

CAMPING VOYAGES on GERMAN RIVERS. By ARTHUR A. MACDONELL, M.A., Corpus Christi College, Oxford.

The Rivers described are: The Werra, Weser, Neckar, Rhine, Moselle, Main, Moldau, Elbe, and Danube, and practical details of Outfit, Obstructions, Distances, &c., are given.

NOW READY, FOURTH EDITION, REVISED.
A PHYSICAL, HISTORICAL, and DESCRIPTIVE GEOGRAPHY. By KEITH JOHNSTON, F.R.G.S. Revised and Edited by E. G. RAVENSTEIN, F.R.G.S. Large post 8vo, with numerous Maps and Illustrations, 12s.

"Mr. Keith Johnston's text-book of geography is a work of much thought, wide research, and no inconsiderable literary skill. It contains a vast amount of information on the physical features of the countries of the world, their climate and productions, commerce and industry, political institutions, administrative divisions, and leading towns. A set of maps, coloured so as to distinguish forest regions, agricultural lands, steppes, and deserts, forms a welcome addition to this judiciously planned and carefully written text-book." Athenæum.

Just published, fcap. 8vo, cloth, 2s.
WEATHER FORECASTING for the BRITISH ISLANDS by means of a Barometer, the Direction and Force of Wind, and Cirrus Clouds. By Capt. HENRY TOYNBEE, F.R.A.S., F.R.G.S., F.R.Met.S., late Marine Superintendent, Meteorological Office. With Frontispiece and 8 Page Illustrations.

THIRD EDITION, REVISED, 1s.
EPPING FOREST. By Edward North BUXTON, Verderer.

"Mr. Buxton goes about his work in a thoroughly practical way. His book is plentifully furnished with accurate maps, and about thirty pages are occupied with simple and clear directions as to several walks which may be taken through the Forest. It may be safely said that anyone who carefully follows Mr. Buxton's directions will obtain a perfectly new conception of the Forest and its peculiar beauties. The book is illustrated by some charming drawings of forest scenes, and by numerous delicately executed woodcuts of birds and flowers." Times.

A MAP OF PALESTINE,

From the Surveys conducted for the Committee of the Palestine Exploration Fund and other Sources.

Compiled by GEORGE ARMSTRONG, AND Revised by Colonel Sir CHARLES W. WILSON, K.C.B., F.R.S., &c.,
And Major C. R. CONDER, D.C.L., R.E.

This Map embraces the whole of Palestine, both east and west of Jordan, and extends on the north to Beirut, and on the south to 'Ain Kadis, the suggested site of Kadesh Barnea; on the east it embraces the Hauran and the eastern Trachonitis.

There are two Editions of the Map, uniform in size and price.

(1.) THE MODERN EDITION, giving topographical features and modern names only.

(2.) THE OLD and NEW TESTAMENT EDITION giving the Information of the Modern Edition plus the names of all places mentioned in the Old Testament and the New Testament, the sites of which have been identified with tolerable certainty; and of places mentioned in the Apocrypha, Josephus, and the Talmud.

Twenty-one Sheets; 80 by 102 inches; 2½ miles to an inch (1,168,960).

Prices:—Coloured Sheets in cover, 40s.
Mounted in morocco tuck case, each Sheet folding separately, 60s.

Mounted on mahogany rollers and varnished, 85s.

From the TIMES, July 30th, 1890.

"This is the most satisfactory map in existence of one of the most interesting countries in the world, and is a worthy monument of the work done by the Society since it was formed 25 years ago. The execution of the map by Mr. Stanford is highly creditable. The hill work is done with great delicacy and accuracy.... The map will be welcomed by a wide public."

LONDON: EDWARD STANFORD,
26 AND 27, COCKSPUR STREET, CHARING CROSS, S.W.

BENTLEY'S FAVOURITE NOVELS.Each in 1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.*By RHODA BROUGHTON.

COMETH UP as a FLOWER.
 GOOD-BYE, SWEETHEART!
 JOAN. | NANCY.
 NOT WISELY but TOO WELL.
 RED as a ROSE is SHE.
 SECOND THOUGHTS.
 BELINDA.
 DOCTOR CUPID.

By HENRY ERROLL.

AN UGLY DUCKLING.

By JESSIE FOTHERGILL.

THE "FIRST VIOLIN."
 BORDERLAND. | HEALEY.
 KITH and KIN. | PROBATION.

By HELEN MATHERS.

COMIN' THRO' the RYE.
 SAM'S SWEETHEART.

By ANTHONY TROLLOPE.

THE THREE CLERKS.

By MARIE CORELLI

ARDATH.
 A ROMANCE of TWO WORLDS.
 VENDETTA. | THELMA.

By J. SHERIDAN LE FANU.

IN a GLASS DARKLY.
 THE HOUSE by the CHURCHYARD.
 UNCLE SILAS.

By Mrs. RIDDELL.

GEORGE GEITH of FEN COURT.
 SUSAN DRUMMOND.
 BERNIA BOYLE.

By Lady G. FULLERTON.

ELLEN MIDDLETON. | LADYBIRD.
 TOO STRANGE not to be TRUE.

By ROSA N. CAREY.

BARBARA HEATHCOTE'S TRIAL.
 NELLIE'S MEMORIES.
 NOT LIKE OTHER GIRLS.
 ROBERT ORD'S ATONEMENT.
 UNCLE MAX. | WEE WIFE.
 WOOD and MARRIED.
 ONLY the GOVERNESS.
 QUEENIE'S WHIM.

By FLORENCE MONTGOMERY.

MISUNDERSTOOD. | SEAFORTH.
 THROWN TOGETHER.

By Mrs. ALEXANDER.

THE WOOING O'T. | WHICH SHALL IT BE?
 HER DEAREST FOE.
 LOOK BEFORE YOU LEAP.
 THE ADMIRAL'S WARD.
 THE EXECUTOR. | THE FRERES.

By JANE AUSTEN.

(The only Complete Edition, besides the Steventon
 Edition, upon hand-made paper, at 63s.

LADY SUSAN, and the WATSONS.
 MANSFIELD PARK. | EMMA.
 NORTHANGER ABBEY, and PERSUASION.
 PRIDE and PREJUDICE.
 SENSE and SENSIBILITY.

By Mrs. PARR.

ADAM and EVE. | DOROTHY FOX.

By Baroness TAUTPHÆUS.

THE INITIALS. | QUILTS.

By W. E. NORRIS.

THIRLBY HALL.
 A BACHELOR'S BLUNDER.
 MAJOR and MINOR.
 THE ROGUE.

By Mrs. ANNIE EDWARDES.

A BALL-ROOM REPENTANCE.
 A GIRTON GIRL.
 LEAH: a Woman of Fashion.
 OUGHT WE TO VISIT HER

By the Hon. LEWIS WINGFIELD.

LADY GRIZEL.

By MARCUS CLARKE.

FOR the TERM of HIS NATURAL LIFE.

By HAWLEY SMART.

BREEZIE LANGTON.

By HECTOR MALOT.

NO RELATIONS.

By E. WERNER.

NO SURRENDER,
 SUCCESS; and How He Won It.
 UNDER a CHARM. | FICKLE FORTUNE.

By Mrs. NOTLEY.

OLIVE VARGOE.

ANONYMOUS.

THE LAST of the CAVALIERS.
 SIR C. DANVERS.

RICHARD BENTLEY & Son, New Burlington Street,
 Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

CASSELL & COMPANY'S LIBRARIES.*Cassell's Japanese Library OF POPULAR WORKS.

Printed on thin paper, bound in Japanese style, covers in water-colours from original designs.
 Twelve vols., price 1s. 3d. each, net.

HANDY ANDY.*OLIVER TWIST.*IVANHOE.*INGOLDSBY LEGENDS.*THE LAST of the MOHICANS.*THE LAST DAYS of POMPEII.*THE YELLOWPLUSH PAPERS.*THE LAST DAYS of PALMYRA.*JACK HINTON, the GUARDSMAN.*SELECTIONS from HOOD'S WORKS.*AMERICAN HUMOUR.*THE TOWER of LONDON.

"Handy in form, tastefully printed on thin paper, and bound in Japanese style, with covers in water colours from original designs, and are altogether very attractive volumes."—Daily News.

"There can be no question that travellers and tourists will find these books exceedingly portable.
 Another recommendation is the bold and clear print."—Daily Chronicle.

"The charge for each is only fifteenpence."
Observer.

Crown 8vo, boards, 2s. each.

Cassell's Railway Library

"Nothing better in the way of cheap high-class fiction could be selected than these admirable volumes."—Newcastle Chronicle.

*A List of the FIFTEEN VOLUMES already published will be sent post-free on application.

Boards, 1s. each; or, in cloth, 2s. each.

Cassell's Red Library.

"CASSELL'S RED LIBRARY is unquestionably the cheapest library ever published."—Bookseller.

*A List of the FIFTY-NINE VOLUMES already published will be sent post-free on application.

Paper Covers, 3d. each; or, in cloth, 6d. each.

Cassell's National Library

Edited by Prof. H. MORLEY.

The Athenæum says:—"CASSELL'S NATIONAL LIBRARY is a wonderful bargain at threepence.
 No greater feat has been accomplished by any of our publishers during the last quarter of a century."

*A List of the 209 VOLUMES now ready will be sent post-free on application.

CASSELL &amp; COMPANY, Limited, Ludgate Hill, London.

REVISED AND ENLARGED EDITION.

Now Ready, price 1s.; or cloth, 2s., of

THE OFFICIAL ILLUSTRATED GUIDE TO*THE GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY.

480 pages, with 250 Illustrations, 23 Maps, and 12 Plans.

CASSELL &amp; COMPANY, Limited, Ludgate Hill, London.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO.'S
NEW BOOKS.

BY RUDYARD KIPLING.

IN BLACK and WHITE. By Rudyard
 KIPLING, Author of "Soldiers Three," "The Story of the Gadsbys," &c. Demy 8vo, paper covers, 1s.

BY WILLIAM BLACK.

THE NEW PRINCE FORTUNATUS.

By WILLIAM BLACK, Author of "A Princess of Thule," "In Far Lochaber," "A Daughter of Heth,"
 &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"A remarkably easy book to read.....The author's touch has been light all through this long story; but seldom more bright, amusing, pathetic, humorous, and tender."

"A very pretty book indeed, and will help to pass as pleasant an hour as any novel of the season."—Truth.

YOUMA: the Story of a West Indian

Slave. By LAFCADIO HEARN, Author of "Two Years in the French West Indies," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

JACK ABBOTT'S LOG: a Yarn of the

Merchant Service. By ROBERT BROWN, Author of
 "Spun yarn and Spindrift," "Jack's Yarn," &c. 2 vols.,
 crown 8vo, cloth, 21s.

"Among recent tales of the sea, 'Jack Abbott's Log' ranks high. It is a rattling good story, or rather stories; for the two volumes are crammed with seamen's yarns from beginning to end. And, since a 'yarn' is not worth the name unless it is full of fun or adventure, it is needless to say that Mr.
 Brown's work will commend itself to the lovers of both."

Scotsman.SALADS and SANDWICHES. Giving particulars how to make some thousands of Salads and hundreds of Sandwiches. By T. HERBERT. Crown 8vo, boards, 1s.

GREAT ARTISTS SERIES.

NEW VOLUMES.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 8s. 6d. each.

THE PAINTERS of BARBIZON:*Millet, Rousseau, and Jules Dupre.

By J. W. MOLLETT, B.A., Author of "Life of Rembrandt," &c. With 20 Illustrations from their best Works.

Corot, Daubigny, & Diaz De-La-Pena.

By J. W. MOLLETT, B.A. With 20 Reproductions of their Paintings and Drawings.

The 2 vols., bound together in half-roxburgh, price 7s. 6d.

NOW READY, PRICE ONE SHILLING.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE.

AUGUST NUMBER.—CONTENTS.

PORT TARASCON: the Last Adventures of the Illustrious Tartarin.—III. ALPHONSE DAUDER. With 17 Illustrations, Drawn by Luigi Rossi, Louis Montegut, and F. de Myrbach.

IMPRESSIONS of BERLIN. THEODORE CHILD. 17 Illustrations, Drawn by T. de Thulstrup, and Charles Mente.

MAGELLAN and the PACIFIC. EDWARD EVERETT HALE.
 4 Illustrations from Old Prints, and a Drawing by A. R. Wand.

TO an OLD APPLE-TREE: a Poem. COATES KINNEY.

THE BATHLEY AFFAIR: a Story. LUCY C. LILLIE.

WESTWARD: a Poem. JOHN B. TABB.

CUSTER'S LAST BATTLE. Capt. CHARLES KING, U.S.A.
 With a Map.

A WALK UP the AVENUE. RICHARD HARDING DAVIS.

PLANTIN-MORETUS. OCTAVIA HENSEL. 6 Illustrations.
 From Photographs by J. Maes, Antwerp.

THE WORLD IS TOO MUCH WITH US: a Sonnet.
 WILLIAM WORDSWORTH. With 3 Illustrations, Drawn by Alfred
 Parsons.

AN IMPRESSION: a Poem. RENNELL RODD.

THE UNCLE of an ANGEL: a Story. THOMAS A. JANVIER.
 With 9 Illustrations (including Frontispiece), Drawn by W. T.
 Smedley.

SOME GEOLOGY of CHICAGO and VICINITY. ELLEN B.
 BASTIN.

THE UNDER LIFE: a Poem. HARRIETT PRESCOTT SPOFFORD.

LIZZIE BRUBAKER: a Story. LINA REDWOOD FAIRFAX.
 With 2 Illustrations. Drawn by Alice Barber.

A CONVENT at ROME. Dr. FRANCIS PARKMAN.

STREET LIFE in INDIA. EDWIN LORD WEEKS. 7 Illustrations, Drawn by Edwin Lord Weeks.

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, SEARLE,
 and RIVINGTON, Limited,
 St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, Fleet Street, E.C.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 2, 1890.

No. 952, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

The Correspondence of Madame Dunoyer.
Translated and Edited by Florence L. Layard. In 2 vols. (Bentley.)

If the lady here brought under our notice had not chanced to occupy a place in the biography of so important a personage as Voltaire—a matter of which I shall have something to say anon—her name itself might now be forgotten. As it is, few students of literary history are unaware of the fact that early in the eighteenth century, behind the broad shield of Dutch freedom, she traded in more or less coarse libels upon the living and the dead, in attacks upon the purest and highest reputations. It was not from a want of enlightened training that she took to such evil courses. Mme. Dunoyer, at first Mdle. Petit, belonged to a good Protestant family at Nîmes, where she was born in 1663. In her youth, with the advantage of a careful education, she manifested sufficient intelligence, according to her own testimony, to be regarded as an "infant prodigy." Grown to womanhood, she consented, as a means of making a profitable marriage, to go over to the Church of Rome, and would probably have remained in it if her intended husband had not died. "In this life," she writes, "a woman ought to wed once for her interests and then for her pleasures." Before long a cloud came over her prospects. Her friends got into pecuniary difficulties; the fierce religious persecutions of 1685 followed, and the erstwhile convert to Romanism, this time true to the faith of her forefathers, fled in disguise to Holland. Soon afterwards we find her in London, though only as a recipient of the bounty of some persons with whom she had ingratiated herself abroad. Having outstayed her welcome, she returned under false colours to the south of France, espoused a government official named Dunoyer, and brought several children into the world. For thirteen years the husband and wife lived together, but differences which then arose between them were acute enough to cause a judicial separation. In or about 1712, after another visit to London, Mme. Dunoyer, accompanied by two daughters, finally settled at the Hague, perhaps the most favoured resort of French Protestant refugees. Here she quickly acquired an unenviable notoriety. In order, as it would appear, to eke out a slender income, she had recourse to scurrilous literature in various forms—personal memoirs, lettres galantes et historiques, contributions to the Lardon and the Quintessence, and what purported to be a correspondence between herself and a lady of rank in Paris. To show the hatred and contempt she incurred, it may be stated that she was ridiculed under the name of Mme. Kurkila in a farce played at Utrecht, the "Mariage Précipité," and that the authorities turned a deaf ear to her entreaties for the suppression of the piece. The incident which associates her with the memory of Voltaire may be briefly recorded. In his twentieth year, while an attaché in the French embassy at the Hague, he became enamoured of her youngest daughter, Olympe Dunoyer, familiarly called Pimpette. Madame, seeing in him only a portionless wit, set her veto upon the acquaintance, and, finding her injunctions flatly disregarded, filled the air with shrill complaints. Châteauneuf, the ambassador, began to tremble for French dignity; the youth received his congé, and was forbidden to leave his rooms until the moment of his departure for Paris. Meanwhile, however, the lovers managed not only to correspond with but to see each other; Pimpette herself, who was of a romantic and adventurous turn, visiting him at the house of the embassy in male attire. It is sad to relate that the vows they exchanged were ignored by both in a few weeks, as such vows often are. Five years later he sprang into fame at one bound by writing "Œdipe"; and the mother, as though to leave us in no sort of doubt respecting her character, forthwith printed the fervent love-letters he had sent to her daughter. Confessedly ugly in person, Mme. Dunoyer, the most conspicuous figure in the Grub-street of the Hague, was a good deal uglier in mind.

Her least offensive production, the correspondence hereinbefore referred to, has now been done into English, with certain modifications, by Miss Florence Layard. It is a question, as I have already hinted, whether this work is exactly what it pretends to be. Did the "lady of rank in Paris" have any existence save in Mme. Dunoyer's over-fertile imagination? For various reasons the letters ascribed to her may be treated as spurious. They are undated; they afford no clue to the identity of the supposed writer; they contain mistakes which a person in touch with the best society of the French capital would hardly be capable of falling into. Doubtless there is a difference of style between the two series; but this is not sufficiently marked to exclude the assumption that it was deliberately affected. Nor is the veracity of the letters in general above suspicion. Voltaire, speaking with good authority on the point, goes to the length of including them in his list of Mensonges Imprimés. He says:

"Early in the present century, a very honourable person, Mme. Dunoyer, a refugee at the Hague, composed six thick volumes of letters between a lady of quality in the provinces and a lady of quality in Paris, who gave each other, in a familiar way, the news of the day. Now in that news of the day, I can aver with certainty, there is not a syllable of truth. . . . All the pretended adventures of the Chevalier de Bouillon are here given with the utmost minuteness. I once had the curiosity to ask the Chevalier whether there was any foundation for what Mme. Dunoyer had written about him.

He solemnly assured me that the whole of it was a fabrication."

Possibly the Chevalier's word in this instance may not be deemed conclusive, and Voltaire was guilty of an obvious exaggeration in saying "not a syllable of truth;" but that Mme. Dunoyer dealt largely in falsehood is practically beyond dispute. Altogether, the book must be condemned as untrustworthy in a very high degree. The fact would seem to be that in her declining years Mme. Dunoyer, resolved to relate the scandals of her time in the form of a correspondence, shrewdly invented the friend in Paris by way of increasing the piquancy of her narrative, and did not shrink from laying on "colour" with a liberal hand wherever she thought it desirable.

It is needless to dwell at any length on the contents of the volume. Mme. Dunoyer is not to be named in the same breath as the illustrious memoir and letter writers of the same time. If she was of "brilliant intellectual capacity," as Miss Layard asserts, it finds but poor expression in these pages. Her power to paint a portrait or a scene is at best slight. Moreover, as her position in the world might suggest, she has no light to throw upon historical problems or historical characters. On the whole, her book is simply an account of the anecdotes she hears, the places she visits, and the persons she meets. In this way it is not without interest and value, particularly as a means of enabling us to form an idea of life in the south of France two centuries ago. Here is a little sketch of Madeleine de Scudéri in her decrepitude:

"She is just as witty as ever, and the poems she writes now on every occasion are as brilliant as those of Clélie; but as far as her body is concerned our French Muse is terribly bent. The first time I saw her I thought she resembled the Sybil of Cumæ, and indeed, like her, all that remains to her is her voice. . . . She complains continually of her dropsy and other ailments, which she regards as incidental, and will not put them down to the score of the ninety-two years that have rolled over her head."

The praise bestowed upon the old lady's poems is scarcely indicative of good literary judgment. Of the king's unacknowledged wife a rather characteristic story is told:

"Mme. de Maintenon never forgets an injury nor a benefit, and the remembrance of the latter which she received in former times from the Duc de Brancas prompts her to be kind to the Princesse d'Harcourt, his daughter, and to put up with all her impertinences. She suffered so much from them during a journey to Namur that she ought really to have thrown her over; but when someone spoke of it to her she replied, 'I forgive her because she is crazy, and I show kindness to her because I received so much from her father in old days.'"

The execution of Mme. Tiquet, who was convicted of an attempt to murder her husband, is thus described, probably from hearsay:

"I myself was in one of the windows of the Hôtel de Ville, and at five o'clock saw poor Mme. Tiquet arrive dressed in white. It rained so hard that it was impossible to carry out the execution; so she was obliged to wait on the tumbril till the rain stopped, having constantly before her eyes all the preparations for her death, and a black coach, to which her own horses had been harnessed, and which was afterwards to carry her corpse away. But all this did not terrify her; for when she had to ascend the scaffold she held out her hand for the headsman to help her up, and as she offered it to him kissed it, to show that she was not wanting in civility. When she was on the scaffold one would have imagined that she had studied her rôle; for she kissed the block, and went through other ceremonies as if she were only there to act a play. In short, never before was seen such firmness, and the Curé of Saint Sulpice said that 'she died like a Christian heroine.' The headsman was so nervous that he missed his aim, and returned to the charge five times before he succeeded in cutting off her head. . . . I never saw anything so lovely as her head appeared when it was separated from her body. It was left some time on the scaffold, so that the populace might see it. The face was turned towards the Hôtel de Ville, and I assure you that I was quite dazzled by it."

It should be added that the career of this miserable culprit, long one of the toasts of Paris, is related at some length in the Letters, together with that of the equally notorious Mme. de Rhut.

Miss Layard shows good taste as a translator, but is otherwise unequal to the task she has undertaken. It is not too much to say that at present she has no qualification for editing a mass of Louis Quatorze correspondence. Of the period here before us she has only a limited and superficial knowledge. Her course of reading does not appear to have included the Memoirs of Saint Simon, the Letters of Mme. de Sévigné, or many other contemporary authorities, indispensable as an acquaintance with them is to one in the position she has assumed. For her notes she is content to rely almost wholly upon gazetteers, manuals of dates, and small biographical dictionaries. And the use she makes of these sources of information is seldom to the credit of her tact and judgment. Much of what she draws from them is uncalled for and worthless. If the text happens to contain a reference to a well-known place, such as Toulouse, or to a person who flourished in bygone times, such as Hippocrates, she thinks herself bound to set down a few arid lines about it or him. For her own sake we must regret that the time thus wasted was not spent in the verification of her statements. Her blunders are both many and serious, especially as, with inexcusable want of care, she has not taken the trouble to consult works so easy of access as the great French biographical dictionaries. In regard to Mme. Dunoyer, for instance, she is under a misapprehension which a peep into those storehouses of facts would have sufficed to dispel. It is clear that she has never heard of the Quintessence, and has read little or nothing of its author except in the autobiography already mentioned. Consequently, unsuspecting of the truth, she asks us in all good faith to believe that this impudent and unscrupulous libeller was a very exemplary sort of person—upright, sincere, high-minded, and full of self-respect—and that everything she wrote may be implicitly relied upon. French critics do not accept her correspondence as entirely genuine, but Miss Layard's obvious enjoyment of its contents is undisturbed by the slightest misgiving upon that point. In dealing with greater people she is equally astray. We are told that La Fontaine, "deserting his wife, took up his residence in London, where he was made gentleman-in-waiting to Queen Henrietta Maria"—a sentence which contains at least two errors. Racine is described in conventional phrase as "irreproachable in all the relations of private life"—Racine, who repaid the kindness shown to him by the Solitaires of Port Royal and by Molière with the basest ingratitude, who delighted in hurling waspish epigrams at the heads of successful and unsuccessful fellow-dramatists, and who generally betrayed a coldness of heart in strange contrast with the pathos and tenderness that beautify his writings. It will also be news to many that Georges de Scudéri wrote novels and his sister plays, that Michel Baron's théâtre includes the "Ecole des Pères," that Campistron was "considered to have equalled Racine in the composition of some of his tragedies," that Marmontel wrote for the Mercurie Galant in its early days (he was not then born), that Mrs. Masham and the "strong-minded Duchess of Marlborough" were one and the same person, or that the illustrious actress who "died in 1698," here called Mlle. Desmarest, was ever known to fame except as Mlle. Champmélée. François Arouet, Voltaire's father, is spoken of as "M. Arouet de Voltaire," "the elder M. Voltaire," and "old M. de Voltaire," although no fact in its way is better known than that his son was the first to assume the name. In matters of higher importance Miss Layard is still an unsafe guide; she talks of the Court French of the Great Reign, the language of Molière and Bossuet and Saint Simon, as something "almost obsolete," and the general tone of the age as "coarse." But the most unpardonable of her blunders has yet to be noticed. Let it appear in her own words:

"Under guise of loyal friendship to herself and unrestrained intimacy, as between mother and son, Voltaire, then a youth of about nineteen, and attached as page to the suite of the Marquis de Châteauneuf, ambassador from France to Holland, fell in love with, and wooed, her youngest surviving daughter (Catherine Olympe), her darling Pimpette, and, taking a cruel and unprincipled advantage of the young and trusting girl, seduced her, and thus brought bitter sorrow and misery upon the family which had received him with such kindness. . . . From the day of the cruel deed the poor girl Olympe seems to have sunk into a decline. She gradually wasted away, the warning symptoms of consumption set in, and in little more than a year the pretty Pimpette died."

It would be interesting to learn upon what authority Miss Layard—whose style, it will be seen, can sink on occasion to the level of gush—gives this truly pathetic story. If she had taken the pains to test its credibility, as for more than one reason she ought to have done, it would never have been allowed to disfigure her work. "Mark now how plain a tale shall put you down," Pimpette became Comtesse de Winterfeldt, lived to a rather good old age, and to the last held Voltaire in a respect and esteem that could hardly have co-existed with a keen sense of wrong. Nor, I may add, did he fail to take pleasure in the friendship of his first sweetheart. In 1736, twenty-two years after her alleged death, he writes to Moussinot:

"Have the kindness, my dear Abbé, to buy for me a little table, which may serve at once as a screen and an escritoire, and send it for me to Mme. de Winterfeldt, Rue Plâtrière, hard by the Filles de Sainte Agnès."

Fifteen years or more after that, in refutation of a fable about them by La Beaumelle, he writes of her in the supplement to his Siècle de Louis Quatorze:

"She is a pensioner of the King's, and lives usually on an estate of her own, where she feeds the poor. From all who know her she receives the highest consideration. Her age, her merit, her virtue, the numerous and respectable family to which she belongs, the persons of the highest rank to whom she is allied, all this ought to protect her from the insolent calumnies of an absurd scoundrel (scélérat absurde)."

It will certainly be curious to remember henceforth that this venerable lady is said to have died of a broken heart in her youth.

I do not propose to waste the space at my disposal in drawing attention to more of Miss Layard's inaccuracies. In her preface she tells us that the information she conveys has been "most carefully sifted and compared, and in every instance may be relied on as absolutely trustworthy." How little she is justified in making this boast I have already said enough to prove.

FREDERICK HAWKINS.

Translations from Prudentius. By Francis St. John Thackeray, M.A., F.S.A., formerly Fellow of Lincoln College, Oxford, and Assistant Master at Eton. (Bell.)

MR. THACKERAY in this little volume has aimed to give English readers some idea of the poetry of a writer as popular with Catholics as ignored by the mass of Protestants. Prudentius is not only a great poet, but eminently a Catholic one. His inspiration is derived from the rites and ceremonies of the Early Church, from her worship of relics and adoration of martyrs, at least as much as from the Scriptures themselves. Indeed, of the two sections of his poems which are the most interesting—the Hymns included in the Cathemerinon and the poems on the Martyrs or Peristephanon, though the former contain the finest poetry, the latter are, for us, the most interesting. They are the most interesting because they revive, and sometimes with a vivid intensity which is highly painful, the memory of that dreadful struggle with Paganism in which the one engine employed in support of an expiring and doomed creed was torture. From such a period we seem far removed; but the study of it in its bodily and mental agonies as exhibited by a great poet has a perpetual interest; and it is in describing these that Prudentius has shown something of the power of a dramatist. The Passio S. Romani, for instance, written in 1140 iambic trimeters, is in effect a tragedy, and far more moving than many tragedies. Mr. Thackeray has presented a version of one of its most moving scenes, pp. 146, 147; but to appreciate the effect of the poem as a whole, it should be read through. He has, however, done rightly in drawing more largely from the Cathemerinon. Of the twelve hymns which this section contains all but three are given. Of these, the second or Morning Hymn, "Nox et tenebrae et nubila," is translated by an Oxford poet second only to Swinburne, Robert Bridges. From this, one of the happiest specimens which the volume contains, I quote the following, Et lux coruscis flatibus, sqq.:

"That breezy Morn with splendours dight
May of her horrors Night despoil,
And fresh Hope animate with light
The painful family of toil.
'Tis said that prowling evil sprites,
Who haunt and love the blackest shades,
By cock-crow scared, Night's satellites,
Hie trooping as the darkness fades.
For holy light they loathe and flee:
What wonder? 'Tis the sign and seal
Of hope fulfilled: from slumbers free
The coming of our Lord we feel."

Of Mr. Thackeray's, by far the largest portion of the collection, it is less easy to choose a typical specimen. He has, like his original, employed all styles and the most diverse metres. Cath. 8, in Sapphics, vv. 41-48, is thus rendered by Mr. Thackeray, Reddit et pratis uiridique campo.

"Safe where no prickly burr takes root
He gives them back to pastures green,
Safe from the thistle's barbed shoot,
Mid leafy screen.
"Of palm groves and of waving grass,
Where gushing streamlets wend their way,
And bends above the torrent's glass
The drooping bay."

A fastidious taste might perhaps object to the combination "torrent's glass."

The following is from the Funeral Hymn, Deus ignee fons animarum, vv. 25 sqq.

"If grovelling in the dust, the will Minds earthly things, and hugs her chain,
Dragged by the body in its train,
She rests not on the holy hill.
"But if regardful of her birth
The essence pure lives free from stain,
Aloft she bears to Heaven again
The form she dwelt in here on earth.
"Soon onward shall the ages roll,
Reanimate with vital heat
The bones shall stir, the life-blood beat,
The primal vestment wrap the soul.
"The corpse long slumbering in the mould
From its cold charnel-house shall start,
And heavenward on wings shall dart,
To live with spirit as of old."

The least happy part of this is perhaps the last line, which translates animas comitata priores.

Besides the editor and Mr. Robert Bridges, Sir George Young, Mr. R. F. Towndrow, Dr. Gregory Smith, and Mr. E. D. Stone have contributed to the volume. Sir G. Young translates part of the Apotheosis and of the Passio S. Cypriani; Mr. Towndrow the Passio S. Quirini; Dr. Gregory Smith the Passio S. Agnetis; Mr. Stone the Epilogue of the Peristephanon.

The introduction is divided into three chapters. (1) On the Life and Times of Prudentius; (2) Prudentius, as illustrating the State of Society and the Religious Feeling of his Age; (3) Language, Metre, and Style,

The most noticeable omission in these is of the elegiac poet Orientius, in elegance of versification equal to any of the Christian writers of that time, whose Commonitorium, happily preserved complete in an excellent MS. of the tenth century, has been recently edited by the present writer in vol. xvi. of the Vienna "Corpus Scriptorum Ecclesiasticorum Latinorum."

In the notes some of the difficulties which the text of the poems translated presents are briefly discussed. To my own scanty remarks I would add as an illustration of the obscure flare rosas (p. 212) the following from the Glossarium Sangallense, edited only a few years back by Prof. Minton Warren, of Baltimore: Deflat invidet dedignat.

In an age of palaeography like ours, the specimen of the Paris MS. of Prudentius, most exquisitely written in rustic capitals, Puteanus 8084, no less than the account of the MS. with which Mr. Thackeray has accompanied it, cannot fail to be welcome.

ROBINSON ELLIS.

WARREN HASTINGS IN THE INDIAN STATE PAPERS.

Selections from State Papers in the Foreign Department of the Government of India, 1772 to 1785. Edited by George W. Forrest. In 3 vols. (Calcutta: Government Press.)

WARREN HASTINGS always asserted that, if he could have had access to the records of the Calcutta Foreign Office, he could have made a much better defence to the charges brought against him in his impeachment. The assertion made but little impression at the time; but now, after the lapse of a century, Prof. Forrest has done what the accused statesman was unable to do, and has furnished a vindication which, however tardy, is absolutely complete—so far at least as the scope of the Selections has extended. The editor has included a vast number of state papers, extending from 1772, the year in which Hastings became Governor of Bengal, to 1785, when he left India. Together with the editor's excellent Introduction the matter fills three large volumes, which will be found interesting alike to the Indian specialist and to the general student of history.

It is sometimes assumed that the question of Hastings's character is obsolete and of little moment, while a great number of people probably think that no question on the subject remains after its treatment in Macaulay's brilliant essay. To the former class of critics it should be sufficient to observe that their objection goes far to eliminate the moral element from all history. It cannot be matter of indifference whether a great statesman could not help being a great rascal, and an empire could not be founded without a complete rejection of righteousness. Otherwise the judgment of good men would be an impertinence, and the candidates for the Indian Civil Service might as well go for instruction to the school of Fagin and Jonathan Wild. As for the admirers of Lord Macaulay, they may be consoled by the reflection that his vivid colouring has affected even more important questions than any relating to India, and in more serious work than what was obviously no more than a piece of occasional journalism, a "pot-boiler" for the Edinburgh Review.

On the subject of the Rohilla campaign of 1774, the new materials are especially copious and valuable. In spite of half-hostile estimates by such authorities as Sir W. W. Hunter and Sir A. C. Lyall, it had long been suspected that Macaulay's fiery denunciations of Hastings on that score had absolutely no foundation. Horace Hayman Wilson had already lodged some caveats in his footnotes to Mill; and Marshman, while declaring that this transaction was "one of the few stains on the bright and honourable career of Hastings," treated the rhetoric expended on the matter as "oriental figures of speech." From the State-papers now brought to light it is made clear that no part of Hastings's career was more honourable. The Rohilla chiefs obstinately refused to pay the Vazir for a service which he had rendered on the faith of their promises: the Bengal Government was engaged beforehand to assist the Vazir in such a case: the assistance was voted without hesitation by a unanimous decision of the Council. Col. Champion, who commanded the Bengal contingent, exaggerated the severity with which the foreclosure of the Rohilla territory was carried out by the Vazir; but, as soon as Hastings heard the report, he evinced due indignation, and forbade all further harshness. The alleged share of the Governor-General in the measures by which the Oudh Begums were made to disgorge part of the State property of which they had possessed themselves is likewise reduced to a minimum. It is shown that the restitution was rightly enforced; and that whatever blame might attach to any agent of the Company for the means employed could only fairly fall on the Resident, Mr. Bristow, an official who had been forced on Hastings, and to whom Hastings never gave his confidence.

As it was observed above that there was a limit to the completeness of the vindication afforded by the papers before us, it may be proper to add that there are some points in the administration of Warren Hastings which are neither illustrated in the Selections nor explained in the Introduction. Such are the vigorous but unconstitutional suspension of the Governor of Madras in 1780, and the proceedings relative to the alleged vacancy of the office of Governor-General, with its consequent assumption by General Clavering in 1777. There is also little bearing on the relations between Hastings and the Supreme Court, or on his private life and character. But enough has been published to justify the opinion expressed in the Introduction that "his fair fame will not suffer from an examination still more rigid and dispassionate."

Of the manner in which Prof. Forrest has performed his editorial functions little more need be said. The work has evidently been a labour of love, and one notes with pleasure the evident satisfaction which the editor has derived from the result. One or two minor errors may be pardonably noticed. The officer sent into Central India in 1780 was not Major "Carnac," as stated on p. 55; his name was Camac, as may be seen by referring to papers beginning II. 705. The name of the Mahratta chief against whom this officer was then employed was not "Mahadjie," but Mádhu Ji. But these are probably mere coquilles, due to inadvertence in proof-reading, from which few authors, it is to be feared, are entirely safe. The Selections, it must be repeated, are a most precious contribution to a highly important chapter in the history of the empire.

H. G. KEENE.

History of Sligo, County and Town, 1603-1688. By W. G. Wood-Martin. (Dublin: Hodges, Figgis & Co.)

THIS continuation of Col. Wood-Martin's history of Sligo, from the earliest ages to the close of the reign of Queen Elizabeth, is, like its predecessor, a volume of considerable interest and importance; but more, I must confess, from the documents contained in the Appendix than from the text itself, which is in many places written in a very slovenly and unequal fashion. The documents to which I particularly allude as more than counterbalancing the defects of the book, and to which students of Irish history will turn with the greatest interest, are the extracts from Hart. MS., 2,048, relating to the rentals of the estates of the landed proprietors in county Sligo in and about the year 1634, and the Depositions relating to the massacres of 1641 from MS. F. 3.2, Trinity College, Dublin. It is chiefly to these documents that I wish to direct attention in the following remarks.

Unlike the three other provinces, Connaught had enjoyed a comparative immunity, during the reigns of Elizabeth and James I., from those plantation schemes which were to regenerate Ireland and to transform the island into a peaceful and prosperous country, but which in effect only served to make confusion worse confounded, and to raise up a mass of discontent that contributed in no small measure to the outbreak of the great Irish Rebellion. The effect of this immunity was apparent in the comparative tranquillity of the province at a time when Ulster and Munster were disturbed by foreign invasions and domestic insurrections. The settlement arrived at in 1585, notwithstanding some rumours of a plantation in James's reign, continued to hold good till the advent of Wentworth in 1633. It was Wentworth—whose prime object it was to increase the crown revenues of Ireland, and who, to attain his end, stickled at nothing which could by any possible means develop the resources of the country—that sowed the first seeds of discord in the western province. The arrangement of 1585, although confirmed by James, was by him set aside as being illegal and invalid, and a great scheme of plantation, which was to increase the revenues of the Crown by at least £5,000 annually, set on foot. To this end a survey of the entire province was instituted. Unfortunately the maps and documents relating to this survey were almost entirely destroyed in the fire of 1711; and although there is reason to suspect that contemporary transcripts of portions relating to the properties of individual owners may still be in existence, nothing has as yet come to light. Col. Wood-Martin's discovery of a MS. in the British Museum bearing directly on this survey is therefore a matter for sincere congratulation. The survey in question embraces the greater part of the counties of Sligo, Mayo, and Roscommon. It appears to have been compiled at different times, and without any regard for uniformity, between 1632 and 1634. Much of it has also, it is to be regretted, suffered from damp and other causes. Perhaps the most valuable part of it is that which refers to the county of Sligo, an abridgement of which Col. Wood-Martin prints in his Appendix. But the MS. is worth printing in its entirety, and it is to be hoped that someone may be found able and willing to undertake the editing of it. Meanwhile, Col. Wood-Martin's transcript, into which I notice that a few not unimportant errors, due either to the copyist or printer, have slipped, furnishes us with some valuable details as to the names and estates of the landed gentry of Sligo on the eve of the Great Rebellion.

Passing now to the documents relating to the outrages and murders committed in the county and town of Sligo during the outbreak of the Rebellion, we are indebted to Col. Wood-Martin for printing the Depositions in their entirety, and thus enabling us to test the credibility not only of his own narrative but also of the Depositions themselves. For his own part, Col. Wood-Martin has no hesitation in accepting the Depositions as substantially, if not indeed as literally, true. But he passes the limits of credulity when he ventures, for the sake of darkening the shades in a picture already too sombre, to add details for which the Depositions furnish him no authority. With the Depositions before him, it is greatly to be regretted that he has not studied them in a more critical and impartial spirit. Take, for example, his account of the massacre in Sligo gaol on the night of the 13th of January, 1642. That a number of Protestants, or, more correctly, persons of British descent, inhabitants of Sligo, were then cruelly murdered is a fact unfortunately beyond dispute. But some doubt, from which the witnesses themselves were not free, exists as to the number of those who then perished. "Thirty-eight or thereabouts"; "thirty-six or thirty-seven"; "above thirty," are the estimates variously formed by those witnesses who directly testified to the event. Miss Hickson—who cannot be regarded as a witness prejudiced in favour of the Irish rebels and who, though she only prints one Deposition, that of William Walsh, may nevertheless he presumed to have read all the others—considers the number to have been considerably exaggerated, and conjectures that "only about a dozen perished there." Yet Col. Wood-Martin calmly asserts that on the morning after the massacre the corpses of "about forty" were carried out to be buried. This is, perhaps, a small matter; but it assumes another complexion when we find him altogether ignoring those circumstances which, while they can never excuse, may at least serve in a measure to explain the reason of this horrible crime.

The affair is somewhat shrouded in mystery, but it would appear from the Depositions that after the capture of Sligo some of the inhabitants, "being loth to leave their little goods," elected to remain in the town rather than migrate with the rest to Boyle. Anxious to ingratiate themselves with the dominant party, some of them renounced their religion and enrolled themselves in O'Connor Sligo's company of foot. For four or five weeks their lives and their goods were secure. But a rumour having been spread (apparently by design) that an English force was advancing to their relief, the leaders of the Irish held a meeting in the abbey, when it was decided, for greater security, to place the more active among them under lock and key in the town gaol, which then served the purposes of a guard-house. This decision appears, however, to have been distasteful to the two brothers of O'Connor Sligo, Charles and Hugh O'Connor, who urged the necessity of putting them to death. Being for the nonce foiled in their intention, they held a meeting of their supporters in Lady Jones's house, when they resolved to take the matter into their own hands. That the murders that followed were the work of a small and, but for their violence, an insignificant section of the rebels appears clearly from the Depositions, and from the fact that they were reprobated by the Irish generally and more than one attempt was made by them to bring the perpetrators of them to justice.

Such I say appears to be the truth about the massacre in the gaol, and Col. Wood-Martin would have displayed more impartiality had he sought to moderate rather than to exaggerate the language of the Depositions. For my own part, the more I study these Depositions the more I am impressed with their unreliableness as historical documents. To go no further afield than the present incident—the massacre in Sligo gaol—it is impossible to regard either the witnesses or their statements without a strong feeling of suspicion. Of the thirteen witnesses whose examinations are here printed, only three or four had any explicit information to give. First of all comes Edward Braxton, brother of William Braxton, one of the deceased, who swore that he heard the story of the massacre from a Mr. O'Callan who had heard it from Col. Owen O'Rorke "who was in the said town of Sligo that night when the said murder was committed." Some years afterwards, Col. O'Rorke being put on his oath, declared himself entirely ignorant of the fact. Another witness was William Walsh, Braxton's nephew, whose father also perished that night. He swore to overhearing the murderers, including the above mentioned Col. O'Rorke and his brother Brian Ballagh O'Rorke, planning the murder in Lady Jones's house. Col. O'Rorke, as we have seen, utterly denied the charge; and his brother Brian, on being examined, swore that he was not in the town that night, and was altogether ignorant that any such murder had been planned or was intended. Jane Stewart, wife of one of the murdered men, was one of the principal witnesses. She was herself ill in bed at the time, but was credibly informed by her son, who was found next morning more dead than alive, that the principal murderers were "two butchers," James and Robert Bates, of Sligo. This same James Bates subsequently swore that he had no hand in the murders, but was at the time "in the upper room of the prison with one Henry Knott, who escaped after the murder was committed." Hugh Gaskein, a butcher in Bundoran, whose testimony is the more circumstantial by reason of his greater ignorance, swore that the murder was committed by Hugh and Charles O'Connor and their soldiers; and that Henry Knott's escape was due to the fact that his father owed a certain sum of money to one William O'Crean, who feared to forfeit the debt, and, therefore, preserved young Knott's life.

Of such a nature, then, are the inconsistencies that appear on the face of these Depositions. That it may be possible to compile a consistent narrative by basing it on any one of them and amplifying it with details from the others, as Col. Wood-Martin appears to have done, I do not deny; but whether we shall thereby have got at the truth of the matter may well be doubted. During the Rebellion, Sligo did not play a very important part; but Col. Wood-Martin's account of Hamilton's attack on it will be read with interest. It changed hands several times, and was one of the last places to capitulate to the army of the Parliament.

For the rest, there is nothing of special importance in Col. Wood-Martin's book to call for remark, the greater part of it having already appeared in his Sligo and the Enniskilleners.

ROBERT DUNLOP.

NEW NOVELS.

A Village Hampden. By Algernon Gissing. In 3 vols. (Hurst & Blackett.)

Paul Nugent—Materialist. By Helen F. Hetherington (Gullifer), and the Rev. H. Darwin Burton. In 2 vols. (Griffith, Farran & Co.)

The Baffled Conspirators. By W. E. Norris. (Spencer Blackett.)

They Have Their Reward. By Blanche Atkinson. (George Allen.)

Miriam's Schooling, and other Papers. By Mark Rutherford. (Kegan Paul & Co.)

Three Notable Stories. By the Marquis of Lorne, Mrs. Alexander, and Thomas Hardy. (Spencer Blackett.)

The Haunted Organist of Hurly Burly, and other Stories. By Rosa Mulholland. (Hutchinson.)

Expiation. By Octave Thanet. (Frederick Warne.)

Two and Two: a Tale of Four. By Elizabeth Glaister. (Bristol: Arrowsmith.)

AN author may no doubt stretch a point for the sake of a good title, but Mr. Algernon Gissing takes a somewhat daring liberty when he calls his Michael Wayfer a "Village Hampden." The name, however, may help to sell the book, while its inappropriateness does not mar the story. A reader would be hard to please who did not enjoy this pleasant account of Gloucestershire village life, although the story records a good deal of suffering. The Rev. Mr. Bewglass was for many years vicar of Shipcombe, on the Cotswolds. He was beloved of his flock, upon whom he spent his substance as well as his strength; and when he died his widow was left unprovided for. But that was not all. The glebe consisted of Sedgcomb Farm, of which Jonathan Wayfer was tenant; and the farm buildings had fallen into decay for want of timely repairs. With the advent of a new vicar there was a claim for dilapidations. This is the central fact of the story, out of which most of its stirring events arise. Jonathan Wayfer, on his death-bed, confessed to the old vicar's son that a regular allowance for repairs had been made to him out of the rent, but he had put the money in his pocket instead of spending it on the buildings. He told his own son to make good the amount, and if Michael Wayfer had done as he was bidden, all would have been well. But he repudiated the obligation, and from that false beginning went from bad to worse. Fortunately for everybody concerned, the village possessed a good angel in the person of its schoolmistress. We see her first in waiting on the dying old farmer, who left her a legacy of two hundred pounds. She refused to take the money, and when it was paid to her she gave it to one of Wayfer's churlish daughters. But the legacy found its way back to Ruth Selby, and it afterwards plays an important part in righting various wrongs. Ruth is a young woman who says and does the right things in the most natural way. She shows to advantage by the side of the new vicar's daughter, whose interest in the affairs of the village is put on and off with the same ease. Gabriel Bewglass very nearly lost his head over one young lady before he woke to the true worth of the other. He and Michael Wayfer are fairly matched; each was pig-headed in his own way, though it happened that Gabriel's was the better way. The other people, even to their sophistications, are genuine village types—as Mr. Kimble, for instance, the prosperous farmer, who is lavish of personal help and gifts in kind, but "draws the line at cash." It is a common habit, no doubt, to draw the line at cash; but among the agricultural class, whom Mr. Gissing evidently knows, it is a habit not inconsistent with much generosity. As a rural picture, with a few tragic touches in the quaint comedy, the story seems a very true one.

The authors of Paul Nugent, Materialist, have essayed the difficult task of answering Robert Elsmere. Mrs. Ward's book, able though it is, does not by any means contain the best case that could be stated for Robert Elsmere's new convictions; but the writers of this supposed answer meet it with a case which is ludicrously weak and feebly argued. Paul Nugent is represented as being, in point of intellectual attainments and moral character, a very fine fellow. He has not ordered his life according to the express pattern of orthodox Christianity—he has kept clear of churches and dogmas—but he has lived a pure and high-minded life nevertheless. Well-born and sufficiently well-off, he is tolerated in spite of the freedom of his opinions; but society avenges itself upon him by making the toleration felt. Not that Nugent minds it. He holds his own when a theological argument is thrust upon him, but he does not seek that kind of discussion. The atmosphere, however, is prepared for it. The book has been written to show how a strong mind can be brought down from its high vantage ground of intellectual conviction; and made to subscribe to the thirty-nine articles of belief. Much literary skill is shown in the writing, and perhaps that is the only thing which the literary critic should concern himself about; but when polemics are the chief matter of a book, the critic cannot ignore them. The polemics, unfortunately, spoil the tale. The process of Paul Nugent's recovery from scepticism has to begin somewhere; and the beginning is made when he hears a poor woman, in the midst of much suffering, express the hope that all will be made right hereafter. The hope was a perfectly natural one, and there was nothing in it that should not have excited Nugent's sympathy without unhinging his mind. But this touch of sentiment did not go far. It was not till Nugent was himself ill, and when his weakness of body probably affected his judgment, that the arguments of Lovell, the earnest curate, told upon him. Under no other conditions can one imagine him assenting to the view that, as "the existence of the Church itself surpasses all other miracles," the whole question of miracles ceases to be a perplexing one. But Nugent was rewarded for his capitulation by Maude Dashwood's acceptance of him; and it is, perhaps, enough that he was "happy ever after."

Mr. Norris always makes the best use of his materials, and in The Baffled Conspirators he tells a good story with characteristic brightness and effect. The conspirators are four highly marriageable men, who mutually agree that if any one of them should fall in love he should avoid the object of his affections for six months. If at the end of that time he was still in love, the vote of his friends was to be taken upon his choice, and if that were favourable he might propose. Such a plot, in the hands of Mr. Norris, obviously admits of very happy treatment. It is only necessary that there should be a fascinating woman at hand; and here she is, with all manner of charms and winsome ways, in the person of Lady Belvoir. The arch-conspirator, the organiser of the anti-proposal plot, is the first to succumb, and a like calamity overtakes two of the others. If Mr. Norris had so chosen, Lady Belvoir and her victims would have carried him well through three volumes.

Miss Blanche Atkinson does not permit the deserving people in her story to "have their reward" until the chance of their getting it seems to be altogether lost. But readers who like an involved tale, of which the tangled threads are not collected till the last chapter, can desire nothing better than They Have Their Reward. It is a little difficult to justify the theory of the title. Joanna, no doubt, had her reward, notwithstanding that she let her half-million legacy pass to her little step-sister. Mrs. North, too, had her reward in the natural outcome of goodness. But the rascal Myers fares too well, unless it may be taken that he got what he deserved when he married Lillian Pryde. The story is very brightly written, and there is a good deal of sound thinking in it. Perhaps it is a fault, though a venial one, that every woman is beautiful and every man either an Apollo or a villain.

Miriam's Schooling is refreshingly natural. At the first dip into the story one meets with a delightfully minute description of an old-fashioned watchmaker's shop. The watchmaker was Miriam's father. Her mother had died, and she brought herself up not exactly in the way the neighbours thought would have been best. When she heard that her father was going to marry again, she and her brother escaped to London, both hoping to realise that golden something which is thought to be only attainable in some other place than that in which one's lot is cast. Their London life was a very sad experience, and Miriam's schooling at this time included all the hard lessons of poverty. But her strong character sustained her; and in due time she found herself back in her native village, at the bottom of her school, and learning to question her own judgments and to give more heed to those of others. It is a simple story, told with a freshness of style that gives it an unmistakable charm.

Why Three Notable Stories should be so called it would be difficult to say. The first of the three is only notable, if at all, as being a Canadian story by the Marquis of Lorne, a late Governor-General of the Dominion. But neither its distinguished authorship, nor its pretty Indian heroine, saves it from being rather dull. Mr. Hardy's story is the last of the three, and is as melancholy as its title. This is not a defect, however, for a story ought to answer to its name. Mrs. Alexander writes the middle story; and this is a decidedly pretty one, with an amusing complication, in which an offer of marriage is supposed to come from one man when it really comes from another, and the refusal, meant for the wrong man, reaches the right.

The cluster of stories in Miss Mulholland's book are pleasant reading. But it is fitting that they should belong to the "Idle Hour Series," for the thrilling and sometimes weird interest they excite is so keen that the reader will have to shake himself, when he puts the book down, before returning to less unreal life.

Expiation contains enough bloodthirstiness to satiate Mr. Hall Caine. But it is a capital story of life in the Southern States after the war. The movements of the time, and the odd mingling of strong characters—black and white—lend themselves to graphic description, while a thread of love-making runs through the tale and completes its charm.

The remarkable coincidences in Two and Two, and the personal histories of the two wives, have been skilfully made the most of. The reader who begins the story will find himself obliged to finish it before he puts it down.

GEORGE COTTERELL.

SOME THEOLOGICAL SERIAL PUBLICATIONS.

"MEN OF THE BIBLE."—Isaac and Jacob: Their Lives and Times. By George Rawlinson. (Nisbet.) It is distressing that a man of Canon Rawlinson's extensive learning should be willing to spend his time on such work as this. For 186 pages he bravely sticks to his task of assuming that the story of Isaac and Jacob as told in Genesis contains no difficulties or inconsistencies, without even telling us that any assumption has been made. It seems impossible that Canon Rawlinson should be unaware of the harm done to the cause he has most at heart by this proceeding. The clever youth or curious artisan who has peeped into the Encyclopædia Britannica at a public library cannot escape the conclusion that books like Canon Rawlinson's are merely dishonest. If the Canon fairly stated his assumption and referred, as he might, to his own Bampton Lectures in its support, less harm would be done; but he is persistently silent. In place of some serious discussion of the nature of the documents used, we get copious and sometimes interesting descriptions of scenery: "The general features of the scene would have been the same; grey rock would have predominated, &c."; and elaborate comments on the circumstances and state of mind of the persons of the narrative; "the first accouchement of a nonagenarian must have been recognised as hazardous, &c." Thus is the intelligent reader sacrificed to the supposed interests of the Sunday-school teacher. The author is doubtful whether the ages of the patriarchs before the flood are to be taken as accurate; he is doubtful whether the patriarchs themselves were men or nations—this doubt influences his attitude towards the story of Isaac. Was Sarah really a nonagenarian, and did Abimelech, King of Gerar, in chap. xx. fall in love with the nonagenarian of chap. xvii.? And Ishmael, was he a baby or a youth in chap. xxi. These are the questions we should like Canon Rawlinson to answer. In place of his elaborate reflections on what Abraham thought and what Isaac thought and what the scenery was like when Isaac was about to be sacrificed, we should like some light to be thrown on the two important questions of fact and morality, which the story suggests to the intelligent. Was the occurrence connected with the prevalent child-worship? Could God order Abraham to murder his child? On these points Canon Rawlinson has nothing to say. In place of them we get suggestions that the troubles of Rachel and Leah are a warning against marrying a deceased wife's sister, and a serious citation of Gal. iv. 29 to prove the violently improbable hypothesis that Ishmael was permitted to seriously annoy Isaac. The ostrich with heroic persistency keeps his head in the sand from the beginning to the end of the treatise.

"MEN OF THE BIBLE."—The Minor Prophets. By Archdeacon Farrar. (Nisbet.) Dr. Farrar has added another to the few satisfactory volumes of the "Men of the Bible" series. His book is thoroughly candid and up to date, and may be safely used by the general reader as a fair account of the results attained by critics and scholars in their investigation of the many perplexing problems connected with the Minor Prophets. He has compressed into a small space, and arranged clearly and conveniently, a large mass of information. Four chapters on the general characteristics of Hebrew prophets and prophecy are followed by two chapters apiece on Amos, Hosea, Joel, and Micah; after which the eight remaining prophets are dealt with each in a single chapter, with the exception of Zechariah, whose prophecies Dr. Farrar attributes to three writers, treated of in three successive chapters. There are thus twenty-two chapters in all. Dr.

Farrar is anxious at the outset of his work to replace the narrow and false notion of the prophet as the foreteller of future events by a juster and wider conception. He remarks that what is called the "argument from prophecy" in support of the inspiration of Scripture "requires a careful restatement if it is to stand the light of modern criticism." In the writings of the prophets we find usually that "anything resembling that sort of minute and detailed description of future events, of which the Book of Daniel would be a specimen, if Daniel were its author, is conspicuous by its absence." Dr. Farrar, therefore, treats the prophecies as much as possible as being political and historical, rather than prophetic documents in the ordinary sense. He gives careful and clear summaries of all of them. Amos and Hosea are naturally treated at greatest length. In writing on Amos the tendency to conceive of him as a homely self-taught shepherd is not sufficiently restrained. The wide political and geographical knowledge displayed in his prophecy makes it difficult to believe that Amos was not a travelled man; and his minute acquaintance with the evils of the time are irreconcilable with the idea that he spent his life in the neighbourhood of Tekoah. The chapters on Hosea strike us as the best in the book. The vigorous comments on Hosea xi. 8-11—a passage which critics have found illogical—are in Dr. Farrar's best style:

"All that we are witnessing is the to-and-fro contending currents of a human soul, dilated and inspired by the love of God, and rising out of the pessimism naturally created by the contemplation of guilt and retribution, into that holy optimism which recognises, in spite of all, that God doeth all things well."

Dr. Farrar is disinclined to accept the Book of Jonah literally, and treats of it out of chronological order at the end of his volume. He evidently shares what he calls the "growing conviction that it was written after the Exile." We are glad to see that he notices with respect the opinion that Matt. xii. 40 is a gloss.

"MEN OF THE BIBLE."—St. Paul: His Life and Times. By James Iverach. (Nisbet.) Prof. Iverach has written a careful monograph on St. Paul. He has studied exhaustively the literature of the subject, and formed clear and independent opinions on the many knotty points which meet him in the course of his investigation. Thorough and original work is always of value, and Prof. Iverach's book is valuable; but it has two serious faults. Its style is neither eloquent nor picturesque. Occasionally we come to a strong fluent passage, but too often the composition is clumsy and ill at ease. "I am specially indebted, though largely in the way of dissent, to Weizsäcker"; "the accusation was not so cunning as, though it was more honest, than those usually brought against Paul." The second of these sentences, when we correct the punctuation, is grammatically correct; but it is clumsy, and illustrates a sort of stiffness and awkwardness which makes Prof. Iverach hard to read. The second fault of the book is an occasional intemperance of statement. In treating of St. Paul's conversion, Prof. Iverach is anxious to insist upon "an objective Christophany." He consequently interprets the kicking against the pricks as baldly and unspiritually as possible, in opposition to Archdeacon Farrar, and proceeds—"we may say there is no evidence forthcoming that St. Paul felt any of the compunctions. . . which are so freely attributed to him." Again, Renan's idea that St. Paul was sickly "is hardly one that can be taken seriously"; and finally, "for the psychological imaginings of Pfeiderer and others, there is really no shred of evidence in the Epistles of Paul, nor in the Acts of the Apostles." The last sentence alludes to the view that St. Paul's "visions and revelations" should be connected with the appearance on the way to Damascus. If Prof. Iverach disconnects them he discredits the visions to exalt the Christophany. Pfeiderer's theories are directly suggested by what he reads in St. Paul's own letters; to speak of them as supported by "no shred of evidence" is silly. It is equally absurd to ignore the evidence for St. Paul's weakly frame. Prof. Iverach should at least modify the positiveness of his language in these passages, which only injures the strength of his argument. The quotation from Coleridge on p. 71 requires correction, and surely the reading of Acts xi. 20 may be considered settled.

"THE ANCIENT AND MODERN LIBRARY OF THEOLOGICAL LITERATURE."—The City of God. By St. Augustine. In two vols. (Griffith Farran & Co.) The editor of this reprint tells us only that it was published in 1610, printed by George Eld, "Englished" from St. Augustine by J. H., and dedicated to William, Earl of Pembroke by Th. Th. This information is very scanty. Th. Th. is, of course, Thomas Thorpe, the publisher of Shakspeare's Sonnets, which George Eld printed for him in 1609. His dedication of The City of God to the Earl of Pembroke is a curious and interesting performance, which ought not to have been left out of the reprint. J. H. has been identified with John Healey, whose translation of the Enchiridion of Epictetus was published by Thorpe in 1610, with a characteristic dedication to John Florio. The 1610 translation of The City of God was followed in 1620 by a second edition, which describes itself as, "compared with the Latin Originall, and in very many places corrected and amended." It has a new dedication by William Crashaw, the father of the poet. The reprint ignores this corrected edition, modernises the spelling, and omits (silently) "the learned comments of Lodovicus Vives," translated at length in the early editions. Dr. Marcus Dods, the editor of the only other translation of the De Civitate Dei into English, speaks of Healey's work as "exceptionally bad, . . . inaccurate, . . . and frequently unintelligible"; but we are nevertheless very grateful for the reprint. We are doubtful of the wisdom of printing from the 1610 edition, and resent the silent omission of the comments of Vives; but so important a specimen of early seventeenth-century prose ought to be made accessible, and will be valued by all lovers of literature.

"THE ANCIENT AND MODERN LIBRARY OF THEOLOGICAL LITERATURE."—The Life and Times of St. Cyprian. By the Rev. G. A. Poole. (Griffith Farran & Co.) Canon Benham has done well in reprinting this volume. Like the works of Bishop Kaye, already included in this series, it is specially adapted to give the general reader, who is unable to read the Fathers in the original Greek and Latin, a real and valuable insight into their times and their thoughts. Poole's St. Cyprian was published in 1840, and we believe there has been no second edition; but his work, founded upon a close study of St. Cyprian's writings, and using them wherever possible, can scarcely be superseded. A reference to Archbishop Benson's article in the Dictionary of Christian Biography will enable the student to correct Poole's deficiencies, but will at the same time convince him of the permanent value of his work.

"CAMBRIDGE BIBLE FOR SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES."—Malachi. With Notes and Introduction. By Archdeacon Perowne. (Cambridge: University Press.) Archdeacon Perowne has already edited Jonah and Zechariah for this series. Malachi presents comparatively few difficulties, and the editor's treatment leaves nothing to be desired. His introduction is clear and scholarly, and his commentary sufficient.

We may instance the notes on ii. 15, and iv. 2, as examples of careful arrangement, clear exposition, and graceful expression.

SCANDINAVIAN BOOKS.

Der Ariadnefaden für des Labyrinth der Edda oder Die Edda eine Tochter des Teutoburger Waldes. G. Aug. B. Schierenberg. (Frankfurt.) In this little pamphlet, which contains his interpretation of "Grimnismal," "Völuspá," and "Grottalied," with considerations upon the Heroic Eddic Lays, Herr Schierenberg further develops his theories. That he is very possibly right in his identification of the place of Varus's defeat, and that he is entitled to the credit of having seen that Sigfred was a real person and of identifying him with Arminius one cheerfully allows; but one cannot follow him into the farther positions which he assumes—e.g., "dass in Brunhilde das Vaterland, in Kriemhilde . . . die Königsgewalt personificirt ist," and that "Völuspá," "Grimnismal," and "Wafthrudnismal," "im Anfang der 12 jhts in Island, im islandischen dialect, von einem Geistlichen Sächsischen Stammes gedichtet sind." One wishes that Herr Schierenberg, with his great local knowledge, would publish a clear handy map of the district he knows so well, marking levels and showing old earthworks, tracks, and remains. He would be doing a service to all who are interested in getting at the details of the battlefield where Varus fell. It is perhaps lawful to state in this connexion that there seems to be no corroboration whatever of Smith's theory that Arminius is a gentile name. It must, therefore, be taken as a parallel to Flaccus; and we may suppose the gens of both the young Cheruscan princes to have been Julia. Was the rare appellative "Arminius" given by reason of some accidental cause, or was it derived from some Roman tribune or legate who had charge of the barbarian wards? Some inscription may yet give an answer to the question.

Völuspá. Eine Untersuchung. Elard H. Meyer. (Berlin.) The writer's thesis, supported by a mass of learned matter (unindexed of course) is that "Völuspá" is the work of an erudite Icelander of the first quarter of the twelfth century. The essay—which includes a reconstructed text and full commentary, some 300 pages in all—is worth reading, but it does not carry conviction. That a vast quantity of interesting citations may be gathered to illustrate "Völuspá" is obvious; but it is a problem of exceeding difficulty to assign a definite origin or a definite influence to many of the curious legends that are to be found in early mediæval works. It is, in the absence of tangible proof, always more likely that a ninth or tenth century heathen lay should affect a twelfth century belief than that twelfth century beliefs should result in the forgery of a magnificent and beautiful poem—a poem so fine and impressive that it has attracted to itself more attention than any other relic of Teutonic heathen poetry. Whether Dr. Meyer will fail or not in gaining the suffrages of scholars to his bold thesis is not important. It is a good thing to have such theories ably brought forward; the fresh examination into facts which they provoke usually ends in an accession of knowledge. Dr. Meyer is also a more reputable antagonist to deal with than the average Baconian, and has at all events taken a good deal of trouble and pains to present his opinions worthily. He seems wholly to lack historic imagination and literary judgment; but this is a mere "subjective" opinion, as he would probably maintain.

Studier over de nordiske Gudeog Heltesagne oprindelse. Sophus Bugge. (Christiania.) In this stout volume Prof. Bugge brings to a close the first part of his new investigations into the Old Northern mythology. Many of the seven fascicules of which it is composed have already received notice; and the theory upon which the whole investigation is conducted is sufficiently understood. Hence there is no need here to do more than explain that the latter part of the book is concerned with Woden on the gallows and with the Ash Ygg-drasill. The subjects are treated with all Prof. Bugge's wonted ingenuity and learning; and there are many noteworthy and suggestive passages, e.g., this reading for the headline of the Ruthwell cross:

"[ic ne]god mon mæ fah cþo," which is further compared with Gen. viii. 21, and interpreted Jeg gud ødeløgger ikke herafter fiendlig Mennesket. On the other hand, such an idea as that Saxo's Rostarus (which Bugge admits to be, as it is of course, a scribal error for Roftrarus = Hrofr = Hroprtr) could be also a corruption from some such form as "Crist" seems almost ludicrously far-fetched and absurd. Throughout the book the whole theory of Graeco-Latin and Judæo-Christian influences is pressed much too hard. One feels, after a careful perusal of it, much as one did after reading some of those wonderful works which have proposed to resolve the Etruscan inscriptions into Low-German or Plautus's Punic into Old Celtic. "Well, this book has, at least, convinced me of one thing, to wit, that the theory it so ably upholds is not the right one." In fact, the advocate has done his work admirably, but the cause he pleads is hopelessly unsound.

Katalog over den Arna-Magnæanske Haandskrift samling. II<sup>e</sup> Hfte. (Copenhagen.) The Arna-Magnæan trustees have completed in this part (which contains the quartos of their great collection) the first volume of their useful enterprise. It contains accounts of some 370 MSS. touching law, civil and ecclesiastic, and over 500 MSS. of Sagas of various scope. It will be useful to every student of Old Northern history or philology, and will take its place by Möbius's Catalogus, Lidderdale's British Museum list, and Prof. W. Fiske's bibliographies of Icelandic-printed books. Even a casual glance at its contents will show the immense debt the learned world owes to Arne Magnússon, but for whose intelligent exertions nearly every vellum, and all the best paper copies, in this magnificent library would ere this have perished ignobly without leaving a trace behind. It would be a good thing if the Trustees would complete their catalogue by an album of facsimiles of the more important vellums dated and undated, and of some half a dozen of the paper copies of the older copyists. Scholars could then judge for themselves whether the date ascribed (often as it would seem on very slight grounds) to important MSS. could be maintained, and it would be possible to make a systematic study of old Icelandic palæography. Dr. Kålund, who is responsible for the present volume, might well carry out such a scheme for the trustees.

PROF. WILLARD FISKE, of Florence, has lately issued, as number five of his admirable "Bibliographical Notices," a third and final supplement to Lidderdale's Catalogue of the Books printed in Iceland from 1578 to 1880 in the Library of the British Museum (1885). The present supplement—which, like the others, stops with the year 1844—enumerates 145 publications, to every one of which a bibliographical note is appended. It is especially rich in Rímur, or modern rhymed romances, the issue of which is actively continued to the present day; and in Alþingisbækur, or collections of laws and ordinances promulgated by the authorities of the island. Readers of Mr. Hall Caine's recent novel, The Bondman, may be interested to know that it also contains three very rare contemporary broadsides relating to the Jørgensen revolution of 1809. These are two proclamations, in which Jørgen Jørgensen declares the independence of Iceland and his own assumption of power; and the agreement between Captain Nott, of H.M. brig Rover, and Governor-General Trampe, which annulled all Jørgensen's acts and restored the authority of the Danish crown. In a prefatory note, Prof. Fiske gives a general description of his collection of Icelandic publications (including those relating to Iceland), which now consists of nearly 4000 titles. To give some idea of its richness, we may state that it lacks very few of the editions and translations of the Sagas, and still fewer of the strictly linguistic works; that it has all the impressions of the Icelandic Bible, or of its parts, excepting the rare New Testaments of 1540 and 1609; and that its series of Icelandic periodicals—whether printed in the island itself, in Denmark, or in Canada—is absolutely complete. We shall look forward with interest to number six of these "Bibliographical Notices," which is to be entitled Studies in Icelandic Booklore.

NOTES AND NEWS.

WE hear from Copenhagen that Prof. Söderberg, of Lund, has discovered in a museum at Florence the lost fragments of the Franks Casket, of which the remainder is among the most valued possessions of the British Museum. The casket is made of the bone of whales, carved with figures, and with Runic inscriptions of the eighth century, which Prof. Stephens attributes to the North of England. The newly found portions include a representation of a scene from the Sigurd myth, explained by Runic inscriptions.

A NEW edition of Mr. Coventry Patmore's masterpiece, The Unknown Eros, is about to be published by Messrs. George Bell & Son. The book will be uniform with the two-volume edition of Mr. Patmore's poetical works recently issued by the same publishers.

MESSRS. LONGMANS & Co. have in the press Voces Populi, by Mr. F. Anstey, reprinted from Punch, with illustrations by Mr. J. Bernard Partridge.

THE full title of Archdeacon Watkins's Bampton Lectures for this year, to be published by Mr. John Murray in October, will be Modern Criticism considered in its relation to the Fourth Gospel.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN will publish immediately a second and revised edition—the first appeared so long ago as 1878—of Mr. George Howell's Conflicts of Capital and Labour, which gives a history of the trade unions of Great Britain, in their political, social, economical, and industrial aspects.

MESSRS. BLACKWOOD announce a new novel by Mrs. Oliphant, in one volume, entitled Sons and Daughters.

THE Palestine Exploration Fund has now ready for issue the new map of Palestine, upon which Mr. George Armstrong, the assistant secretary, has long been engaged. It is on the scale of three-eighths of an inch to the mile; and it takes in both sides of the Jordan, extending to Baalbek and Damascus in the north, and to Kadesh Barnea in the south. All modern names are in black; over these are printed Old Testament and Apocrypha names in red, and New Testament, Josephus, and Talmudic names in blue, thus showing at a glance all the identifications of sites that have been ascertained. A companion map, showing the elevations by raised contour lines, is also approaching completion.

THE next volume of the "Badminton Library" will be Riding, by Mr. W. R. Weir, the Earl of Suffolk and Berkshire, the Duke of Beaufort and Mr. A. E. T. Watson (the two editors of the series), with a special chapter on Polo, by Capt. Moray Brown.

A LADY, who wishes to remain anonymous, has offered the sum of £30 annually for three years to the committee of the Incorporated Society of Authors, to be expended at their discretion in the general interests of literature.

THE September number of the Newbury House Magazine will contain a review of "Paul Nugent—Materialist," which, we are informed, will express Mr. Gladstone's opinion of that orthodox reply to "Robert Elsmere."

MR. STANLEY's book, In Darkest Africa, is published in America at seven and a-half dollars (say, 30s.). But it differs from the English edition—for the worse—in having only one index instead of two, and in a less happy reproduction of the portraits; and—for the better—in having the maps in a pocket instead of being bound up in the body of the work.

THE Rev. Augustus George Legge, vicar of North Elmham, Norfolk, proposes to print a transcript of the oldest churchwardens' accounts of his parish, from 1539 to 1577, including the most important period in English ecclesiastical history, when the vestments, liturgical books, &c., were disposed of in 1550. The various entries will be illustrated with notes; and an introduction will give a brief history of the church, a list of the vicars, an account of the lands held by the churchwardens, &c. The book will be handsomely printed, and issued in a limited edition. The names of subscribers are received by Mr. Agas H. Goose, Rampant Horse-street, Norwich.

The next volume in the "Camelot" series will be Landor's Pericles and Aspasia, edited by Mr. Havelock Ellis.

MESSRS. CROSBY LOCKWOOD & SON are about to issue the fifty-first edition of Dr. De Fivas's Grammar of French Grammars. Though the price is reduced, no alteration will be made in the contents or outward appearance of the book, which comprises the author's latest corrections and additions.

MR. L. POEHLMANN, of 27, Lonsdale-square, will shortly publish a pamphlet on "The Natural Way of Learning a Foreign Language," written by himself.

A NEW weekly paper is announced, entitled Romance, of which the first number will appear on Monday, August 18. As its name indicates, it will make fiction its chief feature. There are to be four or five complete novelettes every week, besides a serial, called, "The Queen's Secret: A Tale of the Present Reign." Some space will also be given to fashion and general chit chat. The editor is Mr. Harry Blyth.

WE are asked to state that the library of Trinity College, Dublin, will be closed from August 18 to 30 inclusive.

THE results of the L.L.A. Examination for the present year have just been issued by the University of St. Andrews. It appears that 607 candidates entered for examination at 31 centres, as compared with 536 in 1889 at 26 centres. Of these 244 entered for the first time. The centres for examination were Aberdeen, Bedford, Birmingham, Bristol, Cardiff, Cheltenham, Cork, Dresden, Dublin, Dumfries, Dunrossness, Edinburgh, Inverness, Kirkwall, Leeds, Liverpool, London, Londonderry, Loughborough, Manchester, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Paisley, Pietermaritzburg, St. Andrews, St. Malo, Scarborough, Shanklin, Stellenbosch, Stromness, Truro, and Wolfenbüttel. Taking a joint view of all the subjects in which candidates entered, passes were obtained in 596 instances and honours in 219; 90 candidates, having passed in the full number of subjects, are entitled to receive the L.L.A. diploma. From the commencement of the scheme in 1877, 2112 candidates in all have entered for this examination, and of these 914 have obtained the title.

IT is worthy of note that five natives were among the successful candidates in the recent examination for the Indian civil service: Satis Chanda Mukerjee (10); Aravinda Akroyd Ghose (11); Govind Dinanath Madgarkar (42); Mohammad Yussuf (43); and Mohimahan Ghose (45). A sixth, Joseph Aloysius Ezechiel (33), had also been educated at Poona.

THE eleventh annual meeting of the American Library Association will be held this year at the Fabyan House, in the White Mountains—which sounds like an attractive locality—from September 9 to 13. Among the papers to be read are "The Public Library and the Public School," by Dr. W. T. Harris, U.S., commissioner of education, and "The Essential and the Desirable in a Public Library from the User's point of view," by Prof. J. K. Hosmer, of Washington, and Mr. Paul L. Ford.

THE latest venture in cheap publishing is the "Japanese Library" of Messrs. Cassell—so-called, apparently, from the designs in water-colour on the covers, which vary for each volume. The first peculiarity that strikes the eye is that they are printed on paper so thin as to require to be doubled in order that the ink may not show through. The result is that the volumes are perfectly limp and may be rolled up and otherwise maltreated without suffering—an advantage for travellers. Another peculiarity is that they are published at a nett price, which allows no margin to the discount booksellers. Some dozen volumes have already appeared in this series, among which we may mention Ivanhoe, Oliver Twist, Handy Andy, and The Ingoldsby Legends.

WE have received from Mr. Quaritch, in a very handsome volume, the priced catalogue of the romances of chivalry which he has for sale. To those who are acquainted with Mr. Quaritch's other catalogues, it will hardly be necessary to add that it contains a great deal more than the priced catalogues of other booksellers. Not only is the heading wisely extended so as to include almost the entire field of secular literature during the middle ages, but also, partly in the introduction (pp. 2 to 11) and partly in the notes appended to the more important lots, we are presented with a critical bibliography of the subject. The MS. upon which Mr. Quaritch himself sets the most store is the illuminated Chronicle of the Dukes of Normandy, which fetched 53,000 francs at the Didot Sale in 1878. Next—Sed longo intervallo—come the Roman de la Rose formerly in the Perkins collection; the Hungerfield Psalter of the twelfth century, which was sold by auction in London only a month or two ago; and a Grand Costumier of Normandy. Among the printed books we must be content to mention only Wynkyn de Worde's edition of Raoul le Fevre, concerning which Mr. Quaritch tells a romantic story. Under another title he records that the famous Talbot prayer-book, which has been since 1879 perhaps the most cherished treasure in his possession, was disposed of to a French collector in February of the present year. Appended to the catalogue proper are nineteen facsimiles of illuminations, &c., representative of the series of 100 plates which Mr. Quaritch is now publishing, under the title of "Facsimiles of Choice Examples selected from Illuminated MSS., Unpublished Drawings, and Illustrated Books of Early Date." They have been executed by Mr. Griggs, with extraordinary fidelity and brilliance. Altogether, this volume is equally attractive for its substance and for its form—always excepting the annoying blunder in the Index, which is duly apologised for.

The tenth volume in the new edition of De Quincey's Collected Writings (Edinburgh: A. & C. Black) is the first of two specially sub-entitled by the editor "Literary Theory and Criticism." In addition to the well-known Letters to a Young Man whose Education has been Neglected, and the papers on Rhetoric, Style, Language, and Conversation, we have here for the first time reprinted "A Brief Appraisal of the Greek Literature in its Foremost Pretensions," summing up the various hard sayings about the poets, historians, orators, and philosophers of ancient Greece which the author has scattered throughout his other writings. Whatever effect a perusal of it may leave on the mind, we have no hesitation in saying that Prof. Masson was entirely justified in not omitting it from his "édition définitif."

TRANSLATION.

AFTER THE DANISH OF INGEMANN.

God's mighty throng of witnesses,
They stand before His throne;
And he who faces death for Him
Shall glorified go home.
Unto the martyr's shining crown
I may not lift my eyes,
Yet I bear a cross on the road of life,
And God knows where it lies.
O God, if in life and in death,
Thy Kingdom still I own,
The love that I bear to Thee
Shall in sorrow and trials be shown.
You watch each little sorrow,
The strife that no one saw,
You see if I patiently suffer,
And struggle on once more.
Lord! if the strife is hard,
And my grief is heavy to bear,
Be Thou near me in the battle,
For I am friendless there.
If no human soul should my sorrow know,
If their hate should be as a burning fire,
Yet to see Thy Heaven opened
And Thy glory is my desire.

K. F. AND F. P.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE Expositor for August contains an interesting "postscript," by Canon Hicks, called forth by Prof. Ramsay's somewhat "perfidious" criticisms and remarks on his paper on "Demetrius the Silversmith," in the Expositor for June. Canon Hicks shows an excellent disposition to avoid dogmatizing where future discoveries may yet clear up uncertainties. "I should like," he says, "to see and handle some specimens of metal shrines of Artemis discovered at Ephesus; so far as I am aware, none are as yet to be produced." Several serial discussions are continued in this number, which also contains a survey of recent English books on the New Testament, by Prof. Marcus Dods, distinguished by kindness and judgment, but condescending, perhaps rather too much, to the "weak brethren."

THE Jewish Quarterly Review for July well represents some of the leading schools of Judaism, and is hospitable to more than one Christian scholar. Dr. Friedländer's sketch of the late Chief Rabbi, and Prof. Kaufmann's of the late Franz Delitzsch, give finely contrasting portraits. Prof. Sayce throws light on the dangers of Hellenising tendencies in Egyptian Judaism from some ostraka of the Ptolemaic period found at Karnak. Dr. Hirsch gives a study of the Sibylline oracles: he deeply regrets that Jews should have been guilty of "deception" equally with Christians. All students of the Bible will thank Mr. Montefiore for his survey of recent theories on the date and significance of the Book of Proverbs. Mr. Herford gives a helpful examination of the apparent inconsistencies of the Talmudic doctrine of God. Prof. Bacher relates the history of the Sabbatarians of Eastern Europe, who "offer the only instance of a religious community spontaneously and from profound religious motives going over to the Jewish persuasion." Mr. Jacobs's discourse on Jewish Ideals, delivered before the Ethical Society, contains much with which patriots of all creeds will earnestly sympathise. Prof. Driver has found a promising disciple in Mr. Abrahams, who speaks at length on the Oxford professor's philological commentary on the text of Samuel. Mr. Simmons comments on the Septuagint rendering of Hos. xiv. 8. Mr. Schechter, Dr. Neubauer, and Prof. Gottheil of New York, have also contributed to this number.

THE Theologisch Tijdschrift for July contains the first part of a re-examination of the historical origin and meaning of the Book of Hosea, by Prof. Oort; a study of the difficulties connected with the account of the Tree of Life in Gen. iii., by Dr. Malthes; and an article on the origin of the Reformation, suggested by recent historical works, by Dr. F. Pijper. Among the notices of books may be mentioned that of Wundt's System der Philosophie, by Dr. A. Bruining.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- BEITRÄGE zur Kenntniss d. Russischen Reiches. 3. Folge. 7. Bd. Reisen u. Aufenthalt in Kamtschatka in den J. 1851-5. Von K. v. Dittmar. 1. Thl. Leipzig: Voss. 19 M.
BUGNOTTET, G., et A. N. de SAUVIGNY, Etudes administratives et judiciaires sur Londres et l'Angleterre. T. 2. Paris: Durand. 12 fr.
CLARETIE, Jules. Puyjoli. Paris: Dentu. 3 fr. 50 c.
FICKER, J. Die altchristlichen Bildwerke im christlichen Museum d. Laterans, untersucht u. beschrieben. Leipzig: Seemann. 6 M.
HIRTH, F. Chinesische Studien. 1. Bd. München: Hirth. 15 M.
KULKE, E. Richard Wagner u. Friedrich Nietzsche. Leipzig: Reissner. 1 M. 50 Pf.
LORCK, G. Die Homiliesammlung d. Paulus Diakons, die unmittelbare Vorlage d. Otridischen Evangelienbuchs. Leipzig: Fock. 1 M. 50 Pf.
MÉNÈS, Catulle. Lila et Colette. Paris: Victor-Havard. 3 fr. 50 c.
OHLE, R. Shakespeares Cymbeline u. seine romanischen Vorläufer. Berlin: Mayer & Müller. 2 M.
SOCIN, A. Kurdische Sammlungen. 2. Abt. Erzählungen u. Lieder im Dialekte v. Bohtan. Leipzig: Voss. 8 M. 60 Pf.
STEINHÄUSER, P. Wernhers Marienleben in seinem Verhältnisse zum "Liber de infantia sanctae Marise et Christi salvatoris." Berlin: Mayer & Müller. 1 M. 20 Pf.
WERTENHOLZ, F. v. Ueb. Byrons historische Dramen. Stuttgart: Frommann. 1 M. 20 Pf.

HISTORY, LAW, ETC.

- ANTONIADIS, B. Die Staatslehre d. Thomas ab Aquino. Leipzig: Robolsky. 2 M. 50 Pf.
CARTULAIRE de l'abbaye de Notre-Dame de la Trappe. Paris: Champion. 10 fr.
CONRAT, M. Geschichte der Quellen u. Literatur d. römischen Rechts im früheren Mittelalter. 1. Bd. 3. Abt. Leipzig: Hinrichs. 10 M. 60 Pf.
GALLARD-MAGNAN, le Marquis de. Compte rendu des séances de l'administration provinciale d'Auch (1787). Paris: Champion. 10 fr.
GORTESCHRIFTEN, neue. Nr. 1. Leipzig: Rauert. 1 M. 50 Pf.
PHILIPPI, F. Die ältesten Osnabrückischen Gildesurkunden (bis 1500). Osnabrück: Rackhorst. 2 M. 50 Pf.
SCRIPTORES rerum germanicarum in usum scholarum ex monumentis Germaniae historicae recusi. Regionis abbatu Prumiensis chronicon. Recognovit F. Kurze. Hannover: Hahn. 2 M. 40 Pf.
WÜSTENFELD, H. Der Imām el-Schāfi', seine Schüler u. Anhänger bis zum J. 300 d. H. Göttingen: Dieterich. 5 M.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE.

- LENDENFELD, R. v. Die Gattung Stelletta. Berlin: Reimer. 8 M.

PHILOLOGY.

- HYMNUS homericus in Mercurium ab A. Ludwig editus, adiectis animadversionibus criticis in Phlegontis oracula Sibyllina. Königsberg: Koch. 2 M.
KLOTZ, M. Der talmudische Tractat Ebel rabbathi od. Smachoth, nach Handschriften u. Parallelstellen bearb., übers. u. s. v. Königsberg: Koch. 1 M. 20 Pf.
MOSCHOPULI in Batrachomyomachiam eorum natarum pars 1. ed. A. Ludwig. Königsberg: Koch. 60 Pf.
SCHMIDT, A. M. A. Ueb. der Homerische in Sophokles' Aias. Leipzig: Fock. 1 M. 80 Pf.

CORRESPONDENCE.

WYNKYN DE WORDE'S "MORTE DARTHUR."

Philadelphia, U.S.A.: July 15, 1890.

Mr. Oskar Sommer, in his edition of Le Morte Darthur (vol. ii., p. 4), mentions two editions of the Morte Darthur printed by Wynkyn de Worde, one in 1498, and one in 1529. He says:

"Only two copies of his impressions are known to exist, fortunately one of each edition. That of 1498 is in Earl Spencer's library, No. 907, and that of 1529 in the Grenville Collection of the British Museum."

This first copy, he continues, lacks ten leaves, and thirteen others are partly injured.

I would add that I saw two leaves of the edition of 1498 while studying Arthurian literature in the Bodleian last summer. They are in Douce Fragments, 10. The leaves contain a part of book ix., the end of chap. xxii., the whole of chap. xxiii. and chap. xxiv., and the beginning of chap. xxv. The headings of the three latter are as follows:

"How a damoyzell sought helpe to help syr Lañcelot ayenst xxx knyghtes, and how sir Trystram fought with them."

"How syr Trystram and syr Dinadan came to a lodgyng where they muste Juste with two knyghtes."

"How syr Trystram justed with syr Kay and syr Sagamor le desyrus and how syr Gawayne torned syr Trystram for Morgan le fay."

My notes being brief, I cannot even surmise at this distance whether these are two of the missing leaves, or a part of another copy; but, in any case, they are of interest in connexion with Dr. Sommer's valuable work.

ANNA ROBERTSON BROWN.

OLD FRENCH "ENCREMENT"—"LA GOULE D'Aoust."

Oxford: July 26, 1890.

Mr. Paget Toynbee's notes on matters connected with Old French literature and philology are always valuable and interesting.

1. His explanation of the difficult word encrement in the "Livre des Rois" as representing a Vulgar Latin acrimente is very tempting and plausible so far as the sense is concerned; but it is one that I am afraid cannot be accepted, as, on the phonological side, it has no sure analogy in its favour. Latin acr became in Old French aigr, so acrem became aigre, and macrum became maigre. It is, of course, quite out of the question to get encrement out of aigre. And in reply to this objection, it cannot be urged that encre may be due directly to the learned form acre, for encrement on Mr. Toynbee's hypothesis would necessarily be a word of popular origin, the suffix, of course, proving this.

2. In illustration of the intrusion of a nasal in Old French words, Mr. Toynbee cites convoiter as the phonetic equivalent of a Vulgar Latin cupitäre. This is surely an impossible equation. The Latin type required is certainly cupid(i)täre, the diphthong oi of the French word representing the tonic i, and the t remaining in consequence of its having been once immediately preceded by a consonant, just as we have douter = Latin dub(i)täre (see Schwan's Old French Grammar, § 160).

3. I do not think there need be any difficulty about "Saint Pierre la noele." The Latin name of the festival on August 1 was "Natale S. Petri ad Vincula" (see Dict. of Christian Antiquities, p. 1627). In ancient calendars the festivals of the Apostles were noted as "Natale" (i.e., Birthday), (see Ducange, s.v. "Natalis").

4. What is the etymology of goule in the term "la Goule d'Aoust"? It is generally explained as meaning the beginning of the month (see Godefroy, and Ducange, s.v. "gula"). Surely this is extremely improbable. For if this were the meaning, how is it that the word goule only occurs in connexion with the month of August? how is it that we never hear of the goule of May or of November, in connexion with the festivals of SS. Philip and James and of All Saints? It is perhaps to the purpose to note that the phrase, "la Goule d'Aoust," is peculiar to Anglo-French texts. Is it possible that goule is the same word as Yule, Middle English goule, zowle, zole, zol, Old English geol, Icelandic jöl? Antiquaries often mysteriously refer to "the Yule of August" as an English term for Lammas Day (see quotation from Blount in Brand's Pop. Antiq.). Halliwell tells us that Gule is a name for Lammas Day (but, query, in what text or dialect?). Was August 1 ever called in English "the Yule of August" by any people except imaginative antiquaries?

A. L. MAYHEW.

P.S.—Since writing the above I have had the advantage of consulting the Hibbert Lectures of Prof. Rhys, where I have found much valuable information about the term "Gula Augusti." In Lecture V., in the section on the widely-spread cult of Lug (pp. 409-424), the learned professor has a great deal to say on the great Celtic festival celebrated at the beginning of August, called by the Irish "Lugnassad," and later by the Welsh "Gwyl Awst." Prof. Rhys says that the Welsh term in the form of "Gula Augusti" passed into the Latin of the Chroniclers (e.g., Annales Cambrie, Rolls ed., p. 109, ann. 1287), and even into a statute of Edward III. (a. 31, c. 14); he refers also to Thos. Hearne's note in his edition of Robert of Glouster (p. 679). If this account is correct, the Anglo-French goule is of Welsh origin, and "the Yule of August" is a figment of the pseudo-learned antiquary.

A. L. M.

"OTAMÁN," "ATAMÁN," "HETMAN," AND "HAUPTMANN."

British Museum: July 28, 1890.

Mr. Krebs's letter in defence of the connexion between Hetman and Hauptmann (ACADEMY, July 26) leaves me unconvinced. He defends that connexion (1) because three eminent Slavonic philologists do not deny it; (2) because it is not to be found in Old Slavonic, but only occurs in modern Slavonic dialects; (3) because the close connexion and union between Austria and Poland, especially under Stephen Bathory, makes Hetman a probable German derivative; and (4) because Hauptmann has more than one meaning.

Let us take these points seriatim.

(1) It is quite true that Linde, Jungmann, and Miklosich do not deny the connexion; but neither do they affirm it. (2) Of course the word Hetman was unknown to the old Slavonic language. To expect to find it there would be about as reasonable as to look for the word "torpedo" in Anglo-Saxon. The dignity of Hetman did not exist till long after Slavonic had ceased to be a living tongue. Its occurrence in most of the modern Slavonic dialects certainly points to a comparatively modern but not necessarily a German origin. (3) Mr. Krebs's third point is fatal to his own contention.

"Considering," he says, "the close military connexion and political union between Austria and Poland, especially . . . when Stephen Bathory, crowned king of Poland . . . 1576, granted the Cossacks . . . the privilege of choosing a Hetman (or chieftain) out of their own people, there seems little reason to reject the supposition that Hetman may be a German loan-word," &c.

By Austria, Mr. Krebs must, of course, mean the House of Austria, for the so-called Austrian Empire was then non-existent. Now, so far from there being any union whatever between the Poles and the Hapsburgs, the relations between the two were marked from first to last by the most uncompromising hostility, which reached its climax when the Hungarian Bathory (whom Mr. Krebs evidently regards as a German) was elected king of Poland chiefly on account of his notorious Teutonic antipathies. (4) Point 4 has no bearing whatever on the subject. We all know what Hauptmann means; where the Cossack Hetman came from is the question.

But where then did this interesting changeling come from? I should look for it in the East rather than in the West of Europe. At all events, there is much more to be said for its Ruthenian than its German origin; and if Ruthenian, Otamán would be the original form (Zhelkovsky: Malorusko-nimetsky Slovar), and both Atamán and Hetman derivatives. Indeed, Zdanowicz (Slovník jazyka polskiego) expressly, and Dal (Tolkovy Slovar zhivago Velikorusskago yazyka) by implication, derive Ataman-Hetman from the Ruthenian language. Nevertheless, it is dangerous to dogmatize on so recondite a matter, for we must recollect (1) that Hetman and Ataman are distinct words, existing side by side in the Russian, Ruthenian, and Polish vocabularies; (2) that the Polish Hetman is sometimes even used in contradistinction to the Ruthenian Atamán by Polish scholars; and (3) that the Bohemian Heytman differs from both, and may even perhaps actually have a German origin. All I contend for is that the title of the Cossack chieftain (whether Otamán, Atamán, or Hetman) has no necessary connexion with the German Hauptmann; and I am inclined to think that here we have one of those cases of accidental resemblance which have so often proved very mischievous to science by luring too confiding philologists away from solid facts into the quagmires of fanciful speculation.

Where the Ruthenians got the word from is a still more obscure question. A Tatar prototype seems to me to be more probable than a Lithuanian, on historical grounds. Perhaps some of the readers of the ACADEMY may throw a little light on the subject?

R. NISBET BAIN.

"COCKNEY."

Dorking: July 27, 1890.

Prof. Max Müller's obliging mention of the cack-ei of his nursery days seems to clinch the supposition that Florio's cockanegg, together with the earlier cockenay, were analogous appellations of an egg in the English nursery. The amplification of the word in the English forms, by the insertion of an unmeaning an or en, may be compared with the modification seen in "Jackanapes" for "Jack-ape," a monkey. Chaucer, in the Nun's Priests' Tale, uses the syllables "cok! cok!" to represent the frightened notes of Chaunteclere on seeing the fox in the yard.

H. WEDGWOOD.

THE SAGAS.

Hawthorns, near Kerwick: July 28, 1890.

We shall no doubt be happy to accept Mr. Stefánsson as the literary spokesman of Iceland when the place is vacant, but for the time being it is still occupied by Vigfusson; and this is the classification which that scholar made of the chief branches of Icelandic literature:

- A. Poetry (on which the Sagas are mostly based), Mythical, Heroical, and Historical, e.g., Poetical Edda, Erik's Lay, Hornklofi's verses.
- B. Laws (of Iceland), Grágás (of Norway), Norges gamle Love.
- C. Mythical Histories, e.g., Snorri's Edda, Volsung Saga.

D. Icelandic Sagas, or Histories referring to Icelandic history.

(1) Sagas of the General History, e.g., Landnámabók.

(2) Sagas of Men and Families, e.g., Njála.

(3) Sagas of Bishops—Annals, &c.

E. Kings' Sagas, or Lives of Princes of Foreign Countries, e.g., Heimskringla, the Orkney Saga, &c.

Thus it will appear that the Sagas are historical, heroical, mythical, and chiefly based on ancient poetry, and that the Volsung Saga is a fiction.

HALL CAINE.

SCIENCE.

Pure Logic, and other Minor Works. By W. Stanley Jevons. Edited by Prof. Adamson and Harriet A. Jevons; with a Preface by Prof. Adamson. (Macmillan.)

THIS latest addition to the posthumous collection of Jevons's Works contains his earliest studies on the theory of logic and the examination of Mill's philosophy which he left unfinished. The writings of the former class have been before the public for many years; and their substance was embodied in the author's mature work on the Principles of Science. A minute analysis of the Pure Logic and the Substitution of Similars will not be expected here. We need not describe the logical machine, or discuss the treatment of propositions as equations. It will suffice to refer those who require a summary view of Jevons's logical theory to the Preface, in which Prof. Adamson brings out very clearly the chief points of the Jevonsian system in contrast to that of Mill:

"All reasoning or, more exactly, all proof is deductive in character, and involves general propositions of absolute certainty. . . . The generality of the principle involved in any proof is not to be construed after the concrete fashion, as an assertion found to hold good about a number of concrete, and possibly not exhausted, particulars. . . . The range of assured knowledge is thus of narrow extent as compared with the indefinite expanse of concrete existence. . . . Within the region of concrete existence reasoning, in the strict sense, is impossible. But, in Mill's view . . . within the realm of concrete existence lay the province and process of reasoning."

Prof. Adamson indicates the difference between the two logicians, without expressing a preference. He imitates the admirable impartiality which characterised the report of a recent Commission, with possibly the similar result that partisans on both sides will be confirmed in their respective convictions. There is one at least among Prof. Adamson's readers who is hardened in the belief that the true type of empirical logic is afforded by what has been well called the "Brown-Herschel-Mill view" of causation, and that the attempt to identify inductive and formal logic is futile.

The principal addition which is made in this volume to the polemic against Mill consists of an hitherto unpublished fragment on the Method of Difference. The writer renews the complaints expressed in the published articles against "the astonishing conclusion that a general law of nature may be founded upon the observation of two instances." The fragment does not assist us in understanding how such astonishment could be expressed by one who must have been perfectly aware that one or two experiments in a chemical laboratory often suffice to establish a new law. Of course this experiment must be backed by previous experience relating to experimentation in pari materia. This connexion of particular observations with previous inductions by the concatenation of deductive reasoning is by some regarded as the principal invention or discovery of the modern logicians who have methodised empirical philosophy. But Jevons seems never to have recognised the principle, which Mill in his discussion of the Laws of Nature has explained with tolerable clearness, that "all inductions which can be connected by ratiocination are confirmatory of one another." The consideration of this principle might have removed the difficulty which is urged by Jevons in reiterated passages like the following:

"The four great pillars of Mill's logical edifice rest then upon the universal law of causation. Upon what does this law rest? An ancient system of cosmogony represented the world as resting on an elephant, and the elephant on a tortoise; we want something to correspond to the tortoise."

"Now we are in a perfect vicious circle. Causation is proved only by the method of difference. That method derives its validity from the universality of the law of causation."

But what if the analogue of the inductive system is not "an ancient system of cosmogony," but the formation of worlds which modern science reveals—portions of matter coming together and thereby acquiring consistence without anything on which to "rest"? What if the apparently "vicious circle" is an arch composed of mutually sustaining parts? But it is not our part to advance a defence of Mill, which it would be impossible within our narrow limits to maintain. It is more becoming to adopt the judicial impartiality of Prof. Adamson's verdict:

"The investigation of the fundamental principles of reasoning is a problem of such subtlety and complexity that exhaustive criticism of one distinguished logician by another must always be hailed with satisfaction."

Turning from logic to moral philosophy, we find in Prof. Adamson's interesting description of the manuscripts left by Jevons a notice of a fragment on Free Will and Necessity directed against Mill's theory on that subject. But no considerable addition is made to the published article on Mill's Utilitarianism. The brunt of the attack is there directed against the position inconsistently taken up by Mill, that pleasures differ in kind. Jevons is not the less powerful assailant because he is not the first. When Homer makes Patroclus fall, he does not allow, even to Hector, the undivided glory of prevailing over the friend of Achilles. The Greek hero is first stunned by Apollo, then wounded by a Trojan of inferior note, before he receives his death-blow from the great Hector. It is thus that Dr. Sidgwick and others less well-known had anticipated Jevons's attack. "Thus by a mortal and immortal hand wounded," as Pope translates, the Utilitarian chief succumbs to the blow of his last and not least formidable assailant. Turning the weapon in the wound, Jevons insists: "There is much nobleness and elevation of thought. But where is the logic?" Another weak point seems to be hit in the following passage:—

"The whole tone of Mill's moral and political writings is totally opposed to the teaching of Darwin and Spencer, Tylor and Maine. Mill's idea of human nature was that we came into the world like lumps of soft clay, to be shaped by the accidents of life or the care of those who educate us."

Referring to a phrase employed by Mill and Austin, "the extraordinary pliability of human nature," Jevons continues:—

"No phrase could better express the misapprehensions of human nature, which, it is to be hoped, will cease for ever with the last generation of writers. Human nature is one of the last things which can be called 'pliable'; granite rocks can be more easily moulded than the poor savages that hide among them."

That the complaints of Jevons against Mill, however regrettable their tone, have some substantial ground, probably no one is concerned to deny. Still, as we read the deeply interesting passages in which Jevons intimates his own belief about the duties and destinies of man, we feel how true of himself is what he said of Cairnes, that his own opinions were much more valuable than his criticism of other people's opinions.

F. Y. EDGEWORTH.

RECENT BOTANICAL LITERATURE.

History of Botany (1530-1860). By Julius von Sachs. Translated by H. E. F. Garnsey. Revised by I. B. Balfour. (Oxford: Clarendon Press.) Prof. Sachs's Geschichte der Botanik, originally published in 1875, brought down the history only to 1860; and now, after the lapse of another period of fifteen years, we have an English translation of the German work. It suffers, therefore, under a double disadvantage. Firstly, as a translation of a continental work, we may expect to find the labours of English workers comparatively neglected; and secondly, a history of a science in which such enormous advances have been made in recent years as that of botany, and which is brought down only to about the date of the publication of the Origin of Species, reminds one, it must be confessed, somewhat of the play of Hamlet with the part of Hamlet left out. To illustrate the first defect, Prof. Lindley is referred to only as the author of a system of classification of which some hard things are said. No one would suppose, from the pages of this history, that he has done more by his Elements of Botany, School Botany, and other works, to popularise the study of botany in this country than any other English writer; while again, his Theory of Horticulture is not even mentioned, although occupying a position in botanical literature from which it has not been deposed during the half-century that has elapsed since its publication. With regard to the second point, a History of Botany published in 1890, in which the names of the two Hookers and of Mr. G. Bentham do not occur, and that of Mr. Berkeley only once, possesses an interest which is largely antiquarian. Prof. Sachs admits, moreover, in his preface to the English translation, that his views on the value and importance of earlier researches have undergone material modifications on some points since 1870. The translator and reviser might have been well entrusted with the task of bringing down the History of Botany, at least in its broad outlines, to more recent times; but, granting that this was not the object which the delegates of the Clarendon Press had in view, they have produced a very satisfactory piece of work. The History is divided into three books: a History of Morphology and Classification, a History of Vegetable Anatomy, and a History of Vegetable Physiology. Under each of these heads the researches of the earlier workers are described lucidly and in an interesting manner, though not always with a due sense of proportion; and a very good idea is to be obtained of the progress of scientific botany up to a period when the microscope had attained nothing like its present state of perfectness, and when the modern physiological school had not arisen.

Physiological Botany. By G. L. Goodale. (Macmillan.) Although several text-books on physiological botany have recently appeared in the English language, this work, by the accomplished professor of botany at Harvard University, will be a welcome addition to the library shelves of the botanical student. Covering considerably larger ground than Vines's Lectures on the Physiology of Plants, it includes also the outcome of more recent researches than Prof. Marshall Ward's translation of Sachs's lectures on the same subject. Indeed, as a compendium of the present state of our knowledge on the histology of flowering plants and on vegetable physiology it is invaluable. In one section only could we have wished for fuller and more detailed treatment—viz., in that relating to reproduction, where, as is also the case in both the works named above, the treatment is far less ample than in the sections devoted to the vegetative processes of life, the phenomena of reproduction in all the lower forms of life being relegated altogether to a foot-note. The wood-block illustrations are abundant and exceedingly good. To the eye of the English botanist, wearied with the iteration of the same figures in book after book, it is refreshing to meet with novelties in this way.

Introduction to Freshwater Algae. With an Enumeration of all the British Species. By M. C. Cooke. With 13 plates. (Kegan Paul & Co.) A handbook for collectors of freshwater algae was very much needed. The present volume—which is, to a large extent, compiled from the author's British Freshwater Algae, published in two volumes, with coloured plates—fills a distinct vacuum in botanical literature. Every known British species is described, and an illustration given of a single species in each genus. With these helps the young collector will, at all events, be able to determine without much difficulty to what genus any of his "finds" belong; the identification of the species will, in many cases, be much more difficult. More than half the volume is occupied by introductory chapters on the life-history and classification of algae, with instructions as to their collection and preservation. No one interested in this class of plants will be without it.

"ENCYKLOPÄDIE DER WISSENSCHAFTEN."—Schenk's Handbuch der Botanik. Lief. 64 and 65. (Breslau: Trewendt.) These two parts complete Prof. Zopf's Treatise on Fungi, and the fourth volume of the Handbook of Botany. The author's name is in itself a guarantee that the subject is treated in the most exhaustive manner, and fully abreast of all the most recent discoveries and investigations. An especially large portion is devoted to the Saccharomycetes, or yeast-fungi, the various species or forms being described in great detail and separately figured. The woodcut illustrations throughout this volume are exceedingly good and very numerous.

CORRESPONDENCE.

HEBREW INSCRIPTIONS OF THE PRE-EXILIC EPOCH.

Queen's College, Oxford: July 26, 1890.

A fixed starting-point in date can at last be assigned to the few pre-exilic Hebrew inscriptions which are at present known to us. Mr. Clark, of Jerusalem, possesses a seal which bears upon it the following inscription:

לְאִישָׁמָע
בֶּן־מֶמֶךְ

"Belonging to Elishama' the son of the king." Now this Elishama' is evidently the Jewish prince who is mentioned in Jer. xli. 1 as of "the seed royal" and grandfather of Ishmael, the contemporary of Zedekiah. He would, therefore, have flourished about B.C. 650, and the forms of the characters used in his inscription become a subject of epigraphic interest. Three of them are specially distinctive—Aleph, Mēm, and Kaph. Of these Aleph and Mēm have precisely the same forms as in the Siloam inscription. On the other hand, the Kaph is less archaic than in the Siloam text. The latter must consequently be somewhat older than the seal of Elishama'; and the general opinion is thus justified which refers the tunnel and inscription of Siloam to the reign of either Ahaz or Hezekiah.

Last spring Dr. Chaplin was fortunate enough to secure on the site of Samaria a small haematite weight, resembling a barrel or sling-bullet in shape, which has a beautifully executed inscription on either side. It reads:

רַב־עֲשָׂל
רַב־עֲצָנָא

Dr. Neubauer has suggested that this should be interpreted "a quarter of a quarter of a natsag." If this is right, the genitival ש will be used as in Canticles (iii. 7), and will have to be regarded as a characteristic of northern Israelitish Hebrew. The natsag will be the name of a weight connected with נָטַע, "to stand." Mr. Petrie informs me that the weight exactly corresponds with the sixteenth part of an Asiatic standard of 640 grains, which he believes to be Hittite. The forms of the letters on the weight resemble those of the Moabite stone or of the Aramaic dockets on Assyrian tablets of the eighth century B.C., not the southern Canaanite forms of the Siloam inscription. The latter, on the other hand, are reproduced in a short inscription (lê-Samek, "belonging to Samech") discovered by Mr. Petrie at Tel-el-Hesi, except that the Samech in this inscription is of a peculiar form, more archaic than any hitherto met with in Semitic epigraphy.

A. H. SAYCE.

SCIENCE NOTES.

THE August number of the Journal of the Anthropological Institute opens with an interesting article by Mr. T. W. Shore, of the Hartley Institution at Southampton, on "Characteristic Survivals of the Celts in Hampshire." The greater part of the number, however, is occupied by an elaborate paper sent from Victoria by Mr. A. W. Howitt, containing a full and lucid description of the manners and customs of the Dieri and kindred tribes in Central Australia. Their position is in the very heart of the continent, near Lake Eyre; and the student of anthropology will find much of interest in Mr. Howitt's account of their tribal organisation, systems of relationship, laws of marriage, and initiation ceremonies.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

THE Cambridge University Press has ready for issue a volume of papers on the Comparative Grammar of Hebrew, Syriac, and Arabic, by the late Prof. William Wright, consisting of the elementary lectures which that lamented scholar delivered to students for the Semitic languages tripos at various times since 1877. Besides special discussions of the pronouns, the noun, and the verb, the introductory chapters deal with such general questions as the original home of the Semites, the relation of the Semitic languages to the Indo-European and to Egyptian, and the oldest monuments of Semitic writing. The volume has been edited by Dr. Wright's successor in the chair of Arabic at Cambridge, Prof. W. Robertson Smith; and is further enriched with notes by the foremost living representative of Semitic philology, Prof. Th. Nöldeke, of Strassburg.

DR. PLEYTE, conservator of the imperial museum of antiquities at Leiden, is about to bring out a German adaptation, by Prof. Abel, of his treatise on the Origin of Hieroglyphic Writing, which first appeared in the Maandblad voor het onderwijs. The book will be published next month by Mr. W. Friedrich, court publisher at Leipsig.

PROF. ABEL is himself now printing in the Proceedings of the Freie Deutsche Hochstift at Frankfurt a lecture recently delivered at that institute on "The Relations between Egyptian and Indo-germanic Etymology," to appear in the course of August.

THE Revue Critique of July 28 contains a highly-favourable review, by Prof. Victor Henry, of Dr. Herbert Weir Smyth's elaborate paper on "The Vowel System of the Ionic Dialect," reprinted from the Transactions of the American Philological Association.

FINE ART.

SOME BOOKS ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

IN THE ACADEMY of February 1 (p. 87), a short notice appeared of the publication, under the auspices of the Maharaja of Jaypur, of a series of Portfolios of architectural details from Indian buildings in Rajputana. These beautiful and valuable drawings are prepared under the supervision of Col. S. S. Jacob, the Jaypur State engineer. The second Portfolio promised, containing "Pillars—Caps and Bases," on seventy-nine large atlas plates, has now been completed by Mr. W. Griggs, of Peckham. These drawings are produced in excellent photolithography, giving the every touch of the draftsman, and in point of execution are equal to any copperplate work of the kind executed during the first half of this century, showing, in an interesting way, the great aptitude of young Hindu draftsmen for this sort of work. Many of these large plates contain two, three, and even four drawings, all to large scales, and the examples are selected from a wide area. Ajmer inlaid doors were admirably illustrated in the Portfolio previously noticed. In this there is much less from Ajmer and Jaypur, and more from Udaypur, Dehli, and Agra; not that Ajmer and other places in the same State do not furnish abundant examples of beautiful pillars, but probably because Col. Jacob's men had brought him more from Dehli, &c. The variety presented, however, is great; and in such a collection it is difficult to select what most deserves mention in a brief note. One must be struck by the excellent designs of the many examples of balusters given in plates 5, 7, 8, 9, 18, 34, 36, 39, 41, 48, and 49, whether single or coupled. They are largely used as pillars, and the elegance of form and proportion given to them may well commend these examples to the study of all designers. In the earlier sheets we have some very characteristic examples of purely Hindu work, as for example on plates 2, 3, 4, and 10—those on the last two being of an early type; while in others we have manifest Hindu feeling, but under Musalman control as to ornament, as in the second examples on plates 4 and 11. In plates 16 and 17, from the Arhaidin ka Jhonprā at Ajmer, we have several good examples of how the early Musalman conquerors used the materials of the Hindu temples they destroyed in constructing their mosques, piling shaft over shaft to attain the height of roof they desired—three shafts in these—and cutting or adding as required; the first example here shows a piece of the neck of a column, put in below the upper shaft to make out the required height. The first nineteen plates are from Rajputana, and are as interesting as they are varied. Plates 20 to 33 are from Fathpur Sikri, and contain beautiful examples; but there is so much resemblance in the designs of many of these as to produce a feeling of sameness, and the last twenty plates from the Purana Kila at Dehli give a like impression. In the case of the first group this might have been avoided by giving fewer entire examples of such as are alike except in ornamentation, and presenting the details of the others on a larger scale. This, however, if at all a fault, is on the right side; better a little in excess than in defect. Plates 34 to 59 are varied and admirable, including some beautiful bases on plates 51, 52, &c. There is no accompanying letterpress as yet. This is most desirable in several ways; and no doubt it will be supplied with the next Portfolio, now in preparation, containing thirty-four plates of details of Copings, which is to form the first of the series. Everyone, whether familiar with India personally or not, wishes to know something of the character and date of the buildings from which these artistic details have been taken; more at least than is conveyed in the brief titles on the plates. These titles, by-the-by, are apparently the handiwork of the draftsmen, and are hardly satisfactory, being spelt in various ways. Thus we have "Bakhtawar Singh's Cenotaph at Alwar" on plate 13, while on plate 34, to another pillar from the same monument, we find "Baktawar" and "Uwar"; "Suraj Pole Bowri, Udaipur" is meant for Suraj-pol (Sun-gate) Bāorā, at Udaypur—the word for "gate" being pronounced more like the English poll than pole; "Bindra Bun" (pl. 36) is made into two, as if we should write "Liver Pool"; "Sawan Badhu" (pl. 40) is for Sāwan-Bhādon (August); "Summum Burj" (pl. 39) must be for Musamman Burj in the Lal Kila at Dehli; "Khan-Khana" (pl. 47, 56, 58) is intended for Khan Khanan's tomb; and Queen Jodhābāi is made into a male "Jodha Bhai." These are slight slips, which doubtless will all be put right in the letterpress, and do not detract from the artistic merits of this otherwise admirable collection of architectural details.

Leonardo da Vinci e le Alpi. By G. Uzielli (Italian Alpine Club). This pamphlet, apparently consisting of an article from the Bollettino del CAI printed separately, essays to prove that Leonardo da Vinci ascended one of the peaks of Monte Rosa. There is a well-known passage in one of his writings in which he refers to observations made when he went up Monboso, a snow mountain, whence he says flow the four great rivers of Europe. Mr. D. W. Freshfield suggested that by Monboso Monte Viso was intended (Alpine Journal, XII. 202). It now appears, however, that the name properly belongs, and in the Val Sesia is still applied, to Monte Rosa. Monboso was Latinised into Mons Boscus, which was improved into Mons Silvius, whence Monte Silvio, a name which, after floating about the Monte Rosa chain, eventually settled down upon the Matterhorn, and was Frenched into Mont Cervin. The other ancient name of the Monte Rosa group was simply der Gletscher, which, being translated into the patois of the other side of the range, became Monte della Roiza, and was corrupted so far back as 1567 into Mons Rosae. It is clear from Leonardo's words that he ascended as far as some snow-field on Monboso. His natural line of approach would be by the Val Sesia to Alagna and then up to the Col d'Ollon, whence the glaciers are easily gained. It may be mentioned that a rock on the ridge above the Col d'Ollon, dividing the Embours from the Garstelet glacier, is inscribed ATN, 1615.

Archäologisch-Epigraphische Mittheilungen aus Oesterreich-Ungarn, xiii. 2. The last number of this periodical contains several good articles. Far the best is one by Prof. A. V. Domaszewski on the administrative divisions of Illyricum. Prof. Domaszewski has for some time been engaged in collecting material for the supplement to the third volume of the Corpus Inscriptionum Latinarum, and he here publishes in advance some of the conclusions to which his researches have led him. It appears that the boundaries of Dalmatia, Moesia, and Dacia, as given in our maps, are wrong. Ptolemy was right after all; and Dalmatia extended much further east than is usually allowed, including all western Serbia and stretching almost to Belgrade itself. Dacia, on the other hand, is made smaller. Previous mapmakers had included in it a part of the Banat—Mehadia and its vicinity—and also the whole of Roumania. Prof. Domaszewski shows that Mehadia belonged to the administration of Moesia, and that the eastern frontier of Dacia rested on the river Alt, the rest of Wallachia, so far as it was Roman, being governed from the south bank of the Danube. This does not quite agree with Ptolemy, and it is suggested that the province of Dacia was made smaller by Hadrian. The same theory, we may observe, was put forward by Mr. Haverfield in the English Historical Review three years ago (1887, p. 734-736), though only as a guess. The whole article is a most brilliant piece of epigraphic research, and a striking instance of the value of inscriptions. The incidental rehabilitation of Ptolemy is of interest to students of Roman history, as giving a fresh proof that this geographer was not really so hopelessly incapable. It is pleasant also to find a German scholar recognising the merits of Mr. Arthur Evans.

Repertorium für Kunstwissenschaft. XIII. This volume carries on the traditions of thoroughness in historical criticism for which the Repertorium has earned so conspicuous a name. It contains important articles by Dr. Thode on thirteenth-century Italian art; by Max Lehrs on early engravings; by Clemen on Carolingian art; and by Strzygowski on a fourteenth-century MS. of the Byzantine school. There are the usual full, if dull, reviews of current art-books of a solid character; and the customary lists of articles and publications still show the usual gaps in their information from England.

It is not always—we might say, it is not often—that we find in L'Art the record of research. There have been in the volume recently concluded many admirable papers on current exhibitions and music, and the usual number of effective illustrations; but little that demanded any special note. We have the more pleasure in calling attention to an interesting paper by the Abbé Requin (contained in No. 628 for July 16), which reveals the true author of the remarkable picture in the Museum at Villeneuve, which was long ascribed to King René, of whom the Abbé well remarks that he is as unfortunate as an artist as he was as a prince. In his life he lost his kingdoms one by one, and now a pitiless criticism robs him of all his pictures. To Van Eyck also has this elaborate composition been ascribed, despite its date of 1453-4. But now the contract for its execution has come to light, which proves beyond any doubt that the artist was a Frenchman—one Enguerrand Charonton—and that it was painted for the church of the Chartreuse at Villeneuve on the commission of Messire Jean de Montagnac. It further appears that for this large and elaborate composition of the Virgin crowned by the Trinity, with its numerous figures of saints, angels, patriarchs, and devils, he was to receive the enormous sum of one hundred and twenty florins, at twenty-four sous to the florin.

THE DANSAERT REMBRANDT.

To the small but various and choice collection of works of art now on view at the Burlington Fine Arts Club have been added, for a few days, two of the recent acquisitions for the National Gallery of Ireland. One of these is the Van Harp, one of those choice examples of the less known artists of Holland which, under the guidance of the present director, are becoming a feature of the collection at Dublin. The other is one of the most important pictures yet purchased by Mr. Doyle—a very fine and perfectly preserved portrait by Rembrandt. The one was bought at a public auction, the other annexed by private treaty; and both are examples of that dexterous use of slender supplies by which Mr. Doyle has, in a few years, turned the National Gallery of Ireland into one of the most interesting of the minor public collections in Europe. To prefer a fine example of a lesser to a poor one of a greater artist—this is one of Mr. Doyle's secrets, of which the Van Harp is an illustration; to watch for and seize the rare opportunity of acquiring the works of the greater men at moderate prices, this is another—which is exemplified by the Dansaert Rembrandt.

Though new to England, this splendid portrait is not one of the "recently discovered" Rembrandts. Its existence has been known to connoisseurs since the year 1882, when it was lent to a collection exhibited for charitable purposes at Brussels. Its then possessor was M. Antoine Dansaert, in whose family it had remained since it was painted. Cut into an oval, and put into a French frame of the style of Louis XIV. or XV., the name of its painter was not suspected by the present generation of the Dansaerts. To them it was only a "family portrait," no more; supposed to represent one Louis Van der Linden, whose name appears on a branch of their family tree, where it is recorded that he was born in some unknown year of the seventeenth century. It had, however, only to be exhibited to declare its master's hand. Dr. Bredius, in an account of the exhibition, announced it as a Rembrandt; and the ascription has since been confirmed by other authorities, including Dr. Bode. But in truth there was never a picture which less needed a conference of experts to determine its author; and Mr. Doyle, who saw it in 1882 in the owner's house, then requested to have the refusal of it, in case it should ever be sold. At that time the family had no thought of parting with it; but they remembered his wish, and made a communication to him this year, which resulted in his purchasing it for £880, a sum much under that which might easily have been obtained for it.

The portrait is a half-length of a youth whose downy moustache is just long enough to be slightly twisted near the corners. The complexion is rich and ruddy, glowing with health; the features bold and fleshy, but redeemed from heaviness by the laughter that lurks in the shadows of the full red lips and round deep-set eyes. He wears a black, round-topped hat, with broad brim upturned and peaked in front. His long auburn hair glows in rounded masses on each side of his face, and descends over his forehead almost to his eyebrows. His neck and shoulders are covered by a large collar of muslin, deeply fringed with heavy point lace. His body coat is of black, quilted, and is flecked down the centre with groups of little white bugle-like tags, which carry off the white mass of the collar. Considered only for its subject, the picture is of singular interest in relation to the master's work. It was seldom that he chose to infuse such gaiety and freshness into a youthful face. A certain depth and strength of character is visible enough, but yet it is evident that the possessor of this face is "game for anything."

The painting is throughout superb, exhibiting complete mastery of paint and pencil, with, in their use, a rare combination of firmness and freedom, of swiftness and certainty. Some of the passages in the flesh-painting are too subtle to have been produced except by the most dexterous fusion of wet tints. The colour is clear, rich, and luminous, the shadows warm and transparent, the impasto thick but little loaded and of a "fat" consistency.

The picture has no date or signature. It is more than probable that it was painted on a square panel, and has been cut into an oval to suit that fashionable French frame of the eighteenth century from which it has been rescued by Mr. Doyle. The straight line of the bevelling at top and bottom of the panel strongly support this view; and with the corners the signature and also the date may have disappeared. The latter is the more important of the two. As to this, there is room—though not very much room—for doubt. Everything points to an early date; not quite so early, perhaps, as the, in some respects, very similar portrait of a young man in the Peel collection which is dated 1635, but somewhere about that time, and before his own portrait of 1640. Both these pictures are in the National Gallery (Nos. 850 and 672).

COSMO MONKHOUSE.

CORRESPONDENCE.

BRITISH INSCRIPTIONS OF THE EMPEROR VICTORINUS.

Oxford: July 26, 1890.

Mr. Whitley Stokes, in his "Notes from Rennes," in the ACADEMY of July 26, 1890, mentions a stone inscribed in Roman capital letters of the third century of the Christian era in honour of the Emperor Piavvonius Victorinus, found last April in digging the foundation of the "Bazaar Parisien." This emperor was one of the thirty tyrants who was supposed to have been slain A.D. 268, who had reigned in Gaul, "and probably also in Britain," for somewhat more than a year; and it is added that the emperor's Gentile name is spelt with only one "v" on a Lincoln milestone (Eph. Epigr., vii., No. 1097).

It is worthy of notice that there is also another inscription to the same emperor upon a military stone discovered by the late Mr. Grant Francis in Glamorganshire near Pyle, and deposited by him in the museum at the Royal Institution at Swansea, of which I published a drawing made from the rubbing by the discoverer in my Lapidarium Walliae, p. 41, pl. 27, f. 1. Here the inscription reads

IMP.
M.C.PIA
VONIO
VICTOR.
INO. AVG.

Another stone, which I found in a ditch at Seethrog, also records the name of Victorinus with another name no longer legible—Lap. Wall., pl. 32, f. 7.

I. O. WESTWOOD.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

THE Rev. Greville J. Chester is at present staying at Oxford, where he is engaged in cataloguing the fine collection of Hittite and Phoenician seals in the Ashmolean Museum.

THE Amorite, Phoenician, and Jewish pottery, casts of sculpture, &c., found by Mr. Flinders Petrie in the course of his recent excavation for the Palestine Exploration Fund on the site of Lachish, will be publicly exhibited with his Egyptian collections of this year at 6, Oxford Mansions, near Oxford Circus, from September 15 to October 11.

THE jury of the second annual art exhibition at Munich has just issued its awards. Of the British artists exhibiting Mr. James Guthrie, of Glasgow, receives a first medal for painting, and Mr. John Reid, Mr. Walton, also of Glasgow, and Mr. Lavery Crawhall, jun., second medals. Mr. Onslow Ford obtains a second medal for sculpture, while Mr. Waterhouse is awarded a first medal, and Mr. Anderson, of Edinburgh, a second, for architecture. Among the etchers, Mr. Axel Haig, Mr. Walker, Mr. Macbeth, and Mr. Wyllie receive second medals. M. Neuhuys, the Dutch painter, obtains a first medal; and M. Van Aken, of Antwerp, M. Struys, of Mechlin, M. de Bock, of the Hague, and M. Baertsoen, of Ghent, second medals for painting. M. Van der Stapper, the sculptor of Brussels, was awarded a first medal for his art.

THE collection of drawings and designs by Thomas Stothard, which Mr. Felix Joseph recently presented to the Castle Museum at Nottingham, are to be arranged in a special gallery, together with the works of other artists of the English school given by the same munificent donor. The Nottingham Museum has also been enriched lately by a gift of Roman antiquities from Lord Saville, formerly ambassador at the Italian court.

MESSRS. G. W. BACON & Co. have nearly ready "The Excelsior Graduated Drawing Charts," being a series of five sets of charts, for all the standards, designed by Messrs. Steeley & Trotman, of Birmingham.

THE following awards were made on Saturday last at the Crystal Palace school of art, the judges being Messrs. Edwin Long and Thomas Woolner:—The scholarship in art to Miss Edith Struben, a student from South Africa; for landscape and architectural painting, a silver medal to Miss A. M. Scrase; for oil painting, a silver medal to Lady Hume; for drawing from the life, a silver medal to Miss Fanny Way.

THE premier grand prix de Rome has been awarded to M. Devambez, a son of the engraver.

M. PAUL-FRANÇOIS FOUCART, director of the French School at Athens, has been raised to the rank of officer, and M. Siegfried Bing, editor of l'Art Japonais, has been appointed chevalier in the legion of honour.

WE quote from the Lancing College Magazine the following note on Roman remains in the neighbourhood:

"These are few and unimportant. The nearest was (it is now gone) a building 16 feet square, found in 1828 near Lancing Ring, with British and Roman pottery and coins—the latter dating down to 250 A.D. A curious trench running from the Ring westwards past Steepdown seems not to be Roman. In Worthing a few graves have been found, and others with traces of a dwelling-house in the neighbourhood of Portslade Railway Station. Dwelling houses have also been—or alleged to have been—found at Wiston, Blatchington, Duncton, and at Springfield Road in Preston. Besides these remains, there are only a few coins—one dug up in Mr. Allum's cricket ground at Brighton—and some scattered graves. The Sussex antiquaries are fond of asserting that a Roman road ran from Chichester past Lancing or Bramber to Pevensey, and that a Roman fort called Portus Adurni lay somewhere in the Adur Valley. As a matter of fact, there is no real evidence for such a road or fort. The river name 'Adur' seems to have been invented by the poet Drayton in Elizabeth's reign, and not to be an ancient name at all."

THE STAGE.

"EMINENT ACTORS." — William Charles Macready. By William Archer. (Kegan Paul & Co.)

THIS is the first of what is intended to be a short series of small authoritative books on "Eminent Actors," and no doubt the public interest in the theatre justifies the experiment from one point of view. The fascination of the footlights—not only for the foolish, but for the genuinely imaginative—has resulted in the pouring out, upon the subject of the drama and its professors, of books which are neither on the one hand literature, nor on the other hand research. In England, of late years, a few of the contributions to one's theatrical library have been eminently serviceable; but, on the whole, the chaff has exceeded the wheat. It is time, undoubtedly, that we had such a series of volumes as the present proposes to be. The work will have utility, and ought to be acceptable. Yet it is fitting that I should point out the peculiar difficulty under which it has to be accomplished, if, in the case of the biography of each actor, it aims, as it should aim, to be something more than the record of historical fact and outward career. If it does not deal in aesthetic criticism, there can be little in it that can claim to be literature; for research is but the preparation of the writer's material, and when the research is all finished, the worker is but at the very beginning of his labour of art. Now the difficulty in aesthetic criticism of an actor of a bygone generation is that the critic can never have had the opportunity of witnessing the performance of which it is his business to convey some vivid impression; and, if I may be allowed a word of autobiographical detail, this fact formed one of the reasons which compelled me to decline the honour of contributing, as it was once announced that I should contribute, to the series whose first number gives the text for this theme. Your capacity to judge of any work of literature may be profoundly unsatisfactory and miserably incomplete, but at least the literature is visibly before you—you can utter, therefore, a personal opinion, and not a valueless, since academic, echo. Your proficiency in judging some work of painting may perhaps be nearly as questionable as if you were an elderly practising painter, with no sympathy for art beyond the range of your own studio, or as if you were an infallible though unrecognised youth, fresh from Jullien's atelier, and wholly unburdened with historical knowledge or with any experience of life; but still, the picture is before your eyes, and what it really is has not to come to you through the traditions of the past, through the opinions of another. The biographer of Betterton and Kean and Garrick, and the present biographer of Macready, has no such reasonable privilege—no such desirable and, as I think, necessary foundation for his own superstructure. The men have departed; and you cannot, by any effort of imagination, or by any lavishness of labour in research, summon up for judgment the artistic achievements by which in the main they were interesting. It would be affectation to deny that this circumstance, which constitutes an incalculable disadvantage, almost a grave disability, has not told upon the quality of the volume which is before us. Mr. Archer has done much to reconstitute for us out of the past a Macready whom we shall really know. And—thanks in part to his own diaries and to the testimony of contemporaries—we do know something of the man. We know—thanks to the investigations of Mr. Archer—exactly where he was in June, 1826, and how often he played Richard in, say, November, 1833; but for what his Richard was, and what his Evelyn, and what his Hamlet, and what his Werner—well, for all that we must needs go to other people's impressions formed and recorded at the time, which Mr. Archer has carefully rescued, disinterred, and diligently reprinted.

All this means that the circumstances of the case have compelled this latest and most painstaking writer on Macready to be historian rather than aesthetic critic. And Mr. Archer's thoroughness and fairness of mind come out exceedingly well when it is as historian that he is chiefly engaged. One may very likely be much more absolutely contented with him when he is explaining, with judicial mind, the difficulties of Macready's management than when he is comparing "Judah" with "The Middleman"—one may be happier as a listener when the story of the Edwin Forrest riots is unravelled and narrated by him in a passage of enviable lucidity and comprehensiveness of statement than when he utters a verdict on the latest aspirant to the part of sentimental heroine, or recommends us (with a persistence of reverent affection which, as a moral quality, commands my esteem) to seek enlightenment in the more than suburban inspiration of Ibsen, in the plays which set forth the dull and démodé, though sometimes blameless, doctrines of a writer who to the clear-sighted and unprejudiced vision of one of his admirers seemed "more modern than Browning." Without going much into detail, it may be said that Mr. Archer's best qualities as student, chronicler, and judge are seen to extremest advantage in this generally readable volume, which his frankness and care have really raised above the level of the circulating library. He has given us a book of reference, terse and complete—complete, that is to say, so far as completeness was possible with the means at his disposal and at the period at which his work has been executed.

In just the concluding lines of a notice in which I feel myself bound to be brief, it will be unadvisable to express even a definite opinion—still less a certain conclusion — as to the merits of Macready as an artist. Théophile Gautier—with whom was the instinct of art criticism—saw great virtue in him. And so did half of the most eminent of Macready's fellow countrymen, during thirty years. Charlotte Brontë, in a passage that Mr. Archer does not quote, said that there could be "nothing more false and artificial, nothing less genuinely impressive, than his style." But was this much more than the self-satisfied violence of a certain type of Yorkshire-woman, unprovided with the material necessary for judgment? It would be, I may say, a natural tendency of enthusiastic admirers of the art he professed, to somewhat underrate the efforts of an actor who found in the practice of his art so little keen and permanent satisfaction as Macready did. Charlotte Brontë did not know this revealing and unfortunate circumstance, but we who can read Macready's diaries and letters must know it now. But here, in suggesting the restlessness and disappointment of this particular actor—who did infinite service to the stage, yet was a profound egotist with an actor-manager's worst faults—we are trenching upon the consideration of another question: What was Macready as a man? Certainly he was none the worse for being a good sound man of business, who, amid a thousand artistic distractions, kept carefully in view the very substantial cottage at Sherborne to which long before old age came upon him he was minded to retire. He was well-meaning, if severe, to his children; disagreeable to not a few of his brother professionals, yet rarely actually unfair to them. He was exacting, petulant, vain, and as morose almost, at times, as Thomas Carlyle. Yet so penetrating a genius as Dickens wrote of him and to him in terms of deep affection; and, though even people of genius like the likeable rather than the faultless, it is absolutely impossible that these terms of affection can have been entirely undeserved. He was a marvellously mixed character—a Jekyll who was wont to vanish without notice, leaving rampant a Mr. Hyde of not quite the worst type, but of a disagreeable one. A volume might be written about his variability, yet a sentence of Robert Browning enables us to hear the conclusion of the whole matter:—

"I found Macready as I left him—and, happily, after a long interval, resumed him, so to speak—one of the most admirable and, indeed, fascinating characters I have ever known; somewhat too sensitive for his own happiness, and much too impulsive for invariable consistency with his nobler moods."

FREDERICK WEDMORE.

MUSIC.

MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.

Musical Groundwork. By Frederick J. Crowest. (Frederick Warne.)

THIS little work professes to be a manual of musical form and history, and the reader is requested to look upon it as "a sort of stepping-stone to larger musical treatises and histories." One must not, therefore, complain if the information given on any particular subject is not very full. But though everything is on a small scale, proper proportion ought to be preserved.

This is not the case in the "harmony" section, something might have been omitted under "ancient and early harmony" so as to have made the description of chords less meagre. Here the broad rule is given that "all discords, save the chord of the dominant seventh, must be prepared and resolved." It would have been better to say broadly that many discords need not be prepared. In his account of the German composers, the author gives eighteen lines to Haydn, eighteen to Mozart, sixteen to Spohr, but only fourteen to Beethoven. Here, too, no idea is given of the relative positions which these composers held. It is vague to say that Mozart was a "heaven-born genius who, whether in the composition of an opera, a symphony, or a requiem, rose to the summit of excellence." As a matter of fact, Mozart composed only one requiem and left that unfinished. But having said so much for Mozart, the author finds it difficult to describe Beethoven. He tells us that he "rose to be the brightest orb in the musical firmament." Mozart, as we have seen, was "heaven-born"; Beethoven as a symphonist, says Mr. Crowest, "towers above all composers." But Mozart reached the "summit of excellence." All this is extravagant and unprofitable verbiage.

But we have another and graver charge to bring against the work. It is inaccurate in its statements. Speaking of ancient tragedy, we are told (p. 21) that "the acts of these plays were usually five in number, as in the writings of Horace, Terence, and Seneca"! So much for tragedy. Let us now turn to matters purely musical and give a few examples. On p. 59

the Mordent is confused with the Pralltriller. Haydn's twelve London symphonies are not "a set," but two sets of six each. Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise" is not an oratorio. Wagner did not set himself the mission of "regenerating opera." In the birth and death dates our author apparently confuses Franco, of Cologne, with Franco, of Liège. Under the heading "Principal Events" we find the erroneous statement, "Bach's Well tempered Clavecin written in 1725"; and it is incorrect as well as absurd to write "Schubert's songs composed 1815."

There are some other curious things in the book. A three-part canon is given on p. 142, and we are told that King Henry VIII. used to sing it. On p. 167 we read "the bassoon frequently figures in Beethoven's symphonies, notably in the Finale of the Choral Symphony"; and not a word about the contrabass (although he mentions this instrument) being used in the same number of that work. On p. 198 we learn that "Haydn framed the symphony, and settled its form for all time." Again, on the same page we are told "Schubert approached Beethoven, his nine symphonies being masterpieces of orchestral power and capacity. Mendelssohn and Schumann contributed largely to the same repertoire." Under "Principal Events" we read "Fingering for the pianoforte settled 1753"; and, again, "The Musical Standard established 1852."

So we might go on. But enough has been said to show that Mr. Crowest's manual, although it contains much information, is scarcely a safe "stepping-stone."

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

Just published, crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

ETYMA LATINA: AN ETYMOLOGICAL LEXICON of CLASSICAL LATIN.

By EDWARD ROSS WHARTON, M.A.,

Fellow and Lecturer of Jesus College, Oxford; Author of "Etyma Græca."

LONDON: PERCIVAL & CO., KING STREET, COVENT GARDEN.

At all Libraries, crown 8vo, cloth, 2 vols., price 12s.

IN THE SUNLIGHT.

By ANGELICA M. SELBY, Author of "On Duty."

"'In the Sunlight' is decidedly a good novel—a story which, though it possesses an interesting and well-constructed plot, is not a mere story, but a clever study of life and character."

Manchester Examiner.

FREDERICK WARNE & CO., BEDFORD STREET, STRAND.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, SUBSCRIPTIONS from ONE GUINEA per Annum.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

Books can be exchanged at the residences of Subscribers in London, by the Library Messengers.
SUBSCRIPTIONS from TWO GUINEAS per Annum.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from TWO GUINEAS per Annum.

A Large Number of Copies of the Best and most Popular Books of the Season are now in Circulation at MUDIE'S LIBRARY.

All Works of General Interest are freely added immediately on publication.

Library Catalogue for 1890, 1s. 6d. Prospectuses and Clearance List of Books on Sale, postage free.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY (Limited), 30 to 34, New Oxford Street.

BRANCH OFFICES: 241, BROMPTON ROAD, and 2, KING STREET, CHEAPSIDE.

SPENCER BLACKETT'S NEW BOOKS.

NEW STORY BY L. B. WALFORD.

Now ready, at all Booksellers and Bookstalls, paper cover, 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d.

THE HAVOC of a SMILE. By L. B. Walford, Author of "Mr. Smith," "Baby's Grandmother," "Cousins," "A Sage of Sixteen," &c.

NEW NOVEL BY MRS. OLIPHANT.

At all Booksellers and Libraries, cloth, 2s. 6d.

THE MYSTERY of MRS. BLENCARROW. By Mrs. OLIPHANT, Author of "Harry Joscelyn," "The Son of his Father," &c."The story has the characteristic marks of its author's great talent."—Scotsman.

NEW NOVEL BY W. E. NORRIS.

At all Booksellers and Libraries, cloth, 3s. 6d., with Frontispiece.

THE BAFFLED CONSPIRATORS. By W. E. Norris,
Author of "Misadventure," "Major and Minor," "My Friend Jim," &c."Thoroughly picturesque and sparkling."—Athenaeum.

LONDON: SPENCER BLACKETT, 35, ST. BRIDE STREET, E.C.

W. H. SMITH & SON'S
SUBSCRIPTION LIBRARY,
186, STRAND, LONDON, and at the Railway Bookstalls.

1.—This Library is established in connexion with Messrs. W. H. SMITH & Son's numerous Railway Bookstalls; it embraces all the most important Works of History, Biography, Travel, Fiction, Poetry, Science, and Theology, as well as the leading Magazines and Reviews, and gives greater advantages to Subscribers than any other existing Library, from the fact that there are 500 Bookstalls in England and Wales, and to any of these Depots a Subscriber may be transferred free of charge.

2.—Subscribers can only change their Books at the Depot where their names are registered, but they may transfer the place of exchange by giving notice to the Clerk in charge of the Depot at which they obtain their Books. Of the current periodicals, one only at a time is allowed to a Subscription under Five Guineas, and Subscriptions will not be accepted for the supply of Magazines and Reviews only.

3.—The Books are delivered at the Bookstalls, carriage free. A Subscriber may exchange once a day; the Clerk in charge will obtain from London any Work in the Library which a Subscriber may desire to have. NOVELS exchanged only in unbroken and complete Sets.

4.—London Subscribers transferring their Subscriptions to a Country Depot will be entitled only to the number of volumes which the Country terms assign to the amount they subscribe; similarly, Country Subscriptions transferred to Town become subject to the London regulations.

5.—Subscriptions may commence at any date, and are payable in advance at any of the Railway Bookstalls.

6.—Messrs. W. H. SMITH & Son beg to impress upon their Library Subscribers the fact that much disappointment and inconvenience would be avoided if they would, in all cases, give to the Clerk in charge a list comprising at least twice as many titles of works as they wish to exchange.

I.—FOR SUBSCRIBERS OBTAINING THEIR BOOKS FROM A LONDON TERMINUS.

	6 Months	12 Months
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
For One Volume at a time ...	0 12 0	1 1 0
(Novels in more than One Volume are not available for this class of Subscription.)
For Two Volumes ...	0 17 6	1 11 6
(Novels in more than Two Volumes are not available for this class of Subscription.)
For Four " ...	1 3 0	2 2 0
For Eight " ...	1 15 0	3 3 0
For Fifteen " ...	3 0 0	5 5 0

II.—FOR SUBSCRIBERS OBTAINING THEIR BOOKS FROM A COUNTRY BOOKSTALL—

	6 Months	12 Months
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
For One Volume at a time ...	0 12 0	1 1 0
(Novels in more than One Volume are not available for this class of Subscription.)
For Two Volumes ...	0 17 6	1 11 6
(Novels in more than Two Volumes are not available for this class of Subscription.)
For Three " ...	1 3 0	2 2 0
For Four " ...	1 8 0	2 10 0
For Six " ...	1 15 0	3 3 0
For Twelve " ...	3 0 0	5 5 0

A Catalogue of Surplus and New Books, offered at greatly reduced prices, is published Monthly, and can be had upon application at the Bookstalls. Also a Catalogue of Books in elegant bindings, for Gentlemen's Libraries.

THE NINETEENTH CENTURY.

AUGUST.—Price 2s. 6d.

THE VALUE of AFRICA: a Reply to Sir John Pope Hennessy. By H. H. JOHNSTON (H.B.M. Consul, Mozambique).
MR. CECIL RHODES as PREMIER. By EDWARD DICKEY.
A VOICE from a HAREM. By ADALST.
THE LOYALTY of the COLONIES. By R. H. BAKWELL, Auckland, New Zealand.
CHARLES the FIRST as a PICTURE COLLECTOR. By HENRY G. HEWLETT.
ON the RIM of the DESERT. By E. N. BUXTON.
NOTICEABLE BOOKS—
1. By W. E. H. LECKY. 2. By the Rev. Dr. JESSOP.
3. By R. E. PROTHERO. 4. By W. S. LULLY.
5. By Mrs. FRAZER LIND.
THE POWER of SUGGESTION. By C. THEODORE EWART, M.D.
THE SOLDIER'S BARRACK ROOM. By A. B. McHARDY, Lieut.-Col. R.E. Retired.
THE HEBREW HELL. By JAMES MEW.
DOMESTIC SERVICE. By Mrs. FRANCIS DARWIN.
PRIMITIVE NATURAL HISTORY. By GEO. J. ROMANES.
THE AMERICAN SILVER BUBBLE. By ROBERT GIFFEN.
London: KEOGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRUBNER, & Co., Limited.

BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE,

No. 898.—AUGUST, 1890.—2s. 6d.

CONTENTS:—10TH NOVEMBER, 1882: AN EPISODE IN THE LAND LEAGUE MOVEMENT.—HELIOGOLAND—THE ISLAND OF GREEN, RED, AND WHITE.—CRIME IN FICTION.—GUEUTCH, by Francis Scudamore.—AGRICULTURAL EDUCATION, by C. M. Aikman.—THE VALE OF IDAR: A SERMON IN STONES, by Sophie Weissie. Conclusion.—KENNETH MACRAE, by James Graham.—THE BAMBOO, by P. HORDERN.—THE NEW-FOUND WORLD AND ITS HERO.—A SECRET MISSION, chaps. xi.-xv.—BIMETALLISM, by Herbert C. Gibbs.—THE SESSION AND THE MINISTRY.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD &amp; SONS, EDINBURGH AND LONDON.

BLACKWOOD'S NEW SERIAL.

This Day. PART IX. PRICE ONE SHILLING.

TRAVEL, ADVENTURE, and SPORT.

From "BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE."

NO. IX. CONTAINS:—THE DESTRUCTION OF SZKODIN, by LANDOR B. CROSO.—SIX WEEKS IN A TOWER.—REMINISCENCES of a ROSS-SHIRE FOREST, by Lieut.-Colonel Henry Smith.—AN ADVENTURE DURING THE GREEK REVOLUTION, by George Finlay.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD &amp; SONS, EDINBURGH AND LONDON.

THE NATIONAL REVIEW.

AUGUST.—2s. 6d.

OUR RIGHTS and PROSPECTS in AFRICA. By Commander V. LOVETT-CAMERON, R.N.
COUNT MATTEI'S SYSTEM. By Her Excellency Lady PAGET.
POLITICAL and SOCIAL LIFE in HOLLAND. By S. T.
THE PUNISHMENT of GENIUS. By WILLIAM WATSON.
TRIUMPHANT DEMOCRACY in the SEVENTEENTH CENTURY. By F. LACOE.
THE STAGE in SHAKESPEARE'S DAY. By WILLIAM POEL.
"SNAKE JIM HOLLUNDER." By ARTHUR GAYE.
WHAT IS EDUCATION? By FREDERIC PINCOFF.
THE LAST SINGERS of BUKHARA. By CHAS. J. PICKERING.
A WESTERN TROUT-STREAM. By C. PARKINSON.
A CASE for the TITHE-OWNER. By the Rev. W. GILDEA.
POLITICS at HOME and ABROAD.
CORRESPONDENCE.

London: W. H. ALLEN &amp; Co., 13, Waterloo Place.

Monthly, price Half-a-Crown.

THE CONTEMPORARY REVIEW.

CONTENTS for AUGUST.

HOW BRITISH COLONIES got RESPONSIBLE GOVERNMENT. II. By Sir C. GAVAN DUFFY, K.C.M.G.
"CHRIST among the DOCTORS." With Illustration. By W. HOLMAN HUNT.
THE NATIONAL HOME READING UNION and its PROSPECTS. By J. CHURTON COLLINS.
THE LIMITS of RITUAL in the CHURCH of ENGLAND. By the Rev. R. E. BARTLEY.
THE SHETLAND ISLES in the BIRDS-NESTING SEASON. By T. DIGNY PIGOTT, C.B.
WOMEN and the UNIVERSITIES. By J. G. FITCH.
ILLUSTRATED JOURNALISM. By CARMICHAEL THOMAS.
THE PREHISTORIC RACES of ITALY. By Canon ISAAC TAYLOR.
THE NIHILISMS and SOCIALISMS of the WORLD. By J. PAGE HOPPS.
THE ORGANISATION of UNSKILLED LABOUR. By R. SPENCE WATSON, LL.D.
A DEFENCE of UNIVERSITY LECTURES. By Prof. WILLIAM KNIGHT, LL.D.
BRITAIN "FIN de SIECLE." By FREDERICK GREENWOOD.
LONDON: KEOGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRUBNER, & Co., Limited, 15 and 16, Tavistock Street, Covent Garden.

GREAT TOWER for LONDON.—JUST PUBLISHED, an illustrated description of the 68 Competitive Designs for the Great Tower for London. The engravings are to a uniform scale of 300 feet to one inch. Price 6d. By post, 8d. Sold at "INDUSTRIALS" Office, 388, Strand, London, W.C., by the leading Booksellers, and all Railway Bookstalls.

THEATRES.

ADELPHI THEATRE.

Sole Proprietors and Managers, A. &amp; S. GATTI.

NOTICE.—This Theatre will RE-OPEN on AUGUST 2nd with a new and original Drama by GEO. R. SIMS and ROBERT BUCHANAN, entitled THE ENGLISH ROSE.

AVENUE THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 9, DR. BILL.
Messrs. George Alexander, Benjamin Webster, G. Capel, H. Grattan, and Albert Chevalier; Mesdames Elizabeth Robins, Carlotta Leclercq, Leston, Marie Linden, Laura Graves, Edith Kenward, Lillie Young, and Fanny Brough.
Preceded, at 8.30, by MISS CINDERELLA.

COMEDY THEATRE.

Manager, Mr. CHAS. H. HAWTREY.

Every Evening, at 8, NERVES.
Messrs. H. Kemble, Edward Righton, and Charles Hawtre; Mesdames Maud Millett, Sophie Larkin, Lydia Cowell, Ethel Matthews, and Lottie Venne.
Preceded, at 8.15, by A BAD PENNY.

COURT THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 8, THE CABINET MINISTER.
Messrs. Arthur Cecil, Weedon Groosmith, Herbert Waring, Brandon Thomas, Allen Ayresworth, Saunders, Farren, and Clulow; Mesdames Le Thière, Rosina Filippi, Tanner, Eva Moore, Caldwell, Isabel Eliassen, Harrington, Edmund Phelps, and John Wood.

CRITERION THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. CHARLES WYNDHAM.

This Evening, at 9.20, SOWING AND REAPING.
Preceded, at 8.30, by DELICATE GROUND.
At 8, Comedietta, THE WALL OF CHINA.
On AUGUST 6th a new Comedy by the late JAMES ALBURY, entitled WELCOME, LITTLE STRANGER.

GAIETY THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 8.30, A GOLD MINE.
Messrs. Nat Goodwin, William Farren, Charles Glenly, Harry Eversfield, Eric Thorne, and Fred Wood; Mesdames Kate Forsyth, Jenny McNulty, and Carlotta Leclercq.

GARRICK THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. JOHN HARE.

This Evening, at 8.50, A PAIR OF SPECTACLES.
Messrs. John Hare, C. Groves, R. Cathcart, S. Brough, C. Dodsworth, and R. Harding; Mesdames Webster, F. Hunter, and Kate Rorke.
Preceded, at 8, by DREAM FACES.
Mr. J. Forbes Robertson and Miss Carlotta Addison.

GLOBE THEATRE.

This Evening, at 8, ROMEO AND JULIET.
Miss Adelaide Moore, Juliet; Mr. Otis Skinner, Romeo.
Messrs. J. Nesbitt, G. F. Black, J. F. Graham, E. Wilde, J. Humphries, J. H. Manley, S. C. Henry, F. Wells, G. B. Philips, M. Baker, E. Boddy, and Mark Quinton; Mesdames May Prothero, Nellie Duncan, and Charles Calvert.

LYCEUM THEATRE.

Mr. HENRY IRVING, Sole Lessee.

Mr. AUGUSTIN DALY'S COMPANY of COMEDIANS,
AS YOU LIKE IT.
TUESDAY EVENING, Aug. 5, Mr. DALY'S new eccentric Comedy, in three acts, entitled
THE GREAT UNKNOWN.

PRINCE of WALES' THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. HORACE SEDGER.

This Evening, at 8.15, MARJORIE.
Messrs. C. H. Hayden Coffin, Joseph Tapley, H. Ashley, Templer Saxe, Wood, James, Shale, Hendon, and H. Monkhouse; Mesdames Phyllis Broughton, Amadi, and Miss Camille D'Arville.
Preceded, at 7.30, by ALL ABROAD.

SHAFESBURY THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, F. S. WILLARD.

Every Evening, at 8.30, JUDAH.
Messrs. Willard, Royce Carleton, F. Kerr, Sant Matthews, C. Fulton, H. Cane, Harting, and Thomas; Mesdames Bewie Hatton, Gertrude Warden, A. Bowering, and Olga Brandon.

TERRY'S THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 9, THE JUDGE.
Messrs. W. S. Penley, Wm. Herbert, F. H. Fenton, M. Kinghorn, G. Belmore, and W. Lestocq; Mesdames E. Thorne, E. Chester, H. Leyton, and C. Grahame.
At 8.15, NEARLY SEVERED.

TOOLE'S THEATRE.

Manageress, Miss VIOLET MELNOTTE.

Lessee, Mr. J. L. TOOLE.
Every Evening, at 9, a new Military Farce, in three acts, by J. H. Darnley, entitled THE SOLICITOR.
Preceded by THE BAILIFF.

NATIONAL

FOR MUTUAL

PROVIDENT

INVESTED FUNDS,
£4,400,000.

LIFE ASSURANCE.

INSTITUTION.

48, GRACECHURCH STREET, LONDON.

ESTBD. 1835.

TO STOUT PEOPLE.

Sunday Times says: "Mr. Russell's aim is to eradicate, to cure the disease, and that his treatment is the true one seems beyond all doubt. The medicine he prescribes does not lower, but builds up and tones the system." Book (128 pages), with Recipe and Notes how to pleasantly and rapidly cure obesity (average reduction in first week is 3 lb.), post-free, Eight Stamps.

F. C. RUSSELL, Woburn House,
Store Street, Bedford Square, London, W.C.

GOLD PEN,

WITH DIAMOND POINT.

Anti-corrosive—Flexible—Durable—Adapting itself to any Handwriting.

Price 6d. each; post-free, 7d.

With White Metal Pocket Holder, complete - - - 1s.

Or, with Mordan's Best Silver Pocket-Holders—

Fluted Pattern, complete - - - - - 5s. 6d.

Engine-turned Pattern, complete - - - - - 6s. 6d.

Fluted Pattern, Telescope - - - - - 10s. 6d.

Other Patterns in great variety.

ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD,
27, CHANCERY LANE, LONDON.FURNISH your HOUSES or APART-MENTS THROUGHOUTON
MOEDER'S HIRE SYSTEM.

The original, best, and most liberal. Suits all.

FOUNDED A.D. 1888.

Furnish direct from the Manufacturer, from £10 to £10,000.

Cash prices. No extra charge for time given.

Catalogues, Estimates, Press Opinions, Testimonials Post Free.

F. MOEDER,

248, 249, 250, Tottenham Court Road, W. Also for HIRE ONLY.

Books produced at a fixed price for Printing,
Paper, and Binding, and terms arranged for Publishing.

Authors advised with as to Printing and Publishing. Estimates of Cost of Printing and Binding.

ALEXANDER &amp; SHEPHEARD,

Publishers, Printers, and Binders,

FURNIVAL STREET, HOLBORN, and 27, CHANCERY LANE,
LONDON.

REDNESS, ROUGHNESS, AND CHAPPING PREVENTED.
FAIR, WHITE HANDS AND HEALTHFUL SKIN AND COMPLEXION SECURED.

PEARS' SOAP.

This world-renowned Toilet Soap has obtained 15 International Awards as a Complexion Soap. It is specially suitable for Ladies, Children, or delicate and sensitive skins generally. Its regular use cannot fail to benefit the worst complexion.

Recommended by Mrs. LANGTRY and Madame ADELINA PATTI.

FRY'S

Lancet—"Pure and very soluble."
Medical Times—"Eminently suitable for Invalids."

PURE CONCENTRATED

Sir C. A. Cameron—"I have never tasted Cocoa
that I like so well."

President Royal College of Surgeons, Ireland.

COCOA

Paris Exhibition, 1889: GOLD MEDAL awarded to J. S. FRY &amp; SONS.

CADBURY'S COCOA

ABSOLUTELY PURE, THEREFORE BEST.

A FEW OF THE MANY GOOD REASONS WHY CADBURY'S COCOA ENJOYS SUCH WORLD-WIDE POPULARITY.

It is guaranteed to be pure Cocoa.

It is made instantly with boiling Milk or Water.

It contains all the delicious aroma of the natural article, without the excessive proportions of fat.

It is not reduced in value by the addition of Starch, Sugar, &c.

It is specially rich in flesh-forming and strength-sustaining principles.

It is a gentle stimulant, and sustains against hunger and bodily fatigue.

It is delicious, nutritious, digestible, comforting, and a refined beverage,
suitable for all seasons of the year.

In the whole process of manufacturing Cadbury's Pure Cocoa, the automatic machinery employed obviates the necessity for its being once touched by the human hand.

THE ANALYST.

The Analyst, comparing the flesh-forming ingredients in Cocoas, gives the following averages:—

Natural Cocoa Nibs .. .. .	13.00
Cocoa Commercial, with added Starch and Sugar	6.00
Cadbury's Cocoa (prepared by extraction of fat, special process) .. .. .	21.00

The actual total flesh-formers in Cadbury's Cocoa are 21.34.
The process of preparation concentrates and intensifies the nourishing properties and flesh-forming constituents of the Cocoa bean. Cadbury's Cocoa is absolutely pure.

HEALTH.

"A food alike suitable for building up the growing body, and for repairing the waste which is incidental to all the processes of life."—Health.

MEDICAL ANNUAL.

The Editor of the Medical Annual speaks in the highest terms of Cadbury's Cocoa as a beverage and a food for invalids on account of its absolute purity, high quality, and great solubility; and counsels the Medical Profession to remember, in recommending Cocoa, that the name of Cadbury on any packet is a guarantee of purity.

PARIS DEPOT: 90, FAUBOURG ST. HONORE.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 953.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, AUGUST 9, 1890.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper]

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

	PAGE
DUFFY'S LIFE OF THOMAS DAVIS, by T. W. ROLLESTON	103
PRIMAVERA, by J. A. SYMONDS	104
MEMORIALS OF THE CIVIL WAR IN CHESHIRE, by Prof. GARDNER	104
HOSKIER'S ESSAYS IN NEW TESTAMENT CRITICISM, by Prof. SANDAY	105
HUBERT'S LIBERTY AND A LIVING, by WALTER LEWIN	106
NEW NOVELS, by WILLIAM SHARP	107
NOTES AND NEWS	108
ORIGINAL VERSE: "ANEMONES," by G. E. T.	109
OBITUARY: MADAME ACKERMANN	109
MAJAZINES AND REVIEWS	109
LETTERS, IN PART UNPUBLISHED, OF SAMUEL PEPYS, by C. E. DOBLE	109
AN ITALIAN TRANSLATION FROM TENNYSON	111
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS	111
CORRESPONDENCE:—
The Franks Casket, by Prof. G. F. BROWN: "Helman" and "Hauptmann," by H. KREBS; The Fragment of Wynkyn de Worde's "Le Morte Darthur," by H. OSKAR SOMMER; The Etymology of "Inverigle," by Prof. SKERT: The Substantive "Louke" in Chaucer, by J. M. HART	111
PROU'S MANUAL OF PALEOGRAPHY AND DICTIONARY OF ABBREVIATIONS, by CANON ISAAC TAYLOR	112
SOME BOOKS ON CHEMISTRY	113
CORRESPONDENCE:—
"Satellite," by R. BROWNE, JUN.	113
SCIENCE NOTES	114
PHILOLOGY NOTES	114
SOME ITALIAN WORKS ON MAIOLICA, by C. DRURY E. FORTNUM	114
CORRESPONDENCE:—
The Sculptured Slabs supposed to have been brought from Mesopotamia to Egypt, by Prof. SAYCE	117
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	117
"THE GREAT UNKNOWN" at the LYCEUM, by ARTHUR SYMONS	118
MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS, by J. S. SHEDLOCK	118

TO PUBLISHERS.—The Advertiser is OPEN to an ENGAGEMENT as Manager or other responsible position. Thoroughly conversant with all the details of Paper, Printing, Binding, Advertising, &c. First-class references.—Address, C. S. 100, Mercer's Road, Tothell Park, N.

THE LECTURE AGENCY LIMITED (late of Birmingham), 3, GEORGE YARD, LOMBARD STREET, LONDON, E.C., act as AGENTS for the most distinguished Lecturers and Entertainers in Great Britain.

STAMMERERS should read a book by a gentleman who cured himself after suffering nearly forty years. Price 13 stamps.—R. BRASLEY, Brampton Park, near Huntingdon.

CATALOGUES.

BAEDEKER'S & BADDELEY'S GUIDE-BOOKS.
New Detailed CATALOGUE, now ready, sent post free on application
DULAU & Co., 57, Shoe Lane, London.

JUST PUBLISHED, a CATALOGUE of MISCELLANEOUS BOOKS, many very scarce, at low prices for cash, on America, &c.—Bibliography—Biography—Dramatic—Heraldry and Family History—History—Ireland—Language—Music—Political Economy—Scotland—Shakespeareana—Topography—Voyages.
JAMES WATKIN, New and Second-hand Bookseller, 114, New Oxford Street, London, W.C.

TO AUTHORS.

MESSRS. DIGBY & LONG, PUBLISHERS,
18, BOUVERIE STREET, FLEET STREET, LONDON, E.C.,
Are prepared to receive and give careful consideration to all M.S.s. and arrange terms for their PUBLICATION. Messrs. DIGBY & LONG have also every convenience and ample facilities for the Publication of Manuscripts. Editorial offices if required. New Catalogue post free.

NOW READY.

NEW NOVEL by Mrs. BENNETT-EDWARDS
Crown 8vo, 350 pp., 2s. 6d.

SAINT MONICA: A Wife's Love Story.

By MRS. BENNETT-EDWARDS.

"Saint Monica" is a society novel, remarkable alike for originality and power. It may easily be understood that the excess of devotion and self-abandonment exemplified in Veronica and George Westbury require a great deal of ingenious writing up. Mrs. Bennett-Edwards has proved herself equal to the task, and must be regarded as a clever, as well as daring, manipulator, of subjects decidedly risky in treatment.—Academy.

"This is one of the many volumes to which the controversy about marriage has given rise. The volume is written with a considerable amount of power and convincement."—Bristol Mercury.

"The heroine is admitted to be a supporter of some of the most advanced and startling theories of the day. His attitude towards this passionate and headstrong woman is one of the most curious features of a curious book."—Morning Post.

"Plenty of ability and good writing in this book."—Liverpool Mercury.

Bristol: J. W. ARROWSMITH.

London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT, & Co., Limited.

SCHOOLS, COLLEGES, &c.

OWENS COLLEGE, VICTORIA UNIVERSITY, MANCHESTER.

PROSPECTUSES FOR—

- I. DAY CLASSES.
- II. DEPARTMENT OF MEDICINE.
- III. DENTAL DEPARTMENT.
- IV. PHARMACEUTICAL DEPARTMENT.
- V. DEPARTMENT FOR WOMEN.
- VI. EVENING CLASSES.
- VII. SCHOLARSHIPS AND EXHIBITIONS (£12 to £100 per annum).

May be obtained at Mr. CORNISH, St. Ann's Square, Manchester, or on application to the REGISTRAR
HENRY W. HOLDER, M.A., Registrar.

QUEEN'S SERVICE ACADEMY, 3 and 4, ELY PLACE, DUBLIN.

The oldest, and among the most successful in the United Kingdom: over 2,000 have passed.
I. All Army Examinations.
II. Civil Service of India, Universities, &c.
III. R. I. Constabulary Cadetships.
There is not a Corps in the Services or a Department under Government that does not owe some of its Officers to the QUEEN'S SERVICE ACADEMY, DUBLIN. No attempt at cramming; unsurpassed staff of Specialists under personal direction of W. J. CHETWODE CRAWLEY, LL.D., D.C.L., F.R.G.S., F.G.S., F.R.Hist.Soc., &c.

TUDOR HALL LADIES' COLLEGE, FOREST HILL, S.E., LONDON.

Principals—Rev. Dr. and Mrs. TODD.
Head Mistress—Miss M. TODD (Girton), Cambridge.
Professors—Seeley, King's Coll.; Dr. Dulcken, Rudolph Lowman, Louis Diehl, Signor Garcia, Larpent, Ferrero, Churton Collins, &c.
Full list and references on application.
Large Gymnasium, Lawn-Tennis Courts, Swimming, and Riding.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

DEPARTMENT OF ENGINEERING.

The COUNCIL is prepared to APPOINT an ASSISTANT to the PROFESSOR OF ENGINEERING. The gentleman appointed will be a practical Mechanical Engineer who has had University or Technical School education. The stipend will be £120 a year, with a share of Evening Fees. Applications, together with testimonials and references, should be forwarded before SEPTEMBER 9th next to
IVOR JAMES, Registrar.

Cardiff, August 6th, 1890.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

DEPARTMENT OF PHYSICS.

The COUNCIL is prepared to APPOINT an ASSISTANT PROFESSOR OF PHYSICS. The stipend will be £200 a year with a share of Evening Fees. The gentleman appointed will be expected to enter upon his work at the beginning of October next. Applications, together with testimonials and references, should be forwarded before SEPTEMBER 9th next to
IVOR JAMES, Registrar.

Cardiff, August 6th, 1890.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

The Council of the University College of South Wales and Monmouthshire, as the Local Committee of the Cardiff Day Training College, invite APPLICATIONS for the post of MASTER of MATHS. The stipend will not be less than £200 per annum. A statement of duties can be obtained on application to the REGISTRAR. Applications, which should be accompanied by testimonials or references, must be sent in on or before SEPTEMBER 9th, 1890.

IVOR JAMES, Registrar.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, BRISTOL.

The Council invite APPLICATIONS for the post of LECTURER in MATHEMATICS. Salary £150.
Applications, with Testimonials, to be sent not later than 25th AUGUST. Further information may be obtained on application to JAMES RAFTER, Secretary.

THE UNIVERSITY of ST. ANDREWS

GRANTS THE DIPLOMA and TITLE of LL.A. to WOMEN.

The Subjects of Examination may be selected from any seven out of twenty-nine different subjects, the standard being the same as that for the M.A. Degree. The centres of examination are St. Andrews, Aberdeen, Bedford, Belfast, Birmingham, Bristol, Cardiff, Cheltenham, Cork, Dublin, Dumfries, Edinburgh, Liverpool, Leeds, Leicester, London, Loughborough, Manchester, Newcastle-on-Tyne, and Paisley.

For Prospectus, &c., apply to the SECRETARY, LL.A., Scheme, the University, St. Andrews, N.B.

INEXPENSIVE Sound EDUCATION at SCHORNE COLLEGE, WINSLOW.

Over 40 Army and Navy Boys, Clergy Sons, Medical, &c., have been educated in either the Classical or Modern side, and the School has a good record. 30 guineas a year; reduced to brothers and orphans. Entrance fee, 5 guineas.—Address Rev. Dr. JAMES.

LAUSANNE.—Chez, M. LE PASTEUR MEYRE.—GOOD PENSION for YOUNG GENTLEMEN. Home life. Every facility for studies. Splendid view. Terms moderate.

BRITISH ASSOCIATION for the ADVANCEMENT OF SCIENCE, 22, Albemarle Street, London, W.

The NEXT ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING will be held at LEEDS, commencing on WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 3.

PRESIDENT ELECT—

Sir FREDERICK AUGUSTUS ADEL, C.B., D.C.L., D.Sc., F.R.S., V.P.C.S.

NOTICE to CONTRIBUTORS of MEMOIRS.—Authors are reminded that, under an arrangement dating from 1871, the acceptance of Memoirs and the days on which they are to be read are now as far as possible determined by Organising Committees for the several Sections before the beginning of the Meeting. It has, therefore, become necessary, in order to give an opportunity to the Committees of doing justice to the several communications, that each Author should prepare an Abstract of his Memoir of a length suitable for insertion in the published Transactions of the Association, and the Council request that he will send it, together with the original Memoir, by book post on or before August 6, addressed thus:—"General Secretaries, British Association, 22, Albemarle Street, London, W. For Section —" Authors who comply with this request and whose papers are accepted will be furnished before the Meeting with printed copies of their Reports or Abstracts. If it should be inconvenient to the Author that his paper should be read on any particular day, he is requested to send information thereof to the Secretaries in a separate note.

Now ready, crown 8vo, 192 pages, 2s. 6d.

THE VERDICT: a Tract on the Political Significance of the Report of the Parnell Commission. By Prof. A. V. DICKY, Q.C.

"A substantial and systematic treatise, dealing with its important subject in a thorough and logical fashion. It is calculated to be of infinite service to the cause of Unionism."—Globe.
CASSELL & COMPANY, Limited, Ludgate Hill, London.

TO HOLIDAY TRIPPERS.—SPECIAL.

Saturday Review speaks of Arrowsmith's Bristol Library "as necessary to the traveller as a rug in winter and a dust-coat in summer."

NEW VOLUME OF ARROWSMITH'S BRISTOL LIBRARY
Fcap. 8vo, 187 pp., 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d.

THE RAJAH and the ROSEBUD.

By WILLIAM SIMS, Author of "King Capital," "Boulderstone," "The Red Route," &c. Vol. XLII. of Series.

Fcap. 8vo, 168 pages, 1s.

BETWEEN the WHIFFS. Being

Short Stories, Anecdotes, Odd Sayings, principally about Celebrities, Literary, Theatrical, &c., and about Savage Clubmen. By HENRY HERMAN, Joint Author of "The Silver King," &c.

The following 1s. Books by popular Authors are strongly recommended:—

CALLED BACK. HUGH CONWAY.
BROWN EYES. MAY CROMMELIN.
DARK DAYS. HUGH CONWAY.
FORT MINSTER, M.P. Sir E. J. REED, K.C.B., M.P.
THE RED CARDINAL. Mrs. FRANCES ELLIOT.
THE TINTED VENUS. F. ANSTEE.
JONATHAN'S HOME. ALAN DALE.
SLINGS and ARROWS. HUGH CONWAY.
OUT of the MISTS. DANIEL DORMER.
KATE PERCIVAL. Mrs. J. CONYNS CARR.
KALEE'S SHERINE. GRANT ALLEN.
CARRISTON'S GIFT. HUGH CONWAY.
THE MARK of CAIN. ANDREW LANG.
PLUCK. J. STRANGE WINTER.
DEAR LIFE. Mrs. J. PANTON.
GLADYS' PERIL. J. COLEMAN and J. C. CHUTE.
WHOSE HAND? W. G. WILLS and Mrs. GREENE.
THAT WINTER NIGHT. ROBERT BUCHANAN.
THE GUILTY RIVER. WILKIE COLLINS.
FATAL SHADOWS. Mrs. L. L. LEWIS.
THE LOVELY WANG. Hon. LEWIS WINGFIELD.
PATTY'S PARTNER. JEAN MIDDLEMASS.
"V. R.:" a Comedy of Errors. EDWARD ROSE.
THE PARK LANE MYSTERY. JOSEPH HATTON.
FRIEND MACDONALD. MAX O'RELL.
KATHARINE REGINA. WALTER BESANT.
JAN VERCLOOTZ. MATTHEW STRONG.
THE CLIFF MYSTERY. HAMILTON AIDE.
AS a BIRD to the SNARE. GERTRUDE WARDEN.
TRACKED OUT. ARTHUR A. BECKETT.
A SOCIETY CLOWN. GEORGE GROSSMITH.
CHECK and COUNTER-CHECK. BRANDER MATTHEWS and GEORGE H. JESSOP.
THE INNER HOUSE. WALTER BESANT.
A VAGABOND WILL. W. G. WATKES.
PHAROAH'S DAUGHTER. EDGAR LEE.
TROLOPE'S DILEMMA. ST. AUBYN.
JACQUES BONHOMME. MAX O'RELL.
DOUBTS of DIVES. WALTER BESANT.
FAIR PHYLLIS of LAVENDER WHARF. JAMES GREENWOOD.
HARD LUCK. ARTHUR W. A. BECKETT.
TWO and TWO. ELIZABETH GLAISTER.

BRISTOL: J. W. ARROWSMITH.

LONDON: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT, and Co., Limited.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

AT ALL BOOKSELLERS AND RAILWAY STATIONS.

A MEMOIR of E. A. SOTHERN.

By T. EDGAR PEMBERTON.

A NEW EDITION.

In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

POPULAR NOVELS.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE REPENTANCE
OF PAUL WENTWORTH."

THE RIDDLE of LAURENCE

HAVILAND. By CONSTANCE SMITH. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "ANTHONY FAIRFAX."

AUDREY. By Margery Hollis.

In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"Miss Hollis writes very charmingly and carries the reader gently and pleasantly along. Audrey is so bright and charming a girl that the reader cannot fail to sympathise with her troubles."—Manchester Examiner.

A NEW NOVEL.

AN AUSTRALIAN GIRL.

In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"There is considerable vigour of dramatic conception and effective rendering. The high-minded, clever, emotional 'Australian Girl' is admirably described. The painting of Australian life, the long rides into those vast solitudes among the wealth of foliage and flowers and the profuseness of animal life are brilliantly described. The thread of the story is excellent."—Manchester Guardian.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "OUGHT WE TO VISIT HER?"

PEARL POWDER. By Mrs.

ANNIE EDWARDES, Author of "Leah: a Woman of Fashion," &c. In 2 vols., crown 8vo.

"A clever and original story with plenty of life and movement about it."—Woman.

"The reader will find both mysterious plot and exciting incident."—Athenaeum.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THAT UNFORTUNATE MARRIAGE."

MADAME LEROUX. By

FRANCES ELEANOR TROLLOPE, Author of "Black Spirits and White," &c. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"Seeing that the name of Frances Eleanor Trollope appears on the title page, it is almost needless to add that this is a clever and well-written book."—Spectator.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "A DREAMER."

MR. BRYANT'S MISTAKE.

By KATHARINE WYLDE, Author of "An Ill-Regulated Mind," &c. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"Mr. Bryant's mistakes might well be given a harsher name. They form part, however, of a conscientious and well thought out character study, which, as well as that of his weak wife, is marked by originality and many touches of pathos."—Morning Post.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street,
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

F. V. WHITE & CO.'S RECENT PUBLICATIONS.

I. FERGUS HUME'S NEW NOVEL. THE MAN WITH A SECRET.

3 vols.

By the Author of
"The Mystery of a Hansom Cab,"
"Miss Mephistopheles,"
"The Piccadilly Puzzle," &c.
(At all Libraries.)

"...An acquaintance with its contents will prove it to be worthy of any favourable anticipation it may have raised....Side by side with much that is powerful, and many bright gleams of humour.
"The Man with a Secret" has enough of mystery to satisfy the most exacting on this head."—Morning Post.

"Mr. Hume's interesting story....Patience Allerby—a woman with a past—powerfully drawn and interesting....Una Challoner, sweetest of heroines....the dialogue natural....A word of praise may be spared for Cecilia Mosser, whose passion for music is pathetically and cleverly treated....On the whole, "The Man with a Secret" is a really interesting story, full of go, and sensationalism, and the characters are varied and natural."—Court Journal.

II. By Annie Thomas.—THE LOVE of a LADY.

By the Author of
"Allerton Towers," "Eye of Blenden," &c.
3 vols.

III. By B. L. Farjeon.—THE MYSTERY of M. FELIX.

By the Author of
"Great Porter Square," "Toilers of Babylon," &c.
In 3 vols. (At all Libraries.)

"...A novel of great interest and power—one that can scarcely fail to enhance his already high reputation and extend his popularity as a writer of fiction....It bubbles over with humour of the raciest and richest character....The author unravels with much dramatic effect as sensational, singular, and striking a story as could well be conceived. The air of mystery pervading the novel is successfully maintained till towards the closing chapters....In conception and character, indeed, the work is quite distinct from the general run of modern novels—a circumstance which in itself lends value to Mr.
Farjeon's latest literary effort, apart from other merits always readily recognisable in the writings of this accomplished author."—Scotsman.

IV. By Mrs. Frank Penny.—CASTE and CREED.

2 vols., 21s.

V. By André Raffalovich.—The WILLING EXILE.

2 vols., 12s.
By the Author of
"It is Thyself."

VI. By Mrs. Alexander Fraser.—The NEW DUCHESS.

By the Author of
"A Professional Beauty," &c.
3 vols. (Shortly.)

AT ALL BOOKSELLERS AND BOOKSTALLS.

JOHN STRANGE WINTER'S LATEST NOVEL. FERRERS COURT. By the Author of

"Booties' Baby." In paper covers, 1s; cloth, 1s 6d.

"It introduces its readers to the Booties again, for which they will be profoundly thankful, as for the freshness, good spirits, and bright humour which animate the tale throughout. No reader of this delightful novelist will be disappointed to learn that the love-making of military men constitutes its chief interest."—Scotsman.

FERGUS HUME'S NEW NOVEL. The GENTLEMAN WHO VANISHED.

By the Author of "The Mystery of a Hansom Cab," "Miss Mephistopheles," &c. In paper covers, 1s; cloth, 1s 6d.
[Immediately.]

"RITA'S" NEW NOVEL. THE DOCTOR'S SECRET. By the Author of "Dame Durden," "Sheba," "Miss Kate," "A Vagabond Lover," &c. In paper covers, 1s; cloth, 1s 6d.

FLORENCE WARDEN'S NEW NOVEL. CITY and SUBURBAN. By the Author of "The House on the Marsh," &c. In paper covers, 1s; cloth, 1s 6d.

MRS. EDWARD KENNARD'S POPULAR NOVEL. MATRON or MAID? (Second Edition.) Cloth, 2s 6d.

By F. C. PHILIPS and C. J. WILLS. SYBIL ROSS'S MARRIAGE: the Romance of an Inexperienced Girl (Second Edition.) Cloth, 2s 6d.

F. V. WHITE & CO., 31, SOUTHAMPTON STREET,
STRAND, W.C.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

AT ALL BOOKSELLERS AND LIBRARIES.

In Darkest Africa.

Being the Official Publication recording the
QUEST, RESCUE, and RETREAT of EMIN,
GOVERNOR of EQUATORIA.

By HENRY M. STANLEY, LL.D., &c.,

Author of "How I Found Livingstone," "Through the Dark Continent."

With numerous Original Illustrations and many Maps.
2 vols., demy 8vo, cloth, 42s.

THIRD EDITION in the press.

"The style of the narrative is direct, vigorous, and incisive, as becomes one who is a man of action rather than a man of letters; but in many of the descriptive parts Mr.
Stanley shows that, consummate man of action as he is, he is a born man of letters as well."—Times.

"Mr. Stanley's animated pages....will continue to be read as long as there remains amongst Englishmen any taste for adventure and any honour for manliness."—Standard.

"It is a great performance, alike in what it relates, and in the manner of the relation, and it will constitute an enduring monument to its author's fame."—Daily News.

New Stories at all the Libraries.

BY RUDYARD KIPLING.

IN BLACK and WHITE. By Rudyard

KIPLING, Author of "Soldiers Three," "The Story of the Gadsbys," "Plain Tales from the Hills," &c. Demy 8vo, paper covers, 1s.

BY WILLIAM BLACK.

THE NEW PRINCE FORTUNATUS.

By WILLIAM BLACK, Author of "A Princess of Thule," "In Far Lochaber," "A Daughter of Heth,"
&c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"A remarkably easy book to read.... The author's touch has been light all through this long story; but seldom more bright, amusing, pathetic, humorous, and tender."—Saturday Review.

YOUMA: the Story of a West Indian

Slave. By LAFCADIO HEARN, Author of "Two Years in the French West Indies," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

JACK ABBOTT'S LOG: a Yarn of the

Merchant Service. By ROBERT BROWN, Author of
"Spun yarn and Spindrift," "Jack's Yarn," &c. 2 vols.,
crown 8vo, cloth, 21s.

"Among recent tales of the sea, 'Jack Abbott's Log' ranks high. It is a rattling good story, or rather stories; for the two volumes are crammed with seamen's yarns from beginning to end. And, since a 'yarn' is not worth the name unless it is full of fun or adventure, it is needless to say that Mr.
Brown's work will commend itself to the lovers of both."—Scotsman.

NOW READY, PRICE ONE SHILLING.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE.

AUGUST NUMBER.

CONTENTS.

PORT TARASCON: the Last Adventures of the Illustrious Tartarin.—III. ALPHONSE DAUBET. Illustrated.

IMPRESSIONS OF BERLIN. THEODORE CHILDS. Illustrated.
MAGELLAN and the PACIFIC. EDWARD EVERETT HALE.
Illustrated.

TO AN OLD APPLE-TREE: a Poem. COATES KINNEY.

THE BATHLEY AFFAIR: a Story. LUCY C. LILLIE.
CUSTER'S LAST BATTLE. Capt. CHARLES KING, U.S.A.
With a Map.

A WALK UP the AVENUE. RICHARD HARDING DAVIS.

PLANTIN-MORETUS. OCTAVIA HENSEL. Illustrated.

THE WORLD IS TOO MUCH WITH US: a Sonnet.
WILLIAM WORDSWORTH. With 3 Illustrations, Drawn by Alfred
Parsons.

AN IMPRESSION: a Poem. RENNELL RODD.

THE UNCLE of an ANGEL: a Story. THOMAS A. JANVIER.
Illustrated.

SOME GEOLOGY of CHICAGO and VICINITY. ELLEN B.
BASTIN.

LIZZIE BRUBAKER: a Story. LINA REDWOOD FAIRFAX.
With 2 Illustrations. Drawn by Alice Barber.

A CONVENT at ROME. Dr. FRANCIS PARKMAN.

STREET LIFE in INDIA. EDWIN LORD WEEKS. With 7
Illustrations. Drawn by Edwin Lord Weeks.

&c. &c. &c.

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, SEARLE,
and RIVINGTON, Limited,
St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, Fleet Street, E.C.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 9, 1890.

No. 953, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

Thomas Davis: the Memoirs of an Irish Patriot. 1840—1846. By Sir Chas. Gavan Duffy, K.C.M.G. (Kegan Paul & Co.)

SIR CHARLES DUFFY, after playing a very important part during a very important epoch of Irish history—he was the only Young Irelander, it is said, whom the Government really wished to hang—has written the history of that epoch in works as charming in style as they are instructive in substance. Thomas Davis is the central figure of Young Ireland, part i., as Smith O'Brien is the central figure of part ii., and, at first sight, it might seem as if a special biography of Davis could add but little of moment to the account of his character and career which is there given with so much insight and fulness. Nevertheless, the present work will be read with interest alike by those who have and who have not made Davis's acquaintance in the author's history of the political party with which both were associated. It is true that but little information has been added to the scanty details already published of Davis's early life. He was a shy, quiet, and even intellectually backward boy, who attracted no attention at school, and very little at the university, where, although a devourer of books of all kinds, he never read for honors. But the history of his public life, his correspondence, and his image as reflected in the minds of his friends, are here given in a manner which helps us to realise, as we could not before, the weight of the personal influence which he threw into politics, and to understand the sources of the transforming power which he wielded.

The qualities which made Davis so pre-eminent as he was among the men of intellect and character whom the Repeal agitation brought into public life are not, at first sight, very easy to recognise and define. He was a poet, but Mangan's poetic genius was of a decidedly rarer and higher order. His prose style was admirable for his purposes, but we cannot relish it for its own sake as we do the savage strength of Mitchel. As an orator it seems that he might have challenged any comparison, but he hated and eschewed the platform, speaking only when some public duty urgently demanded it. In historical knowledge, and, indeed, in learning generally, he far surpassed his colleagues; but he never wrote a book of any kind, nor signed his name to any article or poem. The secret of his influence is to be found, perhaps, mainly in a moral nature of rare loftiness and attraction. A spirit more true, tender, and ardent never ennobled the records of any human cause, and its charm is felt in every line he wrote. Added to this, he possessed in a very rare degree the power of giving effect to his striking combination of natural gifts by a steadfast and punctual industry which is not usually recognised as a Celtic characteristic. His vitality was inexhaustible. He worked like a giant at play; and he pressed forward to his aim with a concentration of purpose and a sustained impetuosity, which distinguished him among his colleagues like the unswerving rush of a great steamer among a crowd of sailing vessels. And it must be remembered that he had to do what he did and to show what he was before his thirty-first year. Had he lived, he would doubtless have developed remarkable gifts of statesmanship. He did not, indeed, escape the delusion which possessed the whole party up to the date of the Clontarf meeting. Like his friends and colleagues, he believed that a policy of revolutionary menace, without the slightest preparation for revolutionary action, might win repeal, as it had, under very different conditions, won emancipation. But when that delusion was exploded, the rapidity with which he grasped the situation and discerned the true path for the future movement to pursue was very striking. The way, he now saw, would be long, the means practical and unostentatious—Parliamentary action (so far as that was available in days when only one in two hundred of the Irish people had a vote), education, and the conversion of the Irish Unionists. This was henceforth the policy of the Young Irelanders, until the desperation of the famine years and the excitement of the continental revolutions swept them into an insurrectionary movement which scarcely got beyond intention. Whether Davis could have resisted the influences of those times it is hard to say; but if he had elected to try insurrection he would assuredly have made it a serious and bloody business, unless, like his present biographer—the one other man who might have done the same—he had been laid in jail before the crisis.

A capital story was current in Dublin at the time of the foundation of the Nation newspaper by Duffy, Davis, and Dillon. Somebody asked a legal luminary of Unionist politics if he could tell him "what was the tone of this new journal?" "The tone of the Nation? Wolfe Tone, sir!" was the angry reply. Nothing could have been apter in substance as in form. Wolfe Tone, a man who deserves the title of an originator more perhaps than any other who ever influenced Irish history, was the precursor and inspirer of Thomas Davis. But the teachings of Wolfe Tone had been to a great extent washed out in the blood of '98, or obscured by the emancipation movement of O'Connell. An agitation of thirty years, for the object of gaining the Irish people entrance to the Imperial Parliament, was certainly not the best preparation for a propaganda which made it their grand object to get out of it. And the first business of Davis and his friends was to do that which it was not in O'Connell to do—to give the Repeal agitation an independent life of its own; to pervade it with their own ardour and sincerity, to awaken a true sense of national life in Ireland which should recognise no distinction of creeds, classes or parties as approaching in importance to the great division which separated all Irishmen from all Englishmen. But in their devotion to the final goal of the movement they never forgot the priceless gains which might be picked up on the way to it. They saw in the struggle a great opportunity for the education of the Irish people—an education not merely in the history, the resources, the rights of Ireland, but in self-restraint, justice, manliness, veracity. What a world of significance lies in this comment of Davis, in the Nation, on a stupid insult which O'Connell had flung at the Duke of Wellington:—

"In reference to popular faults, we cannot help saying a word on the language applied to certain of the enemies' leaders, especially the Duke of Wellington. We dislike the whole system of false disparagement. The Irish people will never be led to act the manly part which liberty requires of them by being told that 'the Duke,' that gallant soldier and most able general, is a screaming coward and dotting corporal" (Prose Writings of Davis, "Camelot Series," p. 259).

Take, also, this admirable observation on the policy of moral force—a policy which implied much more for him than the legality which O'Connell adored:

"Conciliation of all sects, classes, and parties who oppose us, or who still hesitate, is essential to moral force. For if, instead of leading a man to your opinion by substantial kindness, by zealous love, and by candid and wise teaching, you insult his tastes and his prejudices, and force him either to adopt your cause or to resist it; if, instead of slow persuasion, your weapons are bullying and intolerance, then your profession of moral force is a lie, and a lie which deceives no one, and your attacks will be promptly resisted by every man of spirit" (Ib., p. 250).

The system of false encomium was not less repugnant to Davis than that of false disparagement:

"The writers of the Nation have never concealed the defects or flattered the good qualities of their countrymen. They have told them in good faith that they wanted many an attribute of a free people, and that the true way to command happiness and liberty was by learning the arts, and practising the culture that fitted men for their enjoyment. Nor was it until we saw them thus learning and thus practising that our faith became perfect, and that we felt entitled to say to all men, here is a strife in which it will be stainless glory to be even defeated" (Ib. p. 176).

Before Davis's death he had seen the fruit of this kind of teaching in the transformation of the Repeal movement. Not only had it gained enormously in volume and in enthusiasm, but it had attracted men of a very different stamp from the empty windbags, the unscrupulous hirelings and flatterers who composed O'Connell's "tail." O'Connell soon found himself possessed of a tail which was capable, on due occasion, of wagging the dog, and which wholly refused to be wagged by him when he at last abandoned his country's cause to fawn for patronage upon an English minister. Then came the dissolution of the party, and the wreck of the Repeal movement, already visibly impending in the lifetime of Davis.

This the young men were powerless to avert, but they did, at least, secure that the agitation should not perish without having left behind it some germs of national life which might survive to flourish in another day.

At first sight it might seem as if little of their work had endured, except the literary impulse, which has produced the poetry of Samuel Ferguson, and which is still at least living, if not growing. And no doubt in many respects the admirers of Davis must be content to wait for

"other days to prove How great a good was Luria having lived."

His policy of popular education is neglected, his policy of conciliation is abandoned for one of organised intimidation, his moral ideals are regarded as incompatible with practical politics. "Prose plus success," writes the chief organ of modern Irish nationalism, in graceful allusion to the last effort of the Young Ireland movement, "is better than poetry plus cabbage-garden." And though we have not yet seen the success, there can be no question that at present "prose" has all its own way with the methods of the agitation.

And yet, strange as it may seem, there is no name more honoured in Ireland to-day, no influence more inspiring, than that of Thomas Davis. The Irish movement still marches to his music, although it fights with weapons which he abhorred, and with foes of whom he sought to make allies. His teachings have coloured all Irish political aspiration; and although their observance is postponed—wrongly and unhappily, as I hold—during the present crisis, there is probably no Irish Nationalist who does not expect that his native Parliament, when he gets it, will make them the guiding lights of its policy. But it need not be reserved to that time for either English or Irish readers to value the record of an heroic life which the man of all others most competent to do it has laid before us in this book.

T. W. ROLLESTON.

Primavera: Poems. By Four Authors.
(Oxford: Blackwell.)

THIS is a little book of less than forty pages, written by four friends, three of them undergraduates at Oxford, and all of them penetrated with the spirit of the higher culture of our time. The poems, it is clear, have been carefully selected; and, it is probable, have been diligently polished. There is not one which is not remarkable for delicacy of style and conscious aiming after excellence in art. Whether these qualities promise well for future achievement and development is a question open to debate. But there can be no doubt that in Primavera we possess another of those tiny verse-books like "Ionica," or Mr. Percy Pinkerton's "Galeazzo," which will not lose in freshness and in perfume as the years go by.

The poems have the distinction of making one wish to be acquainted with their authors. Though they differ a good deal in mental tone, perhaps also somewhat in literary merit, they possess marked common characteristics: a restrained refinement, a subdued reserve, a gentle melancholy; the note of the latest Anglican aesthetic school. We find no humour, no Sturm und Drang, no inequalities and incoherences of passion. Even where it is obvious that the emotion has been intense, possibly of a rare and peculiar strain, as in Mr. Binyon's "Testamentum Amoris" and Mr. Phillips's "To a Lost Love," the expression of it obeys no violence of impulse. A tender tone of regret, rather than of acute grief, steeped these stanzas (to quote one instance) addressed to a friend removed into the spiritual world by death.

"Oh, thou art cold! In that high sphere
Thou art a thing apart,
Losing in saner happiness
This madness of the heart."

"And yet, at times, thou still shalt feel
A passing breath, a pain;
Disturb'd, as though a door in heaven
Had oped and closed again."

"And thou shalt shiver, while the hymns,
The solemn hymns, shall cease;
A moment half remember me:
Then turn away to peace."

It would be invidious to institute critical comparisons between the styles of these four friends and their respective merits. It may, however, be remarked that Mr. Manmohan Ghose's work possesses a peculiar interest on account of its really notable command of the subtleties of English prosody and diction, combined with just a touch of foreign feeling. The artful employment of imperfect rhymes in "Raymond and Ida" illustrates what I mean. Occasionally, too, Mr. Ghose produces exactly the right phrase by means of a felicitous simplicity. Notice the line which I have italicised in the following stanza:

"In the deep West the heavens grow heavenlier, Eve after eve; and still
The glorious stars remember to appear;
The roses on the hill
Are fragrant as before;
Only thy face, of all that's dear,
I shall see nevermore!"

Take, again, these two lines:

"Forget the shining of the stars, forget
The vernal visitation of the rose."

There is but one piece of blank verse in the book. This prologue to "Orestes," by Mr. Stephen Phillips, has strength, is firm in outline, somewhat tardy in movement, fit for sonorous declamation. The gravity which I have indicated as a ruling quality of all these youthful compositions makes itself felt here in its proper place. We might have wished, perhaps, for more of joyous accent in the ode to "Youth," by Mr. Laurence Binyon, which dwells less on the rapture of youth than on its sadness—the melancholy of Theognis over youth's decay:

"O bright new-comer, filled with thoughts of joy,
Joy to be thine amid these pleasant plains,
Know'st thou not, child, what surely coming pains
Await thee, for that eager heart's annoy?
Misunderstanding, disappointment, tears,
Wronged love, spoiled hope, mistrust and ageing fears,
Eternal longing for one perfect friend,
And unavailing wishes without end?"

Mr. Cripps alone permits his Muse a gravely jocund note in his "Seasons' Comfort." He, too, of the four fellow-versifiers shows the greater aptitude for experiments, though it may perhaps be felt that his touch is nowhere quite so sure, nor his artistic feeling so direct as theirs.

It is difficult to lay the critic's hand lightly enough upon poems like these, or to make it clear what particular attraction they possess. With all the charm of rather spring-flowers, they suggest the possibilities of varied personality not yet accentuated in the authors. Let us hope that the four Muses of the four friends will not, like the primroses,

"die unmarried ere they can behold Bright Phoebus in his strength," but that we shall profit by their summer-songs, while ever remaining grateful for their Primavera.

JOHN ADDINGTON SYMONDS.

Memorials of the Civil War in Cheshire.

Edited by James Hall for the Record Society for the Publication of Original Documents relating to Lancashire and Cheshire.

THIS publication consists of two works of unequal length and value.

The first and shortest is Burghall's Providence Improvisus, consisting of the notes of a Puritan on events happening in his neighbourhood, in which great stress is laid on the providential deaths of persons who in various ways had been uncomely in their lives.

The second and more important is "A breefe and true relation," &c., by Thomas Malbon, giving his version of so much of the Civil War as could be described from Nantwich. Malbon was a strict Puritan, and it is from the Puritan point of view that everything is regarded. The entries are of various importance so far as public interest is concerned. At one time Rupert sweeps across the stage plundering vilely on his way to Marston Moor. At another time Cromwell appears dissolving the Long Parliament by force, taking with him "the mace and suche wrytinges as weire then in the House," a proceeding which fully accounts for the disappearance—so deeply lamented by historians—of Vane's Reform Bill.

Yet after all the best part of the book is that which is not concerned with matters of public interest. The small local skirmishes and plunderings which no historian will deign to note bring forcibly before the reader the misery of the times which afterwards led to so strong a reaction.

The strength of that reaction may be seen too in the notes by Cole, the antiquary, which were prepared for an imperfect edition, and which the present editor has wisely reprinted. The height of eighteenth-century anti-puritanism is probably reached when a learned clergyman, finding that a pair were compelled to do penance for being taken in adultery "upon the Sabbath day att tyme of Dyvyne servis," makes the following remark:—

"Could anything be said in defence of a crime so offensive to the laws of God and society, it would be this, that almost any offence would be lessened by not attending what they called Divine service, where rebellion and schism were sure to be the subject of his prayer and preaching."

Turning to an entry of Burghall's on March 16, 1661, we have a life-like illustration of the troubles of the followers of George Fox:—

"Two Quakers came to disturb me in the publick congregation. God so ordered my studies that the sermon was pat against them. They had liberty to speak, and were answered. At last, one of them denyed the S.S. to be the Word of God; whereupon they were, with shame, thrust out of the congregation."

Sometimes, no doubt, they were not even allowed "liberty to speak"; but that they should not have been treated better is not, after all, vory surprising.

SAMUEL R. GARDINER.

Collation of Cod. Ev. 604, and Essays in New Testament Criticism. By Herman C. Hoskier. (David Nutt.)

LET us say at once that Mr. Hoskier has done a piece of very honest, careful, and valuable work, which may be counted for the future among the really trustworthy materials for the criticism of the New Testament. He has given us an exhaustive collation and analysis of Egerton MS. 2610 in the British Museum, which is, unfortunately, variously designated Evan. 604 by Scrivener and 700 by Gregory. This is a MS. of the twelfth century, with a pretty full apparatus (Corp. Eus. t., κεφ. t., &c.) with good miniatures of the Four Evangelists, and with an interesting text, the salient features of which are excellently brought out by Mr. Hoskier. Indeed, his whole treatment of the MS. is such as to inspire a high degree of confidence in his accuracy.

The collation is followed by a number of Appendices, which are all stamped with the same character. The first of these is a collation of another MS. of the twelfth or thirteenth century in the author's own possession. Only two desiderata strike me in regard to this. I do not succeed in identifying the MS. with any either in Dr. Scrivener's list or in Dr. Gregory's. If it is to be found in these, it is a pity that no clearer indication was given; if it is not to be found, it is a pity that its existence should not have been made known to either of the two editors. Critics will not know by what number it should hereafter be designated. And, further, we are not told anything about the source from which it was obtained. Mr. Hoskier has been liberal in facsimiles, the photographs for which he appears to take himself. He has given us two of Cod. Evan. 604 (700), one of Cod. Paul, 247 (Scr. & Greg.), and one of Cod. Evan. 2 (Scr. & Greg.); but he has given us no facsimile of his own MS., which we should have been glad to compare with others.

The second and third Appendices are taken up with a closer collation of the different editions which may lay claim to contain the textum ab omnibus receptum: this chiefly for the satisfaction of our friends on the other side of the Atlantic. The next six Appendices contain new or corrected details in regard to MSS. at Paris, Cheltenham, Basle, Geneva, Harvard, or Andover, U.S.A.; in all cases derived from personal inspection.

Mr. Hoskier's stay in the different libraries does not appear to have been long, but he evidently made good use of his time. The last Appendix is a note on the reading of C in 1 Tim. iii. 16.

Mr. Hoskier was a friend of Dean Burgon's, to whose memory his book is dedicated, and who was the first to point out to him the value of the MS. from which it takes its title. He is naturally jealous for the reputation of his friend, which he thinks that time will fully vindicate. On this side the water, at least, his warm defence was hardly needed. Where the Dean was known his merits and the genuine work that he did were recognised, and his sallies were not taken amiss. They were part of the man, whom no one thought of judging like more commonplace individuals. Probably the victims themselves were much more amused than hurt by them; and so exuberant a nature could not be expected to treat even textual criticism by dry-as-dust methods. The memory of that quaint, attractive, warm-blooded figure has no bitterness in it and will not easily die away. It is a satisfaction not only to have Mr. Hoskier carrying on his work, but to hear that another of his friends, the Rev. E. Miller, Rector of Bucknell, is to edit his Remains.

Naturally, too, there is a good deal of brisk skirmishing throughout the book on the principles of textual criticism. Mr. Hoskier inherits something of his deceased friend's vivacity of style; and there is more than one racy saying, the justice of which I should be disposed to question. For instance, this—that "the would-be scientific exponents of textual criticism have proved themselves after all the narrowest, blindest partisans"; or again, the weighing of "real work against mere speculation, sincere investigation against imperfect and hasty conclusions." I have no idea to whom either of these sentences can be meant to apply. Certainly, nothing could be wider of the mark if it is aimed at the two great living exponents of a criticism which is really scientific, and which, whatever may be thought of its results, is at least not hasty, and not insincere, but implies work behind the scenes, far more than its censors imagine. At the end of his laborious and valuable digest of selected readings of Cod. 604 (700), Mr. Hoskier exclaims triumphantly:

"I defy anyone, after having carefully perused the foregoing texts, or after having noted the almost incomprehensible combinations and permutations of both the uncial and cursive manuscripts, to go back to the teaching of Dr. Hort with any degree of confidence. How useless and superfluous to talk of Evan. 604 having a large Western element, or of its siding in many places with the 'neutral text.' The whole question of families and divisions is thus brought prominently before the eye, and with space one could largely comment upon the deeply interesting combinations which present themselves to the critic. But do let us realise that we are in the infancy of this part of the science, and not imagine that we have successfully laid certain immutable foundation stones and can safely continue to build thereon. It is not so, and much, if not all, of these foundations must be demolished."

Space forbids me, too, to take up this challenge as I should like to do. It is not "useless and superfluous" to say that Evan. 604 has a Western and a neutral element. It is just this combination which invests it with interest and value; and I fail to see that there is anything in the phenomena which conflicts with Dr. Hort's description of them.

Two methods of textual criticism are possible at the present day. One is to strike at the root of the divergent families of text, to trace them in their earliest stages, to recover partly through contemporary and partly through later attestation the lines of textual transmission in the early centuries, and to argue backwards along these lines to the original reading. If this method is followed, there may be differences in detail, but I doubt if there will be any wide differences in principle from the form in which it is presented by Drs. Westcott and Hort. Another method would be to break up the mass of cursive MSS. into groups, like the group 13—69—124—346—348—624 (Scrivener-Hoskier), which is enlarged to 13—69—124—346—543—788—826 (Gregory), with the tentative addition of 713—829. Of course, there will not be very many groups so clearly defined as this, but Dr. Gregory has already considerably added to their number, and further research will doubtless lead to new combinations. It will be possible to determine the readings of the archetypes of these groups, and then by comparing these archetypes to work the way backwards to the archetype of the archetypes, and so on from lower archetypes to higher, till the lines begin to converge and narrow and ultimately to approach to the original. Of course, this is an enormous programme, which will take generations to accomplish. But the world has time before it. There is no reason why the work should not be gone on with; and Mr. Hoskier has contributed materially to it. His comparison of 604—473 (=81 Hort, 565 Gregory) shows that in St. Mark, at least, their common element can be treated in the same manner. He needs, however, to be warned that Belsheim's collation of Cod. 473 is, it is to be feared, like all that scholar's work, exceedingly untrustworthy—so much so as to be useless for any practical purpose (see a note by O. von Gebhardt in Theol. Literaturzeitung, 1890, col. 231).

W. SANDAY.

Liberty and a Living. By Philip G. Hubert, jun. (G. P. Putnam's Sons.)

AN American journalist, who for several years past has been trying to simplify his mode of living, gives in this volume some interesting particulars of his, as he thinks, successful experiment. The book, he says, is "the record of an attempt to secure bread and butter, sunshine and content, by gardening, fishing, and hunting"; and he graces his title-page with an apt quotation from Thoreau, whose disciple he evidently is, even though, like many other disciples, he fails to apprehend fully the precepts and example of his master. For years Mr. Hubert worked hard in the city, and dreamed of the day when his bank account should be large enough to allow him at least a few months of the out-door occupations which he loved; and at length it dawned upon him that perhaps he need not wait to enlarge his bank balance, but might earn, as he went along, at least a portion of his income in the country instead of in the city. "Life to the average man," he says, "means hard, anxious work, with disappointment at the end, whereas it ought to mean pleasant work, with plenty of time for books and talk." He did not follow in Thoreau's footsteps—build himself a hermitage on the estate of a friend and dwell there. In his case this was not practicable—he had a wife and family to provide for, and his notions of the necessities of life were not so simple as those of Thoreau. He wanted plenty of human companionship; he even wanted the city occasionally, for the sake of the opera. In general, however, country life suited his temperament better than city life, and he was quite willing to forego many conveniences of the latter for the sake of the possible freedom of the former.

Having succeeded in his purpose, it was kind of him to tell his story for the edification of others whom it might concern. Some there are, no doubt, blindly following the beaten track in ignorance that deliverance is possible, and they should receive with thankfulness this gospel of Mr. Hubert's. They must not, however, in their eagerness, deceive themselves with the notion that the country overflows with milk and honey,—

"... a land of pure delight
Where omelettes grow on trees
And roasted pigs go crying out,
'O eat me, if you please.'"

It is nothing of the kind. Mr. Hubert is severe on commercial men, particularly severe, for some unexplained reason, on lard merchants; but the life of the average farmer, to say nothing of the farm labourer, is as monotonous and toilsome, and fraught with as much anxiety as any city life could be. Mr. Hubert did not exchange the drudgery of the town for the drudgery of the country. His country life was carefully adjusted to combine the maximum of liberty with the minimum of toil. Fishing, hunting, and gardening were, to him, at once business and pleasure. He exchanged occupation which did not suit him for occupation which did. Persons who desire to do as he did must be persons of kindred tastes. It does not suffice that they prefer the country to the city, they must also find pleasure and not pain in country labour. Mr. Hubert does not understand how anyone can find enjoyment in what he dislikes, or can dislike things which he enjoys. He is disposed to ascribe such differences of taste to invincible ignorance. Persons who do not appreciate his ways are narrow-minded and stupid; it never strikes him that in failing to understand their tastes he marks his own limitations. He says:

"I have tried by practical lessons to convince several city friends that there is a joy about scraping the bottom of the sea for oysters, beyond anything that they could have imagined. I induced a critical friend of mine to take off his coat and work the 'tongs.' The water was pretty rough, and he had to jump about a good deal on deck in order to keep his footing. I should say that in the half hour he played at oystering he brought up 30 or 40 oysters, and he smoked cigars and threw shells into the water for the rest of the afternoon. When I met him, a month later, in the dusty, miserable city of New York, he said that he attributed queer pains in his back to that oystering experience. Some men are blind to the opportunities of this life" (pp. 38-9).

The tone of self-sufficiency prevails throughout the book. We are to take Mr. Hubert's word for it that his theory is good, not for himself alone, but for everybody else. He would have us trust his experience in preference to our own, like the amiable people who say onions and cabbage are wholesome, despite the testimony of our own stomachs and the bad odours which nature attached to those vegetables to warn men off. We may love the country as ardently as Mr. Hubert loves it, and, indeed, more consistently—for, like Lot's wife, he gives a backward glance of regret to the city—and yet find what he terms liberty is no liberty at all. For myself, while I gladly enjoy nature, wild or cultivated, I do not wish to be its valet. To prune a rose-tree may be tolerable, but to weed a garden-bed would be slavery. So, while Mr. Hubert may have done well and wisely in seeking "liberty and a living" where he did, persons differently constituted would find greater liberty in the very things which he rejected than in those which he has chosen. He would be a better apostle of the cause he advocates if he could understand this.

After all, Mr. Hubert has only just touched the great problem of labour. He has neither grappled with it nor suggested any adequate solution. The sum total of his argument is that less time should be given to mere toil and more to positive enjoyment, a proposition good as far as it goes. It may serve to awaken some men and women to the fact that the station in life in which they find themselves is not necessarily that to which God has called them, but may be a rut into which they themselves have slipped. Mr. Hubert draws no clear distinction between genuine and non-genuine work. Genuine work is that which is in the direction of a man's life. Mr. Hubert does not seem to perceive this. All he asks for himself, and suggests to others, is to get off as cheaply as possible. It does not occur to him that the work of the freeman, and not of the slave, is not task work, but itself pleasure—that the man of letters writing his books, the artist painting his pictures, the naturalist tending his plants, are thus essentially living their lives, even if incidentally they are thereby earning the wherewithal to exist. But the same offices, when performed by the mere writer and painter and gardener, partake of the nature of tasks, and are for gain, and not for growth. To a certain extent, Mr. Hubert did choose occupations which were in the direction of his life, if only in the slaughtering of birds and fishes, which so delighted him; but how little he perceives that this, if anything, is his justification, is shown when he says:

"There is no reason why other people who choose to cut loose from city life, having found its cost greater than its worth, should not employ a certain number of hours every day at the kind of work for which they happen to have a particular bent."

In other words, the kind of employment which is in the direction of their lives may, under Mr. Hubert's system, have a certain place allotted to it among the amusements and not at all in the business of life. In truth, the one serious business of life, as well as its pleasure, is this unfolding of character; and, if it were possible, men should so arrange their lives that all the hours would be thus employed. Life then would be made up, not of toil which wastes, and recreation, but of continuous and steady growth. No doubt it is difficult, and often impossible, even to approach any such unity. At best, the conscientious man has often to be contented to do honestly what he must do. While we divide not only the time of a man's work from the time of his enjoyment, but actually have a class of persons who absorb the leisure and are degraded for want of work, and another class who absorb the toil, and are degraded for want of joy, we seem far off indeed from the ideal state. And not legislation, nor trades' unionism, nor any arbitrary action will ever bring that ideal state to pass. It must come—as indeed all genuine reform does and always will come—from the effort of the individual. In our existing social state it cannot be universally, perhaps not even extensively applied. Yet even now there are not a few men and women who, if only they would set about it properly, with due perseverance and patience, might achieve, for themselves at least, the requisite conditions. Mr. Hubert was in a fair way toward achieving them if he had understood them thoroughly. As it is, his protest is against an all-absorbing interest in trade, which gives over life to the effort to provide the means of living, and leaves no time to live. He does not see that there is no more true living in casual pleasure than in unfitting toil. At the most, he relegates his living to the second place, and differs only in degree from those whom he condemns. He has changed his mode, not with a view to some truer development of his being, but in order to squeeze a little more comfort out of existence. The very man whom he despises because he knew the prices of lard in all the markets of the world, and who was really, no doubt, an enterprising and successful merchant, was probably, if Mr. Hubert could but see it, working more in the direction of his life than, even under the reformed conditions, Mr. Hubert is working himself.

A few considerations by the way which present themselves in connexion with Mr. Hubert's experiment deserve to be noted. Possibly if the country tasks which Mr. Hubert finds so much to his mind had been undertaken, not voluntarily, but under some such compulsion as aforetime held him to his city tasks, he would have found them not so sweet. In respect to these country tasks he thinks it much pleasanter, and tries to make out that it is much more virtuous, to do his own killing than to earn enough money in other ways "to buy blue fish for the whole summer." If a disagreeable task has to be done, it is not well to cast it upon another; but the source of Mr. Hubert's pride is not that he bravely takes the burden himself, but that it is one of the pleasures of his life to perform that species of butchering which is termed hunting and fishing. He says, in effect, "Why should I pay another man to kill these birds, and animals, and fishes, when it is such enjoyment to me to kill them myself?" No doubt the social ethics on this point are a little mixed. The butcher in a blue frock, who, for pay, serves the community by doing its gruesome work in the slaughter-house, does not rank high in the social scale; while the butcher in a red or green jacket, who terms himself a huntsman and kills for the love of it, gets all the admiration. Mr. Hubert is severe on persons with a "vicious warp" who rob their neighbours "in the finesses of trade," but is wholly blind to the "vicious warp" of him who wantonly robs his humbler neighbours of their very lives. On the whole, Mr. Hubert's excessive self-satisfaction should make us cautious in accepting him as a guide. He is never quite free from the impression that what he does is at once meritorious and daring. He feels pride akin to that of members of Sunday Societies who, fancying they are bold and a little naughty, enjoy on Sunday entertainments which on any authorised day of the week they would despise.

WALTER LEWIN.

NEW NOVELS.

An Australian Girl. In 3 vols. (Bentley.)

Recha. By Dorothea Gerard. (Blackwood.)

A South Sea Lover. By Alfred St. Johnston. (Macmillan.)

Princess Fedor's Pledge, and other Stories. By G. Manville Fenn. (Hutchinson.)

With Fire and Sword. By Henrik Sienkiewicz. (Sampson Low.)

The Odd Number. Translated by Jonathan Sturges from Guy de Maupassant. (Harper's.)

In God's Way. By Björnsterne Björnson. (Heinemann.)

THE author of An Australian Girl has no need to shelter herself—for the book bears many signs of a woman's work—in anonymity. If it be her first literary venture, it may be said at once that she shows exceptional promise; the very crudeness of the way in which the story is piloted through perilous straits of speculative thought and out of morasses of intellectual padding has something fresh and interesting about it. Is it doing an injustice to the author, however, to hint that she had better work out a plot of her own than adopt with such liberal indifference to the proprieties that of another Australian writer? It is not long since I reviewed in the ACADEMY Tasma's latest novel, and it is difficult to believe that An Australian Girl is not markedly indebted to its rival. The resemblance between the stories is at times startling. Possibly both novelists may have been competing in a prize Temperance story; or both may have been nearly simultaneously inspired by the desire to paint the dark side of matrimony under the Southern Cross. But, indeed, the supremely civilised, intellectually blase young girl of the Antipodes, is beginning to pall upon one; and as for the young male Australian of fiction, with his mind and soul centred upon horse-racing and split brandies-and-sodas, his appalling ignorance, vulgarity, and slang, he threatens to become as deadly a bore as one of Ouida's Antinous-like young men, or the three-volume Irish patriot. Australia is not wholly given over to male Vandals and female angels. It is even possible to be enthusiastic about the Melbourne Cup without gambling madly or getting drunk on the ground, to be an untravelled native of Victoria or New South Wales without such colossal ignorance as to think Rome a village somewhere in Italy, "the place d'ye know, where they race bare-backed horses through the streets." It is annoying in An Australian Girl to come across constant reminders of the scenes, episodes, and conversations in Tasma's novel. Why does not so clever a person as the author undoubtedly is attempt something outside the well-worn grooves? Her story is inordinately long, and all praise is due to it, therefore, that on the whole it is not dull. Most readers will skip about a third of the book. Their interest will be with the human beings whose passions and heroisms, vices and weaknesses, weave so complicated a web, not with the philosophical and religious imaginings of the heroine. People who delight in literature of the Robert Elsmere class may be recommended to the equally mild and sedately stimulative diet of the latest of the multitude of books, of which there is a common recipe: one-tenth genuine story, one-tenth genuine analysis of real human nature, two to three-tenths description, one-tenth quotation from and allusion to contemporary scientists and philosophers, and the remaining four or five-tenths diluted sentimentalism. An Australian Girl is not, however, exactly thus compounded. It has glaring faults of construction and style, a few of the usual slips when foreign authors are quoted or alluded to (e.g., "St. Beuve"), and a tiresome discursiveness. But the author has unmistakable literary faculty, dramatic insight, a quick eye for character, a wide and generous sympathy, and, above all, a really charming faculty of humour. It will probably, and in the main deservedly, be the most popular of the many Australian novels which have appeared recently.

The clever writer of Orthodox and joint author of Reata has occupied herself with one of the favourite themes of romancers since European fiction had its rise, that of the love of a Jewish maiden for a Gentile youth, crossed by the passionate avarice and yet more passionate racial fanaticism of a paternal Shylock. It is no exaggeration, however, to say that no one has more powerfully dealt with this worn tragic motive than Miss Gerard has done, with the single exception of the creator of the most typical Jew in literature. The drift of Recha may be gathered from the statement that it is a modern and adapted prose version of "The Merchant of Venice." Gedeile Wolf is a veritable Shylock, as merciless and cruel and fanatical, yet with as passionate a love for his beautiful daughter, Recha, as his prototype had for Jessica. The hero, Lieutenant Borkam, a young officer in the Austrian army, is an admirably drawn character, though, perhaps, only those who have lived in Austria could understand the rigorous thralldom of social-military despotism. The story, as sombre and tragic as any could be, is told with remarkable power and dramatic vigour. The little Galician town of Horoweska is not once fully described, and yet is made real to the reader; and as for the three chief persons in the tragedy, Gedeile Wolf, Recha, and Theodor Borkam, they stand out startlingly human and actual. Recha is a Jewess almost without a sister in literature, for she is as distinct from Jessica of Venice as from Rebecca of England. She is as real, perhaps more real than they, though a rarer type. Recha is the strongest book Miss Dorothea Gerard has given us. It is, perhaps, the one work in the mass of contemporary fiction which Nathaniel Hawthorne might have written. The mysterious, unexplained end of Borkam, the wild madness of Recha, and the savage fury, sullen triumph, and consuming despair of Gedeile Wolf (vaguely indicated rather than expressed), are altogether in the vein of the greatest of American prose writers.

No greater contrast to the ordinary novel could be afforded than by the unconventional, picturesque, and charming romance of Polynesian love and adventure which Mr. Alfred St. Johnston has just published. There has been nothing of the kind for a moment comparable with it since the once widely and now too-little read Pacific romances of Herman Melville. It would naturally be expected that the author of Camping among Cannibals would give a vivid account of the remote lands he has the good fortune to know so well; but no amount of mere familiarity would have enabled him to write this moving romance, so touching in its pathos, so fine in its sentiment, so filled with the joy and beauty of life. At this time, when all of us who can are hurrying away to remote places by sea or mountain, there could be no better companion than this delightful story. It is itself a tonic, and one that may be enjoyed again and again, for there are many episodes and passages in the book which do not lose their freshness on perusal, but, like sprays of wild-gale, are likely to gain more and more in rare fragrance. The friendship, the blood-brotherhood of the Polynesian chief Soma and Christian North is one of those happy things in life which makes cynicism seem like miasma.

Mr. Manville Fenn is an accomplished story-teller, so it is hardly necessary to say that this second volume of the "Idle Hour" series affords ample pleasant material for whiling away an hour or so. Each of the eight tales in the collection is effectively told, though probably most readers will agree that the book was wisely named after the first, which is much the most thrilling. The dénouement is startling even to the wariest reader of stories of mysterious crime, though Princess Fedor's Pledge is not really strengthened by the supernatural episode which passes as a "warning."

There seems to be no end to the translations which publishers are now issuing—

Too large a proportion of these consists of books that are next to worthless in the original, and are quite worthless, or worse, in English dress. But we are all grateful, or pretend to be, for the Russian works which are now so common, and certainly all who are interested in Slavonic literature should read With Fire and Sword. This interminably long and confused story of the Russo-Polish wars is affirmed to be the masterpiece of Henryk Sienkiewicz, the foremost of contemporary Polish novelists. It is certainly instructive, and to many will be interesting; but the dull savagery of the countless incidents of war, brigandage, spoliation, cruelty, and rude vices, must pall even upon those who rejoice in bloodthirstiness at second hand. To the student of the history of Poland and of Slavonic evolution the work is really valuable.

The effect is extraordinary when one puts down With Fire and Sword (which is much cruder than War and Peace, or any other work by Tolstoi, with whom Sienkiewicz is favourably compared by his countrymen), and takes up the dainty volume of short tales translated by Mr. Jonathan Sturges from the French of Guy de Maupassant. One would think that if there were any French author whose works would defy adequate rendering in English it would be Guy de Maupassant; but Mr. Sturges, by sympathy and literary insight and a rare sense of style, has been able to produce a book which is quite a triumph of its kind. One may read the thirteen short tales comprised under the title given them on account of their number, and not only enjoy the fresh fruit, but almost, as with the Tangerine orange, the fragrance of the rind as well—in other words, Mr. Sturges has in some subtle way presented these tales anew, as M. Guy de Maupassant might do were he able to write with the same absolute craftsmanship in English as in French. This is high praise, but Mr. Sturges's charming volume deserves it; and thoroughly fine translations are even rarer than is commonly supposed.

Mr. Heinemann could scarcely have done better than begin his "International Library" with perhaps the most masterly work by the famous Norwegian novelist, Bjørnstjerne Bjørnson. In God's Way combines, as Mr. Gosse points out in his introductory note, the freshness and morning-glow of Synnöve Solbakken and Arne, with the searching thought and profound grasp of the deeper realities of life which characterise the author's later works. Arne has long had its place as a classic, even in this country: In God's Way should prove not less popular. With all due admiration for Dostoevsky and the ablest of his confrères among the pessimists, I cannot but think it would be a better sign if Bjørnstjerne Bjørnson were to become the vogue. It is not so much a question of optimism versus pessimism as of perfect sanity of mind and body as against baffling weariness, disease, and despair. We have much to learn from a writer like Dostoevsky: perhaps we have a really deeper and worthier lesson to learn from men like Bjørnson.

WILLIAM SHARP.

NOTES AND NEWS.

MISS OLIVE SCHREINER'S book of allegories, entitled Dreams, will not, as it has been announced, be published by Messrs. Blackwood, but by Mr. Fisher Unwin. The volume will contain "Three Dreams in a Desert," "The Sunlight Lay Across My Bed," "The Lost Joy," "In a Far-off World," "The Artist's Secret," "In a Ruined Chapel," "The Hunter" (from The Story of an African Farm), and one or two others. Several of the allegories have never been printed.

WE are glad to learn that a fourth edition of Miss Blind's translation of The Journal of Marie Bashkirtseff will be ready in a few days.

THE first edition of Mr. Havelock Ellis's New Spirit is nearly exhausted, and the publisher, Mr. George Bell, will shortly issue the book in a cheap form.

THE next volume of the "Book Lover's Library," which is nearly ready for publication, will be by Mr. William C. Hazlitt, and will be entitled Studies in Jocular Literature.

AN article on Johnson's Boswell in the forthcoming number of the Universal Review will be illustrated by a reproduction of a sketch by Dr. Johnson, taken under interesting circumstances. It seems that at the age of seventy-five he paid a visit to his old friend Dr. Adams in Oxford. While there an artist brought home a portrait of Dr. Adams, and offered to give his daughter a sketch of anything she might wish. She asked for a portrait of Dr. Johnson, who agreed to sit; "but," cried he, "you must stand before me to make me look pleasant, for I am but a sour-looking old man."

MR. R. L. STEVENSON has reprinted, as a shilling pamphlet (Chatto & Windus), his letter to the Rev. Mr. Hyde, of Honolulu, which appeared in the Scots Observer. Mr. Stevenson, who is always inspiring, is singularly inspiring as a new Junius.

MESSRS. NEWCOME & Co's catalogue of Autograph Letters contains some very interesting extracts from letters by Disraeli, Coleridge, Carlyle, Burns, &c. Perhaps the most curious entries are the three letters of Disraeli to the son of Daniel O'Connell. "I fervently pray," says the furious writer, "that you or some one of his blood may attempt to avenge the unextinguishable hatred with which I shall pursue his existence."

THE ever-increasing appreciation of Charles Lamb and his works, so creditable to the taste of our generation, has led not only to the production of an admirable edition of what he did write, but also to attempts to foist on the public, as his, stuff—and very poor stuff too—which he did not write. The best way to stamp out such mercenary frauds is to collect and reprint as much of the genuine article as possible, and as few men wrote so little that deserved oblivion, it is pleasant to learn that a little collection of inedited pieces, well authenticated internally and externally, is in preparation. It is to be named, we believe, "Lamb's Fry," a title not perhaps inappropriate, but of the catch-penny order, which will only be excused for the sake of what it covers.

"THE death of Mr. J. W. Watson, author of 'Beautiful Snow,'" says the New York Critic, in its vivacious manner, "has reminded the public that the poem really had a bona-fide author. At one time it looked as if everybody had written it; everybody, or almost everybody, claimed to have done so; and though comparatively few proved their right to be considered its author, the popular mind was pretty badly muddled by their conflicting claims. Mr. Watson was buried on July 21 from the undertaking rooms of W. H. Hawks, 8, Sixth-avenue."

THE fascinating subject of Virgil in the Middle Ages has just been dealt with, from a special standpoint by M. J. Stecher in his paper La Légende de Virgile en Belgique, published in the transactions of the Académie Royale of Belgium.

THE first edition of Primavera, the book of Oxford verses which we review this week, is already nearly exhausted. One is pleased to find that there is still some sale, once in a while, for something so quiet and unpretentious and really literary as this little book of mere poetry.

THE Rev. J. E. Stocks, formerly Vicar of Market Harborough, is editing the Market Harborough Parish Records, some of which are of considerable interest. The first volume, now ready, contains a topographical and historical introduction. The publisher is Mr. Elliot Stock.

IN The Library for August Mr. John Taylor concludes his paper on the Monastic Scriptorium, and Mr. W. E. A. Axon brings to an end his study of Thomas Taylor the Platonist, of whose publications he gives a bibliography. Is this bibliography quite complete? Mr. Charles Welch makes a contribution towards the history of the London civic guilds in his bibliography of the livery companies of London.

AN International Book Exhibition was opened at Anvers, the city of Plantin, on Sunday last, in connexion with the Conférence Internationale du Livre. The exhibits are divided into nine sections, and include books, types, printing and stereotyping machines; presses employed in lithography, engraving, and other methods of artistic reproduction; binding, ink, paper, and, in fact, everything connected with the making of books.

ANOTHER congress—that of the federated societies of History and Archaeology—was opened at Liège on August 3. There have been discussions on questions prehistoric, archaeological, historic, and artistic, and, after the manner of learned associations, delightful excursions to all the places of interest in the neighbourhood.

THE Library Journal of New York makes the sensible suggestion that librarians who take in the New English Dictionary in parts would do well to bind each volume, not in the covers supplied by the publisher, but in two separate parts. "If not divided, the volumes will not stand library use so well, they will be very tiring to use, and they can be used by only half as many persons at once."

WE have received the first number of a new series of The British Bookmaker, a trade periodical printed and published at Leicester. The number before us is extremely pleasant to look at and to handle, though we cannot say much for the literary value of its contents. But there is distinct merit in the reproduction of book-covers and book-illustrations, some of them done in colours. Not the least interesting part of the periodical consists in its prettily-printed advertisements of printers and binders. A portrait of Zaehnsdorf accompanies a brief article on the well-known binder.

THE Palestine Exploration Fund issues to its subscribers photographs of the Moabite Stone, the vase found in a crevice at the foundation of the south-east corner of the Temple area, and the tablet from Herod's Temple, with a facsimile of the Siloam inscription. All the inscriptions are accompanied by translations.

VISITORS to the Western Pyrenees from August 9 to 17 will have an opportunity of joining a series of literary festivals on the occasion of a visit of the Provençal Cigaliers and Félibres to their Gascon brethren. The fêtes begin at Agen, August 9 and 10, with a commemoration of Jasmin and Cortète de Prades; continue on the 11th at Montauban; on the 12th, at Auch; on the 13th, at Tarbes and Bagnères de Bigorre; on the 14th at Argelès and St. Savin, in honour of D'Espourrins; on the 15th at Pau, where the prize poems will be recited; on the 16th at Oloron, where a bust of X. Navarrot will be inaugurated; and lastly at San Sebastian, on the 17th, where, among other entertainments, a bull fight will be given in welcome of the Cigaliers, Félibres, and their guests. It is singular that one of the truest of Gascon poets, Justin Larrebat, of Biarritz, is not mentioned on this list.

In the review of Mr. Thackeray's Translation from Prudentius, which appeared in the ACADEMY of August 2, the stanzas quoted from Cath. 1 were wrongly ascribed to Mr. Bridges. They are by Mr. Thackeray.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

ANEMONES.

If anything be like to her
Or unto her may likened be
From all the book of nature, 'twere
A frail anemone.

Which though it have no secret grace
To charm its petals, as the rose,
Hath yet, methinks, a sweeter face
Than any flower that blows.

In April's rosy palms it shrinks,
And still while skylarks newly sing
It blooms and fades, and fondly thinks That Spring is ever Spring.

And who would ask to eke its days
And mar its vernal happiness
With hours adroop 'neath parching rays
Or snowstorm pitiless?

And would I her lithe form should bide
For crippled age, her balmy breath
Know winter's chill, that so hath died
Before a thought of death?

G. E. T.

OBITUARY.

MADAME ACKERMANN.

THE death is announced, at the age of 73, of a French poetess, not very widely known to-day, either in this country or her own—Mme. Ackermann, née Louise Victorine Choquet, widow of Prof. Paul Ackermann, at one time the tutor of the Emperor Frederick. Mme. Ackermann was born at Paris, Nov. 13, 1813. Her father was a Voltairian, her mother a devout Catholic, and the girl passed through alternate periods of religious ecstasy and freethought. At school she wrote verses which were corrected by Victor Hugo. She learnt English and German, and studied Shakspeare and Byron, Goethe and Schiller, and, more especially, Schopenhauer, to whose influence may be attributed some of the pessimism which so strongly marks her work. In 1840 she met Paul Ackermann at Berlin. They were married, and lived at Berlin until Ackermann's death in 1846. After some years spent at Paris, where in 1855 she published a volume of Contes, Mme. Ackermann retired to Nice. While there she published, among other books, "Poésies," 1877; "Pensées d'une solitaire, précédé d'une autobiographie," 1883; and "Ma Vie," 1885. It was at Nice that she died. For a long time past she had written nothing. "Le poète qu'on n'écoute pas finit par se taire," was her bitter saying. Her audience, in truth, was never very large, but it was select; and she was honoured, in that select circle, as the most remarkable woman of letters since George Sand. Her poetry is not of the kind that can be popular; she was too deeply moved against "la caprice divine" and its disarrangement of human things to write smoothly of smooth topics. Her poetry is the poetry of modern science and of modern despair.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

IN the two quarterly numbers of the Altpreussische Monatsschrift for the present year (Bd. xxvii., Heft 1 and 2 and Heft 3 and 4), Dr. Krumboltz concludes his account of how Samagitia was lost to the Teutonic order through the energy of the Lithuanian prince Witold and of King Jagellon (1382-1422). J. Bolta communicates passages from three farces or interludes acted at Königsberg in 1644 to celebrate the first centenary of the university. These pieces, interesting both to the linguist and the sociologist (in Heft 1 and 2), are the subject of additional explanations from the pen of J. Sembrzycki, who also concludes his paper on the state of the Marienburg under Polish rule. From A. Treichel there are three papers: one (in Heft 1 and 2), to show that the pepper so often occurring as an item in the dues paid to mediaeval Prussian rulers was the black pepper, treated almost as a kind of money; another, giving rhymes and riddles in dialect from Ermeland; and a third, enumerating a few Prussian terms dating from the French occupation in the beginning of the present century. In the same number as these (Heft 3 and 4), H. Frischbier contributes a few legends from the folk-lore of East Prussia. Dr. E. Arnoldt discourses in both numbers on the origin, motives, and gradual growth of Kant's lectures on anthropology and physical geography. Starting from some remarks by B. Erdmann (in his Kant's Reflexionen), which, with native plainness of speech, he describes as "partly false, partly groundless assertions," he brings forward from the university archives a large amount of material for the history of Kant's career as a lecturer, and of his conception of anthropology as a sort of popular and practical introduction—an exoteric side—to philosophy. The numbers contain the usual complement of reviews, bibliography, and university notices: among the latter an abstract of the resolution awarding an Hon. Ph.D. to an old alumnus of Königsberg, Emin Pasha.

IT is to be feared that F. G. S. Trébutien is what M. Maurice Tournoux calls him in the opening article of Le Livre Moderne for July—an érudit oublié, yet it ought not to be difficult for any person really well acquainted with modern French literature to brush up some memory of him. He was the critical and erudite member of that small but remarkable Norman group (though "group" is too formal and connected a word for it) which includes the Guérins and the late M. Barbey d'Aurevilly. What else there is to say about him M. Tournoux has said; and the article is illustrated by a fine and decidedly formidable portrait, which might be that of an Inquisitor. The editor (we presume) follows with a lively but rather capricious débinage of certain recent éditions de luxe, and there is the usual amount of current news, including three necrological notes of interest on the critic Burty, the binder Cuzin, and the publisher Marpon.

LETTERS, IN PART UNPUBLISHED, OF SAMUEL PEPYS.

I.

Oxford: July 25, 1890.

THE following letters are transcribed from the originals preserved in the Ballard and Tanner Collections of MSS. in the Bodleian Library. They have never been printed as a series, few have been printed as Pepys wrote them, and several have never been printed at all. They throw some light on Oxford literary history at an interesting time, as well as on the tastes and pursuits of the great Diarist. They are in all cases holograph, and are taken from the copies actually received by Charlett, the Master of University, and Thomas Tanner, the famous antiquary, afterwards Bishop of St. Asaph.

C. E. DOBLE.

Ballard Letters, Vol. I., fol. 133.

SAMUEL PEPYS TO DR. CHARLETT.*

Yorke-Buildings, Crast. Mich. 1693.

Sr,—I owne wth all the thankfulness I am able your Favours shew'n mee when here, & those you pursue them with from Oxford. Nor had I taken all this Time for doing soe, had I beene earlyer instructed how to direct my selfe to you in it; your being come to Oxford remaying uncertaine to mee, till you were pleased to tell it mee in yours of y<sup>e</sup> 28th curr<sup>t</sup>.

Your Heads, even to Mother George's,† are a very wellcome Addition to my Collection, & accordingly it must acknowledge you its Benefactor; but tis confident enough at y<sup>e</sup> same time to call you its Debtor too, for Dr. Hamond's, Dundee's, Dr. Fell, Allestry & Dolben's, & I thinke for Mr. Woods, & Dr. Pocock's. Forgive y<sup>e</sup> clammynesse of my Memory on this Occasion; for I can't help laying up every word y<sup>e</sup> sounds that Way, and much lesse can I forgett Names like these, y<sup>e</sup> want of which (if to bee had) were alone enough to blaste all I pretend to in it.

I cannot therefore bee ashamed to pray your ayde in reference to them, if within y<sup>e</sup> power; or direction, whither else I may apply my selfe for them, if they are not: For in all my Searches after this Commodity I doe not remember that any one of them ever occur'd to mee in this whole Towne; Nor of y<sup>e</sup> owne, neither, which I would lesse bee without then my owne; if your good Will to mankind has at any time beene strong enough to obtaigne of you a Graving of it.

I haue a particular sett of thanks to pay you for y<sup>e</sup> Vniversity Prints, I meane, those of Loggan's Worke, not to bee found in y<sup>e</sup> Ordinary Volume of them; wherinto I haue therefore caused them to bee inserted, & thereby through your Kindnesse rendered it much more valuable to mee.

Your late Publique Exercises‡ are what I haue last to give you my acknowledgem<sup>ts</sup> for, and that you thinke soe much more gently of my Gusto towards them, then that of our excellent Capitaine Hatton's. In which nevertheless I shall adventure upon disappointing you soe farr, as to respite y<sup>e</sup> giving you any Ayme at my Thoughts of them, till I can at y<sup>e</sup> same time entertainge you with his too.

The Account you give mee of Mr. Wood's Noe-Mortification, & the further Kicke hee meanes to expose his Teeth to from y<sup>e</sup> Heels of Truth, makes mee yet more Covetous of his Picture, if it bee to bee had. For hee is in more senses then one An Original, but such a One, as I can much better beare the being without, then y<sup>e</sup> copy.

I would to God your next would tell mee of something this Towne could enable mee to furnish you with, in exchange for all or any part of this; & beshrew your good Nature if you know what, & doe not. For you will force me elee to what of most earthly things I would least willingly doe, I meane, unbespeake y<sup>e</sup> continuance of a Kindnesse I cannot repay. . . . I haue recover'd my Mistake, since I made it, in applying Loggan's Name to y<sup>e</sup> Workes of Burgher; for w<sup>ch</sup> I pray your pardon. . . .

FOL. 137.—THE SAME TO THE SAME.

Oct. 21, 1693.

Sr,—You haue noe lesse surpris'd, then oblig'd mee, by y<sup>e</sup> account of y<sup>e</sup> Torquils spoken of in y<sup>e</sup> most courteous Lett<sup>r</sup> of Yesterday. Indeed it is a great Rarity; & great pity it is, that it carrys noe stricter Marks of its Age and Origine. I haue noe where mett with anything antique of y<sup>e</sup> Kinde, * An imperfect draft of this letter is printed in Pepys' Diary and Corresp. (ed. Warne), p. 662.

† See Oxoniana, i. 111.

‡ See Diary and Corresp., pp. 661 sq.

nor am on y<sup>e</sup> suddaine præpared for makeing any warrantable guesse concerning it; y<sup>e</sup> most ancient & most akin to it of all that I haue seen being a Chaine of y<sup>e</sup> same metall of abt 600 Yeare old, taken out of Edw<sup>d</sup> y<sup>e</sup> Confess<sup>r</sup>'s Monum<sup>t</sup> at Westminster by a Workeman, at y<sup>e</sup> cleanseing it against K. James my unhappy Maister's Coronation. Who was pleased to shew it mee afterw<sup>d</sup>, with y<sup>e</sup> Veneration given to Reliques, & a Relique of some kinde or other it carry'd with it in a small gold Box in forme of a Crucifix pendulous to it. Virgil's Words seeme as apposite, as had they beene wrott on purpose; but halfe their Number inscrib'd upon y<sup>e</sup> thing it selfe, or even their Initiaill Letters only, might haue stood us in more stedd towards its true History, then as many more soe taken upp. If y<sup>e</sup> Vniversity bee not a customer for it (which I could heartily wish it were) Wee shall probably heare of it at London, where I will not bee long without seeing it, and bewaile this Double-Taxeing that won't lett mee doe more towards it.

For god's sake forgive my betraying my selfe beyond that degree of freedome with you as to pursue you in y<sup>e</sup> Matter of y<sup>e</sup> Prints soe farr beyond what in good Manners I ought or would haue done, had I not thought they had beene entirely in y<sup>e</sup> owne Power. The best amends I can offer you is, my Thankes for those you haue found for mee, & in peticular for the 2 you now send mee of Dundee & Mr Wood (both which I should otherwise, I doubt, haue wanted) & your Quietus against any further Claimes from mee, as hoping (now you haue given mee the sent) to hunt out y<sup>e</sup> rest my selfe, either with Widdow Loggan, or where else they may bee lesse expected.

Because 'tis possible (& that's all) that you may bee in earnest about my Booke,* I shan't contend, but obey you soone in it; in hopes of haueing something (one of these Days) that may better justify my offering to y<sup>e</sup> Library [without] askeing, then this with it. . . . If y<sup>e</sup> Bargaine does not goe on with y<sup>e</sup> Vniversity, pray give mee y<sup>e</sup> opinion of y<sup>e</sup> Value of it, & y<sup>e</sup> lowest Termes you might haue had it at; this Age not being very prolifique of Custom<sup>s</sup> for such a Comodity, not in England at least.

FOL. 140.—THE SAME TO THE SAME.†

Yorke-Buildings: Aug. 4, 1694.

Sr,—Would you haue my acknowledgem<sup>t</sup>s rise thicker, you must bee contented to sow y<sup>e</sup> Favours thinner. For it is to that alone you owe your haueing noe sooner had my thankes, First, for y<sup>e</sup> Poems brought mee by Dr Lloyd, & my like Returne to y<sup>e</sup> Gentleman your robb'd of them, to whom both in Memory of his learned Father (my honour'd friend) & for his owne virtues, I am, as I ought to bee, a most humble Servant.

Your Specimen of Musick-Characters‡ (wh<sup>ch</sup> I should alsoe haue long since thank'd you for) is very agreeable, y<sup>e</sup> Notes cleane, and what must appeare Gracefull, when y<sup>e</sup> Word-Part shall bee added in a Letter suitable. Whereof if you chance to make a Prooffe, before you enter (for good & all) upon your design'd volume of Church-Musick, pray pleasure mee with y<sup>e</sup> sight of it. And in y<sup>e</sup> meane time, lett this serve mee to ground a Question upon; Whither Mr ViceChancellr (whose Honor I truly am) or You, haue ever seene (for I never had, nor heard of, but for our Poore Small-Cole Man§) I meane, the Mother Canon establish'd by K. Edw<sup>d</sup> 6th for answering the Rubricks in our Liturgie, where some parts of the Offices are left to y<sup>e</sup> Priest's Elec<sup>c</sup>ion, whither to bee Sayd or Sung. If not; there is a decent and not unharmonick playnesse in it, what would not displease you. But I haue never mett wth any of our Cathedrall-Men, even y<sup>e</sup> oldest among them, Dr. Child, Gibbons, or other, that could tell mee any thing of it, though they owe theyr dayly Bread to it.

Mr Gibson* speakes too well of my usage of him; hee haueing a Right of his owne to much better; besides the Over-Measure your Name entitles him to, & not him only, but all that doe mee the Honor of using it to mee.

Among the many Mortifications deriv'd on mee from my Sin of Jacobitisme, it is noe little one to haue had the handling of soe great a Curiosity as y<sup>e</sup> Torquis, without capacity of bidding (as Time was, I should haue done) for y<sup>e</sup> Propriety of it.

Cap<sup>t</sup> Hattont† haue honor'd mee with his Visitt; & the Delivery of y<sup>e</sup> last obligeing Letter & y<sup>e</sup> Print accompanying it. It joyes mee to see anything of that Aspect going on. God encrease them.

I learne from him how oppressively good you are to mee, while to y<sup>e</sup> Debt you haue already drawne mee into to your selfe, you goe on to render it yet lesse superable, by running mee upon a new Score in Mr ViceChancellr's Bookes; the Captaine telling mee how much I am oweing by y<sup>e</sup> meanes for Civilitys even there, where I durst not before haue reckon'd my selfe soe much as knowne. Pray give the Vicechancellr my most sensible acknowledgem<sup>t</sup>s for them, and an Assurance of my being his most obed<sup>t</sup> Servant. But for any other Stile of Payment, you must answer for mee to him y<sup>e</sup> selfe; for you know, I can't.

Now for y<sup>e</sup> noble Worke you Virtuosi of Oxford are upon, of enriching our English World with y<sup>e</sup> knowledge of a Wealth it is it selfe Mr of, & does not yet know it, I meane, it's Manuscripts;‡ I doe entirely subscribe to you, as to y<sup>e</sup> Dignity & Importance of y<sup>e</sup> Undertakeing, making it my every-Day's Duty to propagate y<sup>e</sup> Opinion of it, & am most ready to contribute whatever (if any thing) I haue, worthy of a place in it. I say, if any thing; because from the excesse of Expectations you seeme to haue from mee, I hold it but necessary to sett you right in them, by observeing to you; That being (God knows) not only noe praetender to, much lesse Professor of, any of the learned Facultys, but on y<sup>e</sup> Contrary, a Person knowne to haue pass'd y<sup>e</sup> greater & more docible part of my Life, in one unintermitted Cours, or rather Tumult of Businesse, I haue had very little Selfe-Leasure to read, & as few Temptations therefore, as Opportunities of lookeing-out for Curiosities on any other Head, then that whereto I haue thus singly beene given-up, I meane y<sup>e</sup> Sea; i.e., for soe much of it as may bee thought to haue beene of use to mee in the Service of my Royall Maisters & Country, namely, y<sup>e</sup> History, Laws, & Economy of its Navy. And a just Reproach I should thinke it of to mee, to haue one Hole found unsearcht by mee, or knowingly to haue fayl'd of rendering my selfe Maister of any one written Sheete, that either Paines or Price could helpe mee to, on that Subject. But how farr a Masse of Papers, for y<sup>e</sup> most part unconnected, & those out of any of y<sup>e</sup> trodden Roads of common Reading, can bee thought convertible to publick use, I must acknowledge I cannot see, nor consequently (as numerous as theyr Volumes are) how any thing can bee added by them to y<sup>e</sup> Weight, whatever they may doe to y<sup>e</sup> Number, of y<sup>e</sup> Collection.

Nevertheless, that you may not suspect y<sup>e</sup> simplicity of my meaning herein; I shall within a little Time, finde Leasure to digest and communicate to you, a just Catalogue of what I haue; in confidence of your not exposing it elsewhere, till by y<sup>e</sup> Returne of it with y<sup>e</sup> Remarques what thereof (if ought) you judge proper for your Presse, you give mee opportunity of reviewing it.

But for Com'on-Good, I must in the meane time lodge with you, what I too frequently finde throwne in my way, & (if not removed) may I doubt in many places prævayle to y<sup>e</sup> injury of y<sup>e</sup> Vnder-takeing. Namely, y<sup>e</sup> Burthen that ('tis apprehend'd)

* Edmund Gibson, afterwards Bishop of Lincoln and London: Diary and Corresp., 675, &c.

† Well known among the nonjurors. See Hattont Corresp. (Camden Soc., 1878), i. 60 and passim.

‡ The reference is of course to that great work, Catalogi librorum manuscriptorum Angliæ et Hiberniæ in unum collecti (Oxford, 1697, folio). Cf. Macray's Annals of the Bodleian Library (1868), p. 117; and The Cataloguing of MSS. in the Bodleian Library, A Letter, by the outgoing junior proctor (Oxford, 1890).

will arise from it, to those Gentlemen alone & Societys, whose more forward Affections for Learning shall prompt them to y<sup>e</sup> exposing of theyr Catalogues, through y<sup>e</sup> Vnreasonable Importunitys (& Interruptions too, where a Man is his owne only Library-Keeper) it must subject them to, from Persons, who by concealing theyr owne, shall stopp all expectations of amends for y<sup>e</sup> trouble they give us for Ours, by any reciprocall Use of Theyrs.

This I finde sticking with many Gentlemen, who I am sure are noe worse affected to y<sup>e</sup> Designe then our selves. Wherefore, You who haue employ'd most Thoughts upon this matter, & can best instruct mee to remove it, pray doe. For till you furnish mee with a better; the best expedient Expedient [sic] I can thinke of is, The haueing some more solemne Notification made of what's a doing, then y<sup>e</sup> World seemes to haue yet had of it. And that done; I shall (as to my particular) thinke my selfe absolv'd from any obligation of communicateing ought of y<sup>e</sup> Little I am likely to bee found Maister of, upon any other Condition, then that of y<sup>e</sup> Demandant's accomodateing mee with what I shall aske as an Equivalent, either out of his owne, or (by his procurement) out of any other of y<sup>e</sup> Catalogues contain'd in y<sup>e</sup> Collection. I most respectfully kisse y<sup>e</sup> hands, & am [&c.] I minde y<sup>e</sup> Question touching my Friend M<sup>r</sup> Evelyn's Stock, & S<sup>r</sup> R<sup>d</sup> Brown's.

FOL. 144.—THE SAME TO THE SAME.

Octobr 27, 1694.

Sr,—I haue had y<sup>e</sup> Hon<sup>r</sup> of yours of y<sup>e</sup> 23<sup>d</sup>, & full glad it made mee; as being a pleasure, I haue beene long without, saving what I tooke-up in y<sup>e</sup> roome of it, I meane, my Hope, that this Sum<sup>r</sup>'s Recess might bee of benefit to you, & consequently to your friends, all the Yeare round; & I should bee at a yett greater ease, to heare it confirm'd from y<sup>e</sup> selfe.

I did in y<sup>e</sup> absence communicate to Mr. Gibson my pittance of Manuscripts, & because you will still haue it soe, shall cause a copy to bee out of hand transcrib'd, & send it you. But yet under not one jott lesse Caution, then what I first sayd; of your not permitting it to goe out of y<sup>e</sup> owne hand, till you haue return'd it back into mine, with y<sup>e</sup> politicall as well as philologicall Expurgations; that I may my selfe see it haue y<sup>e</sup> benefit of them, & by it alsoe make you a sharer with mee in y<sup>e</sup> Reproaches it may meet with, before I give it you for good and all. But I had hoped, that Mr. Gibson would haue cured you of these præpossessiones concerning it; soe as to haue prevented y<sup>e</sup> enquiring any more after it. For that was y<sup>e</sup> use I propos'd to my selfe in calling him to y<sup>e</sup> over-lookeing it.

I like mightily y<sup>e</sup> setting y<sup>e</sup> Burin* to worke within y<sup>e</sup> selves, y<sup>e</sup> Prooffe you haue sent mee of its first Essays, shewing mee sufficiently, how well it meritts y<sup>e</sup> Cultivateing. And there is nothing I can thinke of, capable of rendering you more delight, as well as solid Service (I could almost say, Printing it selfe) then the haueing a Hand of your owne at all times ready to answer y<sup>e</sup> occasions, which a Body of Literatj like yours must bee thought now & then to haue for that Toole. And next to this (but yet, after it) your Fount for Musick, which I am pleas'd with y<sup>e</sup> fore-speakeing soe well of.

The 'Samples you send mee of y<sup>e</sup> MSS.-Catalogues I haue disposed of, as directed; & could with more satisfaccion tell you how well I like them, & the care taken in theyr Impression; were it not for y<sup>e</sup> Injury I (by y<sup>e</sup> meanes) am otherwise in Danger of doing them.

Our honor'd friend Captaine Hattont has this day done mee the Honor of dincing with mee, where (you know) Rising with an Appetite is y<sup>e</sup> surest part and Burthen of the Entertainment, & where our only Excedings now, was y<sup>e</sup> Glasse that bore y<sup>e</sup> Health, & y<sup>e</sup> gratefull Discourses attending it; for which I am to thanke you, & remayne [&c.].

FOL. 147.—THE SAME TO THE SAME.

Nov. 20, 1694.

Hon<sup>d</sup> Sr,—Your Reprehension (for ought you yet Know) is just, and therefore I beare it; as I * Does this allude to the settlement of Michael Burghers in Oxford?

* Memoires relating to the State of the Royal Navy of England, for Ten Years, Determin'd December 1688 (London: 1690). Many copies contain corrections by Pepys's own hand.

† Draft printed in Athenæum, No. 3266, pp. 704 sq.

‡ See Specimen of the Several Sorts of Letter given to the University by Dr. John Fell (Oxford, 1695). The matrices are still preserved at the University Press.

§ Tho. Britton [MS. note]; see Dict. of Nat. Biog.

haue since done a Sharper from Mr. Evelin,* wh you shall haue y<sup>e</sup> pleasure herewith of seeing, as I prophesy I shall of being aequally justify'd by you, as I haue this very day bene by him, upon my communicating to him that List of y<sup>e</sup> things you aske after, which I shall now doe very soone to You, rather then lett you lye longer under your Doubts concerning mee; y<sup>e</sup> reasons of my Backwardnesse not being soe fitt for Paper, as Discours. Which Mr. Gibson had given some hopes I should haue ere this (or at least before Christmas) had y<sup>e</sup> satisfaction of, with you, here.

The Hon<sup>r</sup> Mr Vicechancell<sup>r</sup> intends mee I pay you my humble thanks for; & will endeavour to waite on him, assoone as I heare of his arrivall in Towne.

I haue this evening caused Mr. Evelin's corrected Paper to bee delivered & carriage paid to y<sup>o</sup>r Carrier, who goes hence tow<sup>ds</sup> you to morrow from Holborne Bridge. . . . I was bredd of a Child to Kisse y<sup>e</sup> Rodd that chastis'd mee; & for y<sup>e</sup> same reason must desire you to lay-up this lett<sup>r</sup> of Mr. Evelin's, that I may haue it agayne.

FOL. 149.—THE SAME TO THE SAME.

Jan. 10, 1694.5.

S<sup>r</sup>,—I must begg you to thinke it Victory enough for once, that I am contented to reffer it, & if you please, Cap<sup>t</sup> Hatton shall bee the Man, & to his decision I will without more adoe submit; as I allsoe would without it to you, had I you here to communicate my Difficultys to (as to 3 or 4 Particulars) which are not soe easy or proper for controverting at this distance. This I hope will appease you, & in confidence of it, will looke for y<sup>e</sup> Paper againe at your leasure (I havinge noe perfect Copy of it) in order to my returning it you (since it must bee at all) without delay.

I suspect Mr. Boyle is in y<sup>e</sup> right, for our Friend's Learning (which indeed I haue great value for) wants a little filing; & I doubt not, but a few such stroakes as this of Mr. Boyl's† will doe it & him good. And soe would Dr. South's to our Auctionist, were not the Barbarity actually done, that would bee praventd by it.

I will with all y<sup>e</sup> speed I can, enable my selfe to say something to you ab<sup>t</sup> our Gravery, takinge y<sup>e</sup> opinion of Mr. Gibson along with my owne in it. Of wh<sup>ch</sup> you shall not long want some Account from us.

When you thinke it time for it, I shall most willingly exert all the supposed power I haue or can procure with Mr. Tanner, to the pravyling with him to undertake what wee soe much concur in y<sup>e</sup> desire of.†

I haue sent Cap<sup>t</sup> Hatton his Share of your late learned Present, and returne you my most humble thanks for mine. Indeed it is a rarity, and carries a Double Value with it, for y<sup>e</sup> honourable Name it beares (to which I am a most humble Servant) as well as for y<sup>e</sup> excellency of y<sup>e</sup> Performance. I repay you with usury y<sup>o</sup>r kinde Wishes of y<sup>e</sup> Season, & am &c.

AN ITALIAN TRANSLATION FROM TENNYSON.

THE Nuova Antologia for July 16 has an interesting article by Sig. F. Rodriguez on "Lord Tennyson: some of his Minor Poems." The fame of Tennyson, he tells us, is widely spread in Italy, but the poems themselves are very imperfectly known, as few read English, and there are not many translations. A little volume, containing somewhat diffuse versions of poems and fragments of poems, has indeed been published by Sig. Giovanni Faccioli, and there are one or two translations of "Enoch Arden," and three of "Dora." Sig. Rodriguez has turned into Italian verse nearly the whole of "The Brook," most of "Rizpah," a section of "The Defence of Lucknow," and, finally, "Crossing the Bar," that wonderful * In Evelyn's letter of November 18, printed in Diary and Corresp., p. 669.

† Boyle's ed. of Phalaris, containing the famous reference to Bentley's singularis humanitas, appeared in January 1695.

‡ See next letter.

lyric in which the octogenarian poet has proved that he can compete with his own finest successes. It may interest English readers to see how the poem looks in Italian verse:

"LA DIGA ESTREMA.

"Il sol cade; la stella del crepuscolo m'accenna—partirò!
purchè alla diga estrema il mar non mormori
quand' io lo varcherò

"e un largo fiotto senza spume e sonito, che il calmo aer sopi,
riconda all' abisso immisurabile
quel che ne assurse un dì.

"E sera, squilla la campana a vespero;
la notte ecco venir!
purchè di tristi addii, di gemiti
non suoni il mio partir.

"Nel mar ch' è senza tempo e senza limite
l' onda mi porterà, ma il suo Pilota faccia a faccia scorgere
l' anima al fin potrà."

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- BESSON, P. Etude sur Jean Fischart. Paris: Hachette. 5 fr.
DREYER, F. Die Tripoli v. Caltanisetta (Steinbruch Gessung) auf Sizilien. Jena: Fischer. 7 M.
HANDZEICHNUNGEN, ausgewählte, älterer Meister aus der Sammlung Edward Habich zu Cassel. Hrg. v. O. Eisenmann. 2. Lfg. Lübeck: Röhning. 20 M.
JUNG, le Général. Stratégie tactique et politique. Paris: Charpentier. 3 fr. 50 c.
KANELLAKIS, K. Χρονὸς Ἀνάλεκτα. Athens: Beck. 7 fr.
LASTYRIE, R. de. Album archéologique des musées de province. 1re Livr. Paris: Leroux. 12 fr.
LÖRRALT, W. Baltenhetze. Die Verfolgung v. Glauben, Sprache u. Recht in den Ostseeprovinzen Russlands. Leipzig: Duncker & Humblot. 3 M.
ORCHELIAEUS, A. v. Der Bilderkreis zum Wälschen Gaste d. Thomasin v. Zerclaere. Heidelberg: Koester. 15 M.
OLDENBERG, K. Studien zur rheinisch-westfälischen Bergarbeiterbewegung. Leipzig: Duncker & Humblot. 2 M. 80 Pf.
ROCAFORT, J. Les doctrines littéraires de l'encyclopédie. Paris: Hachette. 7 fr. 50 c.
SCHNEIDERWIN, M. Die Horazische Lebensweisheit. Hannover: Hahn. 1 M.
SORREL, A. Madame de Staël. Paris: Hachette. 2 fr.
VOTSCH, Ulrich v. Hutten, nach seinem Leben u. seinen Schriften geschildert. Hannover: Hahn. 1 M. 20 Pf.

THEOLOGY.

- STEINMEYER, F. L. Beiträge zum Verständniss d. Johanneischen Evangeliums. V. Berlin: Wiegandt. 1 M. 80 Pf.

HISTORY, ETC.

- BRUTAILS, J. A. Documents des archives de la chambre des comptes de Navarre (1196–1384). Paris: Bouillon. 6 fr.
DE MACRES DE MALARTIE, le Comte. Journal des campagnes au Canada de 1755 à 1760. Dijon: Damidot. 8 fr.
DRENIER, W. Mythologische Beiträge. 1. Hft. Der Cultus der ägypt. Gottheiten in den Donauländern. Leipzig: Teubner. 4 M. 40 Pf.
MITTHEIMENGEN zur vaterländischen Geschichte. XXIV. 3. Folge. IV. Walahfridi vita beati Galli, Vadianische Briefsammlung. I. 1508–1518. St. Gallen: Huber. 6 M.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE, ETC.

- CARUS, J. V. Prodromus faunae mediterraneae. Vol. II. pars 2. Stuttgart: Schweizerbart. 10 M.
DINGELDEY, F. Topologische Studien üb. die aus ringförmig geschlossenen Bändern durch gewisse Schnitte erzeugbaren Gebilde. Leipzig: Teubner. 2 M. 40 Pf.
HILDEBRANDSSON, H. H. W. KÖPTEN u. G. NEUMAYER. Wolken-Atlas. Hamburg: Seitz. 12 M.
JOHNS, F. Die phanerogamen Schmarotzerpflanzen. Berlin: Friedländer. 1 M. 50 Pf.
RAWITZ, B. Der Mantelrand der Acephalen. 2. Thl. Jena: Fischer. 6 M.
WESTERGAARD, H. Die Grundzüge der Theorie der Statistik. Jena: Fischer. 6 M. 50 Pf.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- AMÉLINEAU, E. Les actes des martyrs de l'église copte. Paris: Leroux. 10 fr.
FLEISCHLE, J. Ueb. Nachahmungen d. Demosthenes, Thucydides u. Xenophon in den Reden der römischen Archäologie d. Dionysius v. Halicarnass. Leipzig: Fock. 1 M. 20 Pf.
FELD, R. A. Beth Aharon. Responsa atque adnotationes in plerosque talmudi babilonici tractatus, Aruch, Tischbi, Meturgeman etc. Ediderunt filii auctoris. Frankfurt-a.-M.: Kauffmann. 6 M.
LEDERER, S. Is. Vergil der Verfasser v. Culex u. Ciris? Leipzig: Fock. 1 M.
MERCIANT, F. J. De Ciceronis partitionibus oratoris commentatio. Berlin: Heinrich. 1 M. 50 Pf.
MUELLER, L. De Horatii epistularum II., 1, 50–62 disputatio. Berlin: Calvary. 1 M. 20 Pf.
OTTO, A. Die Sprichwörter u. sprichwörtlichen Redensarten der Römer. Leipzig: Teubner. 10 M.
PORPHYRII quaestionum homeriarum ad Odysseam pertinentium reliquias collegit, disposuit, edidit H. Schrader. Leipzig: Teubner. 10 M.

- PLAUTI, T. M., comoediae. Tomi IV. fasc. 1. Cusina, rec. F. Schoell. Leipzig: Teubner. 5 M. 70 Pf.
PULVERMACHEN, N. De Georgicis a Vergilio retractatis. Berlin: Heinrich. 2 M.
VAN EYS, W. J. Les verbes auxiliaires dans le Nouveau Testament de Liqarrague. The Hague: Nijhoff. 4 fr.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE FRANKS CASKET.

Cambridge: August 2, 1890.

The discovery of the lost parts of the Franks Casket is, indeed, welcome news, and the details are specially interesting to those who have for some years past maintained the Saga interpretation of some of the sculptures on Anglian stones. The combination of Sigurd and Völund on the casket is yet another argument for the interpretation I suggested some years ago for two of the panels on the Cross in the Parish Church, Leeds. One of these shows—I should think I may fairly say now beyond effective dispute—Völund carrying off Bódvild, and thus is an exact parallel to the Franks Casket, which shows Bódvild in Völund's smithy. The panel opposite to this, I suggested in a cautious manner, as became a pioneer, might represent Sigurd Fafnesbane. There is the warrior with his strong double-edged sword for thrusting upwards, the eagle speaking at his ear, and—damaged by a fracture of the stone—under his sword hand a knot of what I take to have been a dead "worm." Since I made this suggestion the arguments in favour of Sigurd have been growing in strength, and I regard this latest evidence as strongly corroborative.

My chief object in writing to the ACADEMY is to point out that the new discovery may have some bearing on the place and date of the Casket. In dealing with the historical aspect of the Leeds Cross, I gave reasons for suggesting the possibility that King Anlaf, whose name was found in bold runes on one of the stones taken out of the walls of Leeds Old Church, claimed descent from these two heroes, and on that account the representations of them were placed upon the great Cross, in company with the Evangelists. This same unusual combination of Sigurd and Völund on the Franks Casket may point to Northumbria as the place of its birth—a view which Prof. Stephens has always held strongly—and to a date somewhat later than that (700–800) which Prof. Stephens suggests in his great work on the Runic monuments. I see that he marks his suggested date with a query.

G. F. BROWNE.

"HETMAN" AND "HAUPTMANN."

Oxford: August 4, 1890.

Without desiring to tire your readers' forbearance too much, I trust the Austrian Hauptmann may be granted a word in self defence.

(1) It seems improbable that the Magyar King of Poland, Stephen Báthory, should have been so blinded by national hatred as to ignore his family relation to the Austro-German dynasty, founded by "Rudolf von Habsburg" since 1273, and to choose for the chieftain of the Cossacks, who were subject to his sovereignty, a proper title from the obscure language of a Tatar or Mongol tribe rather than a well-known name like "Hauptmann" or "Hetman" in Polish. Why seek so far after light, if it is near?

(2) Again, it seems improbable that the Polish aristocracy, towards the end of the sixteenth century, when they elected Stephen Báthory, the Hungarian nobleman, king of Poland, should have been filled with such an antipathy and hostile spirit against the Austrian monarchy, if we consider that, about one century afterwards, the very same Poles, led by their heroic king Jan Sobieski, united as brethren in faith with the other auxiliary forces of the Austro-German empire, and saved its capital as well as the whole of Christian and civilised Europe from the barbarous hordes of Turkey.

(3) Lastly, is it not a fact and matter of course that such military titles as "Lieutenant" and several others which originated with France, the chief military power of Western Europe, as far back as the fourteenth century, were naturally transplanted and early adopted, after having been modified in form or pronunciation, both in Germany (Leutenant), Italy (Luogotenente), Spain (Lugarteniente) and Great Britain? Why should we deny an analogy with regard to our case?

H. KREBS.

THE FRAGMENT OF WYNKYN DE WORDE'S
"LE MORTE DARTIUR."

London: Aug. 2, 1890.

I read with great pleasure the letter of Miss Anna Robertson Brown, of Philadelphia, U.S.A., July 15, 1890, in No. 952 of the ACADEMY, concerning the fragment of Wynkyn de Worde's edition (1498) of Sir Thomas Malory's "Le Morte Darthur" in No. 10 of the Douce Fragments in the Bodleian Library, Oxford. It shows how carefully Miss Robertson Brown has studied Arthurian literature, how much interest is given to this subject, and that my humble work is appreciated in America.

With regard to the Douce Fragment, I beg to state, that owing to the careful researches of my friend, E. Gordon Duff, it did not escape my notice, but I did not mention it in my introductory chapter (vol. ii., p. 4) because there exists no relation whatever between the two leaves in the Douce Fragments and the copy of Wynkyn de Worde's edition of 1498 in Lord Spencer's library at Althorp, and also because I did not attach the same importance to a fragment of Wynkyn de Worde's books as to one of the books produced by William Caxton, England's first printer.

H. OSKAR SOMMER.

THE ETYMOLOGY OF "INVEIGLE."

Cambridge: Aug. 2, 1890.

It is a matter of history that the etymology of "inveigle," from the A.F. enveoglier, "to blind," was first pointed out by me in a paper read at the Philological Society, November 6, 1885. The A.F. verb is so scarce that it does not appear in any French dictionary, not even in Godefroy. I found it in l. 10639 of William of Wadynghton's Manuel des Peches, ed. Furnivall. Later on, in 1888, I gave another reference. The past tense enveogly occurs in Le Livre des Reis de Britannie, ed. Glover, 1865. And now two more examples have turned up, in P. Meyer's edition of Nicole Bozon, Paris, 1889. The pp. enveogli, "blinded," occurs at p. 127, and the third per. pres. sing. enveogle, "blinds," at p. 104. The latter is from the infin. enveogler. Strictly speaking, it is a false form, due to putting en- for a- in the older word aveogler, as I have shown. These four quotations, all from A.F. Texts, fully establish the form.

WALTER W. SKEAT.

THE SUBSTANTIVE "LOUKE" IN CHAUCER.

Cornell University, July 24, 1890.

Prof. Skeat, in his interesting letter upon louke in Chaucer (ACADEMY, July 12), says in one place: "I can see no reason at all for separating the A.S. lūcan, to pull, pt. t. **lēac*, p.p. **lōcen*, from the A.S. lūcan, to lock, with the same pt. t. and p.p."

Perhaps I misunderstand Prof. Skeat's use of the *** before lēac and lōcen. To me the sign means a form that is not actually found but only conjectured. If so, let me hasten to state that at least the p.p. lōcen does exist in the desired sense of pulling or drawing. Thus: "Gif se wytruma þære halgan gesege of his heortan biþ alocen 7 onweg anumen," Blickl. Horn. 55.7, rendered by Morris "pulled up." To this add: "and he waes fram him alocen swa mycel swa is anes stances wyrt," Luke xxii. 41 (Corpus M.S.), used to render "avulsus est ab eis." Furthermore, evulsum (abscisum) = utalocene Haupt. Gl. 474 a/36. It is clear, therefore, that the verb lūcan, to pull, is conjugated strong, and I, for one, do not hesitate to follow Prof. Skeat in his merging lūcan to pull and lūcan to lock, in A.S., into one and the same verb. But I hesitate as to German locken, to entice, being cognate. The German ck (kk) is to be accounted for only on the gemination theory, kk < gn, see Laistner, Zs. f. deut. Altertum xxxii. 148, who derives locken from **lugn' + lēogn*, forms of leogan, lügen.

J. M. HART.

SCIENCE.

Manuel de Paléographie, et Dictionnaire des Abréviations. Par Maurice Prou. (Paris: Picard.)

No satisfactory manual of Latin palaeography has hitherto been written. Wattenbach's Anleitung is nearly faultless as far as it goes; but it does not profess to be exhaustive, extending only to ninety pages. Mr. E. Maunde Thompson's article on "Palaeography," in the Encyclopædia Britannica, is the best English treatise we possess; but, like Wattenbach's, it is too brief. What is wanted is a book on the same scale as Gardhausen's Griechische Palaeographie, an excellent book, in spite of some faults. For English palaeography there is nothing better than Wright's Court Hand Restored, which is out of date. For Latin epigraphy we are at last well provided, Cagnat's Cours d'épigraphie Latine, recently reviewed in the ACADEMY (March 22), giving nearly everything that the student can reasonably require.

M. Prou has set himself to supply an acknowledged want. He does not lack external qualifications for his task. He describes himself on his title-page as "Archiviste paléographe, Ancien membre de l'Ecole française de Rome, Sous-bibliothécaire à la Bibliothèque Nationale." His scheme is sufficiently extensive, the plan is good, there is a great deal of useful matter in the book, and, if certain deficiencies are supplied in a future edition, his work may possibly take rank as the standard treatise on the subject. It may therefore be well, instead of dwelling on the merits of the book, which are obvious, to point out some of the defects which require to be remedied.

M. Prou begins with a bibliography of his subject, fairly sufficient, but by no means exhaustive. He then briefly describes the various mediaeval scripts, dwelling at disproportionate length on the French schools, but paying too little attention, on the one hand, to the old Roman cursive which had such an important bearing on mediaeval scripts, and on the other to the Irish semiuncial, which influenced the Caroline minuscule to a much greater extent than M. Prou is willing to admit. The English scripts, especially those of the Angevin charters, are inadequately treated, a defect which greatly detracts from the usefulness of the book for English students. M. Prou then proceeds to deal briefly with ligatures, abbreviations, punctuation, numerals, musical notation, and writing materials, and the rest of the volume is occupied with a dictionary of abbreviations. There is no index.

One of M. Prou's chief defects is a want of appreciation of the importance of the historical evolution of alphabetic forms, and of the evolution of conventional abbreviations from earlier ligatures. He usually gives the needful information as to the forms themselves, but does not always enable us to understand how the forms arose. Thus he should have explained that the circumflex as well as the superscript bar which is so universal as the sign of an omitted m, and afterwards of other letters, which we still use in arithmetic as the abbreviation for minus, were in their origin, usually, if not invariably, only the superscript m, just as the two dots which represent the German umlaut arose out of the superscript e of the German cursive.

The account of the various scripts is defective, and occasionally erroneous. Thus, no distinction is drawn between Rustic and Roman capitals, and M. Prou does not seem to be aware that some of the peculiarities in the forms of the letters which distinguish uncials from capitals can be traced to the old Roman cursive. He informs us that the semiuncial has forms which were derived from the minuscule, whereas, in most cases, they are with more probability to be referred to the cursive. He also repeats the usual assertion that the Irish semiuncial is essentially distinguished from other national scripts in not having been affected by the Roman cursive, whereas, in fact, its most characteristic forms can only be explained from the very source by which he thinks it was wholly unaffected.

The table of Arabic numerals professes to be a reproduction of that given in Wattenbach's Anleitung. It is, however, a very imperfect reproduction; a large number of important transitional forms, chiefly those belonging to the twelfth and fourteenth centuries, being omitted. Wattenbach gives 108 forms, of which M. Prou selects only forty, not always the most important. His second column, which corresponds to the fifth in Wattenbach, consists chiefly of abnormal forms, important in their way, but which, given as they are as the normal forms of the thirteenth century, obscure rather than elucidate the historical evolution.

The difficulty in deciphering mediaeval MSS. arises largely from the contractions, ligatures, and abbreviations, which were employed to economise labour and parchment. M. Prou, therefore, rightly devotes nearly half of his volume to a Dictionary of Abbreviations. This, which might have been the most valuable feature of the work, is defective rather than erroneous. It is little more than a reprint of the Latin abbreviations given in Walther's Lexicon Diplomaticum, published in 1747; and, for French documents, of those contained in Le Moine's Diplomatique Pratique (1765). It is undeniably useful to have these ancient lists made more accessible to students, but they are far from being exhaustive, and should have been brought up to the standard of our present knowledge. Moreover, they are nearly useless for the purpose for which English students would be likely in the first instance to turn to them—namely, for the interpretation of the Latin charters of our Norman and Angevin kings. Thus M. Prou omits the current abbreviations used in England for Willelmus, Henricus, Stephanus, and Ricardus, as well as the customary abbreviations in their styles as sovereigns of Normandy, England, Ireland, Anjou, and Aquitaine, and he gives very imperfectly or not at all the abbreviations used in the standard formulae of address—Archiepiscopis, Episcopis, Abbatibus, Comitibus, Baronibus, Justiciariis, Vicecomitibus et Ministris, et omnibus fidelibus. Interpreting the charters of our Norman kings by the aid only of M. Prou's lists, the student might suppose that they arrogated to themselves the title of Kings of the Angels (Angelorum), instead of designating themselves as Kings of the English (Anglorum). Nor will M. Prou's lists suffice for the interpretation of the Pipe Rolls, or of the Inquisitions; and they are of hardly any use for Domesday, the most important of early English documents. As a rough test of the sufficiency of his Dictionary, I have taken fifty-four abbreviations which occur in about a page of Domesday, and I find that of these he gives only twelve correctly, the rest being for the most part omitted, or occasionally interpreted according to continental usage. For example, the perpetually recurring abbreviations for bovatne and bovatns would have to be read as Baptista or benedictionem.

But even for MSS. of continental origin the practical value of the dictionary is seriously diminished by the want of any indication of the scripts in which the various abbreviations are found, or of the dates at which they were severally employed. M. Prou tabulates more than 5,000 abbreviations of Latin words, his lists ranging over twelve centuries, from the fifth to the seventeenth, and including various palaeographic schools, Uncial, Semi-uncial, Merovingian, Visigothic, Lombardic, and Caroline, as well as the styles of the Papal and Imperial Chanceries. The forms and significations of the customary abbreviations varied at different periods and in different schools; but M. Prou lumps them all together in alphabetical order, without any indications of usage or date. Thus he gives six abbreviations which at various times were used for quoniam, the student being left to discover for himself the period and the class of MS. in which they were severally employed. For instance, quō, which is employed in Merovingian MSS. for quoniam, was used to denote quo modo at a later period, when qm̄, which in Visigothic MSS. denotes quum, had come to be employed as the regular sign for quoniam. M. Prou catalogues these and several other signs for quoniam and quo modo, but leaves the student to discover for himself as best he may the particular usage in the text he is trying to decipher, while the peculiar Visigothic sign for quum is not even mentioned. Again, he gives four abbreviations which are used for quod, but omits three others which are also found; and he does not state that one of those which he gives may in certain cases denote quondam. He does not note that q, one of the abbreviations which he gives for quae, is also used in certain scripts for quis and que. He gives correctly the usual sign for pro, but omits to note that in Visigothic, and occasionally in Merovingian MSS., it may denote per, and that in the ninth century it was used in England for pro.

He does not inform us that one of the signs which he gives for modo also denotes monachus, and occasionally modum. He gives n̄ as the sign for non, nobis, and noster, but does not tell us how they are to be distinguished. He gives n̄ for enim, but does not give the date at which this abbreviation came into use, and he omits the three earlier forms. Out of the seven signs which are used for esse he gives six, but does not inform us that one of them is only found in the very earliest MSS., and that another was not employed before the fifteenth century. He gives ten conventional signs for et, but without any indication of the dates at which they were severally employed.

It will be seen from the foregoing examples that M. Prou's sins are mainly sins of omission rather than of commission, and are capable of correction in any future edition of his work.

It may be added that the book is got up in the French style, with every advantage of paper and typography, and that there are twenty-three facsimiles in phototype, well executed, and mostly well chosen, so as to illustrate the more important scripts, with the notable exception of the English and Irish schools, to which little attention has been paid. M. Prou's very slight acquaintance with our insular concerns is evidenced by his acceptance (p. 42), without a shade of hesitation, of the pseudo-Ingulphus as an unimpeachable historical authority.

ISAAC TAYLOR.

SOME BOOKS ON CHEMISTRY.

A Dictionary of Applied Chemistry. By T. E. Thorpe. Vol. I. (Longmans.) This work, the completion of which in three volumes is promised, corresponds in form with the new edition of Watts's Dictionary of Chemistry, by Messrs. Forster Morley, and Pattison Muir. In the latter work the applications of chemistry to arts and manufactures are not discussed. The volume before us contains contributions by no less than thirty different chemists, besides the editor. It extends to 715 pages of double columns, and concludes with an important article on dyeing, by Mr. Hummel, of the Yorkshire College. The number of considerable contributions to the work is so great, and their excellence so general, that we feel some hesitation in singling out any for especial commendation. But some idea of the scope of the work may be formed by naming, among the accounts of particular importance, those which treat of alkalimetry, alcohol, aspirators, aniline and its derivatives, ammonia, azo-colouring matters, the balance, brewing, candles, cellulose, cements, carbohydrates, chlorine, cyanides, disinfectants, and distillation. The plan followed in the descriptions of materials and processes is much more easily apprehended than that adopted in the new edition of Watts's Dictionary, and offers indeed no difficulties to the student. We have no doubt that Dr. Thorpe's Dictionary will furnish, when complete, an adequate and trustworthy guide to chemical technology.

Text-Book of Physiological and Pathological Chemistry. By Dr. G. Bunge. Translated by (the late) R. C. Wooldridge. (Kegan Paul & Co.) The twenty-one lectures "for physicians and students" here presented in an English dress are the work of the professor of physiological chemistry at Bale. The title of the volume gives too comprehensive an idea of its scope—the chemistry of plants being practically ignored. But the book is, notwithstanding, one of considerable value and interest. It contains an excellent summary of the present state of animal chemistry, and is enriched with numerous references to original memoirs. The author's own researches form an important feature of the work. Dr. Bunge is thoroughly conversant with the latest developments of chemical theory, and has made large use of them in his discussion of physiological problems. We commend the volume to all students of medicine. The accounts here given of the materials and method of digestion, of the blood, and of the functions of the liver and kidneys are most instructive. The final chapter, on Diabetes mellitus, describes with admirable clearness and freshness—so far at least as is at present possible—the physiological chemistry of that mysterious malady. This translation of Dr. Bunge's text-book, commenced by Dr. Wooldridge and completed by his widow with the aid of her father, Sir Edward Sieveking, represents with accuracy the original German text.

Handwörterbuch der Chemie. Herausgegeben von Dr. A. Ladenburg. (Breslau: Trewendt.) Last year the seventh volume of this Dictionary of Chemistry was completed. We have now to record the appearance of two instalments of the eighth volume, comprising 272 pages, and carrying down to "nitro-compounds" the discussion of the subject. The parts before us are 36 and 37. In them the following important articles will be found:—sodium, nickel, nitriles, nitroso-compounds, nitro-compounds. It is to be regretted that the work is not carried on with greater rapidity; for it was commenced no less than eight years ago, and some sections of the earlier volumes are already out of date.

CORRESPONDENCE.

"SATELLITE."

Barton-on-Humber: July 28, 1890.

I notice that Mr. E. R. Wharton (Etyma Latina, p. 46) agrees that idus is derived from the Etruscan itus (vide my letter in the ACADEMY, March 10, 1888, p. 173); and another interesting Etruscan derivation which he accepts is that of "satellite." Of this word Prof. Skeat remarks "root uncertain"; and other authorities content themselves with referring to the Latin satelles, which Mr. Wharton, following Prof. Bugge (vide Bezzenberger's Beiträge, xi. 1), derives from the Etruscan zatlās, an "attendant," "a bodyguard of satellites," having been "first introduced by Tarquinius Superbus, an Etruscan by origin" (Etyma Latina, p. 90). What, then, is the meaning of zatlās?

The familiar Akkadian word which appears in the cuneiform as the ideograph of a mouth, and the primary meaning of which is "mouth," has, among others, the phonetic values zu and za. This word is easily traceable in various kindred dialects, reappearing in the Finnic and Estonian suu, "mouth"; Votic su, "das dursten"; Lapponic c'o-d, cuv, "throat"; Tcheremiss šut, "aperture"; Zyrianian tsu-s, "snout"; Vogul tu-s and Ostiak tu-t, "mouth"; Magyar száj, "mouth," szád, "mouth-of-a-river" (vide Budenz, Magyar-Ugor Öss. Szótár, pp. 266-7), &c. The Magyar szól = the Etruscan zat. The Etruscan la = "belonging-to" (vide Sayce, "Etruscan Notes," in the ACADEMY, September 7, 1878), and θ is "the abstract suffix" (vide ACADEMY, April 26, 1890, p. 290). Therefore the Etruscan zat-la-θ = "mouth" + "belonging-to" + abstract suffix = one specially belonging to the mouth = an attendant, i.e., a person who is present for the purpose of doing what he is told.

ROBERT BROWN, JUN.

SCIENCE NOTES.

MORE than five thousand medical men—some of them from Mexico, from China, from Australia—are at present in Berlin, on the occasion of the Medical Congress. It is curious that quite a tenth of the number come from the United States. The proceedings were opened by Prof. Virchow. A medical exhibition has been organised in connexion with the Congress.

L'Anthropologie for July-August contains an article by Dr. J. Popovski, on "The Muscles of the Face in an Achanti Negro," the result of studies made in 1888 at the anatomic theatre of the university of Kiev on the corpse of a negro of about twenty. Dr. Popovski's book, Otcherk Sraznitelnoi, &c. (Sketch of the Comparative Anatomy of the Muscles of the Face in Man and the Animals), is the latest and best work on the general subject, and his new article is an interesting contribution to a special branch of that subject. The genesis of the facial muscles, both among men and animals, being more or less ascertained, the study of those muscles among the lower races promises important results.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

Geschichte der Griechischen Literatur bis auf die Zeit Justinians. Von W. Christ. (München: Beck.) The first edition of this book was briefly noticed in the ACADEMY, but it may not be amiss to remind English scholars of its appearance in a second edition, revised throughout, and augmented from 660 to 760 pages. The work has not the genius of Bernhardt or the originality of Mahaffy; but it is for the most part extremely well done, clearly arranged, and well indexed, and it has the great advantage of containing all Greek literature down to the era of Justinian. Why the book should stop at Justinian is not very apparent, any more than why Dr. Martin Schanz's companion History of Roman Literature should do so; but it is not much use to quarrel with the author for this. The series to which the two books belong, Dr. Iwan v. Müller's "Handbuch der klassischen Altertumswissenschaft," is a most useful one throughout, particularly for the isolated student, who cannot run daily to the Bodleian or the British Museum. But, for general usefulness, Prof. Christ's volume seems to us almost the best in the whole series. Of the "classical writers" Homer is perhaps most adequately treated. The Attic literature has been so thoroughly criticised in England by Jebb, Symonds, Mahaffy, and others, that Prof. Christ's work does not impress one as very extraordinary; but it is solid and good, while, for the post-Alexandrine period, the book is, so far as we know, without a rival in England.

Poesía Fossil—Estudios etimológicos. By Dr. José Balari y Jovany. Pp. viii., 146. (Barcelona.) This pretty little book, a credit to the Barcelona press, with its graceful dedication to an Oxford student, a pupil of the author's, deals with the etymology of some eighty place-names of the Peninsula and the South of France, in the form of a set of little essays or articles on words connected chiefly with petro-graphy. Such names as Serra de Avellano, Valdecantos, Caldas de Malavella, Villa Iobar, Montcanut, Canepost, Malatosquer, are explained, and a series of terms much used in nomenclature are fully illustrated, e.g., mata, Latin comata[silva], scrub; tosca, Low-Latin tesqua, tufa; canet, Latin canetum, canebrake; montcada, Low-Latin mous scatanus, spring-hill; cana, Latin cana[petra], hoar-stone; canto, Latin canutus, hoar-rock; guija, Spanish grija, Low-Latin grisca petra, grey-stone; cantalucia, Latin lutea[petra], yellow-stone; berruoco, Latin verruca, granite; luparia, Latin lupa, granite; cantalupos, grey granite (whence our family name Cantelupe); galga, Latin calculus, pebble; arellana, Low-Latin apiliana[petra], pumice; gallucantos, grey pebbles. The names of this class recall the Burnt-scrub, Yellowstone, Black-rock of the United States. It is to be hoped that Prof. Balari will give us a complete treatise upon Peninsular place-names, a task for which he seems to possess every qualification. One might expect that no little light would be thrown by such a work upon history, while it would form an important addition to a department of philology which is perhaps too little studied at present.

FINE ART.

ITALIAN WORKS ON MAIOLICA.*

ABOUT ten years since, Carlo Malagola, a young "Dottore" of Faenza—not quite adequately informed as regards the literature of the subject on which he wrote, and having, perhaps, still less knowledge of the contents of public museums and private collections in Europe, where examples of the various fabriques of maiolica and enamelled pottery are enshrined; consequently, and by his own confession, inexperienced in the observation of those nice differences and distinctive characters by which the practised eye can recognise the work of one or other maestro and boteqa—published a volume entitled Memorie Storiche sulle Maioliche di Faenza (Bologna, 1880).

Desirous of emulating the work of such trained investigators as Frati, Pungileoni, Raffaelli, Campori, &c., he dived into the archives of his native city, determined to uphold its glory, as one of the earliest and greatest of the producers of the highest artistic examples of that interesting ware. He succeeded in bringing to light many documents of considerable interest to the subject, and has assured us that no others having reference thereto exist in the archives of Faenza.

His great discovery was a record deemed by him of singular importance—which it certainly would be, could the evidence he brings forward be sufficient to convince more experienced investigators than himself. It is a document to show that "un Gaspar olim alterius Gasparis de Fasolis Beccarius" was connected with ceramic production in 1539, and that others of the same family had dwelt in Faenza. He therefore jumps at the conclusion that all those pieces of enamelled pottery, hitherto believed to have been produced at the Tuscan Castello of Cafaggiuolo, were really Faentine, and made at the Ca(sa) Faggioli, thus proved to have long existed at Faenza.

Dr. Malagola's book, which made some sensation at the time, refers to a few of the previous writers on the subject, not too correctly quoting, though blaming, M. Demmin's trascuretezza. But he takes no notice, and was evidently ignorant, of the existence of the large Catalogue of the maiolica in the South Kensington Museum,* published in 1872, referring only, in his list of authorities, to the 1s. 6d. Handbook compiled therefrom for popular use; nor does he seem to have been acquainted with Delange's folio work. He goes extensively and unnecessarily into the general subject, and specially into the names of Faentine maestri and the references to them in existing documents. In this last point the chief merit of his volume lies; for, in his "Introduzione" (pp. ix, x), he admits his small practical knowledge of specimens and their artistic characteristics, a knowledge absolutely requisite for correct inference.

It is not, however, the object of this notice to criticise Dr. Malagola's book. It has been sufficiently analysed and answered by that erudite investigator of all that relates to the history and distinctive characters of these wares, Dr. Luigi Frati, in his opuscolo which first appeared in the Nuova Antologia of October 1, 1880, and afterwards in separate form. He disagrees with Malagola's conclusion, while praising his useful research, and refers, in too complimentary terms, to what had been previously stated in the South Kensington Catalogue.

The great object of the book by Prof. Argnani, now under consideration, is to support the theory propounded by Dr. Malagola and his glorification of the Faentine potters, by reference to a few additional records and by a considerable number of well executed coloured representations of various boccali, dishes, cups, and plates, and fragments of such-like vessels, which have been found in Faenza and its neighbourhood. These serve to prove the extreme antiquity, superior quality, and large production of various highly artistic wares at Faenza—all which was well known and admitted—and also that the discovery of the stanniferous enamel is due to her potters; further, to show that the Casa Faggioli of that city was the real producer of all those grand pieces hitherto ascribed to Cafaggiuolo in Tuscany, the claims of which the author flatters himself to have crushed for ever.

His first victim, however—who, were he living, might well defend himself against so impetuous and weakly-armed an adversary—is the late estimable M. Al. Jacquemart, against whom he lets loose every stone of his catapult. Had that enthusiastic writer, who sometimes perhaps was un peu rêveur, been the originator of the idea that the Tuscan Cafaggiuolo was the producer of those fine works—knowing, at the same time, that their parentage was with the Faggioli family, and that he alone had wilfully robbed them of their inheritance of glory—such repeated vituperation might have been deserved. But when we know that the belief, founded upon the marks, inscription, and characteristics of the pieces themselves was, at that time, shared with M. Jacquemart by Delange, Piot Marryat, Darcel, Riocreux, A. Castellani, Franks, Robinson, and many other mature students of Italian ceramics, and that M. Jacquemart is no longer here to defend his opinion, such harsh denunciation is unjust, and is in worse than questionable taste; and we cannot but regret that the literature of the subject should have been so blotted by an Italian pen.

That a private fabrique, at or near the Tuscan Castello, existed, and was in full activity in 1521—the year of Leo X.'s death—is proved by a document discovered by Gaetano Milanese, and printed by Malagola (p. 307); that it derived its inspiration and methods from Faenza is generally believed, and is further confirmed by the matter of Prof. Argnani's new work. But the sweeping conclusion of that writer that all pieces bearing the mark composed of the combined letters P and  $\infty$ , with a paraph across the stem of the P, were the production of Faenza, and that no fabrique existed at the Medician Villa, we cannot admit.

* Le Ceramiche e Maioliche Faentine. Prof. Federico Argnani. Con xx Tavole 4to. (Faenza, 1889.)

* A copy of that work was in the public library at Bologna, and well known to Dr. Frati when Dr. Malagola wrote.

But let us examine Prof. Argnani's work, and then his evidence.

In prefatory remarks he rightly expresses regret, which we fully share, that so many pieces of maiolica and other works of art, the pride of Italy, had been allowed to leave her shores, tempted away from the land of their production by the need, or indifference, of those who ought to have held them as a sacred inheritance.

He then refers to the work of Malagola and the records brought to light by that diligent searcher, and expresses his strong desire to illustrate and confirm that work by publishing these coloured representations of monumental fragments and entire pieces, which had been found and were carefully preserved under his influence. He regrets how few pieces of the finer productions of the Faentine potteries are still possessed by that city, or in its neighbourhood, thus confessing his own and Malagola's small practical knowledge to be gained only by comparative study of numerous examples. His acquaintance also with the contents of works upon the subject seems to be equally limited; and although Dr. Frati, in his castigation of Malagola's work, refers to the South Kensington Catalogue, it remains seemingly unknown to Prof. Argnani.

In his first chapter he expresses his conviction that the want of knowledge by foreign writers on Italian productions is shown by the statements of Jacquemart, who had doubted the high antiquity and importance of Faentine pottery, and had committed the unpardonable offence of assigning to Tuscany and to Diruta works which our author deems to be of Faenza. In writing thus severely, he exhibits a want of consideration for the opinion of others, and the grounds on which such opinion has been formed. He loses his head in the argument, and a sense of propriety in his uncourteous remarks on the statements of that estimable but not too accurate French writer. To prove such wrong-doing, and to support Malagola by tangible evidence, he has devoted himself to the gathering of rottame wherever they could be found.

He again kills the dead horse on that old battle-field the S. Petronio pavement of 1487, repeating details which had been fully considered by Dr. Frati, referring also to that in the Bentivoglio Chapel, which has been the subject of some recent crude observations by M. Molinier, also fully answered and corrected by Dr. Frati. He does not seem to know of that in S. Sebastiano at Venice, of another at Rome, nor of the earlier one at Naples.

In his second chapter he tells the well-known fact of the early existence of pottery works in Faenza producing the mezza maiolica, and subsequently the enamelled ware. He refers with praise to Malagola's useful work in the discovery of documents, and then, as does that writer, enters upon an unimportant and unnecessary dissertation on the antiquity of pottery, the word "ceramic," &c. He states that at Faenza the art advanced from 1300, when the engobe of terra di Vicenza was used to give a white surface, on which the simple designs were painted in copper-green and iron-yellow, covered by the lead-glaze cristallina. He believes that the graffite pieces had their origin and were only produced at Faenza; although he admits that fragments have been found elsewhere, but makes no allusion to those at Pisa and at Rome. After the middle of the XIVth century, he states, "the torno produced better forms of boccali, and the oxide of manganese and zaffra-blue (cobalt) were used in the designs."

The use of stanniferous enamel, as he believes, shows itself early in 1400, and must have been invented at Faenza—although French writers assert that it was known in Germany long before; and Luca della Robbia in all probability worked at Faenza and there learnt his art of enamelling, which, however, was inferior to that of the Faentine potters! He omits to find fault with Passeri, who believed the tin-glaze to have come from Tuscany. About the middle of that century (the XVth), he tells us, the iridescent pottery from Majorca and Spain came into Italy, and was subsequently imitated by the potters of Castel Durante (?), Pesaro, and Gubbio. Diruta is not mentioned.

At the beginning of the XVIth century, as he truly says, the productions of the Faentine works were at their best; but he forgets to allude to the great beauty and high quality of the pieces of the Museo Correr service, bearing date 1482. There, in the early XVIth century, more than thirty fabriques were working at the same time. The products of the Bettini, Ca Pirotta, Ca Faggiolo, In Monte, Scalamazza, and di Virgilio, were, he tells us, among the most notable; the renowned artists Bettini, Baldasara Manara, Giovanni Brama, Nicolo da Fano, &c., being there occupied, while many able ones emigrated to Ferrara, Mantova, Ariano, Venezia, Verona, Imola and Arcevia, others again assisting to establish works at Lyons and Nevers. Large quantities of wares were exported, and many credenze for royal and noble houses were ordered and produced. Of all this little is new that may not require some further confirmation. Prof. Argnani believes that, as the Manfredi and the Medici were on friendly terms, it is presumable that those pieces of maiolica bearing the Medici stemma were produced at Faenza, and were presents from the Manfredi, the existence of the Tuscan bodega being ignored.

His third chapter is the most important in the book, as in it he describes fragments and whole pieces found among buried rubbish in the city, of which he gives excellent coloured representations. Some of these were found below the municipal palace, which was formerly that of the Manfredi; others beneath the cathedral steps, which were reconstructed in 1520. They are, for the most part, precisely such as, without knowing their provenance, might have been supposed to be of Faenza make; and the occurrence of the Manfredi arms on early mezza pieces confirms such assumption, approximately fixing the dates of some examples. Such for instance is the jug bearing the Manfredi shield surmounted by the liocorno, which was adopted as a crest by Astorgio I. in 1393, as his special impresa; while its companion jug bears the floral giglio in a similar shield-formed panel (Tav. IV.). Another (Tav. VII.) bears three gigli in the Manfredi coat and no crest; one crested but with two gigli; both these are of stanniferous glaze and prove its use in Faenza at the end of the XIVth century. On Tav. VIII., fig. 11, is depicted a small shallow cup (scodellotto) painted on the white-tin enamel with rude scroll border, leafage, &c., in cobalt-blue, below a surrounding yellow edge, and with a four petaled flower in the bottom, centered with yellow; on this, beneath, is the mark P crossed by a paraph. It is ascribed to the second half of the XVth century. This was found at the Palazzo Sforza, at Cotignola, on the banks of the Senio. Other pieces of similar character, but without marks, were found at Rocca Monte Fiorino, and are now in Rimini, where, on July 2, 1527, Sigismondo Malatesta prohibited the importation of such wares from other places, except those of Monte Stiffi, doubtless to protect the native industry.*

* Pieces exist inscribed "in Arimin."

Our author quotes from Malagola's documents, concerning orders for wares of the dates 1454-1489, &c.; and, in a foot-note, he refers to the commission given to Horatio Rucellai to procure at Faenza maiolica for the most Christian King of France. He naively asks why Rucellai, a Tuscan, did not order it at Cafaggiuolo. The reply seems clear—the latter was a private furnace, not that of a commercial producer.

The fourth chapter of Prof. Argnani's work is devoted to proofs, by documents and otherwise, which satisfy him that no fabrique ever existed at Cafaggiuolo in Tuscany. He cites Malagola as the first to raise that question, and shows confirmatory fragments found in Faenza, which, in our opinion, are purely Faentine in design and colouring, and not to be mistaken for what we distinguish as of Cafaggiuolo (the dictum of the illustrious Lessing notwithstanding). He dwells upon the documents in which the name of "Fagioli" occurs; one of 1235; one of 1501, by which one Alberto Farolo votes for Astorgio III.; that in which a Guido Faxolus is included in a list of makers of "figuli super rotam," a tariff price-list of which proves them to be only terraglia of the cheap and viler sort; in 1540 one Simon Faxoli de Marchittis is mentioned; and in 1578 M. Francesco Marchetto is paid for maiolica for the Duke of Ferrara.

Among the waste pieces from the potteries, which were unearthed from beneath the cathedral steps, he considers some would have been pronounced by Jacquemart to be Tuscan. Such are represented on Tav. XII. and Tav. XIV.; but no experienced judge would mistake them for other than Faentine. Moreover, his description of the decoration of such pieces does not correspond with that of the fine bold examples which we claim for Tuscany, several of which he might have seen represented in Delange's folio volume—a work, as we infer, unknown to Prof. Argnani.

On some of these fragments various marks occur, among them the well-known P with the paraph crossing the stem; but it is noteworthy that none of them have the upper member elongated into an  $\infty$ . He further states that on some the Medici arms are seen, but these he does not figure.

Further, as negative evidence against the existence of a fabrique at Cafaggiuolo, he gives the names of historians who do not mention its existence—as Ripetti's Dizionario (1833-45); Galuzzi's History of the Grand Dukes of Tuscany; Roscoe's Leo and Lorenzo; and Vasari, although the last-mentioned writes of Castel Durante and Faenza. In this, it seems to us, that, so far rightly, Vasari records two of the oldest seats of this art industry; but he omits Venice, Gubbio, Siena, Urbino, Diruta and others; and is it more probable that he would mention a private furnace, which at the time he published his first edition in 1550 may have already fallen somewhat into decadence? The works of its best period were, probably, produced anterior to the death of Leo X. in 1521; the known pieces of later date declare such inferiority; and, finally, in 1590, Giacomo and Loys Ridolfi, of Cafaggiuolo, and others, emigrated to France, setting up a faïencerie at Marchecoul in Bretagne.

Prof. Argnani, so far fairly, brings forward in his fifth chapter some evidence in favour of the Tuscan fabrique, and gives good illustrations (on Tav. 16) of two pieces bearing the Medici shield, and each having the mark of the P with paraph and top limb extended into an  $\infty$ , which were actually found in 1877 at the bottom of a long-neglected staircase, leading to what appeared to be the remains of an ancient latrina in the Castello. He also gives a copy of a letter from Sig. Piancastelli, stating that researches had been made in and about its precincts and its neighbourhood, in the vain hope of finding remains of the old pottery furnaces. On the same plate he shows figures of other pieces of almost analogous decoration, found at Faenza, and bearing the P with paraph, but without the  $\omega$  formed upper part.

In his "Conclusion," Dr. Argnani cannot deny himself the pleasure of another unkindly thrust at what he terms the "malevolenza" of M. Jacquemart. After which, having again killed his already defunct opponent, he triumphantly claims the laurel, as having proved (1) the antiquity of the Faentine potteries—which has never been denied; (2) that the use of the stanniferous enamel was there discovered—a doubtful assumption; and (3) that no such Tuscan boteqa at Cafaggiuolo ever existed, except in the minds of those who would wish to rob Faenza of some of the brightest leaves and berries from its triumphal wreath of pottery; further, that all pieces inscribed with that name variously spelt, all those bearing the mark of the P with paraph, and all those bearing the Medici stemma, and made for the Medici family, to which were confined the use of the P mark with paraph and top limb extended to form an  $\omega$ —were made at Faenza, and (as we infer) at the Casa of the Fagioli family.

He considers that Zeffi's letter proves nothing more than the possible existence of a pottery for the production of ordinary stoviglia at the Tuscan Castle—a conclusion equally applicable to the pottery of the Fagioli family at Faenza; and (in the old-fashioned Italian spirit, combining petty local patriotism with hatred of neighbours and rival cities) he feels himself compelled to assert that in the development and perfection of these wares Faenza was, and is, and ever will be, all in all!

Now, if a foreigner may venture to appeal against this sweeping verdict, the present writer would beg leave to plead and to offer some evidence on the other side.

That a considerable number of pieces have been ascribed to Tuscany by Jacquemart, by Darcel, and probably by himself, which really are of Faentine production, he readily admits; but that a private establishment existed at, or near, Cafaggiuolo in Tuscany, at which admirable pieces of maiolica were produced, he as firmly maintains.

It was the fashion of the time, and it is reasonable to suppose, that the Medici, being such patrons of art, would not be behind other noble houses, but would desire to form a fabrique at which artistic pottery might be produced, of the highest excellence, for their own use and for presents to friends. It is further likely that, being on good terms with the Manfredi, and Faenza being well known as one of the most important seats of the potter's artistic industry, the Medici would apply to and be furnished thence with able hands in every required branch, and that the painters who would come would naturally, and particularly at first, make use of their old designs and habitual colouring in decorating their earlier pieces produced at the new boteqa. Prof. Argnani writes that, if the Tuscan boteqa ever did exist, "non sarebbe stato altro che una derivazione delle fabbriche nostre;" and in this we fully agree.

Potters and painters on pottery not unfrequently wandered from their native towns when induced by encouraging offers of advancement. Of this fact many documents, and some pieces, signed by the same painter, but produced at different fabriques, give proof. Moreover, we learn from Piccol Passo how simple and small, how easily erected and destroyed, were the ovens and utensils requisite for their work. That one of these who may, when working at Faenza, have signed with the simple P., and with that crossed by a paraph, either as a personal mark or as that of his boteqa (which need not, of necessity, have been that of the Casa Fagioli), took his pencils and pigments, his designs, or their reminiscence, to the Castello at Cafaggiuolo, and there exercised his craft for new masters, is not improbable. That he was the only painter there is not likely; others doubtless followed, using their own distinctive marks. But it is not unreasonable to infer that the P., with paraph and with  $\omega$  developed upper limb, became the chief distinctive mark of the new boteqa.

So much for the reasonable probability; now for some evidence in addition to the already-referred to letter from Zeffi to Francesco da Empoli in Florence, dated September 26, 1521, in Cafaggiuolo, on the subject of sending two scodelle with covers, which had been ordered; other pieces to Marcantonio Goudi; and others to Giovan Maria, from "Lorenzo nostro padrone," &c., &c.

We would refer Prof. Argnani to another important fact of which he does not seem to be cognizant. On the dispersion of the Montferand collection by auction at Christie's in 1860, three plates, evidently of the same service and painted and inscribed at back by the same hand, were separately sold. One, representing Apollo and others in a landscape as its central subject, was bought for the South Kensington Museum, and is described at page 122 of the Catalogue (No. 6656-60); it bears the inscription on the back "in gafagiolo," the P. with paraph and  $\omega$  extended top, and the letters A. and F. The second piece was purchased by the present writer; on it is represented Mutius Scaevola, among many figures in a landscape, with a border on which a hunt of wild animals is depicted; at the back, in the same handwriting, the P and  $\omega$  combined, the letter G at its side, the letters A. F. beneath, and a scroll between, on which is written "in galiano nellano 1547." The third piece, purchased by an agent for an eminent collector (M. Dutuit, as we believe), represented Helen carried from Troy, and is signed nearly as in the South Kensington specimen. A fourth piece, evidently by the same hand, was subsequently sold at Christie's in 1874. Its subject is Diana and Actæon, and it is inscribed "el bagno di diana f in gafagiolo," with the combined P and S between A and F.

Now all these pieces painted by the same hand have the same mark, presumably of the fabrique, the name of which is inscribed on three of them, while each bears, also, the letters A and F, presumably those of the painter, who, on the other one, informs us that he has executed his work in "Galiano"! Where is this place? If he was working for the Casa Fagioli in Faenza, that great producer of "figuli super rotam," (presumably rough-turned pottery, the low quality of which is proved by the tariff price-list appended to the quoted document), it might be sought for in the neighbouring streets just round the corner; but no, Galiano or Gagliano is a village or borghetto to the right of the post road from Florence to Bologna, not many miles from, but so much farther in, the Tuscan hills than the Medicean Castello at Cafaggiuolo. Mayhap, the private pottery works were carried on in this immediate vicinity rather than at the castle itself; or the painter may have taken his work to execute at his own native village, or on a visit to a friend. The fact remains, and to our mind conclusively proves, if other proof were wanting, that a fabrique of painted maiolica wares existed, in or near to Cafaggiuolo in Tuscany, in the year 1547, and had existed long previously. Had Dr. Malagola and Prof. Argnani made themselves acquainted with the contents of the South Kensington Catalogue, they might have learnt a lesson from this recorded fact.

* This plate, together with the larger portion of this writer's collection, is now in the Ashmolean Museum at Oxford.

We find in the work of the latter a list of thirteen marks, supposed by him to be exclusively of Faentine potters, and hitherto unknown. Five of these are well known, and were recorded by us; of some others we doubt his attribution. Then follows a complete list, according to the professor, of the published marks on wares of Faenza—in number seventy-one. These are derived, not from his personal observation and corroboration, which extends to ten only, but from the following authorities. Graesse's most inaccurate list gives him some thirty-four; others are from Jacquemart and Demmin, neither of whom would be held as unquestionable authority by the experienced student of these wares and their history, and both of whom the author himself discredits. Ris Paquot and Malagola give or confirm some thirty others. Of these several were certainly not used at Faenza, as 18, 19, 27, 38, 46, &c.; some are on pieces of Gubbio; one of Nicolo da Urbino, &c., &c. Had the author consulted the South Kensington Catalogue he would have found eighteen marks attributed to Cafaggiuolo, and over thirty to Faenza, none of which forty-eight marks are known to either of these champions of Faenza wares, Dr. Malagola and Prof. Argnani, who seem to have almost confined their investigation of the literature of the subject to the compilations of Graesse, Demmin, and Ris Paquot, and to the writings of Jacquemart and Darcel.

We must, however, give credit to the manner in which Prof. Argnani's book has been produced. The paper is good, the type excellent clear and clean; the very useful illustration, are extremely well executed and true. In short it is a very elegant quarto.

We cannot refrain from devoting a few lines to another Italian book on Italian maiolica, that by Sig. Angelo Genolini, a not inelegant quarto volume published at Milan in 1881. Not that we intend reviewing that work, but wish merely to protest against the unacknowledged appropriation, not too correctly used, of matter and marks which is manifest throughout. This fact was made known shortly after its publication by the Cav. Bernabei, who, when reviewing Sig. Genolini's book in La Domenica Letteraria of April 23, 1882, published at Rome, writes:

"La distribuzione della materia non poteva esser fatta meglio; e vorrei dire che il Genolini ha seguito il sistema stesso che tenne il ch. Fortnum nel libro più autorevole che io mi conosca intorno alla maiolica italiana, il libro cioè è che si enuncia col modesto titolo di un catalogo [A descriptive catalogue of the maiolica, hispano-moresco ec: in the South Kensington Museum, London, 1873] e che contiene forse le migliori notizie sulla storia dell' arte, illustrando i pezzi più degni di nota delle collezioni pubbliche e private così d' Inghilterra come di altre parti di Europa, e dando piena contezza del tesoro artistico conservato nel grande museo di Londra."

"Ma benchè ci sieno pure alcune pagine del Genolini leggendo le quali si direbbe l'autore esser si ricordato di ciò che aveva detto il Fortnum, non dimeno non oserai affermare che quest' opera sia stata esaminata dal Genolini stesso; poichè egli non la ricorda nell' elenco dei libri da lui consultati; nè devo credere che abbia voluto comprendere un libro così insignificante nel numero di quei cataloghi che egli cita in generale e che gli riuscirono di grande aiuto. Ella mia persuasione è confermata anche dal fatto che se il Genolini avesse avuto agio di studiare attentamente il libro del Fortnum aggiungendovi il frutto delle ricerche fatte dopo il 1873, avrebbe senza dubbio condotto a termine il lavoro con un' esattezza che per verità si lascia ora desiderare."

It is probable that this notice may have been overlooked by many readers; and it is perhaps as well to reproduce it, in grateful recognition of its writer's appreciation of the South Kensington Catalogue. That work was not so lightly undertaken. Some fifteen years gathering material, taking notes, and careful comparison of specimens in all the important and many minor public museums and private collections of Europe; visits to the sites, correspondence or intimate communication with most of the conoscenti of that time—afforded the writer good foundations on which to build his conclusions and attributions.

Much information has doubtless since been gained which may modify some of those attributions, but it must be well weighed before acceptance, as in the case of the Casa Fagioli. The writer hopes that, if life and health be spared him, he yet may be able to make those requisite corrections of his old labour of love, as he hopes, not lost.

When, shortly after its publication, we had the honour of offering a large-paper copy to the present Pope, that courteous gentleman, warmly pressing our hand in both of his, thanked us personally for the gift, and, as an Italian, for the labour we had devoted to so interesting a branch of Italian renaissance art industry.

It is to be regretted, on their own account, that a similar spirit had not animated these less experienced authors; that the two former had not given themselves the trouble to ascertain what Englishmen had written on Maiolica; that Prof. Argenti had not shown at least more courtesy in his denunciation of the opinion of the late M. A. Jacquemart; and that Sig. Genolini had not made candid acknowledgment when appropriating so much material from the English work.

C. DRURY E. FORTNUM.

Stanmore, Aug. 1, 1890.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE SCULPTURED SLABS SUPPOSED TO HAVE BEEN BROUGHT FROM MESOPOTAMIA TO EGYPT.

Queen's College, Oxford: Aug. 2, 1890.

Since I wrote on this subject in the ACADEMY of July 26, I have read Mr. Budge's article in the Classical Review, and see that it contains evidence against his conjecture that the slabs which he describes came from Mesopotamia. One of them, he states, has upon it the representation of two giraffes browsing on a palm-tree. Now the giraffe has been confined to the Ethiopian region of the world during the historical period, and was consequently unknown to the inhabitants of Asia. The stones, therefore, on which it is depicted could not have come from Mesopotamia, but must have been brought from the districts of the Soudan south of Egypt.

The dress of the huntsmen represented on the slabs bears out this conclusion. It is the same as that of the people of Kesh or Kush whose portraits are met with on the Egyptian monuments. The feathered head-dress worn by Asiatics like the Zakkur or Merodach-nadin-akhi of Babylonia is quite different, consisting of a fringe of feathers which runs round the top of a square cap. On the other hand, the one or two tall feathers stuck in the hair of the huntsmen on the slabs exactly resemble the mode in which certain Kushites and Libyans decorated their heads according to the Egyptian artists. We must, accordingly, see in the slabs an example of early Kushite or Ethiopian art.

The sculptors probably belonged to the same race as the prehistoric people who have covered the sandstone rocks of Upper Egypt with their rude designs. Here, too, we have figures of huntsmen armed with bows and arrows, of giraffes, ostriches, and other animals, in the same style of art as that of the slabs. Both Mr. Petrie and myself have pointed out the evidence there is for the great antiquity of these drawings, which imply that at the time they were made the district south of Silsilis was a well-wooded and, therefore, well-watered land, where herds of giraffes browsed on the foliage of the shrubs—a physical condition of the country very unlike that which has prevailed there in historical times. Similar prehistoric drawings on the rocks have been found in various parts of northern Africa, in southern Morocco by Lenz (Timbuktu ii., pp. 10, 367), in the district between Tripoli and Ghadames by Rohlf (Quer durch Afrika, i., p. 52), in the country of the Tibbu by Nachtigal (Sahara und Sudan, i., p. 307) and in Kordofan by Lejean (Hartmann, Nigritier, i., p. 41). Dr. Bonnet has recently discovered them in southern Oran, along with the stone implements by means of which they were engraved (Revue d'Ethnographie, viii.). As I have before remarked in the ACADEMY (March 15, 1890), they remind us of the Bushman paintings on the rocks of southern Africa. I may add that the museum of Constantinople contains some curious sculptured stones from Darfur which in many points present a strong resemblance to those which are the subject of this letter.

A. H. SAYCE.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

Two bays in the gallery of minor Egyptian and Assyrian antiquities in the upper story of the British Museum have been recently rearranged and thrown open to the public. One contains the Babylonian engraved stones, boundary demarcations, title-deeds, grants of land, records of purchases, &c., recently removed from the basement, some as early as 4000 B.C.; on the other side are Assyrian ornaments, &c. The other bay contains the Mexican and Peruvian antiquities. The arrangement of the prehistoric gallery at the head of the great staircase is now complete. Among the objects now accessible to the public are the Layton collection of bronze vessels, recently found in the Thames, and the Spanish antiquities collected by MM. Siret, and described in their great work.

We understand that the authorities of the British Museum have in preparation a sixpenny handbook or guide to the various collections in the museum, and that it will be ready in about three months. This will, no doubt, be a boon to the general visitor, who will be spared some confusion thereby, but it will not supply the long existing and urgent need for handbooks on each collection, concise, accurate, and judiciously illustrated, without which the Museum is a labyrinth of despair to all but trained students.

A FINE silver missorium of the fifth century was acquired at the sale of M. Piot's collection for the cabinet of medals and antiques of the National Library at Paris. It represents Hercules and the Nemean Lion, and fetched 10,240 frs.

THE Pope has announced his intention of reopening to visitors the long-closed Borgia suite of rooms in the Vatican.

THE statue of Rigaud, the portrait painter, has been unveiled at Perpignan, his native town, and the inhabitants of Lucca propose to raise one in honour of Matteo Civitali, the sculptor and architect.

THERE is a proposal on foot at Dresden for the erection of a statue to Ludwig Richter, the wood engraver. A committee has been formed, with Prince George of Saxony at its head, to receive subscriptions. "All lovers of art," says the prospectus, "are kindly invited to assist." They may communicate with Messrs. Günther and Rudolph, Dresden.

THE Prix de Rome have been awarded as follows:—Painting, Grand Prix, M. André-Victor-Armand Devambez; Premier second, M. Charles-Amable Lenoir; Deuxième second, M. Georges-Auguste Lavergne. Sculpture, Grand Prix, M. Paul-Jean-Baptiste Gasq; Premier second, M. J. - B. - Gabriel Belloc; Deuxième second, M. François-Léon Sicard. Intaglios, Grand Prix, M. Charles Pillet; Deuxième second, M. Jacques Callot. Honourable mention, M. Jean-Marie Delpech; no Premier second was awarded. Engraving, Grand Prix, M. Georges-Henri Lavalley; Premier second, M. Jean-Baptiste Paret; Deuxième second, M. Antoine-François Dezarrois.

THE celebrated Convent des Celestins at Paris, now used as a barrack, is about to be destroyed and rebuilt. It was in the church of this convent that the heart of Catherine de Medici was deposited in an urn supported by the Three Graces, sculptured by Germain Pilon.

A LITTLE pamphlet, by Prof. G. Uzielli, on the portraits of Paolo dal Pozzo Toscanelli, has been printed at the press of the Italian Geographical Society, Rome. Prof. Uzielli hopes that the indications he gives may lead to the discovery of the medallion by Pisanello, now lost, which, together with the picture by Alessio Baldinovetti, also lost, but known to us through Vasari's fresco in the Camera di Cosimo il Vecchio in the Palazzo Vecchio at Florence, is the only known portrait of the famous astronomer by any artist of his time. The head of Toscanelli and of Marsilio Ficino in the fresco by Vasari are reproduced as a frontispiece to the pamphlet.

L'Anthropologie for July-August contains an interesting article by Baron J. de Baye on "L'Art des Barbares à la chute de l'Empire Romain"—an art whose discovery, as the writer says, is one of the triumphs of contemporary science. The article contains a number of illustrations.

THE Report of Session LV. of the Congrès Archéologique de France, held at Dax and Bayonne in 1888, has only just appeared (Picard, Paris). The volume is useful for its illustrations, chiefly from photographs, of Roman and Gallo-Roman mosaics and monuments, and of the Romane architecture of S.W. France, and the Spanish frontier. Basque subjects are conspicuous by their absence.

MR. HENRY WALLIS, R.W.S., is still busily engaged in contributing to our knowledge of early Eastern and Moslem Pottery. Having exhausted in his Early Persian Ceramic Art nearly if not all the known specimens of Persian pottery which may fairly be attributed to dates anterior to the thirteenth century, he is now engaged upon a larger work, illustrated like its forerunners with careful drawings by himself. This will deal with a notable collection hitherto unknown, and with the history of Persian lustreware. Pending the arrangements necessary to complete this work for publication, he is preparing a monograph upon Persian art since the Sassanian period. This will be mainly devoted to that almost unknown class of pottery more or less influenced by Byzantine motives, of which he has been fortunate enough to secure some examples from the East. Specimens of contemporary pottery from Egypt and Asia Minor, some found by himself, others from the British Museum and the excavations of Count d'Hulst at Cairo last winter, will also be illustrated and commented upon.

THE STAGE.

"THE GREAT UNKNOWN" AT THE LYCEUM.

MR. AUGUSTIN DALY'S "eccentric comedy," though indeed adapted from the German, has a very strong tinge of what is known as American humour. It is really funny in parts, with a broad and boisterous American fun; it has the good sense, unlike many English comic plays, to refrain from the slightest approach to anything like sentiment; and it preserves a decent distance from the uncomfortable probabilities, not to say possibilities. In an "eccentric American comedy" one neither expects nor desires a picture of life as it is, even of the queerest American life as it is; one looks for good irresponsible burlesque, and here we in some measure get it. It may just be objected, in passing, that Mr. Daly has not even endeavoured to preserve any sort of coherence, to develop any character consistently, or, indeed, to give any particular substance to his characters. He gives us episodes and humours, not a play. But then episodes and humours are generally the best parts of a comedy, and the main opportunities for actors, so why should we complain?

The real interest of "The Great Unknown" lies, of course, in the acting of Miss Ada Rehan. After seeing her splendid creation of Katherine in "The Taming of the Shrew," and her exuberant and delightful creation of Rosalind in "As You Like It," one feels a certain sense of disappointment in seeing even the most perfect rendering of an American tomboy. But Miss Rehan's Etna (the young lady who is the heroine of "The Great Unknown") is indeed a perfect rendering—boisterous without being vulgar, uproariously funny without going beyond the limits of comic art, full of wild and spontaneous mirth. Her part, as a part, may be considered attractive or not, according to the taste of the individual playgoer. For my part, I must confess, Miss Etna Jarraway seems to me an exceedingly and genuinely ill-bred young lady, whose devotion to slang and fondness for wearing skirts of brilliant plaid in conjunction with bodices of brilliant crimson—to say nothing of a casual little habit of telling lies by preference—do not exactly promise happiness to the man who marries her, especially when he is so much of a prig as Cousin Neddie. It is fortunate that Mr. Daly does not pretend, as we have intimated, to any connexion with realities, or we should have to suggest that sprightly American girls, black as they are often painted, are really not quite so black as that. The typical American girl, to my mind—the girl that Mr. Daly, had he been writing comedy, rather than farce, should have painted—is all that Miss Ada Rehan, with her exquisite lifting power, flashes bewitchingly upon us; but she is more than that, she has the vivid grace of Rosalind, her forest freedom, and her witty innocence. With a special type of beauty—that wonderful freshness, blitheness, joyousness, of body as of soul—she has the piquancy of the child, and is adorably oblivious, as were Shakspeare's women, of the limits within which conventionality gives her leave to say what she thinks and do what seems to her right and pleasant. Her frankness and simplicity—so amazing to us, at times—are the frankness and simplicity of a really natural existence, and she proves to us that rules of manners are not final by acting in defiance of them and being only the more charming. But the beautiful unconcern of the really characteristic American girl becomes transformed, in Etna Jarraway, into a disposition to paw her cousin and turn somersaults in the drawing-room. How wonderful must Miss Rehan be, to do what she does with a character of which so much as this must be said! She wins a triumph by the very fact.

In a play which is not in the least like nature she can draw her comic effects from nature. She is aboundingly clever, and she puts all her cleverness into seeming not to be clever at all—simply casual. She moves with the same sort of random unconventionality with which she looks and speaks. She can bring a curious and unlikely charm into a part which, as it is written, is little better than farce. She has the transfiguring power; but one is glad to have seen her in work which does not need transfiguration.

Miss Ada Rehan is the one actress in comedy who has something of that cunningly-directed spontaneity—another name for genius—which Sarah Bernhardt has in tragedy. Among a crowd of excellent actresses, these two have something which puts them out of a crowd, however excellent. I do not go so far as to compare Miss Ada Rehan—as some injudicious admirers seem inclined to do—with Mme. Sarah Bernhardt, who is simply the greatest actress the world has seen since Rachel—if, as we are told to believe, she was excelled by Rachel. Miss Rehan is of another and a far lesser calibre. But, in her degree, Miss Rehan is as genuinely "inspired," and she is as thorough an artist. She has the spirit of comedy, as Sarah Bernhardt has—or, rather, is—the spirit of tragedy. Surely we are singularly fortunate, here in London, to have had, almost at the same time, the two actresses whom, of all the actresses in the world, one would most care to see.

The part of Etna's lover, taken by Mr. John Drew, gave but an unthankful part to an able comedian. Mr. John Lewis, who is always so amusing, was very good in Jeremiah Jarraway, and Mrs. Gilbert quite admirable in Aunt Penelope. Miss Isabel Irving as Pansy, Etna's younger sister, played a school-girl part with a bright sauciness, and romped delightfully over the stage. Indeed, the whole company was in excellent form, and deserved (if the play did not) the very hearty applause which greeted the fall of the curtain.

ARTHUR SYMONS.

MUSIC.

MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.

WE have received from Messrs. Metzler & Co.:

Britain's Defence, by J. M. Coward. The opening section of this song is straightforward both in harmony and rhythm. When the music passes into the minor key, it becomes a little more modern in character. The words by Henry Rose are not striking, and in one place not very clear. Le Portrait, an old French song, with an arrangement for pianoforte by A. L., is extremely graceful, and Miss L. Lehmann, by her artistic singing, has proved that it can be made exceedingly effective. The pianoforte accompaniment is, however, a little too modern in character. Sleeping Tide, by Lawrence Kellie; a song, modern in style, pleasing and graceful, though the working up at the end, with full organ accompaniment, is of the ordinary sensational kind. On, Stanley, On, by W. Slaughter. The African explorer's name is perhaps a good one with which to catch the public attention. The music is correctly written, but has no distinguishing feature. The Miller's Daughter, Far, Far, Away, Cradle-Song, The Brook, and The Throstle, by Alfred Cellier. All these settings of Lord Tennyson's poems are marked by a certain grace, and all four songs are tuneful. The second and the last are the most attractive; the former is plastic in form, and the last has a sprightly and effective accompaniment. The Brook opens with an elegant phrase, but the music afterwards becomes commonplace, and moreover the tonality is monotonous.

Metzler's Red Album (No. 10) contains eight sacred songs for soprano. It is scarcely fair to give "O for the wings of a dove" as a soprano solo, as in Mendelssohn's music certain parts are accompanied by chorus. The Golden City, No. 7 of the set, can only by a stretch of language be called a sacred song; it is little more than a waltz in disguise. The American Organ Journal, edited by J. Munro Coward, contains several excerpts from Mendelssohn's works, but the music is frequently spoilt by the uncomfortable way in which the harmonies are crowded into the bass. The effect on the American Organ would be even worse than on the pianoforte. Of these transcriptions "O Rest in the Lord" suffers most. Schubert's lovely Serenade, with heavy chords accompanying the theme instead of the light guitar-like accompaniment written by the composer, loses all its charm, and the four introductory and the closing bars show an utter want of reverence.

Des Ailes, Divertissement, and Air de Ballet, three pianoforte pieces by Benjamin Godard, will scarcely compare favourably with other pieces for the same instrument by the same composer. The first two are from a set of Douze Etudes, and, though dry, are excellent practice for the fingers. The last is more attractive, but still it lacks charm.

Douglas Gordon, waltz for pianoforte, is an easy arrangement by P. Bucalossi of Lawrence Kellie's popular song of that name.

Spring Songs, by A. C. Mackenzie, Op. 44 (Novello). The greatest composers did not disdain the humble form of the Lied—some of them, indeed, specially delighted in it. Dr. Mackenzie is content to follow their example, and here presents us with a set of seven songs. They are all, as one would expect, distinguished by workmanship of a high order, and words and music are always in keeping. Of the seven numbers, those which seem to us to show the most character are Nos. 1 and 4—"The First Rose" and "Spring is Not Dead"; they are finished in form and bear no traces of effort. The other songs are in many ways attractive. The accompaniments are always interesting, and in some cases elaborate. The music throughout may be called original, though here and there we detect slight traces of the influence of Mendelssohn and Gounod. The words are written by A. P. Graves, and deserve favourable mention.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

The Autotype Company, London,

Renowned for the excellence of its process of high-class

BOOK ILLUSTRATION

Adopted by the Trustees of the British Museum, the Learned Societies, and the leading Publishers. For specimens, prices, &c., apply to the Manager.

AUTO-GRAVURE

The Autotype process adapted to Photographic Engraving on copper. Copies of Paintings by Holman Hunt, of Portraits by Holi, E.A.; Oulless, E.A.; Pettie, E.A.; Prinsep, A.E.A.; of the Fresco in Guy's Hospital; "SPRING," by Herbert Draper, &c., &c.; also examples of Auto-Gravure Reproductions of Photographs from Art Objects and from Nature can be seen at the Autotype Gallery—

THE

AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY,

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON,

is remarkable for its display of Copies of celebrated Works by

"THE GREAT MASTERS"

from the Louvre, Vatican, Hermitage, and the National Galleries of Italy, Spain, Holland, and London, including H.M. Collections at Buckingham Palace and Windsor Castle.

Albums of reference to the various Galleries are provided, are easily looked over, and of great interest to lovers of Art. Send for the new Pamphlet, "AUTOTYPE: a Decorative and Educational Art," per post to any address.

The AUTOTYPE FINE ART CATALOGUE, 186 pp., free, per post, for Sixpence.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY, LONDON.

TO STOUT PEOPLE.

Sunday Times says: "Mr. Russell's aim is to eradicate, to cure the disease, and that his treatment is the true one seems beyond all doubt. The medicine he prescribes does not lower, but builds up and tones the system." Book (128 pages), with Recipe and Notes how to pleasantly and rapidly cure obesity (average reduction in first week is 3 lb.), post-free, Eight Stamps.

F. C. RUSSELL, Woburn House.

Store Street, Bedford Square, London, W.C.

Books produced at a fixed price for Printing, Paper, and Binding, and terms arranged for Publishing.

Authors advised with as to Printing and Publishing. Estimates of Cost of Printing and Binding.

ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD,

Publishers, Printers, and Binders,

FURNAL STREET, HOLBORN, and 27, CHANCERY LANE, LONDON.

FURNISH your HOUSES or APARTMENTS THROUGHOUT

OR

MOEDER'S HIRE SYSTEM.

The original, best, and most liberal. Suits all.

FOUNDED A.D. 1868.

Furnish direct from the Manufacturer, from £10 to £10,000. Cash prices. No extra charge for time given. Catalogues, Estimates, Press Opinions, Testimonials Post Free.

F. MOEDER,

248, 249, 250, Tottenham Court Road, W. Also for HIRE ONLY.

PHENIX FIRE OFFICE,

19, LOMBARD STREET, E.C., and 57, CHANCERY CROSS, S.W.

Established 1782.

Moderate Rates. Absolute Security.

Liberal Loss Settlements.

Prompt Payment of Claims.

Joint Secretaries—W. C. MACDONALD and F. B. MACDONALD.

LOSSES PAID OVER £17,000,000.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND & CO'S A1 SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS,

and

POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME

PIES. Also,

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—

11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET, MAYFAIR, W.

NATIONAL

FOR MUTUAL

PROVIDENT

INVESTED FUNDS,
£4,400,000.

LIFE ASSURANCE.

INSTITUTION.

48, GRACECHURCH STREET, LONDON.

ESTD. 1835.

THEATRES.

ADELPHI THEATRE.

Sole Proprietors and Managers, A. & S. GATTI.

Every Evening, at 8, THE ENGLISH ROSE.

Messrs. Leonard Doynce, Beveridge, Shine, Abingdon, Thalberg, Rignold, Dalton, Bassett Roe, East, &c.; Mesdames Olga Brandon, K. James, C. Jecks, E. Danc, and Mary Rorke.

Preceded, at 7.15, by THE LITTLE SENTINEL.

AVENUE THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 9, DR. BILL.

Messrs. George Alexander, Benjamin Webster, G. Capel, H. Grattan, and Albert Chevalier; Mesdames Elizabeth Robins, Carlotta Leclercq, Leston, Marie Linden, Laura Graves, Edith Kenward, Lillie Young, and Fanny Brough.

Preceded, at 8.30, by MISS CINDERELLA.

COMEDY THEATRE.

Manager, Mr. CHAS. H. HAWTREY.

Every Evening, at 9, NERVES.

Messrs. H. Kemble, Edward Righton, and Charles Hawtre; Mesdames Maud Millett, Sophie Larkin, Lydia Cowell, Ethel Matthews, and Lottie Venne.

Preceded, at 8.15, by A BAD PENNY.

CRITERION THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. CHARLES WYNHAM.

Every Evening, at 9, WELCOME, LITTLE STRANGER.

Messrs. W. Blakeley, E. Maurice, G. Giddens; Mesdames M. A. Victor, Helen Forsyth, E. Vining, F. Frances, and Vane Featherston.

Preceded, at 8, by JILTED.

GAIETY THEATRE.

On SATURDAY Mr. NAT GOODWIN will appear in Mr. J. W. Pigott's successful Comedy, THE BOOKMAKER, supported by the following cast:—Messrs. William Farren, Charles Glenny, Reeves Smith, George Dalziel, Eric Thorne, Fred Wood, and Walker; Mesdames Jenny McNulty, Christine Mayne, Adelaide Gunn, and Carlotta Leclercq.

GARRICK THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. JOHN HARE.

This Evening, at 8.50, A PAIR OF SPECTACLES.

Messrs. John Hare, C. Groves, R. Cathcart, S. Brough, C. Dodsworth, and R. Harding; Mesdames Webster, F. Hunter, and Kate Rorke.

Preceded, at 8, by DREAM FACES.

Mr. J. Forbes Robertson and Miss Carlotta Addison.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

THREE per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS, repayable on demand.

TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS when not drawn below £100.

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposits, and allows interest at the rate of THREE per CENT. per annum, on each completed £1.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR

TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, OR A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post-free. Southamton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

GRAND THEATRE.

Brilliant attraction for 10 nights more.—Mr. FRED LESLIE, Miss NELLIE FARREN, and the whole of the GAIETY THEATRE COMPANY, in the enormously successful burlesque, RUY BLAS. (Gaiety chorus, dresses, scenery, and effects, by arrangement with Mr. George Edwardes. Commence at 7.30.

LYCEUM THEATRE.

Mr. HENRY IRVING, Sole Lessee.

Every Evening, at 8.15, THE GREAT UNKNOWN.

Preceded at 8.15 by A WOMAN'S WONT.

Messrs. John Drew, James Lewis, &c.; Mesdames Ada Rehan and Gilbert.

SAVOY THEATRE.

Proprietor and Manager, R. D'OYLY CARTE.

Every Evening, at 8.30, the entirely original Comic Opera, by W. S. Gilbert and Arthur Sullivan, in two acts, entitled THE GONDOLIERS.

SHAFTESBURY THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, E. S. WILLARD.

Every Evening, at 8.30, JUDAH.

Messrs. Willard, Royce Carleton, F. Kerr, Sant Matthews, C. Fulton, H. Cane, Harting, and Thomas; Mesdames Bessie Hatton, Gertrude Warden, A. Bowering, and Olga Brandon.

STRAND THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 8.40, the funniest farcical Comedy ever written, entitled OUR FLAT.

Wednesday and Saturday, at 2.30.

Preceded, at 8, by BOYS WILL BE BOYS.

TERRY'S THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 9, THE JUDGE.

Messrs. W. S. Penley, Wm. Herbert, F. H. Fenton, M. Kinghorne, G. Belmore, and W. Lestocq; Mesdames E. Thorne, E. Chester, H. Leyton, and C. Grimham.

At 8.15, NEARLY SEVERED.

TOOLE'S THEATRE.

Manageress, Miss VIOLET MELNOTTE.

Lessee, Mr. J. L. TOOLE.

Every Evening, at 9, a new Military Farce, in three acts, by J. H. Darnley, entitled THE SOLICITOR.

Preceded by THE BAILIFF.

GOLD PEN,

WITH DIAMOND POINT.

Anti-corrosive—Flexible—Durable—Adapting itself to any Handwriting.

Price 6d. each; post-free, 7d.

With White Metal Pocket Holder, complete - - - 1s.

Or, with Mordan's Best Silver Pocket-Holders—

Fluted Pattern, complete - - - - - 5s. 6d.

Engine-turned Pattern, complete - - - - - 6s. 6d.

Fluted Pattern, Telescope - - - - - 10s. 6d.

Other Patterns in great variety.

ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD,

27, CHANCERY LANE, LONDON.

FRY'S

Lancet—"Pure and very soluble."

Medical Times—"Eminently suitable for Invalids."

PURE CONCENTRATED

Sir C. A. Cameron—"I have never tasted Cocoa that I like so well."

President Royal College of Surgeons, Ireland.

COCOA

Paris Exhibition, 1889: GOLD MEDAL awarded to J. S. FRY & SONS

Messrs. Longmans &amp; Co.'s List.

MRS. JAMESON'S SACRED AND LEGENDARY ART.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITIONS.

Net
price.

THE HISTORY of OUR LORD, as exemplified in Works of Art: with that of His Types, S. John the Baptist, and other Persons of the Old and New Testaments. Commenced by the late Mrs. JAMESON, continued and completed by Lady EASTLAKE. With 81 Etchings and 281 Woodcuts, 2 vols., 8vo, cloth, gilt top ... 20 0

LEGENDS of the SAINTS and

MARTYRS, viz., the Angels and Archangels, the Evangelists, the Apostles, the Doctors of the Church, S. Mary Magdalene, the Patron Saints, the Martyrs, the Early Bishops, the Hermits, and the Warrior Saints of Christendom, as represented in the Fine Arts. By Mrs. JAMESON. With 19 Etchings on Copper and Steel, and 187 Woodcuts, 2 vols., 8vo, cloth, gilt top ... 20 0

LEGENDS of the MONASTIC

ORDERS, as represented in the Fine Arts, comprising the Benedictines and Augustines, and Orders derived from their Rules, the Mendicant Orders, the Jesuits, and the Order of the Visitation of S. Mary. By Mrs. JAMESON. With 11 Etchings by the Author, and 88 Woodcuts, 1 vol., 8vo, cloth, gilt top ... 10 0

LEGENDS of the MADONNA, or

Blessed Virgin Mary, Devotional with and without the Infant Jesus, Historical from the Annunciation to the Assumption, as represented in Sacred and Legendary Christian Art. By Mrs. JAMESON. With 27 Etchings and 166 Woodcuts, 1 vol., 8vo, cloth, gilt top ... 10 0

THE STEPS of the SUN. Daily

Readings of Prose. Selected by AGNES MASON. 16mo, 8s. 6d.

* Uniform with the Original Edition of "FIVE MINUTES" Daily Readings of Poetry. Selected by H. L. SIDNEY LEAR.

CABINET EDITION OF WALPOLE'S ENGLAND.

HISTORY of ENGLAND from the

CONCLUSION of the GREAT WAR in 1815 to 1858. By SPENCER WALPOLE. Cabinet Edition. 6 vols., crown 8vo, 6s. each. Vols. I. and II. now ready.

MANUALS OF CATHOLIC PHILOSOPHY.
(STONYHURST SERIES.)PSYCHOLOGY. By Michael Maher,
S.J. Crown 8vo, 6s. 6d.

NATION MAKING: a Story of New

Zealand. Savagism and Civilisation. By J. C. FIRTH, Author of "Our Kin Across the Sea." Crown 8vo, 6s.

"A fund of really valuable information about the history of the Colony and especially about the Maories, the most interesting native race with which we have ever had to deal." Literary World.

NEW BOOK BY THE AUTHOR OF "THOTH."

TOXAR: a Romance. By J. Shield

NICHOLSON, Author of "Thoth," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"Romantic and dramatic ..... Antinous and Toxar are, both of them, striking characters, vividly and impressively depicted."—Speaker.

"'Toxar' is a strange character, a barbarian slave of many wiles, who avenges himself on his Grecian masters by faithfully fulfilling their commands."—The World.

SNAP: a Legend of the Lone Mountain. By C. PHILLIPPS-WOLLEY, Author of "Sport in the Crimea and Caucasus," &c. With 13 Illustrations by H. G. Willink. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"The illustrations are enough to make the hair stand on end."—Glasgow Weekly Citizen.

"The kind of book for which most British boys are supremely grateful."—Brighton Herald.

WILD DARRIE: a Novel. By Christie

MURRAY and HENRY HERMAN. New and Cheaper Edition. Crown 8vo, boards, 2s.; cloth, 2s. 6d.

LONDON: LONGMANS, GREEN, &amp; CO.

W. H. SMITH & SON'S
SUBSCRIPTION LIBRARY,
186, STRAND, LONDON, and at the Railway Bookstalls.

1.—This Library is established in connexion with Messrs. W. H. SMITH & Son's numerous Railway Bookstalls; it embraces all the most important Works of History, Biography, Travel, Fiction, Poetry, Science, and Theology, as well as the leading Magazines and Reviews, and gives greater advantages to Subscribers than any other existing Library, from the fact that there are 500 Bookstalls in England and Wales, and to any of these Depots a Subscriber may be transferred free of charge.

2.—Subscribers can only change their Books at the Depot where their names are registered, but they may transfer the place of exchange by giving notice to the Clerk in charge of the Depot at which they obtain their Books. Of the current periodicals, one only at a time is allowed to a Subscription under Five Guineas, and Subscriptions will not be accepted for the supply of Magazines and Reviews only.

3.—The Books are delivered at the Bookstalls, carriage free. A Subscriber may exchange once a day; the Clerk in charge will obtain from London any Work in the Library which a Subscriber may desire to have. NOVELS exchanged only in unbroken and complete Sets.

4.—London Subscribers transferring their Subscriptions to a Country Depot will be entitled only to the number of volumes which the Country terms assign to the amount they subscribe; similarly, Country Subscriptions transferred to Town become subject to the London regulations.

5.—Subscriptions may commence at any date, and are payable in advance at any of the Railway Bookstalls.

6.—Messrs. W. H. SMITH & Son beg to impress upon their Library Subscribers the fact that much disappointment and inconvenience would be avoided if they would, in all cases, give to the Clerk in charge a list comprising at least twice as many titles of works as they wish to exchange.

I.—FOR SUBSCRIBERS OBTAINING THEIR BOOKS FROM A LONDON TERMINUS.

	6 Months	12 Months
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
For One Volume at a time ...	0 12 0	1 1 0
(Novels in more than One Volume are not available for this class of Subscription.)
For Two Volumes ...	0 17 6	1 11 6
(Novels in more than Two Volumes are not available for this class of Subscription.)
For Four ...	1 3 0	2 2 0
For Eight ...	1 15 0	3 3 0
For Fifteen ...	3 0 0	5 5 0

II.—FOR SUBSCRIBERS OBTAINING THEIR BOOKS FROM A COUNTRY BOOKSTALL—

For One Volume at a time ...	0 12 0	1 1 0
(Novels in more than One Volume are not available for this class of Subscription.)
For Two Volumes ...	0 17 6	1 11 6
(Novels in more than Two Volumes are not available for this class of Subscription.)
For Three ...	1 3 0	2 2 0
For Four ...	1 8 0	2 10 0
For Six ...	1 15 0	3 3 0
For Twelve ...	3 0 0	5 5 0

III.—FOR COUNTRY BOOK CLUBS, READING SOCIETIES, &amp;c

For Twenty-four Volumes at a time ...	5 5 0	9 9 0
For Thirty-six ...	8 0 0	14 2 6
For Forty-eight ...	10 10 0	18 16 0
For Sixty ...	13 0 0	23 9 0
For Seventy-two ...	15 10 0	28 2 0
For Eighty-four ...	18 0 0	32 15 0

For every additional Twelve Volumes, £4 12s. 6d.

A Catalogue of Surplus and New Books, offered at greatly reduced prices, is published Monthly and can be had upon application at the Bookstalls. Also a Catalogue of Books in elegant bindings, for Gentlemen's Libraries.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 954.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, AUGUST 16, 1890.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper]

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

	PAGE
MICHAEL FIELD'S TRAGIC MARY, by LIONEL JOHNSON	123
BEDGWICK'S LIFE AND LETTERS, by A. W. BENN	124
HUNGARY AND THE SLAVS IN THE TWELFTH CENTURY, by W. R. MORFILL	126
HORSE'S THREE YEARS IN WESTERN CHINA, by M. BEAZLEY	127
NEW NOVELS, by WILLIAM WALLACE	128
NOTES AND NEWS	129
VERSE: "L'INDIFFÉRENT (WATTEAU)," by MICHAEL FIELD	130
OBITUARY: CARDINAL NEWMAN, by DR. GREENHILL	130
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	131
THE INTERNATIONAL "CONFÉRENCE DU LIVRE" AT ANTWERP, by H. MORSE STEPHENS	131
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS	133
CORRESPONDENCE:— The Original French Editions of "The Kalender of Shepherdes," by H. Oskar Sommer; "Hetman" and "Hauptmann," by R. Nibbet Bain; "The Ogam Stones in the Isle of Man," by Prof. J. Rhys; "Mādhava and Sūyana," by A. M. S. JACKSON	133
MÜNSTERBERG'S BEITRÄGE ZUR EXPERIMENTELLEN PSYCHOLOGIE, by JAMES SULLY	134
SCIENCE NOTES	136
PHILOLOGY NOTES	136
BOWEN'S JAPANESE POTTERY, by COSMO MONKHOUSE	136
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	137
STAGE NOTES	138
MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS, by J. S. SHEDLOCK	138
MUSIC NOTES	138

ARTIST, Landscape Painter, living in the Country, has VACANCY for a PUPIL. Seventy minutes' rail from London.—Particulars on application, "R." ACADEMY OFFICE, 17, Chancery Lane, W.C.

FOR SALE, a fine old PAINTING (copy) of HOGARTH'S MIDNIGHT MODERN CONVERSATION. 2 ft. 1 in. by 2 ft. 6 in.—Apply at 58, Upton Road, Church Road, Kingland, N. Also a fine old Painting on Copper-Plate, subject, TOWER OF BABEL. Stamped Pieter Stas, Antwerp, 2 ft. 2 in. by 1 ft. 7 in., 1890.

OIL PAINTINGS for SALE.—A gentleman has FOUR ORIGINALS, certified, viz., a fine Old SHAYER, a G. VINCENT, a W. J. MULLER, and a Sir T. LAWRENCE, P.R.A.—For view, address, SECRETARY, 33, Old Broad Street, London, E.C.

TO PUBLISHERS.—The Advertiser is OPEN to an ENGAGEMENT as Manager or other responsible position. Thoroughly conversant with all the details of Paper, Printing, Binding, Advertising, &c. First-class references.—Address, C. H., 100, Mercer's Road, Tufnell Park, N.

STAMMERERS should read a book by a gentleman who cured himself after suffering nearly forty years. Price 13 stamps.—R. BEAZLEY, Drumpion Park, near Huntingdon.

TYPE-WRITING.

TYPE-WRITING.—MSS., Scientific, and of all descriptions. Legal Documents, Specifications, Plays, &c. COPIED with speed and accuracy. Dictations taken in shorthand or Type-writing by expert Type-writers. Special success attained in work requiring delicacy and care. Highest testimonials. Pupils taught.—Misses E. B. & I. FARNAN, 4, Southampton Street, Strand, London.

CATALOGUES.

BAEDEKER'S & BADDELEY'S GUIDE-BOOKS.
New Detailed CATALOGUE, now ready, sent post free on application.
DULAU & Co., 37, Soho Square, London.

IMPORTANT TO ETMOLOGICAL SOCIETIES AND MUSEUMS.
Now ready, 8vo, pp. 210, price 16s.

A SYNONYMIC CATALOGUE of NEUROPTERA ODONATA, or DRAGONFLIES With an Appendix of Fossil Species. By W. F. KIRBY, F.Z.S., F.E.S., &c.

GURNEY & JACKSON, 1, Paternoster Row (Mr. Van Voorst's successors).

TO AUTHORS.

MESSRS. DIGBY & LONG, PUBLISHERS,
18, BOUVERIE STREET, FLEET STREET, LONDON, E.C.

Are prepared to receive and give careful consideration to all MSS. and arrange terms for their PUBLICATION. Messrs. DIGBY & LONG have also every convenience and ample facilities for the Publication of Magazines. Editorial offices if required. Newest Catalogue post free.

Now ready, price 6s.

THE JOURNAL of the ANTHROPOLOGICAL INSTITUTE of GREAT BRITAIN and IRELAND.
Vol. XX, No. 1, AUGUST, 1890.
Contains Papers by T. W. SHORE, F.G.S.; J. G. GIBSON, M.D.; G. F. LAWRENCE, W. F. STANLEY, F.G.S.; and A. W. HOWITT, F.G.S. Anthropological Miscellaneous.
London: TRAUBNER & Co., Ludgate Hill.

SCHOOLS, COLLEGES, &c.

OWENS COLLEGE, VICTORIA UNIVERSITY, MANCHESTER.

PROSPECTUSES FOR—

I. DAY CLASSES.
II. DEPARTMENT OF MEDICINE.
III. DENTAL DEPARTMENT.
IV. PHARMACEUTICAL DEPARTMENT.
V. DEPARTMENT FOR WOMEN.
VI. EVENING CLASSES.
VII. SCHOLARSHIPS and EXHIBITIONS (£12 to £100 per annum).
May be obtained at Mr. CORNISH's, St. Ann's Square, Manchester, or on application to the REGISTRAR.
HENRY W. HOLDER, M.A., Registrar.

CITY and GUILDS of LONDON INSTITUTE for the ADVANCEMENT of TECHNICAL EDUCATION.

PRESIDENT—H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.
CHAIRMAN OF COUNCIL—
The Right Hon. the EARL of SELBORNE, F.R.S.

SESSION 1890-91.

MATRICULATION or ENTRANCE EXAMINATIONS will be held on SEPTEMBER 22-24 for the CENTRAL INSTITUTION, and on SEPTEMBER 30 for the DAY DEPARTMENT of the TECHNICAL COLLEGE, FINSBURY.

CENTRAL INSTITUTION.

The Courses of Technical Instruction at the Central Institution of the City and Guilds of London Institute are adapted to the requirements of persons who are preparing to become Civil, Mechanical, or Electrical Engineers, Chemical and other Manufacturers and Teachers.
MATHEMATICAL DEPARTMENT under the direction of Prof. HENRIK, F.R.S.
ENGINEERING DEPARTMENT under Prof. UNWIN, F.R.S., M.I.C.E. (Dean of the Institution).
PHYSICAL and ELECTRICAL DEPARTMENT under Professor AUSTIN, F.R.S.
CHEMICAL DEPARTMENT under Prof. ARMSTRONG, Ph.D., F.R.S.
The NEW SESSION commences on SEPTEMBER 20th. The Entrance Examination will be held on September 22nd to 24th. Programme and full particulars of Courses of Instruction, and of the Entrance Scholarships, on application at the Central Institution, Exhibition Road, or at the Office of the Institute, Gresham College, E.C.

TECHNICAL COLLEGE, FINSBURY.

DAY DEPARTMENT FOR STUDENTS NOT UNDER FOURTEEN YEARS OF AGE.

The Day Classes at the City and Guilds of London Technical College, Finsbury, provide Technical Instruction for Mechanical and Electrical Engineers and Technical Chemists and are under the direction of Professor S. P. THOMPSON, D.Sc., Principal of the College; Professor J. PERRY, F.R.S.; and Professor R. MIDDLE, F.R.S.
The NEXT SESSION commences on OCTOBER 7th. The Entrance Examination will be held on September 20th. For further particulars of Day and Evening Classes, Scholarships, &c., apply at the College, Leonard Street, City Road, E.C., or at the Office of the Institute.
City and Guilds of London Institute, Gresham College, E.C.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

DEPARTMENT OF ENGINEERING.

The COUNCIL is prepared to APPOINT an ASSISTANT to the PROFESSOR of ENGINEERING. The gentleman appointed will be a practical Mechanical Engineer who has had University or Technical School education. The stipend will be £120 a year, with a share of Evening Fees. Applications, together with testimonials and references, should be forwarded before SEPTEMBER 9th next to Cardiff, August 6th, 1890.
IVOR JAMES, Registrar.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

DEPARTMENT OF PHYSICS.

The COUNCIL is prepared to APPOINT an ASSISTANT PROFESSOR of PHYSICS. The stipend will be £200 a year with a share of Evening Fees. The gentleman appointed will be expected to enter upon his work at the beginning of October next. Applications, together with testimonials and references, should be forwarded before SEPTEMBER 9th to Cardiff, August 6th, 1890.
IVOR JAMES, Registrar.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

The Council of the University College of South Wales and Monmouthshire, as the Local Committee of the Cardiff Day Training College, invite APPLICATIONS for the post of MASTER of METHOD. The stipend will not be less than £200 per annum. A statement of duties can be obtained on application to the REGISTRAR. Applications, which should be accompanied by testimonials or references, must be sent in on or before SEPTEMBER 9th, 1890.
IVOR JAMES, Registrar.

TUDOR HALL LADIES' COLLEGE, FOREST HILL, S.E., LONDON.

Principals—Rev. Dr. and Mrs. TODD.
Head Mistress—Miss M. TODD (Girton), Cambridge.
Professors—Nesley, King's Coll.; Dr. Dulcken, Rudolph Lowman, Louis Diehl, Signor Garcia, Larpent, Ferrero, Churton Collins, &c.
Full list and references on application.
Large Gymnasium, Lawn-Tennis Courts, Swimming, and Riding.

QUEEN'S SERVICE ACADEMY, 3 and 4, ELY PLACE, DUBLIN.—The oldest, and among the most successful in the United Kingdom: over 2,000 have passed.

I. All Army Examinations.
II. Civil Service of India, Universities, &c.
III. R. I. Constabulary Cadetships.
There is not a Corps in the Services or a Department under Government that does not owe some of its Officers to the QUEEN'S SERVICE ACADEMY, DUBLIN. No attempt at cramming; unsurpassed staff of Specialists under personal direction of W. J. CHITWODE CRAWLEY, LL.D., D.C.L., F.R.G.S., F.G.S., F.R. Hist. Soc., &c.

THE COLONIAL COLLEGE and TRAINING FARMS (Limited), HOLLESLEY HAY, SUFFOLK.
For the Training of Youths for Colonial Life.
The College owns and farms a fine Seaside Estate of 1,330 acres. Prospectus on application to the RESIDENT DIRECTOR.

INEXPENSIVE SOUND EDUCATION at SCHORNE COLLEGE, WINSLOW.—Over 40 Army and Navy Boys (Clergy Sons, Medical, &c.) have been educated in either the Classical or Modern side, and the School has a good record. 30 guineas a year; reduced to brothers and orphans. Entrance fee, 5 guineas.—Address Rev. Dr. JAMES.

ST. PAUL'S SCHOOL.—An EXAMINATION for filling up about FIFTEEN VACANCIES on the Foundation will be held on the 10th SEPTEMBER NEXT.—For information apply to the BURSAR, St. Paul's School, West Kensington.

BRITISH INSTITUTION SCHOLARSHIP FUND.—At a Meeting of the Trustees held on August 6, SCHOLARSHIPS of £50 a year, tenable for two years, were awarded.—In Painting to FRANK JOSEPH MACKENZIE and CHARLES MARCH GERE. In Sculpture to HENRY CHARLES FEHR. By order of the Trustees.

BRITISH ASSOCIATION for the ADVANCEMENT of SCIENCE, 22, ALBEMARLE STREET, LONDON, W.

The NEXT ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING will be held at LEEDS, commencing on WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 3.
PRESIDENT ELECT—
Sir FREDERICK AUGUSTUS ABEL, C.B., D.C.L., D.Sc., F.R.S., V.P.C.S.

NOTICE TO CONTRIBUTORS OF MEMOIRS.—Authors are reminded that, under an arrangement dating from 1871, the acceptance of Memoirs and the days on which they are to be read are now as far as possible determined by Organising Committees for the several Sections before the beginning of the Meeting. It has, therefore, become necessary, in order to give an opportunity to the Committees of doing justice to the several Communications, that each Author should prepare an Abstract of his Memoir of a length suitable for insertion in the published Transactions of the Association, and the Council request that he will send it, together with the original Memoir, by book post on or before August 6, addressed thus:—"General Secretaries, British Association, 22, Albemarle Street, London, W. For Section —." Authors who comply with this request and whose papers are accepted will be furnished before the Meeting with printed copies of their Reports or Abstracts. If it should be inconvenient to the Author that his paper should be read on any particular day, he is requested to send information thereof to the Secretaries in a separate note.

NOW READY.

NEW NOVEL by Mrs. BENNETT-EDWARDS
Crown 8vo, 350 pp., 2s. 6d.

SAINT MONICA: A Wife's Love Story.
By MRS. BENNETT-EDWARDS.

"Saint Monica" is a society novel, remarkable alike for originality and power.... It may easily be understood that the excess of devotion and self-abandonment exemplified in Veronica and George Westbury require a great deal of ingenious writing up.... Mrs. Bennett-Edwards has proved herself equal to the task, and must be regarded as a clever, as well as daring, manipulator, of subjects decidedly risky in treatment....—Academy.

"This is one of the many volumes to which the controversy about marriage has given rise.... The volume is written with a considerable amount of power and convincingness."—Bris of Mercury.
"The heroine is admitted to be a supporter of some of the most advanced and startling theories of the day.... Her attitude towards this passionate and headstrong woman is one of the most curious features of a curious.... book."—Morning Post.

"Plenty of ability and good writing in this book."—Liverpool Mercury.

Bristol: J. W. ARROWSMITH.

London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT, & Co., Limited.

Books produced at a fixed price for Printing, Paper, and Binding, and terms arranged for Publishing.

Authors advised with as to Printing and Publishing. Estimates of Cost of Printing and Binding.

ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD,
Publishers, Printers, and Binders,
FURNIVAL STREET, HOLBORN, and 27, CHANCERY LANE, LONDON.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

Two New Editions at all Booksellers and Railway Stations.

A MEMOIR of E. A. SOTHERN.

By T. EDGAR PEMBERTON.
In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

MR. SERGEANT BALLANTINE'S EXPERIENCES OF A BARRISTER'S LIFE.

In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 1s.

POPULAR NOVELS.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE REPENTANCE
OF PAUL WENTWORTH."

THE RIDDLE of LAURENCE HAVILAND.

By CONSTANCE SMITH.
In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "ANTHONY FAIRFAX."
AUDREY.

By MARGERY HOLLIS.
In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"Miss Hollis writes very charmingly and carries the reader gently and pleasantly along. Audrey is so bright and charming a girl that the reader cannot fail to sympathise with her troubles."—Manchester Examiner.

A NEW NOVEL. AN AUSTRALIAN GIRL.

In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"There is considerable vigour of dramatic conception and effective rendering. The high-minded, clever, emotional 'Australian Girl' is admirably described. The painting of Australian life, the long rides into those vast solitudes among the wealth of foliage and flowers and the profuseness of animal life are brilliantly described. The thread of the story is excellent."—Manchester Guardian.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "OUGHT WE TO VISIT HER?"

PEARL POWDER. By Mrs.

ANNIE EDWARDES, Author of "Leah: a Woman of Fashion," &c. In 2 vols., crown 8vo.

"A clever and original story with plenty of life and movement about it."—Woman.

"The reader will find both mysterious plot and exciting incident."—Athenaeum.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THAT UNFORTUNATE MARRIAGE."

MADAME LEROUX. By

FRANCES ELEANOR TROLLOPE, Author of "Black Spirits and White," &c. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"Seeing that the name of Frances Eleanor Trollope appears on the title page, it is almost needless to add that this is a clever and well-written book."—Spectator.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "A DREAMER."

MR. BRYANT'S MISTAKE.

By KATHARINE WYLDE, Author of "An Ill-Regulated Mind," &c. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street,
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN'S LIST.

Just ready, the Twenty-Sixth Volume of "The Story of the Nations."

SWITZERLAND.

By LINA HUG and R. STEAD.

Maps, Illustrations, and Index, crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

Recently issued in same series,

SCOTLAND.

By JOHN MACKINTOSH, LL.D.,

Author of "A History of Civilisation in Scotland," &c.

"An intelligent and impartial narrative.... Arranged in a business-like way, suggestive of hard and discriminative study."—Glasgow Herald.

Vol. III. of "The Adventure Series," just ready.

MEMOIRS of the EXTRA- ORDINARY MILITARY CAREER of JOHN SHIPP.

With an Introduction by Major H. M. CHICHESTER.

Illustrated, crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

ILLUSTRATED BY F. CARRUTHERS GOULD AND
THE AUTHOR.

WILD NATURE WON by KINDNESS.

By Mrs. BRIGHTWEN, Vice-President of the Selborne Society.

Small crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

"We hope we have said enough to induce lovers of living creatures to apply to Mrs. Brightwen's pages for themselves. Whether they are outsiders or insiders in the world of natural history, they will be sure to find in her book much that will please them, and not a little that is new to them."—Saturday Review.

TWO NEW VOLUMES OF POETRY.

THE IMMORTALS; and Other Poems.

By R. WARWICK BOND.

Crown 8vo, antique paper, parchment, 4s. 6d.

THE PRELUDE; and Other Poems.

By HERBERT BURROWS.

Crown 8vo, antique paper, parchment, 4s. 6d.

BY THE REV. NEWMAN SMYTH, D.D.

PERSONAL CREEDS; Or, How to Form a Working Theory of Life.

By NEWMAN SMYTH, D.D.,

Author of "The Reality of Faith," &c.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

"The discourses are written with a vigour that rises at times into eloquence without ever seeming unnatural or forced."—Scotsman.

BY GEORGE PARK FISHER, D.D., LL.D.

THE NATURE and METHOD of REVELATION.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 4s. 6d.

"Dr. Fisher's standpoint is orthodox, but he writes in a liberal spirit."—Manchester Guardian.

LONDON:

T. FISHER UNWIN, PATERNOSTER SQUARE, E.C.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO.'S

BOOKS for SUMMER READING.

LOW'S STANDARD NOVELS.

NEW AND CHEAPER ISSUE.

Crown 8vo, fancy boards, 2s.; cloth, uniform, 2s. 6d.

Lorna Doone. By R. D. BLACKMORE.

Far From the Madding Crowd. By THOMAS HARDY.

Senior Partner. By Mrs. RIDDELL.

Clara Vaughan. By R. D. BLACKMORE.

The Guardian Angel. By OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES.

Her Great Idea, and other Stories. By Mrs. WALFORD.

Some One Else. By Mrs. CROKER.

The Mayor of Casterbridge. By THOS. HARDY.

The Casting Away of Mrs. Lecks and Mrs. Aleshine; and The Dusanter. By FRANK R. STOCKTON, Author of "Rudder Grange."

Adela Cathcart. By GEORGE MAC DONALD.

Cripps the Carrier. By R. BLACKMORE.

Dred. By HARRIET BEECHER STOWE.

The Trumpet-Major. By THOMAS HARDY.

The Vasty Deep. By STUART CUMBERLAND.

Daisies and Buttercups. By Mrs. RIDDELL.

The Hand of Ethelberta. By THOMAS HARDY.

Mary Anerley. By R. D. BLACKMORE.

The Return of the Native. By THOMAS HARDY.

* To be followed by others.

SEA STORIES BY W. CLARK RUSSELL.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION.

In uniform crown 8vo, volumes, half-leather, gilt top,
3s. 6d. each.

An Ocean Free A Strange Voyage.

Lance. A Sailor's Sweetheart.

The Frozen Pirate. The Wreck of the "Grosvenor."

A Sea Queen. Little Loo.

The Lady Maud. John Holdsworth,

My Watch Below. Chief Mate.

"That richly gifted chronicler of the great waters, Mr. W. Clark Russell, whose knowledge, imagination, and graphic power, each being excellent of its kind, unite in a marine style which has no modern parallel."—Daily Telegraph.

LOW'S STANDARD LIBRARY OF TRAVEL.

The HEART of AFRICA: being Three

Years' Travels and Adventures in the Unexplored Regions of Central Africa. By Dr. GEORG SCHWEINFURTH. New Edition. 2 vols., crown 8vo, numerous Illustrations and Map, cloth, 3s. 6d. per volume.

TWO KINGS of UGANDA; or, Life

by the Shore of the Victoria Nyanza. Being an Account of a Residence of Six Years in Eastern Equatorial Africa. By Rev. ROBERT P. ASHE, F.R.G.S., F.R.H.S., &c. New and Cheaper Edition. With Map and Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

HOW I FOUND LIVINGSTONE; including Four Months' Residence with Dr. Livingstone. By HENRY M. STANLEY, D.C.L., &c. With Map and Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. The Original Edition, superior in paper and binding, price 7s. 6d. can still be obtained.

"It is incomparably more lively than most books of African travel. The reader may follow him with unflagging interest from his start to his return, and will be disposed to part with him on excellent terms."—Saturday Review.

THROUGH the DARK CONTINENT;

from the Indian to the Atlantic Ocean. By HENRY M. STANLEY, D.C.L., &c. With Map and Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

The Original Edition, superior in paper and binding, and with the original Maps, price 12s. 6d., can still be obtained.

"Every page contains the record of some strange adventure, or the note of some valuable observation."—Pall Mall Gazette.

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, SEARLE,
and RIVINGTON, Limited,
St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, Fleet Street, E.C.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 16, 1890.

No. 954, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

The Tragic Mary. By Michael Field (Bell).

The Tragic Mary is the ninth play published by "Michael Field" during the last six years. Like its predecessors, it demands an amount of attention, and of respect, rarely due to the dramatic literature of our day. More than most kinds of writing, drama requires certain excellencies, without which it cannot but fail; and the greatest of these is an intellectual hold upon life, upon nature, and upon human passions. A play, which has this excellence, may come short of many desirable qualities, yet be successful after all. Now, in the previous plays of Michael Field, there was much to regret; there was a laboured roughness of language, a confusion, so it seemed, of Elizabethan extravagance with Elizabethan force; in one word, a deliberate carelessness about the graces of perfection. But each play was full of one palmary excellence; this sympathy of the mind with the passions. And this was expressed by one prevailing conception, which is the real note of Michael Field's work: the conception, not of doom as the Greeks felt it, but of inherited necessities, imposed upon a man's nature by ancestry, or by nationality, or even by the very soil. In Canute the Great, the play of emotion depends upon the struggle for mastery of two claims; the savage claim of race, and the gentle claim of Christian culture. In William Rufus, we found the territorial instinct, the sense of motherhood in earth, working out a tragedy: in The Father's Tragedy, the sins of the father are visited in crime and agony upon the child. Callirrhoe shows the vanity of resisting nature's impulses: in this, the earliest play, the intoxication of orgy and of frenzy, justified by nature, becomes the holy service of a God. And Brutus Utter displays the contest between the genius of Roman supremacy, and the spirit of family affection; two tremendous powers. A like interest may be seen in the three remaining plays; and the result of it is, that we recognise in Michael Field very much more than a clever playwright; we recognise signs and tokens of a great tragedian. How calamitously so high a merit is impaired, by faults of execution, will be seen in an examination of The Tragic Mary. The Queen of Scots is best known in literature through Schiller's Mary Stuart, Scott's Abbot, and Mr. Swinburne's Trilogy. In history, she is very variously known through a multitude of writers; nor can it be said that there is not ample room for new interpretations of her character and fortunes. Michael Field's research into authorities has clearly been conscientious and thorough. We are constantly recognising phrases from State papers, and touches of character, historically warranted. But fidelity to facts is the least part of a tragedian's duty: so long as nothing be said or done, inconsistent with the character of history, we need not be enslaved to the letter. Not that the play takes any liberty with facts, worthy of mention; but, unquestionably, it touches them at times with a free hand. This it does in the true spirit of Aristotle's law. The play is a perfect whole; from first to last there is no redundancy, and no undue compression. Michael Field has chosen, with a welcome sense of strength, the most difficult and dubious period of Mary's life; the fifteen months between Riccio's murder, and the Queen's surrender to the nobles. It is easy to treat her tragic death with dignity and beauty; or to represent her blithe, French youth and early reign; but the period chosen tests her character; upon our view of that, depends our attitude towards Mary.

Throughout this play our feelings are wrought to emotion, less by action than by its consequences; Riccio is not "killed before the people"; there is no scene of Bothwell's trial; Darnley, indeed, is murdered upon the stage, yet it is not the murder that works upon us, but the mind of the murderer. It is emphatically a dramatic presentation of character, and of action there, as Browning puts it. The approaches to each decisive act, and the memories, regrets, and apprehensions following it; it is that, which Michael Field is careful and skilled to expose. The chief characters are five in number: those of Mary, Bothwell, Moray, Lethington, and Darnley; and in no previous play has Michael Field with finer art contrasted character. Three of them, the first three, are strong and urgent, full of that instinct from the past, working towards the future, which we noted for this writer's characteristic thought; the last two are creatures of the moment; Lethington, subtle and intellectual; Darnley, foolish and childish. No better example of Michael Field's finest style could be given than the speeches in which Mary, Bothwell, and Moray express this sentiment.

Mary thus answers Lethington, speaking to her of the English crown, and her hopes of wearing it:

"The English crown! It is my dearest hope: I tell you, Lethington, one little hour I felt the sense of glory and expanse, The opening of my nature's very leaves. 'Twas on the day of the great tournament, After the peace of Cambray, when the king Trusted by aid of Spain to establish me Sovereign and Catholic on English soil. I was but scarce sixteen. Oh, I remember I shook all sickness from me in the bliss Of my true dignity; the royal arms Of England and of Scotland, with the crown Of France above them, blazoned on my car. Place for the Queen, and when the populace Added of England, something changed in me, As when the sky first kindled into stars. Dreams should be sluggish, this encloses me, And eddies me away. I cannot rest Till I have crossed the Border; Halidon Must feel the pressure of my feet, the guns Of Berwick must salute me. Ah, the dream,

To wrap you in its current! I confide To you the secrets that I dare not drop In my soul's ear—if you could understand! A cry for empire pierces up my heart As sharp as murdered blood, spilled on the ground, Presses for retribution. I receive The sighs I breathe; if I am left alone I catch across the vaults of ancestry Reverberating sounds. I do not urge My claims, a racial importunity Leaves me no peace until its suit be stayed. Does there not grow in kings a royal gift, Tradition of the conscience?"

There can be no question about the strength and the beauty of that: we regret the more, that so vile a phrase, with so fine a meaning, as racial importunity, should spoil it. It is the dialect of anthropology, rather than of poetry: the poet should give us the great impressions and ideas of science in his own finer language.

After Riccio's murder, Bothwell exclaims, contrasting the dead body, in its impotence, with his own lust of life:

"I have so much to hope, so much to do! O happiness! I only look on death To feel life's manifold inducements grow More glorious and hazardous than ever They were before; my every appetite, Each mighty muscle in me seems to shout As through a lifted trumpet: I will live. I will possess, and let the universe Endure my depredations!"

And, a little later:

"Darnley's thanklessness Pushes in my direction: she will scorn him With that sick scorn that only women know, Which wastes away all pity. I have felt No being worth the trouble to my nature That patience is, save her,—for whom I cherish A fierce fidelity that means to cleave, Until it grow to ownership. The winds Rock about Arthur's Seat, and I could fancy That in their sound my ancestors bewail The unfulfilled ambition of their love For queens—the high Jane Beaufort, and that Margaret Whom Flodden made a widow. I will aim Above their boldest mark, and will succeed Because more mad. My race was amorous ever Of sovereign figures."

And Moray thus indulges in Protestant casuistry, after the fashion of Knox:

"A godly city! Up and down the bruit Of murder spreads; they name her by her name, She is at last proclaimed. How I have watched The will of heaven, as a blank sentinel, Set on a tower before the lurid sky, Who keeps his station howsoever the clouds May burthen or discharge. I am exempt From any portion in this infamy: As David's son, restrained by Providence From bloody acts, that he, with stainless hand, Might rear the temple-walls. I am withdrawn From sight and warrant of unholy deeds, Which being done advance me and the cause Of Christ's religion. How I lean on Him, Feeling within a kinship sure as His, Founded on righteousness."

These three speeches well illustrate the verse and the dramatic insight of Michael Field. They are at once forcible and subtle, also unmistakably original, even in their echoes of old dramatists.

It is unnecessary to dwell upon the details of the plot; they are familiar incidents. It is more to our purpose to bring out instances of good workmanship, or tragic power. These most often occur, to the writer's great praise, in the presence or the speech of Mary. She is interpreted as a "gracious sovereign lady," and a woman of simple passions; a lover of homely enjoyments, of wild adventure, of the country and of nature; proud against opposition, and reckless in love and in revenge; in fact, an intelligible, passionate character; not the "fool" of her foolish advocates, nor the "wicked woman" of savage and brutal Knox. Escaping from Holyrood, after Riccio's murder, she thus addresses her esquires:—

"Good Erskine, come!
Traquair! kneel both of you, and veil your brows,
For you are young to touch the mystery
Of which I bear the burden. . . . I commend
To you the guarding of my motherhood,
As simply as I trust my soul to God.
You have my blessing! Swear no loyalty,
My true-born gentlemen. To-night attend
With horses at the half-sunk Abbey door.
There is great heart in me."

One of "The Maries" bears witness to her charm, in the fine phrase: "I have had brave thoughts since she questioned me, and I will love her to my life's end." In their presence she speaks thus, looking at Darnley's miniature, after his death:

"His eyes are touchstones: I have thrown mine wide:
They blench not from his portrait any more Than from his white, blind body. As I stood
Below the feet, my grief was turned by death
To stone of wonder: it was marvellous
I saw what once embraced me, spoke my name, Wronged me, and wept me back. That awful hand—

Impossible to think of!—wedded me;
On that small piece of sculpture, once his mouth,
I had expended kisses. . . . Then the past
Grew void; I could not weep:
Yet he my witnesses I meet his eyes.
How dead you lie about me!"

Those last two lines are as simple and as wonderful as tragic verse can be. They are examples of what Michael Field can do, when so minded; and a few other lines will show the same rare quality:

"I fall into disuse; behind me lies
A ghost, a din of music; and before
An army of afflictions with no aim
But to descend on me."

"I were content
To lie and let the waves fall over me,
As a wrecked barque that, when the storm is spent,
Suffers the soft mishandling of the tides."

And this, of Mary and Bothwell, upon the walls of Borthwick Castle by night:

"They stand against that cloud as still as towers Stand through the night."

And this of the Queen, after her flight from the castle:

"A terrible perfection has been growing
In every sense of good and pain I feel.
No wonder I turn lovelier—I am young,
Not adverse as the old are toward their griefs,
And lithe to chastening."

Now, it is almost inexplicable that the writer of such poetry, strong, direct, and beautiful, can also write such things as Darnley's speech at "the slaughter of Davie":

"The foreign dog!
He had no manners when he came to die:
He whined and pulled her skirts. She does not know
A gentleman's true mark, has no perception
Of exquisite deportment."

Clearly, it is meant to bring out the frivolous, petulant nature of Darnley; his petty elegance, and his empty head; but it only reminds us of Dickens's Mr. Turveydrop lamenting the decay of "Deportment." Again, in a powerful scene, in which Mary, escaped to Dunbar, plays the housewife, as she loved to do, her cookery of eggs is thus described:

"And is it verily such art
To pass from shell to broken shell the yolk,
Nor mar the spherul yellow in the change?"

Lethington is made to excuse his tolerance of "idolatry," that is, of Catholicism, in the following phrases:

"Well, for religion, I confess the trickle
Of precious ointment adown Aaron's beard
Attracts me: I discern a fascination,
A charm about its unctuous descent."

And, once more, he says of Mary: "She is a distracting woman. What is to be done with that intolerable puppet, her husband? He moves about the glass-house of diplomacy with the violence of a bull." In these passages, we do not so much object that they are at once prosaic and affected, as that they are "ludicrous" and "distasteful" in the worse Aristotelian sense. Shakespeare may "the multitudinous seas incarnadine"; but that is a high phrase, for a high matter: no one may speak of an egg's "spherul yellow." And in Lethington's words we find a straining after euphuism, and dainty scholarship of phrase: the writer, upon a general view, has excellently conceived the character of the statesman, who recommended bribery by a quotation from Chaucer; whose wisdom was called by Knox, "carnal prudence." But these particular passages are in caricature: they merely irritate. Nor can it be right for Bothwell to call Mary his "Houri-love," nor for Morton to exclaim to Bothwell:

"Compress yourself to rationality!"

This usage of the metaphor we may contrast with Wordsworth's use of it in his sonnet upon Mary's captivity:

"Just Heaven, contract the compass of my mind
To fit proportion with my altered state!"

At once we see the difference between an extravagant and a moderate use of language. And, finally, not to linger upon blemishes, it is wrong for Bothwell to speak of the proposal of marriage, as

"The elemental question to the sex."

No one has an absolute right to say of anything in an author's work, This is wrong; but anyone may question the propriety of expressions, which spoil for him the general excellence of effect. And it is only the prevalence of these blemishes, as we think, which keeps Michael Field below the front rank in contemporary literature. They indicate, not careless workmanship, but a dangerous love of daring phrases, a confusion of Elizabethan extravagance with Elizabethan excellence.

This apart, The Tragical Mary is as notable a play as has been written in England for many a year; it holds the reader bound and fascinated, as tragedy should; it leaves him calmed and satisfied, and that too is proper to tragedy. As regards Mary herself, the play is finely impartial. It well represents the woman, from whom, as naturally as from Lucien de Rubempré, might have come the great desire, d'être célèbre et d'être aimé; the woman, whose constant boast it was—my heart is great.

No notice of this work can properly conclude without a word of praise for the design, done by Mr. Selwyn Image, upon its cover. It is an exquisite design of the Stuart carnations, crowned with the Scots crown, the Scotch thistles appearing below. The whole is enclosed by Mary's motto: en ma fin est mon commencement. It is an admirable ornament to an admirable book.

LIONEL JOHNSON.

The Life and Letters of the Rev. Adam Sedgwick. By John Willis Clark and Thomas McKenny Hughes. 2 vols. (Cambridge University Press.)

THE name of Prof. Sedgwick is much less familiar to the present generation than it was to the last. Probably the best known facts about him are, that he was a bitter and violent opponent of the Darwinian theory, and that he published a pamphlet on university studies, which is the subject of one of the most destructive criticisms in Mill's Dissertations and Discussions. Nevertheless, Sedgwick was, in his way, a leading light of his age, eminent both in character and intellect, loved and admired by all his friends, among whom were numbered several of his most distinguished contemporaries. His scientific reputation was made by his work as a geologist, without which, perhaps, his biography would not have been written, or not written at such length; but the man himself was much greater than his work, good and original as it was. Above all, he was more interesting. His name is not associated with any of those startling or illuminating theories that enable outsiders to appreciate the general importance of researches whose details they cannot master. Such theories, indeed, he viewed with dislike and dread, regarding them, most erroneously, as alien to the spirit of true induction, and sometimes, with more plausibility, as dangerous to his most cherished theological beliefs. Neither did he compose any great systematic treatise like those of Lyell and Geikie. Sedgwick's work was essentially local and descriptive. What he did was to study the composition and conformation of the earth's crust within certain limited regions; to classify the materials from which it was built up; and to determine the chronological order in which they were deposited. What brought them there seems to have been a question that he regarded with considerable indifference, or, perhaps we should rather say, with a preference for any theory that necessitated the intervention of supernatural agency. As a consequence, his achievements in this direction are of a kind that can only be appreciated, or even understood, by geological experts. Such being the case, it would perhaps have been more advisable to separate the personal from the scientific biography, making each the subject of a distinct work, as was so successfully done in the cases of Grote and Faraday. The correspondence too would bear a good deal more in the way of excision and compression than has been thought necessary by Mr. Clark, whose too great reverence for every word that dropped from his hero's pen may prevent what is really worth reading in his letters from enjoying the popularity it well deserves. There are the materials for a very charming work in these two large volumes, but it is a work that the judicious reader must put together for himself.

As in most biographies, the earlier period of Sedgwick's life is much the most interesting. Born in 1785, the reminiscences of his youth and first manhood furnish vivid glimpses into a state of society and a period of history remote from the experience of any now living. He belonged to an old family of Yorkshire dalesmen whose name was originally written Sidgwick or Sidgwick—a form still preserved by another and now more famous branch of the same stock—and is said to have been changed in deference to the advice of a pedantic schoolmaster. His father, Richard, was Vicar of Dent, a village near the Westmoreland border, and master of the Grammar School there. According to an account written by Sedgwick himself in extreme old age, Dent was, during the period of his early recollections, a scene of almost Arcadian felicity, subsequently marred by economic revolutions. The inhabitants were simple-minded, laborious, comfortably circumstanced, and united by the closest bonds of mutual affection. But there were shades to the picture. Cock-fighting flourished among the dales and led to "gambling quarrels, drunken riots, and bellowings of blasphemy." There were even traditions of a time when masters of grammar schools used to present their scholars with game-cocks "to be matched for the honour of the school" (vol. i., p. 28). It seems to have been no disgrace for a young clergyman to share in a drinking-bout and to leave it "far from sober." Much less objectionable was an ancient custom observed by the young men of assembling after Sunday evening service and finishing the day with a match at football, a practice with which Richard Sedgwick had the good sense not to interfere. The dalesmen were in fact distinguished by the qualities which Sedgwick himself exhibited through his whole life. They were a hot-tempered, warm-hearted, energetic race, faithfully obeying what Mr. Leslie Stephen tells us is the oldest moral law—"Be strong." Of this untiring energy we have a conspicuous example in the person of John Dawson, the surgeon who assisted at Sedgwick's birth, and the mathematical coach who prepared him for Cambridge. Beginning as a shepherd boy, without money, without friends, and with few books, Dawson actually "worked a system of conic sections out of his own brain." He earns some money by giving lessons, becomes assistant to a surgeon at Lancaster, and in time sets up for himself, without a diploma, as a general practitioner at Sedbergh. At the end of a year he has scraped together nearly £100, and sets off on foot to Edinburgh, where he studies hard until funds fall short, when he tramps back to Sedbergh, still without a diploma. Increased practice and strict self-denial enable him to amass about £300, with which he makes his way to London, "partly on foot, partly in a stage-waggon." In a short time he succeeds in becoming a duly-qualified member of his profession, and returns to Sedbergh, still on foot, but with the hard-earned diploma in his pocket. All this time mathematics were studied not less assiduously than surgery, and Dawson came to be recognised as "one of the first analysts of the day"; while his success as a teacher is attested by the fact that in twenty-seven years twelve senior wranglers were numbered among his pupils. His charge for a week's instruction was only five shillings (1792).

In 1804 Sedgwick went up to Cambridge. That year only 128 young men presented themselves for matriculation. The whole energies of the country were absorbed by the great struggle with Napoleon, and half a million of Englishmen were arming and drilling to resist the expected invasion. Sedgwick's recollections give us a vivid insight into the terrible strain of that period. When the news of Trafalgar reached Cambridge he was down with typhoid fever and hardly conscious of what was passing, but insisted on being carried to the window, where he saw the illuminations, and "listened with half-delirious but deep sorrow to the booming of the muffled bells which were sounding for the dead hero" (vol. ii., p. 238). Eight years afterwards, Napoleon's invasion of Russia caused a fresh panic in England, and it was Sedgwick's good fortune to carry the news of its collapse to the Combination Room of Trinity. Such was the excitement that "many of the persons present, for very joy, wept and sobbed like children." The summer before he had read out the news of Salamanca in the Public Room at Lowestoft to a crowd of people who received it with cheers and sobs. How, again, he galloped with the good news of Waterloo to his own village of Dent will be found picturesquely related on p. 137 of vol. i.

In 1808 Sedgwick took his degree as Fifth Wrangler. Apparently he might have been placed higher on the list, or even have headed it, had his name begun with a different letter, for merit tempered by alphabetical order seems at that time to have been the guiding principle of arrangement in the Tripos (i., p. 94). After one failure, he obtained a fellowship at twenty-five; but, unlike the hero of Goldsmith's ballad, it did not make him "the happiest man alive." He had wished to study for the Bar; but his father's increasing infirmities had made it feared that Adam might be required to take his place in the school at Dent; and although the dreaded contingency did not arrive, family necessities had obliged him to secure an immediate income by taking pupils whom, as well as the mathematics which he taught them, he regarded, the biographer tells us, "with feelings little short of detestation." His health broke down under the strain of overwork and anxiety; while, to crown everything, he had to adopt the clerical profession, for which he had "no very decided inclination," so little, indeed, as to put off taking Orders until the last moment compatible with the continued tenure of his fellowship. Nor was the college society of that time particularly enlivening. Conversation soon ran dry at the fellows' table. The war had closed the continent to foreign travel; newspapers were scarce, and letters scarcer still. The resident fellows included among their number many survivals of the unfittest—men who were too weak or too slothful to try their fortune in the world. Sedgwick describes them as either gloomy and disappointed, or impertinent and pedantic, or vain and pretentious. For some years his letters are dismal in the extreme, and marked by that unfailing note of pessimism, a tendency to rail at marriage. One might fancy him affected in some far-off way by the same poison that was working at the hearts of his more famous contemporaries, Byron, Leopardi, and Schopenhauer.

From this miserable condition he was rescued in an unexpected fashion. In 1818 the Woodwardian Professorship of geology fell vacant, and, although not qualified by any knowledge of the subject, Sedgwick offered himself as a candidate for the Chair. He had two competitors, both of whom had made a special study of geology. One, a certain R. W. Evans, of Trinity, withdrew; the other, Gorham of Queen's, who afterwards became so famous in a different connexion, went to the poll, but Sedgwick won by a majority of more than three to one. At first sight the whole affair looks like a disgraceful job, which Sedgwick's own explanation does little to put in a more creditable light: "I had but one rival, Gorham, of Queen's, and he had not the slightest chance against me, for I knew absolutely nothing of geology, whereas he knew a good deal—but it was all wrong" (i., p. 160.) The electors could scarcely have known that Gorham's knowledge was all wrong. Nevertheless, the biographer makes out a very good case for the university. Geology was at that time in a very rudimentary state, and the professor-elect was known to be a man of great general ability, zeal, and honesty, who could be trusted to get up as much as was necessary of the subject to redeem his promise of giving regular lectures. "Hitherto," Sedgwick is reported to have said, "I have never turned a stone; henceforth I will leave no stone unturned," and he was as good as his word. Indeed, he is found doing original and valuable work in geology so soon after his appointment as to rouse a suspicion that his ignorance of it at starting was somewhat exaggerated. But his sincerity seems sufficiently attested by a single fact. In 1816 the future professor made a tour through Switzerland, but the letters in which he describes it do not contain a single reference to the geology of the mountains. He is exclusively interested in the picturesque aspects of Alpine scenery; and it may be mentioned as characteristic of the taste then prevailing that he finds the Rhone Valley from Vevey to Martigny "infinitely more beautiful than anything his imagination had ever formed," and filled with "exquisite perfection of scenery." What drew Sedgwick to the study of geology was not any particular liking for the subject itself—his tastes were rather literary than scientific—but the expediency of providing himself with an occupation necessitating a great deal of open-air exercise. Five years before he had a most dangerous attack on the lungs, which it was feared would terminate fatally, and which, in fact, left his constitution shattered for life. Henceforth he can seldom indite a letter without complaining of some disorder in his health, and the catalogue of diseases that might be compiled from his correspondence seems well-nigh inexhaustible. This in a man who lived to be eighty-eight becomes at last rather ludicrous; but there can be no doubt about the reality of his manifold afflictions, especially as he took no care of his health, never made it the excuse for shirking a duty, and never, when he could help it, refused an invitation. What saved him from total prostration was geology. To it he owed life and happiness. From the hour that he entered on his new duties the cloud of despondency clears away, and is succeeded by that wonderful geniality which is still remembered as the chief characteristic of his singularly rich and fascinating personality. Other causes no doubt concurred. All life was becoming more full of interest; and the younger fellows of Trinity were much pleasanter companions than their predecessors had been; but we shall hardly be mistaken in attributing an overwhelming importance to the healing influence of direct contact with the facts of Nature. The redeeming power of physical science over the heart and minds of its votaries is less signally manifested in George Sand's Valvredre than here in the prosaic biography of a Cambridge don.

This great crisis in Sedgwick's life once passed, the interest of his biography considerably falls off. It becomes a rather monotonous record of academic functions, geological tours in Cumberland, Wales, and elsewhere, meetings of scientific societies, interviews with great personages and marks of favour bestowed by them on the distinguished professor, and squabbles not easily made intelligible to readers of the present day, diversified with endearing letters to nieces and other young ladies, and, finally, with the sad necrology of all the old friends who dropped off one by one, leaving the weather-beaten veteran alone in his last days. Sedgwick was a copious and in some ways an admirable letter-writer; his great powers of observation and description come into play wherever he has to deal with things as opposed to persons; but he had apparently no eye for character; and the pleasantry in which he perpetually indulges is of the heaviest and most laboured sort. He jokes, but not with facility. Neither are his opinions on books and current events particularly remarkable for their discernment. His correspondence, at least, gives no evidence of any appreciation of that splendid literature which the press was pouring out through the whole of his long life—although, judging by their published lives, the creators of that literature were hardly more sensible to the merits of their contemporaries than he was.

In his old age Sedgwick described himself as a stiff-backed Tory; but he had been an ardent Liberal at a time when Liberalism was not the cheap thing that it has since become. He counted among the small minority in the Senate who supported Catholic Emancipation, Parliamentary Reform, and the abolition of University Tests. As a reward for his long services, Lord Brougham, just before leaving office, gave him a stall at Norwich (1834). Next to obtaining his professorship, this preferment was the great event in Sedgwick's life. We are told in one of his letters that Laplace, who himself had no religious belief, applauded the system of placing university education in the hands of the clergy—so far at least as England was concerned. But in this instance, at any rate, the system had its inconveniences. Sedgwick found that the office of performing cathedral services to a congregation of one old woman irksome, useless, and very injurious to his delicate health. People at Norwich said that he could not, or would not, preach; and although his pulpit eloquence at a subsequent period drew large congregations, the work of preparing sermons must have absorbed time that would have been better spent in geologising or in putting together scientific memoirs. Moreover, his clerical avocations created or fostered habits of thought most hostile to the true scientific spirit. Sedgwick became the fanatical devotee of teleology, the watch-dog of a narrow mechanical theism. After his famous article on the "Vestiges" in the Edinburgh Review, he seemed to consider himself as permanently retained to combat every theory of evolution. When the Origin of Species appeared, Darwin, who was an old friend of his, sent him a copy accompanied by a modest and complimentary letter. Sedgwick, ordinarily the kindest and most courteous of men, answered by an unmannerly and scoffing criticism of the work, which only showed his utter inability to grasp the new principle of Natural Selection; while in writing to others he attacked it in no measured terms as "the system of the author of the 'Vestiges' stripped of his ignorant absurdities," and "a mere hypothesis at variance with the true inductive method." As Darwin observed, "poor dear old Sedgwick seemed rabid on the question." The venerable geologist was in fact what young ladies call an "old dear"; but old dears are not the safest guides in questions of scientific truth. It must be mentioned, however, to Sedgwick's immortal honour, that in 1831 he publicly declared, in opposition to his previously expressed views, that certain deposits known as the diluvial gravel furnish no evidence of the Noachian deluge (vol. i., p. 370); that, after contemptuously repudiating the glacial theory, he came to accept it, at least in part (i., p. 505); and that finally, at the age of eighty-three, he freely admitted, what he had once denied, the great antiquity of the human race (ii., p. 440). Had he lived to be a centenarian, as with proper care he well might, we should probably be counting him among the supporters of the Darwinian theory.

Unlike the enemies of Evolution in our own time, Sedgwick had no sympathy with reactionary theologians. His comment on the secession of Newman and others to Rome is—

"Shame on them that they did not do so long since! Their attempt to remain in the Church of England while they held opinions such as they have published only proves that fanaticism and vulgar honesty can seldom shake hands and live together. I pity their delusion, I despise their sophistry, and I hate their dishonesty" (ii., p. 93).

Yet on other occasions Sedgwick encouraged his own friends to accept preferment in the Church, although there were some things in the Liturgy of which they did not approve; and at this very time he was holding the Woodwardian Professorship in company with his stall at Norwich, contrary to the legal condition of its tenure. His feelings towards the Greek Church are well illustrated by an amusing anecdote. Calling on him one morning at Norwich, Dr. Goulburn happened to say, "I suppose, Sir, you are coming to meet the Eastern Bishops at the Palace to-day?" meaning the bishops of the eastern counties. Sedgwick, misunderstanding him to mean bishops of the Eastern Church, burst out, "Eastern Bishops, Sir! No! I wouldn't for the world break bread with such a pack of superstitious rascals!—quite as bad as the Catholics" (ii. p., 588).

Dean Stanley in an eloquent panegyric on the subject of this biography, compares him to a granite rock. Yet, now that his whole career lies unfolded before us, the impression produced is rather one of infinite plasticity, of action entirely determined by circumstances. The explanation of whatever he did and thought must be sought for in an impulse from without, not in the realisation of an imperious purpose working itself out from within. And here we have the secret of his great popularity in life, but also of the swift oblivion that has gathered round him since his death; of his relative success, but also of his absolute failure, for the life of one so gifted must needs be called a failure when it leaves a name associated with no single imperishable achievement. If genius only means large general powers working in a particular direction, then unquestionably it must be attributed to Sedgwick; but not if we accept the profounder definition of Amiel—"talent consists in doing easily what other men do with difficulty; genius consists in doing what other men cannot do at all."

ALFRED W. BENN.

HUNGARY AND THE SLAVS IN THE TWELFTH CENTURY.

Iz Istorií Ugrii i Slavianutra v' XII. viekie.
By Constantine Grot (Warsaw).

THE object of this work by Prof. Grot, of the University of Warsaw, is to trace the relations of the Magyars to their eastern neighbours at an early period of their history. He makes us realise how the Catholic missionaries succeeded in drawing them away from the Greek faith, to which, from their geographical position and the matrimonial alliances they formed, they might be supposed to have had considerable leanings. He treats of an interesting period of Hungarian history, which includes the reigns of Geysa II. and Stephen III., and ends with the coming to the throne of Bela III., in 1173. These princes belonged to the dynasty of the Arpads, which ruled Hungary for nearly three centuries (1038-1301). At the conclusion of this period a great change took place in the political relations of the Magyars. Instead of the East, they began to direct their attention to the West, and their fierce hostility to the Slavs now commences, a race from whom they have borrowed much, as all but the merest Chauvinists among them have acknowledged. (See Miklosich und die Magyarische Sprachwissenschaft. Von Dr. L. Wagner: Pressburg, 1888.)

According to Prof. Grot this period of Hungarian history has been the most neglected. It was treated with a certain fulness by the historians of previous generations, but their work has now become antiquated and it has been passed over by those of our own days, probably because they have little sympathy with it. German historians, when they write about the country, select only those periods which are characterised by German and other Western influences. As regards England, we had till recently no literature on the subject which can be classed higher than bald and superficial compilations. Our students will now be able to get something reliable on the subject from Mrs. Birkbeck Hill's translation of M. Leger's useful little book.

The relations of the Magyars to the Slavs seem to have occupied the attention of the Warsaw professor for some time. We have already a learned work by him, "Moravia and the Magyars from the Middle of the Ninth to the Beginning of the Tenth Century" (Moravia i Madiari s'polovini IX do nachala X veka). The survey of Hungarian authorities which he gives in his appendix is very exhaustive, and will be found most useful. Not only are the native authorities examined, but those of all other nations, German and Slavonic predominating. The description of the Magyars by Otto of Freising has often been quoted:

"Sunt autem praedicti Ungari facie tetri, profundis oculis, statura humiles, moribus et lingua barbari et feroces, ut jure fortuna culpanda vel potius divina patientia admiranda sit, quae, ne dicam hominibus, sed talibus hominum monstribus tam delectabilem exposuit terram."

Beside the other matter contained in these copious appendices, Prof. Grot has also given us some newly-discovered letters written by Sophia, the sister of Geysa II. At the end of the book there is an excellent genealogical table of the kings of the Arpad dynasty (during the twelfth century) and their matrimonial alliances. It is in this way that we can realise how close are their connexions with the Slavs. Thus Ladislaus the Pious was the nephew of Casimir I. of Poland; Stephen II. was the grandson of Vladimir Monomakh; Geysa III. was the nephew of Stephen II. of Serbia, and married the daughter of Mstislav I., the Prince of Kiev. Other connexions of the same sort might be added to our list.

Beside the appendices, the number of authorities cited by Prof. Grot at the foot of each page bears evidence to his industry. He has produced a thoroughly learned book on an obscure period of history. His work closes with the return of Bela, brother of the king, Stephen III., who had been brought up at the court of the Byzantine Emperor, Manuel. The latter had completely trained his protégé in the language and habits of the Greeks, and made him swear, when he sent him back, a solemn oath that he would undertake nothing against the empire, but the result was destined to be very different from what had been expected.

It is a pity that, owing to the book being written in a tongue familiar to so few (comparatively) among us—let us hope that their number may increase—it cannot have that success in England which it thoroughly deserves.

W. R. MORFILL.

Three Years in Western China. By Alexander Hosie. (George Philip and Son).

THE middle and western parts of China are becoming nearly as well known to us as Central Africa. This has been accomplished, not perhaps with the astonishing rapidity which has of late attended the opening up of the Dark Continent since the matter was taken vigorously in hand, but still within quite recent years by men whose names, if not as generally known as are those of Burton and Speke, Cameron, Baker, and Stanley, are still as worthy of our admiration. For while the great African explorers were enabled to fight their way by force of arms in many cases through the regions that they set themselves to traverse, and thereby absolutely commanded public attention, those who have undertaken the work of exploration in China have had to go about it in a quieter and humbler way, and to struggle on patiently against the disheartening opposition of a powerful, civilized, and unsympathetic people, and all the difficulties and discouragements thrown in their way by the hostility of an intensely conservative and exclusive rule. Among those who have thus persevered and taught us what we now know of the interior of China, none have worked harder or better than the author of the present interesting volume, the unpretentious title of which but little suggests to the uninitiated the hardships, discomforts, and dangers that he had to encounter in his three years' work. "H.B.M. Consular service" usually suggests to the public mind a pleasant residence at some foreign port, accompanied by light duties, and an official position opening up all that is socially most desirable and agreeable for those who embark on it. A good deal of this undoubtedly falls to the lot of many of our diplomatic staff in the Far East; but those who, like the author, are sent into the interior of the country, have to turn their back on nearly everything of the kind. Cleanliness and privacy have to be sacrificed, or absolutely fought for; refinement and ease entirely abandoned; and hard work, both physical and mental, got through on bad roads and in comfortless and squalid quarters.

Mr. Hosie modestly says in his opening chapter:

"It was my fortune to be stationed in Western China from 1882 to 1884, and during these three years I was enabled, in the performance of my duties, to collect information regarding the country and its people; and it is in the hope that this information may not be unacceptable that I venture to lay the following pages before the public."

How much he has observed and noted may be judged of by a mere glance at the contents of the thirteen chapters, each one of which teems with most instructive accounts of the people, the natural products, the arts and manufactures, and the topography of the country. And how complete that information is may be learned from Mr. Archibald Little's judgment in his introduction to the work:

"The result of these extensive explorations is an elaborate monograph on the province of Szechuen, such as has not yet been written of any other of the eighteen provinces into which China proper is divided. It provides a mine of information to the traveller and to the merchant, and appears at a most opportune moment, now that, by the establishment of Ch'ung-k'ing as a treaty port, this rich and interesting land is at last officially thrown open to Western enterprise."

No one is better qualified to pronounce such an opinion than the accomplished author of Through the Yang-tse Gorges, which will long be remembered as one of the most fascinating books of modern travel.

Under the terms of the Chefoo Convention Mr. Hosie was despatched towards the end of 1881 to take up his consular post at Ch'ung-k'ing; and from this important city as his headquarters he made the three journeys that enabled him to collect so much valuable information. These journeys covered a distance of over five thousand miles, and occupied a period of 242 days. The first journey occupied sixty-eight days. Starting from Ch'ung-k'ing on April 19, 1882, the author proceeded due south to Kuei-yang Fu, the capital of Kuei-chow, which he reached on May 5. Opium collecting, fish hatching, wood-oil pressing, paper making, silk culture, rice-paper making, and the preparation of coal dust as fuel, are described. On May 7 he left Kuei-yang Fu, and proceeded in a south-westerly direction to Yün-nan Fu, which was reached on May 27. On this journey he first met with the white-wax insect, to which subject a separate chapter is devoted later on. On May 31 he quitted Yün-nan Fu, and proceeded in a northerly direction through the province to the Nan-kuang river, which he descended to its junction with the Yang-tse at Hsü-chou Fu, and proceeded down the latter river to Ch'ung-k'ing, which was reached on June 28. The second journey occupied 124 days. Leaving his headquarters on February 11, 1883, the author proceeded in a westerly and north-westerly direction to Ch'eng-tu Fu, the capital of Ssü-ch'uan, which, as the largest, richest, and most populous of the provinces of the empire, shares with Chihli the unique privilege of having a Viceroy to itself. Thence he turned in a south-westerly and southerly direction, past the Lolo country and the City of Ning-yüan Fu, across the Ya-lung river, and on to Chin-kiang-kai on the left bank of the Yang-tse—or, as it is there called, the Kin-sha Kiang—crossing which he proceeded to Ta-li Fu, the beautiful capital of western Yün-nan. Excellent descriptions are given of the process of making grass-cloth, the working of the celebrated brine wells, the manufacture of salt, and the making of brick-tea; also of the Lolo tribe and the city of Ta-li Fu. From this latter the author proceeded in a westerly direction to Yün-nan Fu, and thence northwards through the provinces of Yün-nan, Kuei-chou, and Ssü-ch'uan to the Yung-ning River, and back by the Yang-tse to Ch'ung-k'ing. The third journey was made in 1884, and lasted sixty days. It was undertaken for the special purpose of collecting information about the white-wax culture for the authorities at Kew, and the author's description of this curious process forms one of the most interesting chapters in the book. Leaving his headquarters on June 2, he travelled northwards on the west of the Kia-ling river to Ho-chou, thence westerly to the city of Chia-ping Fu, and thence south to the town of Man-li-ssu, on the Yang-tse, and back by that river to Ch'ung-k'ing, which was reached on July 21.

The twelfth chapter deals with the trade of western and south-western China, the author arriving at the conclusion that the Yang-tse, in spite of the drawbacks of its rapids, is the only available trade route to and from Ssü-ch'uan. The last chapter is devoted to the aboriginal races, and gives excellent vocabularies of their language.

M. BEAZELEY.

NEW NOVELS.

The Keeper of the Keys. By F. W. Robinson. In 3 vols. (Hurst & Blackett.)

Pearl Powder. By Mrs. Annie Edwardes. In 2 vols. (Bentley.)

Silken Threads. By the Author of "Mr. and Mrs. Morton." (Alex. Gardner.)

Snap. By C. Phillips-Wolley. (Longmans.)

Ashes. By Hume Nisbet. (Authors' Co-operative Publishing Co.)

Innocent Victims. By Hugh Downe. (Remington.)

Passion the Plaything. By R. Murray Gilchrist. (Heinemann.)

Ferrers Court. By John Strange Winter. (White.)

The Chronicles of Cardew Manor. By Lucy Farmer. (Hutchinson.)

"A MISERABLE and proud old fellow he was—an odd composition; and so was your father, and mine." Thus, in the last chapter of the third volume, Rachel Wickerwill, one of the three leading female characters—none can be properly described as a heroine—in The Keeper of the Keys hits off three of the leading male characters. But what is true of the Vanderspur Brothers and of Rachel Wickerwill's father is true of almost everybody in it, and truer of none more than of Rachel herself. Each is an odd composition, in which pride and misery are leading, if not dominating, elements. In other words, The Keeper of the Keys is just the sort of book that might be expected from Mr. Robinson. He has, however, seen the wisdom, or the necessity, of following the multitude of latter-day novelists into the paths of thorough-going sensationalism; and so he here supplies his readers not only with "odd compositions," but with a felony, a sudden death, a converted swindler, and a murder. The murder is really a fine thing of its kind, for it not only might have been, but ought to have been, committed by each of four persons. Altogether, The Keeper of the Keys is a well-balanced as well as interesting story. It is especially strong in plot construction, every third chapter affording a special surprise. Mr. Robinson can hardly help being a novelist with a purpose, though obviously against his will; and the contrast he draws between Vanderspur, the retired but practically unrepentant convict, and his morally revolutionised partner, Karl Marney, is a very skilful one. Then, although his "odd compositions" do very odd things, they are somehow just what might have been expected of them. Even the intermingling of the fortunes of the swindling Vanderspurs with the swindled Gairs seems, under Robinsonian circumstances, the most natural thing in the world, because it is a bit of moral readjustment. Yet Mr. Robinson is more successful—although he appears to be unaware of the fact—as a social photographer than as a moralist; his picture of boarding-house life in Scarborough is admirable, and would have been perfect but for the presence in it of those impossibly "odd compositions," the Piths.

Pearl Powder is an ambitious historical costume piece, presenting us with the patrician Mohawkism, as well as with the "puffs, powders, patches, Bibles, billets doux" of a period anterior to the present. To a certain extent, it is successful as well as ambitious. At all events the remorselessly proud and marvellously subtle Lady Joan, who recalls both the Countess of Kew and Beatrix Esmond, is a commanding personality to the last, even when she is ens everything. Philippa Harkness, on the other hand, whom Lady Joan protects and discards, is a clever failure. She is, or ought to be, nothing if not straightforward in her actions; and, devoted to the scampish but not altogether scoundrelly Germaine, she ought not to have married the commonplace painter Arden. Several of the other characters in Pearl Powder—more especially Miss Susan Arden and Castaway Joe—are well drawn. But their connexion with the main plot of the story is far too slight.

Surely Silken Threads is the reductio ad absurdum of detectivism in fiction. The murder of Barclay might well have been committed by several persons, for he is one of those scoundrels who ought to be "removed"; but the author, with the help of one of the preternaturally able detectives whom America alone can produce, traces it home to the most unlikely of them all, and causes it to be committed by the most improbable of means. No doubt there is an abundance of ingenuity in Silken Threads, but it is ingenuity unrelieved either by a genuine comedy or by an agreeable love affair. For Margaret Fullerton, the fiancée of the murdered man, is the most unlovely character in the whole story. There are the germs of a moral romance in the story of the unfortunate Edgerton, but the germs only.

It would be positively uncharitable to say that Snap reminds one of Jules Verne, Rider Haggard, Dr. Gordon Stables, et hoc genus omne, for the author of Sport in the Crimea and Caucasus is quite capable of writing such a story as this off his own bat. The earlier, or cricketering and schoolboy, portion of the book is rather commonplace, and even fatiguing; but when Snap gets into the Far West, and makes the acquaintance of storms, Indians, cowboys, and a defunct balloonist, as little fault can be found with his adventures on the score of want of originality as with the Americanese of his guide, philosopher, and friend, Dick Wharton. Snap is, indeed, all that an athletic, level-headed, courageous young Englishman of the present well-groomed type could be; and it is, in consequence, a matter for regret, from the artistic standpoint, that his attempt at self-sacrifice by dropping from a balloon to lighten it, and so save its other occupants, ends, not in tragedy, but in farce. But Mr. Phillips-Wolley's boy-readers would never have forgiven him had he allowed Snap to die, and in this book he has written for boys rather than for grown-up people. Of the other juvenile characters in Snap, the best, because the most natural, is Towzer.

Mr. Hume Nisbet accurately enough describes his Ashes as "a tale of two continents." Most of his readers will wish it had been a tale of one, and that one Australia. Both he and his unfortunate hero, Dick Davelock, are obviously at home in Australia; whereas one is not quite certain that either is at home in the England of to-day, with its Metaltown and its art-editors and art-publishers, who set themselves to do to death the artists who are in their employ. Mr. Nisbet says his Mr. Moloch is imaginary. He is not only imaginary, but impossible, both in his vindictiveness and in his means of giving effect to it. Take Ashes as it stands, however, and it must be allowed to be a powerful, although a disagreeable, story. There is reality, as well as realism, in the sufferings of Mrs. Davelock and her family in England, while Dick is enduring and suffering almost unto death for their sake in Australia. Then, if Dick's cruel tyrant, Moloch, is an impossible monstrosity, his wonderful Bohemian secretary and friend, Ridgeway, is too good not to be true to life.

There is a great deal of moral earnestness in Innocent Victims, unpleasant and painful though it is from the beginning almost to the last chapter. It is rather inaccurately described, however, as a "story of London life and labour." No doubt London life and labour have both places in it; but it is above all things a story of London drink. Had not George Elsworth been a sot, his wife and family would not have suffered the fearful amount of misery which is their lot. Even as things are, Mr. Downe mars his story by making Elsworth suggest to his wife an unspeakable device for making money. Elsworth had sunk very low, indeed; but it is inconceivable that a naturally good and strongly affectionate man should have descended to the depth of depravity involved in this suggestion. As a series of realistic pictures—of the horrors of the war between capital and labour, of the still greater horrors of the internecine conflict in the ranks of labour itself—Innocent Victims is well worth reading. But it is very little of a story. The transformation of Elsworth into a reputable member of society is allowable in fiction, for it is possible in fact; but his restoration to prosperity, and the establishment of a connexion between his family and that of his false friend, Alston, are hurried up in the end too much, and too obviously for the purpose of relieving the prolonged and sodden misery of the main plot.

Passion the Plaything is an unintelligible and hysterical rhapsody of love, poetry, and heredity. It is full of strained and extravagant writing, and of impossible characters. A flesh-and-blood Gabriel Colver or Anne Mompesson is an impossibility, and happily so.

"John Strange Winter's" new story is an excellent offset to such a fantastic tour de force as Passion the Plaything. There is little that is remarkable or original in it. Bootles' wife and baby, now happily married, and keen matchmakers, set themselves to effect two marriages, and succeed. That is all. Ferrers Court, including even the penance of Charlie Kerr, who, because he has been the means of bringing about the death of one girl, thinks for a time that he is bound not to fall in love with another, is in all respects old. But it is simple and readable, and for this it behoves us to be truly grateful.

In The Chronicles of Cardew Manor we have a collection of sensational stories that have however a certain old-fashioned charm even in their sensationalism. There is, perhaps, too much of the tone of the butler's pantry or the housekeeper's room in the references in it to this captain, that squire, and their respective "ladies." But then there is plenty of mystery and love-making, and detective work, professional and amateur. The last and longest of all the stories in the collection, "Gwendolen's Tryst," which explains everything that appears to be inexplicable in those which precede it, is very effective in every respect. The Chronicles of Cardew Manor is as readable a book for seaside consumption as has been published for many a day.

WILLIAM WALLACE.

NOTES AND NEWS.

A VOLUME on Cardinal Newman by Mr. R. H. Hutton will be published next month as the first volume of Messrs. Methuen's new series, "English Leaders of Religion."

MR. ELKIN MATHEWS will publish next month the book by Mr. Le Gallienne, George Meredith, Novelist and Poet, which we have already announced. The volume will contain an elaborate bibliography by Mr. John Lane, not only of Mr. Meredith's works, but also of the best criticisms of them which have appeared in the magazines and reviews. There will also be a note by Mr. W. Morton Fullerton on the fortune of Mr. Meredith's books in America, a portrait of Mr. Meredith, and an illustration of his châlet at Dorking, from a pen-and-ink sketch by his son, Mr. W. M. Meredith.

MR. AUSTIN DOBSON is publishing, in America, a Memoir of Horace Walpole, in the form of a limited édition de luxe, printed on hard-made linen and Japan paper, and illustrated with etchings.

NOR satisfied with Mr. Walter Besant's curious attempt to continue what needed no continuation—Ibsen's Doll's House—a Mrs. Edna D. Cheney has published in America a little book under the title of Nora's Return; a sequel to the Doll's House. Nora and Helmar both keep a diary, in which they record their impressions of the life which Ibsen has given them. It is very singular that people should be so anxious to give an answer to that note of interrogation with which Ibsen loves to end his plays, and one is not surprised to find Ibsen protesting against the answers, or indeed the need of any answer.

A NOVEL by Giovanni Verga, the greatest living Italian novelist, so little known to English readers, has just been translated by Mary A. Craig, and published in America by Messrs. Harper, with an introduction by Mr. Howells, who has always recognised the wonderful art of Verga. A translation of another fine Italian novel, Matilde Serao's Fantasia, the best work of a very interesting writer, is to be one of the next volumes of Mr. Gosse's delightful series, Heinemann's Foreign Library. It is to be hoped that Mr. Gosse will give us translations of some of the best novels of Verga, and also of Luigi Capuana, who is only second to Verga (Matilde Serao is perhaps third) among living Italian novelists.

ADMIRERS and collectors of Cruikshank will be glad to learn that Thackeray's article in the Westminster Review on Cruikshank will be shortly republished by Messrs. Bell. The introductory notice will be from the pen of Mr. F. G. Stephens.

A TRANSLATION of Mr. Stevenson's Strange Case of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde, under the title of Le Cas étrange du docteur Jekyll, has just been published by MM. Plon-Nourrit.

UNIVERSITY HALL, Mrs. Humphry Ward's new settlement in Gordon-square, will be opened for residence next October, under conditions very similar to those adopted at Toynbee Hall. The first course of lectures will be given during the October term by the Rev. J. Estlin Carpenter, on "The First Three Gospels." They will be delivered on Wednesdays, at 4 p.m., in University Hall, and in the evening at Essex Hall. Mr. Estlin will give another course of lectures on St. Luke during the Lent term; and M. Chavannes, of Leyden, will lecture in French on "The Religion of the Old Testament." The May term will be devoted to lectures by Rev. Richard Armstrong on "Man's Knowledge of God," Rev. Philip Wicksteed on the Pentateuch, and Rev. Charles Hargrove on "The Fourth Gospel." In May or June six lectures will be given in French by M. Réville on some subject connected with the history of Christian origins. In October Prof. Knight will lecture on "The Theistic Interpretation of the World." On the literary and social side, the Rev. Stopford A. Brooke will deliver five or six lectures (from November onwards) on "Poetry in the Nineteenth Century," which will be followed by lectures on Sociology by Mr. Wicksteed, and on the Co-operative Movement, by Miss Beatrice Potter. It is hoped that Prof. Max Müller will lecture at the Hall during the October term. Among the committee of this new movement we notice the names of the Rev. Stopford Brooke, Dr. Martineau, Dr. Drummond, Miss Frances Power Cobbe, and Miss Beatrice Potter. Mrs. Humphry Ward is the hon. secretary.

THE firm of Hachette has just published, in their series of "Grands Ecrivains Français," a volume on Mme. de Staël, by M. Albert Sorel. The same firm has added to its series of "Grands Ecrivains de la France" the sixth volume of the Mémoires de Saint-Simon, edited by M. de Boislisle.

THE Dictionnaire Général de la Langue Française, from the seventeenth century onwards, which had been prepared by MM. Hatzfeld and Arsène Darmesteter, has been completed by M. A. Thomas, and is now in course of publication, in parts, at the Librairie Delagrave.

THE death is announced of Eduard von Bauernfeld, perhaps the principal contemporary Austrian poet since the death of Hamerling. He was in his eighty-ninth year. He wrote a large number of plays, many of which were in their time extremely popular. He translated some of the plays of Shakespeare, and two or three of Dickens's novels. Bauernfeld is to be buried at the expense of the city of Vienna, not far from the grave of his friend Schubert.

THE first volume of the national edition of Galileo's works has just appeared at Florence, unfortunately in a limited edition printed for private circulation.

THE correspondence of Hans Christian Andersen is about to be published by Messrs. Dean & Son. Letters will be included from Charles Dickens and a great many other celebrities. Mr. Forster in his Life of Dickens, expressed much regret that he was unable to procure any letters which passed between Andersen and Dickens. This new volume will contain most if not all of the correspondence which Mr. Forster was unable to procure.

A NUMBER of scholars from Germany and America have, as usual, come to this country during the vacation in order to carry on their studies and researches at the British Museum. Among the Americans we noticed Prof. Elliott at the Johns Hopkins University, who is engaged on a work on romance philology.

THE Clarendon Press will publish in the course of the year an edition of the Tenth Book of Quintilian's Institutes, by Principal Peterson, of University College, Dundee. Besides an estimate of recent German criticism, this edition will embody the main results of a special collation of the MSS. in this country, in particular of the Harleian MS., which has hitherto been strangely neglected. The Tenth Book is put forward as an instalment of a complete edition, with which Dr. Peterson has already made some progress.

MESSRS. SWAN SONNENSCHNEIN & Co. are about to add to their "Social Science Series" a translation of M. Fustel de Coulanges' Essai sur l'Origine de la Propriété Foncière, edited by Prof. Ashley, of Toronto, with an introduction estimating the character and value of the contributions of Fustel de Coulanges to economic history. The translation has been undertaken with the sanction of Mme. Fustel de Coulanges, and will enjoy the benefit of her criticism.

MESSRS. HUTCHINSON & Co. have in the press an Australian Dictionary of Biography, comprising notices of eminent colonists from the inauguration of responsible government down to the present time, edited by Mr. Philip Menzell, F.R.G.S., and assisted by eminent colonials. It is proposed to afford in handy form information respecting Australasian men and women of mark, and the book will serve the twofold purpose of perpetuating the memory of deceased notabilities and of recording the careers of the living.

A NEW volume on the London suburbs is announced for publication by Mr. Elliot Stock, viz., Memorials of Old Chelsea, a new History of the Village of Palaces, by Mr. Alfred Beaver. The work will be issued in quarto size to subscribers, and will be copiously illustrated by the author.

THE September number of Macmillan's Magazine will contain an article by Mr. Goldwin Smith on the McKinley Bill. It will also include a new story by Mr. Rudyard Kipling, On Greenhow Hill, in which are narrated the causes which led Private Learoyd to take the Queen's Shilling.

THERE is a proposal to bring out a book on the services of civil officers during the Indian Mutiny. The projectors are unwilling to incur the labour of consulting the records at the India Office, but they hope that they may get their materials from such of the officers concerned as still survive. Sir M. Monier-Williams is to be entrusted with the charge of editing the work. It is, however, almost inconceivable that even Sir M. Williams's reputation would tempt any sane publisher to undertake, or even to consider, such a proposal. The subject belongs to what it is the fashion to call "ancient history," and the custom to regard with but moderate interest. The memories of the veterans themselves may well play them tricks in regard to events which occurred thirty-three years ago, and which have probably formed the theme of pardonably vague conversation ever since. Lastly, they have been abundantly set forth by Mr. Holmes and Col. Malleson; while a special work on the subject (Fifty-seven), by Mr. H. G. Keene, was published by Messrs. W. H. Allen only six years ago. Mr. Keene's book professes to be compiled from those very official records which the present projectors appear to regard as a negligible quantity.

M. HENRI LASSERRE seems to be peculiarly unfortunate in his theological writings. His translation of the Gospels, after having been warmly commended by the bishops and the religious press of France, was condemned at Rome, put in the index, and withdrawn from circulation. His more recent work, "Nouveau Mois de Marie Notre Dame de Lourdes (récents épisodes)," Paris, Victor Palmé, 1890, has been denounced by the Bishops of Autun and of Bayonne to be read in public in any of the churches, chapels, religious communities and schools, under their jurisdiction.

WE regret to announce the death of Mr. Charles Roach Smith, the Kentish antiquary. Mr. Roach Smith was the author and editor of a number of valuable antiquarian, historical, and Shaksperian books. He wrote the monthly "Antiquarian Notes" in the Gentleman's Magazine, and was a constant contributor to the publications of the British Archaeological Association. Mr. Roach Smith died at the age of eighty-five.

VERSE.

L'INDIFFÉRENT—WATTEAU.

(The Louvre.)

He dances on a toe
As light as Mercury's:
Sweet herald, give thy message!—No . . .
He dances on; the world is his,
The sunshine, and his wingy hat,—
His eyes are round
Beneath the brim.
To merely dance where he is found
Is fate to him,
And he was born for that.

He dances in a cloak
Of vermeil and of blue:
*Gay youngster, underneath the oak,
Come, laugh and love!*—In vain we woo . . .
He is a human butterfly;
No soul, no kiss,
No glance or joy!
Though old enough for manhood's bliss,
He is a boy,
Who dances and must die.

MICHAEL FIELD.

OBITUARY.

CARDINAL NEWMAN.

WE will not give a sketch of the life of the remarkable man who has just been taken from us, for this has been done during the past week in almost every newspaper throughout the kingdom. Neither will we attempt a critical analysis of his writings, or a history of the "Oxford Movement" with which his name is so inseparably connected. But it is possible that some few remarks of a more personal character from one who was his churchwarden at St. Mary's, fifty years ago, and who was always treated by him with the greatest kindness—even though he did not altogether embrace his theological views—may not be unwelcome to some of our readers. Newman's wonderful power of attracting the devoted affection of younger men—which sometimes showed itself in an absurd and exaggerated form—his own love for his "dear old first college," as he called Trinity in after years, and his yearning after Oxford, which continued through life, all testify to the affectionate loveableness of his character. Who can wonder that the closing words of the last sermon that he preached at Littlemore drew tears from the eyes of his sorrowing friends and disciples? "And, O my brethren, O kind and affectionate hearts, O loving friends, should you know anyone whose lot it has been, by writing or by word of mouth, in some degree to help you thus to act; if he has ever told you what you knew about yourselves, or what you did not know; has read to you your wants or feelings, and comforted you by the very reading; has made you feel that there was a higher life than this daily one, and a brighter world than that you see; or encouraged you, or sobered you, or opened a way to the inquiring, or soothed the perplexed; if what he has said or done has ever made you take interest in him, and feel well inclined towards him; remember such a one in time to come, though you hear him not, and pray for him, that in all things he may know God's will, and at all times he may be ready to fulfil it."

As an instance of his loving remembrance of Oxford, we should like to mention the "Bird's-eye View" which we noticed some years ago on the walls of the waiting-room at the Oratory, with these touching words (Ezek. xxxvii. 3), in large blue capital letters, at the top and bottom of the print:—"Fili hominis, putasne vivent ista ossa? Domine Deus, Tu nosti."

But especially his love for the Anglican Church with all its faults and shortcomings, as expressed in another passionately pathetic passage in the same sermon, "On the parting of friends," is quite sufficient to explain the slow, gradual way in which he at last made up his mind to leave it, which some persons at the time said he ought to have done long before:—

"O mother of saints! O school of the wise! O nurse of the heroic! of whom went forth, in whom have dwelt, memorable names of old, to spread the truth abroad, or to cherish and illustrate it at home! O thou, from whom surrounding nations lit their lamps! O, virgin of Israel! wherefore dost thou now sit on the ground and keep silence, like one of the foolish women who were without oil on the coming of the Bridegroom? Where is now the ruler in Sion, and the doctor in the Temple, and the ascetic on Carmel, and the herald in the wilderness, and the preacher in the marketplace? Where are thy 'effectual fervent prayers,' offered in secret, and thy alms and good works coming up as a memorial before GOD? How is it, O once holy place, that the land mourneth, for the corn is wasted, the new wine is dried up, the oil languisheth—because joy is withered away from the sons of men?' 'Alas for the day! how do the beasts groan! The herds of cattle are perplexed, because they have no pasture; yea, the flocks of sheep are made desolate.' 'Lebanon is ashamed and hewn down, Sharon is like a wilderness, and Bashan and Carmel shake off their fruits.' O, my mother, whence is this unto thee, that thou hast good things poured upon thee, and canst not keep them, and bearest children, yet dardest not own them? Why hast thou not the skill to use their services, nor the heart to rejoice in their love? How is it that whatever is generous in purpose, and tender or deep in devotion, thy flower and thy promise, falls from thy bosom and finds no home within thine arms? Who hath put this note upon thee, to have 'a miscarrying womb, and dry breasts,' to be strange to thine own flesh, and thine eye cruel towards thy little ones? Thine own offspring, the fruit of thy womb, who love thee and would toil for thee, thou dost gaze upon with fear, as though a portent, or thou dost loathe as an offence—at best thou dost but endure, as if they had no claim but on thy patience, self-possession, and vigilance, to be rid of them as easily as thou mayest. Thou makest them 'stand all the day idle, as the very condition of thy bearing with them; or thou biddest them begone, where they will be more welcome; or thou sellest them for nought to the stranger that passes by. And what wilt thou do in the end thereof?'"

But, notwithstanding his affectionate disposition, no one could write more sharply than Newman when an adequate opportunity seemed to him to require it, as in the crushing exposure of Achilli's character, and in the memorable chastisement inflicted on Mr. Kingsley for his most offensive, wanton, and unprovoked attack. This latter controversy afforded a wonderful example of his extraordinary rapidity of composition. Truly he had "the pen of a ready writer;" for the different chapters of the "Apologia" were written, printed, and published in successive weeks. Another instance of this readiness was shown in the case of Dr. Faussett, the Margaret Professor of Divinity, who preached in the summer term of 1838 in the university pulpit a violent sermon against the Tractarians. This was published (whether by accident or design) just before the long vacation, at the time when Oxford was full of visitors from all parts of the country. It was evidently necessary that an answer to this sermon should be prepared and issued at once; for, if it did not appear till the middle of the vacation, its usefulness would be almost nullified. Accordingly, Newman wrote and published a "Letter" to Dr. Faussett within four days, giving a detailed answer to all his charges. It is true that it was known that the sermon was going to be published, and Newman's friends who had heard it preached had no doubt told him its contents, so as to enable him to prepare his materials; but, after making allowance for all this, the promptness of the appearance of his "Letter" must be considered a very remarkable instance of intellectual activity.

Newman's influence on young men was destined to be shown in the pulpit of St. Mary's, not in the lecture-room at Oriel; but there are just two incidents in his college life which seem to deserve a word of notice. When we remember the close union of Pusey, Keble, and Newman in editing the "Library of the Fathers" (where their names appear together), and in other publications connected with the "Oxford Movement," from 1836 onwards, it is curious to find that in 1827-8 both Pusey and Newman supported Hawkins against Keble at the election for the headship. Besides the account of the transaction given in Burgon's "Twelve Good Men," there are some very interesting letters from Pusey, Keble, and Newman in the Guardian, January 30, 1889. Newman particularly alludes to Hawkins's

"general views so agreeing with his own, his practical notions, religious opinions, and habits, of thinking . . . his pursuing ends which he cordially approved, and bringing to the work powers of mind to which he had long looked up with great admiration."

How bitterly Newman must in after times have regretted his action on this occasion. need not be here enlarged upon, for it is always a painful and ungracious task to dwell upon the differences of good men, each of whom may have so much to bring forward in his own defence. And this may be said with respect to Hawkins's quarrel with the three tutors, Newman, Froude, and Wilberforce; in which, however, we cannot but think that he was wrong in not allowing the tutors—taking into consideration their religious and intellectual character—to try their experiment of having more intimate connection with the undergraduates. The result was that the three tutors resigned, and, notwithstanding the Provost's energetic efforts to supply their place, the college never quite recovered from their loss.

All these matters relate to the former half of his long life, in which he certainly met with scant honour and consideration in his own University and the Anglican Church generally. Probably one of the most unexpected events in his chequered life was the altered feeling towards him exhibited by the members of the church which had in a manner expelled him from her bosom, and the universal respect with which he came to be regarded. The recognition of his merits by his adopted church was somewhat grudging and tardy, but probably he will for centuries continue to be regarded as one of the greatest and best of its ecclesiastical dignitaries.]

W. A. GREENHILL.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

PROF. FREDERICK HALBHEER gives in the present number of the Antiquary an interesting account of a recent visit to Pompeii; and Mr. Edlesdon continues his valuable list of monumental brasses. Mr. W. Carew Hazlitt's memoranda of a tour in the Netherlands is far too short, but is, as far as it goes, instructive. We hope it will induce some of his readers to visit that interesting country. So near as Holland is to our shores, there are but few Englishmen who ever think of visiting any of its towns and villages except the few places noted in the ordinary guide books. Our own experience convinces us that almost every place in the land contains objects of interest. Mr. R. C. Hope continues his notes on holy wells. He is taking them in the order of the counties, and has already proceeded as far as Shropshire. Though the catalogue is very far indeed from being perfect, it will be found most useful to future investigators of this most interesting subject.

THE new volume of the "Gentleman's Magazine Library" contains the first section of the Memoirs on Architectural Antiquities. The articles show a similarity of style and treatment which has been absent in the previous selections; and this result arises from the circumstance that they are mainly the composition of one man—John Carter—an antiquary of considerable note from 1790 to 1810. During those years he visited the principal buildings throughout England and Wales, analysed the varied styles in which they had been constructed, noted the condition of repair or disrepair in which they stood, and pointed out in what manner they had been injured by the ravaging hands of the restorer. Very early in his career, when visiting the cathedral at Peterborough, he learnt from the Dean that the city corporation proposed the mutilation or destruction of the entrance gate into the close, and joined with that dignitary in his indignation at the proposal. Henceforward he determined to devote his energies, so far as his means would allow, to the task of tracking out "architectural innovation," and of staying its "iron hand."

These memoirs show the ceaseless assiduity with which he carried out his design. They afford a comprehensive history of the state of ecclesiastical architecture in our country at the close of the eighteenth century, and in some buildings, especially in the case of Westminster Abbey, supply a detailed examination of its condition at that date. The Notes, which have been compiled by Mr. A. C. Bickley, show how far the edifices described by Carter have since been altered or restored. The whole volume stands out as of especial attraction to the architectural enthusiast.

THE most interesting article in the Indian Antiquary for July is an elaborate account of "The Aborigines of Sokotra; an Ethnological, Religious, and Philological Review," by Major J. S. King. The article covers twenty-six pages, and contains a comparative vocabulary of the language. Major King, though he has twice visited the island, was only there for a very short time, and relies but little on personal observation.

THE new number of the Babylonian and Oriental Record contains the following articles: "Bananas and Melons as Desert Fruits of Assyrian Monarchs and Courtiers," by J. Bonavia, M.D.; "On a Lycian Inscription," by W. Arkwright; "An Unknown King of Lagash," from a lost inscription of 6,000 years ago, by Prof. T. de Lacouperie; and "Decipherment of Yannisai Inscriptions," by Robert Brown, jun.

THE INTERNATIONAL "CONFERENCE DU LIVRE" AT ANTWERP.

It was an excellent idea of M. Max Rooses, the keeper of the Musée Plantin-Moretus at Antwerp, to celebrate the tercentenary of the death of Christophe Plantin, the famous printer, by summoning an international congress to discuss questions of general interest connected with the production, preservation, and circulation of books. Assisted by an energetic committee, consisting of the leading citizens of Antwerp, and including such well-known men as M. Van den Peereboom, the Minister of Railways, M. Paul Cogels, the President of the Academy of Archaeology of Belgium, and M. Frans Gittens, the Flemish dramatist, M. Max Rooses sent his invitations broadcast over Europe to paper-makers, printers, engravers, binders, publishers, librarians, bibliophiles, and men of letters, and received numerous replies promising adherence. Unfortunately many of the most distinguished German and English adherents to the scheme failed to put in an appearance at Antwerp, and their absence robbed the congress to some extent of its full measure of success. It is much to be regretted that such well-known gentlemen as Dr. Richard Garnett, of the British Museum, Mr. Jenkinson, the Librarian of Cambridge University, Mr. Kershaw, of Lambeth Palace, Mr. Moens, and the Rev. S. S. Lewis, were not present, for they were fully expected, and would have been cordially welcomed, and the few Englishmen who attended the congress felt that their generous entertainers had a right to feel aggrieved at the smallness of the contingent of Englishmen, considering the number who had sent in their names and promised to read papers or open discussions. On the other hand, France, Holland, Portugal, Switzerland, and Italy were excellently represented, and the presence of Herr Busse, director of the Imperial press of Berlin, and of Mr. Charles Welch, Librarian of the Guildhall Library, London, with a few of their compatriots, justified the claim of the congress to be considered international.

The foreigners present received a kindly welcome at the Cercle Artistique, Littéraire et Scientifique of Antwerp on the evening of August 6, and on the following day the congress held its first sitting in the beautiful hall of that institution. M. Charles Ruelens, Librarian of the Royal Library of Brussels, was elected president of the Congress, M. Van den Peereboom, Minister of Railways, the Baron Osy de Legwaart, Governor of the Province, M. Leopold de Wael, Burgomaster of Antwerp, and General de Renette Moretus, honorary presidents, and MM. Max Rooses, Charles Dumercy, and Jan Bouchery, secretaries. A long list of vice-presidents was announced, including representatives of many nationalities—namely, MM. Arthur Van den Nest, échevin of Antwerp, Eugène Plon, the celebrated author and publisher of Paris, the Marquis de Granges de Surgères of Nantes, the Comte J. J. de Daugnon, director of the Archivio Storico Gentilizio, of Milan, Deslandes, Director of the National Press of Lisbon, Prof. Jan Ten Brink, of Leyden, Christophersen, the Consul-General of Sweden at Antwerp, Morel of Berne, the secretary of the International Union for the Protection of Literary and Artistic Property, and Eugène J. E. Schreck, of Philadelphia; while the places of Prof. Dziatzke, librarian of the University of Göttingen, and of Dr. Richard Garnett, who were absent, were taken by Herr Busse, of Berlin, and Mr. Charles Welch, of London. After an address from the president, and a cordial welcome to the good city of Antwerp given by the burgomaster, the congress divided into three sections for the despatch of business. The first section was to discuss questions relating to what was called upon the programme the "objectivity" of books, namely, the adoption of general rules and recommendations as to printing, binding, illustrating and indexing; and this section, as might have been expected, was chiefly attended by the printers and bibliophiles. To the second section, which was joined by many publishers, were allotted subjects relating to the postage of books, to custom-house duties on them, to the relations between authors and publishers, &c. The third section was chiefly intended for librarians, and devoted itself to questions concerning the organisation of libraries, catalogues, and the relations of libraries in different countries to each other. It will be seen that the great question of international copyright was omitted from the programme by the organisers of the congress, probably because it was thought better to leave it to the International Society of Authors. It will be most convenient to notice the discussions and recommendations of the three sections separately, though their deliberations were spread over three days, August 7, 8, and 9, and their conclusions were, on each afternoon, laid before the congress at its general meeting, and voted on afresh.

The first section was presided over by Herr Busse, of Berlin, with MM. Hayez and Jouaust, leading printers of Brussels and Paris, as vice-presidents, and first M. Auguste Aulit, "homme de lettres" of Antwerp, and then M. Brockmann, printer, of Antwerp, as secretary and reporter. The first question considered was the much debated one of formats, or size-notation, and it was resolved to recommend that the terms folio, quarto, octavo, &c., should be considered in future to designate, not the mode in which the sheets were made up, but the size of the pages. A scale was propounded by which all books should be called folios, quartos, octavos, &c., in proportion to their length and breadth, which was severely and wittily criticised by M. Eugène Plon, on behalf of the publishers. The accomplished reporter, M. Aulit, found great difficulty in drawing up the report of the section, owing to the technicalities involved, and his mixed duties as secretary, reporter, and translator, and the question was referred back to the section on the first day. On the next, however, a decision was come to in the sense of his report, but couched in still vaguer words, omitting all mention of breadth, and not severely limiting the standard of height. The obvious idea of using the terms folio, quarto, octavo to designate the formats of a book and of adding figures in centimètres to define its size seems to have escaped the notice of the section, though it occurred to some of the other members of the congress. The second recommendation of the section was that all governments should be requested to issue their official publications, parliamentary debates, &c., in a uniform and handy shape, a recommendation which all who use English Blue-books will readily endorse. These questions occupied most of the time of the section, but it also agreed to many other important resolutions, such as the recommendations, that it was expedient to form professional schools of engraving, and that an agreement ought to be come to between the printers of all nations as to the classification of type. On the motion of the Marquis de Granges de Surgères, a rather vague recommendation was adopted as to the uniformity of pagination in different editions of the same book, and the section at last, we suppose for lack of better subjects, actually descended to the puerility of deciding that a good alphabetical index, made by the author himself, added greatly to the value of the book. On the whole the deliberations of the first section of the congress had a distinct value; it is eminently expedient that some international agreement should be come to between the printers of all civilised nations as to format and type, and we only wish that some practical paper maker had been present to insist on the necessity of using sound paper instead of the flimsy stuff which is now, alas, only too much used all over Europe.

The second section had as its chairman M. Armand Templier of the great house of Hachette et Co, President of the Cercle de la Librairie of Paris, with MM. Thieme and Bruylant-Christophe, publishers at Amsterdam and Brussels respectively, as vice-presidents, and M. Charles Dumery, of Antwerp, as reporter. This section, which consisted largely of publishers, carried on its discussions in a more business-like and less heated fashion than either of the others. It expressed a hope that the publishers of different countries should be urged to form associations resembling the Cercle de la Librairie of Paris, and that these associations should enter into relations with each other, and act in harmony in every civilised country on questions of importance to the trade. It next decided that it is inexpedient to interfere with the relations between authors and publishers by legislation, as has been done in Hungary and Switzerland, and that all such legislation does harm to the general prosperity of literature. It unanimously resolved that custom house duties on books ought to be entirely abolished, and that representations should be made to the governments of all countries maintaining these duties, condemning them and urging their abolition. The question of uniformity of postage gave rise to much animated debate, and it was eventually resolved that it is desirable that the maximum weight to be sent by book post should be raised to 5 kilogrammes or about 11 lbs. in the countries belonging to the Postal Union, and to 3 kilogrammes in countries not in connexion with the Union. All these recommendations and resolutions are eminently practical; the section avoided the temptation of encouraging the pernicious doctrine of state interference in the relations between authors and publishers, and couched its recommendations in a modest tone, remembering that its members had only power to advise, and not to compel. The satisfactory manner in which matters were conducted in this section was largely due to the tact and ability of MM. Templier and Chatrousse, of Paris, and of MM. Wauters and Dumery, of Antwerp, and it is particularly to be regretted that no English or American publishers were present at the debates.

The third section, which was joined by all the librarians present at the Congress, was presided over by M. Ferdinand van der Haeghen, the learned bibliographer and librarian of the University of Ghent, who nominated as vice-presidents Dr. Wijmmalen, chief librarian of the royal library at the Hague, and Mr. Jenkinson, the librarian of the University of Cambridge. Owing to the absence of these gentlemen, their place was taken by Dr. Durieu, librarian to the University of Leyden. The secretary was M. Ernest Bosiers, of Antwerp, who was assisted by M. Henri Stein, of the Archives of Paris. This section had first to listen to a very long paper, read by M. Merzbach, of Brussels, recommending the formation of a national bibliography in every country, the desirability of which is so obvious that the time of the section was simply wasted in discussing it; yet in the course of discussion the interesting fact came out that in Belgium the government purchases a copy of every book printed, instead of having it presented gratis by the publisher. The next question brought up was that of thefts from National Libraries, à propos of which the name of the notorious Libri was frequently mentioned, and it was resolved that books and manuscripts stolen from public libraries ought to be regarded as "hors commerce," and when found in foreign countries ought at once to be restored to the institutions from which they were stolen. Next in order came a paper by Mr. Welch, of the Guildhall Library, admirably translated by M. A. Moortgat, professor at the Athénée Royal of Antwerp, which was notable as being the only contribution of an Englishman to the work of the Congress, though several others had sent in their names as willing to read papers or open discussions. The proposition of Mr. Welch was that a list of manuscripts in all countries should be drawn up as soon as possible as a basis for an international and universal catalogue of manuscripts. He quoted as one of the causes which had led him to suggest such a course, that he had, by the merest chance, discovered that the minutes of the Merchant Adventurers of London were preserved in the archives of Amsterdam, and argued that there must be in the different archives and libraries innumerable manuscripts, possessing, perhaps, little interest to the countries in which they were deposited, but of incalculable value to the historians and littérateurs of other countries. Such a list as he proposed would give the necessary clue to discovering them. His proposition was most favourably received and unanimously accepted in the following form: "That the governments of the different countries should be urged to form complete catalogues of the MSS. in their public institutions, and to request private individuals to contribute titles of the MSS. in their possession, as a preliminary step towards forming a universal catalogue of MSS." A heated discussion was then raised on the rezata quaestio of the propriety of lending manuscripts and rare books to savants. M. Ruelens, the president of the Congress, argued that such valuable works should never be lent at all on any occasion to individuals, and quoted many instances of serious damage which had accrued to the treasures under his charge at Brussels from allowing them to leave his custody. The question of allowing manuscripts and rare books to be lent by one national or university library to another in a different country for the use of men of letters was then mooted and received with mixed feelings by the librarians present. It was felt that this scheme would confine the danger of lending works of value to the mere risk of transport, and that it would be of the greatest service to men of learning and research for purposes of collation and study, while at the same time many librarians did not like the idea of encouragement being given to the removal of their treasures. The following resolutions were eventually passed, though not unanimously, by the section and accepted by the Congress: "That it ought to be absolutely forbidden to lend manuscripts or valuable printed books belonging to public institutions to individuals under any consideration whatsoever"; "That it ought to be possible for such institutions to lend such works to other institutions for the use of individuals on receiving the guarantee of the responsible guardians of the borrowing library." Such a proceeding would undoubtedly be of the greatest value to learned men who are unable to travel, and might do great things for research and the progress of literature, and it was greatly regretted that no one from the British Museum was present to express the views of the authorities of the greatest English library on the subject. So far the deliberations of the third section were sensible, and may have important results, worthy of the first international "Conférence du Livre," by calling attention to the necessity of establishing entire harmony between the librarians of different countries in order that the greatest advantage may be drawn from the accumulated stores of the written learning of the world. The other discussions were simply puerile. One gentleman read a paper on "The utility of having a general catalogue at the disposal of the public in the great national libraries." And another moved "That the public ought to have free access to the catalogues of public libraries." That such questions should have been discussed at all only shows that in the matter of organisation, continental, or at the least Belgian, libraries must be far behind those of England and the United States. No discussion took place on the question of establishing a uniform system of catalogues in all libraries, or on the best method of compiling and arranging a catalogue, and the remarks let fall upon the subject show that it would be of infinite advantage to continental librarians if Mr. Melvil Dewey, Mr. Cutten, or some other of the American librarians who have established their position, as the best and most methodical cataloguers in the world, would start on a mission to Europe to instruct their less experienced colleagues.

On the whole the labours of the first Congress have not produced—and are not likely to produce—any important practical results at present. Yet the idea is a good one; many subjects were discussed of infinite importance to all persons interested in the production or circulation of books, and the earnestness of spirit and genuine desire to come to an international agreement on many most important questions, which was universally displayed, argues well for the future. At the close of the Congress it was resolved that it should meet yearly; M. Max Rooses was appointed perpetual secretary, a post which will necessarily entail upon him an immense amount of labour, and it was left to the committee to decide upon the time and place of the next meeting. It is to be hoped that it will then be attended by more representatives from England, Germany, and the United States, and that this first session may be followed by others, which, after the experience gained last week, will have a better programme and aim at more practical results.

A few words must be said in conclusion in recognition of the cordial welcome and universal kindness shown to the foreigners present by the Antwerp members. Every institution was thrown open to them free, even at the hours prohibited to the public, and their card of membership was sufficient to secure them hospitality wherever they went. Nor were they left without tangible souvenirs of this most interesting occasion. A diploma of membership, printed by the ancient press of Christophe Plantin; a copy of the poems of Plantin, collected and edited by M. Max Rooses, and printed by M. Deslandes, at the Lisbon national press; and an exquisitely got-up catalogue of the French section at the "Exposition du Livre," were presented to each member. Something ought, perhaps, to have been said of this exhibition, but it is still incomplete; and from its present appearance it would seem that France has a monopoly in producing books of the highest technical excellence. Until it is more complete, it deserves no more than this passing notice, and we might be permitted to hope that some of our English printers and publishers may even yet at this late hour show themselves worthy rivals of MM. Hachette and Plon. On the evening of Saturday, August 9, the members of the first "Conférence du Livre" dined together at the Cercle Artistique. The health of the King of the Belgians was drunk, and acknowledged by a sympathetic telegram; and the toast of the foreign delegates was replied to in many different languages by M. Templier, M. Emile Mancel, Herr Busse, M. Morel, the Comte de Daugnon, Prof. Ten Brink, Mr. Welch, M. Christophersen, and M. Tsontosi Janos, the last of whom spoke, not in his native Hungarian, but in Latin. On Monday morning the foreign representatives were also invited to be present at the grand ceremony which took place at the inauguration of the new Musée des Beaux Arts. It is impossible to conclude without mentioning the names of the Antwerp gentlemen who took such pains to make the visit of the English to their grand old city pleasant and instructive, namely, MM. Frans Gittens, the poet, and the greatest writer of the new Flemish school of dramatists; Henri Hymans, the keeper of the engravings at the Royal Library at Brussels, and the greatest living authority on his subject; Auguste Aulit; F. van Steenwege; and most of all, M. Antoon Moortgat, whose perfect knowledge of English and readiness to render assistance will be ever most gratefully remembered by those who had the pleasure of making his acquaintance. The only Englishmen present at this interesting congress were Mr. Charles Welsh, of the Guildhall Library; the Rev. J. Clare Hudson, the editor of Lincolnshire Notes and Queries; Mr. James Yates, Public Librarian of Leeds; Mr. Poyntz Stewart; Mr. W. Roberts, editor of the Bookworm, and the undersigned.

H. MORSE STEPHENS.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- DÜHN, F. v., u. L. JACOB. Der griechische Tempel in Pompeji. Heidelberg: Winter. 10 M.
GRIMM, J. Kleinere Schriften. 8. Bd. Vorreden, Zeitgeschichtliches u. Persönliches. Gütersloh: Bertelsmann. 12 M. 50 Pf.
MANITIUS, M. Beiträge zur Geschichte frühchristlicher Dichter im Mittelalter. II. Leipzig: Freytag. 60 fr.
MERLINO, X. L'Italie telle qu'elle est. Paris: Savine. 3 fr. 50 c.
MORTILLARO, V. Légendes historiques siciliennes du 13<sup>e</sup> au 19<sup>e</sup> siècle. Turin: Loescher. 10 fr.
RICARD, J. Histoires: fin de siècle. Paris: Calmann Lévy. 3 fr. 60 c.

THEOLOGY.

- BRÜCKNER, W. Die chronologische Reihenfolge, in welcher die Briefe d. Neuen Testaments verfasst sind. Leipzig: Harrasowitz. 6 M.

HISTORY, ETC.

- FONTES rerum austriacarum. 2. Abth. 45. Bd. 1. Hälfte. Meinhard's II. Urbare der Grafsch. Tirol. Von O. v. Zingerle. 1. Thl. Leipzig: Freytag. 3 M. 60 Pf.
FUNKER, H. Die Actio funeraria. Halle: Peter. 1 M.

- KRUMBHOLTZ, R. Samaiten u. der Deutsche Orden bis zum Frieden am Melno-See. Königsberg: Beyer. 4 M. 50 Pf.
MAGGIOLLO, le Vicomte A. Pozzo di Borgo, 1764-1812. Paris: Calmann Lévy. 3 fr. 50 c.
SARAGONE, A. Gli avvenimenti del 1837 in Sicilia. Turin: Loescher. 8 fr.
WASTLER, J. Das Landhaus in Graz. Wien: Gerold's Sohn. 12 M.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- GAGEL, C. Die Brachiopoden der cambrischen u. silurischen Geschiebe im Diluvium der Provinzen Ost- u. Westpreussen. Königsberg: Koch. 2 M.
HANDLIRSCH, A. Monographie der in Nysse u. Bembex verwandten Grabwespen. V. Leipzig: Freytag. 1 M. 60 Pf.
KAPFER, M. Der "Common Sense" als Princip der Gewissheit in der Philosophie d. Schotten Thomas Reid. Leipzig: Engelmann. 2 M.
KAYSER, H., u. C. RUMER. Ueb. die Spectren der Elemente. 3. Abchnitt. Berlin: Reimer. 3 M. 50 Pf.
SCHNITZ-DUMONT. Lichtäther u. elektrische Welle. Eine Weiterführung der Maxwell'schen Medientheorie. Dresden: Höckner. 1 M. 60 Pf.
VOIGT, A. Die Auflösung v. Urtheilssystemen, das Eliminationsproblem u. die Kriterien d. Widerspruchs in der Algebra der Logik. Leipzig: Danz. 2 M.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- BOJUNGA, K. Die Entwicklung der nhd. Substantivflexion. Leipzig: Gräfe. 3 M.
DEMOSTHENES' Rede f. die Megalopoliten. Griechisch u. deutsch, m. ausführl. krit. u. exeg. Kommentar v. W. Fox. Freiburg-i.-Br.: Herder. 4 M. 50 Pf.
ESCHER, Jak. Triton u. seine Bekämpfung durch Herakles. Leipzig: Fock. 2 M. 50 Pf.
GORTZ, G. Emendationes militis gloriosi Plautinae. Jena: Neuenhahn. 50 Pf.
MAAR, E. De Aeschylis supplicibus commentatio. Leipzig: Fock. 1 M. 50 Pf.
MATZKE, J. E. Dialectische Eigentümlichkeiten in der Entwicklung d. mouillierten l im Altfranzösischen. Paris: Welter. 3 fr.
MEYER-LÄRKE, W. Italienische Grammatik. Leipzig: Reissland. 12 M.
MORF, H. Das Studium der romanischen Philologie. Zürich: Füssli. 1 M. 50 Pf.
MUSAPPA, A. Sulla critica del testo del romanzo in Francesco antico Ippomedon. Leipzig: Freytag. 1 M. 50 Pf.
QUINTILIANI de Institutione Oratoria liber I. Texte latin publié avec des notes biographiques sur Quintilien par Ch. Fierville. Paris: Firmin-Didot. 10 fr.
WAGNER, R. Stellung d. attributiven Adjectiva in altfranzösischen Prosatexten von Anfang d. 13. bis Anfang d. 15. Jahrh. Leipzig: Fock. 2 M. 20 Pf.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE ORIGINAL FRENCH EDITIONS OF "THE KALENDER OF SHEPHERDES."

Paris: August 9, 1890.

On a visit to the Bibliothèque Nationale, for the purpose of completing the bibliographical history of "The Kalender of Shepherdes" for my forthcoming edition, I have had the satisfaction of making an interesting discovery.

"The Kalender of Shepherdes," as is well known, is translated from a French book entitled "Le compost et kalendrier des bergiers," which enjoyed in France the same popularity as "The Kalender of Shepherdes" in England. I have seen eighteen French and sixteen English editions, and there were very likely many more editions which have not come down to us. The first English translation was printed in 1503 in Paris, and was evidently done by a Scotchman, the text, however, has been considerably modified by the French printers, who were ignorant of its language. Of this only two copies are extant, one perfect at Chatsworth in the library of the Duke of Devonshire, the other deficient at Althorp in Lord Spencer's library. The second English translation was printed 1506 in London by Richard Pynson, at "whose charge and expense" it was translated, the Paris edition being unintelligible to English readers. Of this latter edition the only known, but deficient, copy is in the Grenville collection of the British Museum. Both these first English editions are translated from the French edition printed in 1496 by Guiot Marchant in Paris, as can be proved from internal evidence.

The first French editions known of "Le compost, &c.," bear the date 1493. They are both productions of Guiot Marchant's press. The one is published on April 18, the other on July 18, 1493.

I have not been able to find a copy of the April edition, and must rely on the description which J. Ch. Brunet gives in his "Manuel du libraire," &c., ii. p. 202.*

"Compost (cy est le) et Kalédrier des bergiers nouvellement refait et autrement compose que nestoit par auant. . . Finit le compost et kalendrier des bergiers imprime a Paris par Guiot Marchant. . . lan M.CCCC. iiiixx et xiii le xviii<sup>e</sup> iour d'auril, in-fol. goth. de 90ff. signat. A-N, fig. on bois, &c.

"Edition la plus ancienne que nous connaissons de cet ouvrage. C'est pour en avoir mal lu la date que nous l'avons indiquée dans nos précédentes édit., sous l'année 1488. Depuis, nous avons vu un exemplaire d'une édition qui pourrait bien être la même que celle-ci, mais dans lequel la fin manquait; nous y avons trouvé au recto du 5<sup>e</sup> f. du cah. A, cette date: 'Lan de ce preset cōpost et kalendrier 7 q<sup>l</sup> a este fait et cōmēce auoir cours le p<sup>m</sup>ier iour de iāuier est M.CCCC. iiiixx et xiii.'

"Et au 8<sup>e</sup> f. le commencement du Calendrier pour les années Mil. iiii. C. iiiixxi. a Mil. V. C. et xii."

The July edition is in the Grenville collection of the British Museum, where I have examined it; it commences on sig. a,

"Icy est le compost et kalendrier des bergiers nouvellement refait et autrement compose que nestoit par auant," &c. Finit le compost et kalendrier des bergiers imprime a paris par Guiot Marchant demourant a la fleur de lis en la rue Saint inques. Lan de grace Mil. CCCC. iii. xx. et xiii. Le xviii. iour de iūillet" (folio, black letter, woodcuts, 90 leaves. Sig. a to n, in eights, finishes on n<sub>2</sub> recto, n<sub>6</sub> being a blank).

A comparison of these two descriptions, together with the fact that both editions followed one another in the course of three months, leads me to suppose that both are essentially alike.

In the Bibliothèque Nationale I found very curious evidence for this hypothesis. There is a splendid copy on vellum of the "Compost &c.," with broad coloured margins (blue, red, gold, brown, with designs of flowers), and sixty-two most skilfully executed miniatures.† It commences with sheet b, in eights, and this b contains, as in the edition of July, the almanac and the tables, then follows A to N, in eights. On A<sub>1</sub> recto, above the arms of the French kings (in this case Charles VIII.), there is the following title:

"Le kalédrier des bergiers nouuellement fait. Du quel font adiouftez plusieurs nouuelletes cōme ceulx," &c.

The first six words of this title are written very much larger, in blue ink. The copy finishes on N<sub>2</sub> recto, the colophon is effaced and replaced by a device of Verard, but some parts of the letters are on minute examination still to be recognised. I at once suspected that the copy must be one of the April edition. I compared it minutely with Brunet's statement; found that on A<sub>2</sub> recto the date is stated with the same abbreviations as above quoted; further, that the eclipses on C<sub>1</sub> recto commenced with the same year. After this, I endeavoured to decipher the fragments of the colophon, which are, in very favourable light and upon close examination, still recognisable, and I was able to read on the left-hand side of Verard's device:

"(1) Finit le compost et ka par Guiot marchant de le college de nauarre d'auril";

* Jaques-Charles Brunet, Manuel du libraire et de l'amateur de livres, etc. Paris, 1860-65. 8<sup>o</sup>.

† Through the kindness of M. le Conservateur et Sous-Directeur O. Thierry-Prou, this copy was withdrawn from an exhibition and placed at my disposal. It is, indeed, one of the most beautiful volumes I have ever seen.

and on the right-hand side:

"e a Paris
rt derriere
viii. iour."

Both fragments I have completed by help of Brunet's description and by the colophon of the edition of Iuillet, so that it would run thus:

"Finit le compost et kalendrier des bergiers Imprime a Paris par Guiot Marchant de mouvant au champ gaillard derriere le college de nauarre Lan. Mil. CCC. iiii. et xiii. Le x. viii. iour dauril."

Thus I had sufficient evidence that the edition on vellum of the Bibliothèque Nationale is wrongly ascribed to Verard. It was printed by Guiot Marchant for Verard, being simply an impression on vellum of his first edition.

It only remains to explain the fact that the first sheet b of the volume has small signatures, whereas all the other letters denoting the signatures of the book are capitals. This is easily done. Sheet b, on account of the black and red type, did not come out well in the first impression of April, and was thus replaced by the sheet b of the July edition, which turned out better. The Bibliothèque Nationale possesses, therefore, the original edition of "Le Compost" and in the finest possible shape; the British Museum, the great English National Library, can boast of possessing the second edition, published only three months later.

H. OSKAR SOMMER.

"HETMAN" AND "HAUPTMANN."

British Museum: August 10, 1890.

Mr. Krebs's doubts as to the Teutonic antipathies of the sixteenth century Poles in general, and of Stephen Báthory in particular, will be, I am sure, at once and for ever dispelled if he takes the trouble to consult the lately published Vatican MS. (Warsaw, 1887), entitled, "Vincent Laureo Nonce Apostolique en Pologne 1574-78 et ses dépêches inédites."

A very perfunctory examination of the South-eastern European dialects will also convince him that even the language of "the barbarous hordes of Turkey" has set its stamp unmistakably and indelibly upon the military vocabulary of its neighbours.

R. NISBET BAIN.

THE OGAM STONES IN THE ISLE OF MAN.

Ballaqueneey: Aug. 9, 1890.

I have been staying some days here in the south of the Isle of Man, at Mr. Henry Kelly's, of Ballaqueneey, in Rushen. He still has the Ogam stones, which I tried to describe in the ACADEMY when I was in the island on a former visit. There was one of the them, however, which I could then only read in part. I have tried that this time every day in good light; and after cleaning it very carefully with a brush and water, I have succeeded in getting every score to appear distinct from the accidental inequalities of the stone; for that was the difficulty, as the scoring is very shallow. Every digit is now beyond doubt in my opinion, and the additional word gives us the Early Goidelic form of the word for a druid or magician. The whole runs thus:

III. .... III. .... / . IIIII ..... II///. . III.

Dova i do n a Ma q i D r o a t a

In other words the stone marks, or originally did mark, the burial place of "Dovaido son of (the) Druid," and it forms an answer to a question often asked me here—namely, were there ever any druids in the island. Indeed, one might go so far as to say that there not only have been druids in the island in old times, but that they are not wanting here even now, though the ancient name for them is no longer in vogue. They are now best known by the English names of charmers and herb-doctors; and their skill, or whatever it may be, has come down in a few families from father to son or daughter in uninterrupted series of generations, reaching as far back as the oldest people now living can trace them, probably much further. They are decidedly hereditary and of no little importance in the social economy of the island. There never seems to have been any violent eradicating of druidism among the Goidelic Celts: they probably received Christianity as a better kind of druidism, and in the spirit of the old Irish saint who in the fulness of his fervour sang, "Christ is my Druid."

JOHN RHYS.

MĀDHAVA AND SĀYANA.

Nasik, Bombay: July 13, 1890.

With reference to the letters of Dr. Peterson and Prof. Bendall on the above subject, may I be allowed to point out a passage in the introduction to the Sarvadarśanasangraha, which seems to lend strong confirmation to the late Dr. Burnell's theory that Sāyana is the mortal body of Mādhava. The passage referred to is as follows:

"Skrimatsāyana dugdhadbhikānastubhena mahan-jasā
Kriyate Mādhavarjyena sarvadarśanasangraha
Pūrvashāmatidustarāṇi sūtarīm ālodya sūstrā-yasaṁ
S'rimatsāyana mādhabaḥ prabhur upanyasthāt satūṁprīṭhaye."

Here Sāyana mādhaba appears distinctly as a single person, the author of the treatise; and the description of Mādhava as the "crest-jewel of the milk ocean of the fortunate Sāyana" seems to indicate, as Prof. Cowell has pointed out, some such relation as is expressed in Burnell's theory that Sāyana is the mortal body of Mādhava.

As regards the verse quoted by Dr. Peterson, would it be too fanciful to suppose that "manobuddhi" is to be taken literally, and that, as Sāyana is the name of the one, so Bhoganātha is that of the other—i.e., that the former is the Manomayakośa, and the latter the Vijñānamayakośa of the Vedānta?

A. M. S. JACKSON.

SCIENCE.

Beiträge zur Experimentellen Psychologie. Von Hugo Münsterberg, Dr. Phil. et Med. Privat-docent der Philosophie an der Universität, Freiburg. (Freiburg, I. B.: Mohr.)

As all students of psychology are aware, the experimental investigation of psychical phenomena has proceeded apace in Germany during the last forty years or so. Under the name, now of physiological psychology, now of psycho-physics, these experiments have had as their special aim to elucidate the nature of the psycho-physical processes involved in such simple mental acts as the discrimination of the intensity of sensation, the reaction of a voluntary movement in response to a sense-signal, the affinity or measurement of time intervals, and so forth. Much of this work has been done by physiologists, for the very good reason that a knowledge of the physical processes involved was one main qualification for carrying out the experiment. This applies, for example, to the large domain of optical experiment undertaken for the purpose of showing how colour discrimination varies at different points of the retina, what are the relative functions of the retina and the ocular muscles in the visual measurement of linear magnitude, and so on. But the advance of this experiment has made it more and more clear that, even among these elementary "phenomena of consciousness," something besides physiological knowledge is needed. It has long been recognised by competent psychologists that no psychical manifestation, not even that abstraction, "a simple sensation," is really elementary. Complexity is the inseparable condition of psychical life, and in the breaking up of this complexity the keenest psychological analysis is needed. In truth, the most important contributors to this psycho-physical investigation, such as Fechner and Helmholtz, have shown a power of psychological insight not inferior to their mastery of physical processes. The recent developments of this investigation, invading, as they have done, the domain of the higher intellectual activities, such as comparison, judgment, and choice, have made a yet larger demand on this power of psychological analysis; and much of it has been carried out by so good a psychologist as Professor Wundt of Leipzig, and the pupils whom he has trained. By their labours quite a mass of important psychological material has been collected, and, in part, interpreted in accordance with Wundt's well-known psychological principles.

The peaceful progress of the later psycho-physical work has now been rudely arrested. From an unexpected sentinel in Freiburg in Baden comes a challenge which ought to give all the worthy experimenters time to think for awhile. Dr. Münsterberg—for he it is who demands the password—roundly accuses these industrious workers of unduly narrowing their researches under the pressure of preconceived theories. He sends them back to the starting point, bidding them reconsider the direction of their road and the proper mode of travelling over it. And with this hortative function of the prophet he combines the practical one of the reformer. In the three parts of the Beiträge which he has already published, and which collectively make a goodly volume of some 544 pages, he has given the world the results of a goodly amount of experimental work of his own, carried out, as it seems, in independent isolation at Freiburg. These experiments are the following up of precept with example. In them Dr. Münsterberg gives a new direction to experimental psychology, being led on this fresh track by a new and elaborate preliminary discussion of the nature of the psycho-physical powers in general. Hence a peculiarity of these Beiträge, which at once strikes the eye, and which serves to give to them a character markedly different from that of the customary records of experiments. The statement of method followed and results gained is embedded, so to speak, in a mass of theoretical discussion. This will no doubt prove a stumbling-block to the hasty seeker after positive fact. But it may perhaps turn out to be the shortest road to positive fact after all. However this be, it ought to be at once admitted that Dr. Münsterberg here gives us a combination of observation and theory, so organic, so interpenetrative, as to remind the reader of the work of the masters in science. The theory, though forming itself antecedently by help of a very competent introspective analysis of the psychical phenomena, and a no less competent grasp of the general form and course of the psycho-physical process, and so serving one of the main uses of theory, viz., to guide experiment wisely, seeks to justify its existence by the results of the observations themselves. The results are on the whole remarkable. If Münsterberg's new experimental work is confirmed by the researches of others he will prove to have been singularly fortunate in lighting on precisely the facts he needed for establishing his theoretic conclusions.

To give a detailed account of this work would be out of place here, and I will confine myself to a brief indication of some of the more important positions reached.

The first part (Heft I.) is occupied with the ambitious task of bringing thought-processes, association and judgment, into strict correlation with a series of nervous events. Wundt and his pupils have experimented in the direction of thought measurement by estimating the variations in the reaction-time as the thought-power increases in complexity, as, for example, by the addition of an element of choice. Wundt's explanation of his results involves his peculiar theory of attention, or, as he prefers to call it, apperception; as an intervening and controlling factor, Münsterberg directs his reasoning and his experiment against this view. To our critic Wundt's apperception is something extraneous, transcendental, and out of relation to the physical process. In this he will probably be thought by most students of Wundt to be in error, if not palpably unjust. How a writer who, like Wundt, has taken more than ordinary pains to mark out the nerve-tracts specially involved in attention could be supposed to mean by this a transcendental influence breaking in on the psycho-physical chain passes my knowledge. Münsterberg cannot, of course, get rid of the psycho-logical fact of attention, and he argues ingeniously, though not conclusively, that it is simply the muscular sensation attending the motor reactions on sensory stimulation of the nerve centres. His own experiments are an interesting variation on those of Wundt and his followers. The most important result obtained for his purpose is that you may go on increasing the complexity of the intellectual process involved in answering a question by a hand or finger movement without increasing the reaction-time, provided that the attention be kept directed not to the expected words or signal, but to the movements to be carried out. This result shows in a striking way that we may by a preliminary severe exercise of attention produce a commotion in the brain centres which will afterwards work itself into a quasi-rational result by a semi-conscious, or wholly unconscious, process. This is chiefly analogous to the primitive fact that, after trying to recall a thing, the idea of it is apt to arise afterwards, apart from any further exertion of attention at the moment. Münsterberg is no doubt right in saying that his experimental results demonstrate that attention is not a necessary factor (in the way assumed by Wundt) in the central stage of the reactive process. But, then, it may be rejoined that this intervening stage of attention is dispensed with in this case, simply because the whole thought power has been prepared by a preliminary mental concentration of a particularly intense kind. Münsterberg attempts in this connexion a psycho-physical rendering of association, and of the act of judgment. The former he reduces not only to the form of contiguous association, but even to simultaneous association, a succession of impressions as the sounds of the digits, one, two, three, &c., are held together by a common element, one being joined to two, two to three, and so forth, because they are all enjoined with a common factor m. But he does not attempt to meet the difficulty which instantly arises on this supposition—viz., that the sounds would, in this case, be reproducible in any conceivable permutation indifferently, and not merely in the original and in the inverse order, which he recognises as possible. The whole discussion of the physiology of association, and still more of the psycho-physical process in judgment, appears to show that the writer in his commendable eagerness to bring the psychical and the physical into friendly contact, is overlooking radical differences of temper between them. One need not object to a psychologist's rejecting the idea of consciousness as something distinct from its contents, provided only that he sees that the contents retained are not deprived of their characteristic form, which is precisely what every scientific psychologist means by consciousness. But our author seems to me to do this, particularly in trying to get at the physiological condition of judgment. Judgment involves, as he cannot help half recognising, a consciousness of a relation between sensations or other psychical contents. This is clearly recognised when he writes (p. 148), "Every judgment is an equation involving a relation of identity." But how, it may be asked, can this be brought into a close correlation with a physical process? This is Münsterberg's theory. He supposes that, in the process of judging, a particular "content," or idea, is retained in the mind, while its concomitant associated ideas vary, and that in this way two concomitant ideas may be successively brought together, and a judgment formed by a purely associational process, which, as such, can be correlated with a nervous process. But the mere persistence of an idea is, surely, a long way off from the consciousness of its identity. Münsterberg here only appears to succeed in correlating the act or process of judgment with a physical process by first divesting the psychical process of its distinctively psychical feature—viz., the relating, unifying function.

In saying all this I am not questioning Münsterberg's general positions that all psychical processes are correlated with nervous processes. The recognition of the likeness between two ideas presumably has for its nervous substratum the particular process corresponding to each of the ideas present; also, perhaps, the simultaneity of these processes as well as their partial coincidence or overlapping through the excitation of common cerebral elements. To this extent then the psychologist may with scientific profit bring the psychical and the physical into alliance. But to go beyond this will, so far as one can see, be always impossible. Just as in correlating psychical elements, sensations, with nervous processes we can only hope to show a general correspondence between variations of sensational quality and certain variations of a quite different order in the molecular movements of the nerve, and not to establish any special agreement between the particular mode of molecular movement and this particular sensational quality, say that of a bitter taste, or of red colour; so, in co-ordinating intellectual with nervous processes, it seems futile to try to establish an analogy between any particular series or group of nervous actions, and a phenomenon so disparate, so uniquely psychical as a consciousness of a relation (e.g., likeness, or succession) between two sensations. I have dwelt on this point because it is a fundamental one in Münsterberg's method of psycho-physical research, and appears to me to vitiate many of his other reasonings. Thus, in Heft II., in an interesting experimental inquiry into our sense of time (Zeitsinn), he argues as if the mere prolongation of a muscular sensation, which he finds an integral factor in our common measurements of time-interval, somehow carried with it a conscious appreciation of this duration. The fact is, of course, that the mere duration of a sensation no more supplies time-appreciation than the absence of all sensation would supply it; though, as Münsterberg very well argues, the distinctive characters of muscular sensations render them an excellent material for appreciating time exactly, when once the peculiar psychical function which we call the time-sense, that is the capability of mentally bringing successive sensations together in time-relations, is supposed to be present.

But we should do scant justice to these Beiträge were we to dwell longer on this point. Even if the writer fails in psychological insight here and there, he shows on the whole a fine gift of analysis. In Heft I. he makes a distinct contribution to the physiology of attention by elucidating more fully than had been done before by the variety of muscular sensations that accompany our ordinary acts of perception. This is followed up in the study on the time-sense already referred to. Of special interest here is the experimental result that, in comparing the time-intervals between sensations, the muscular sensations accompanying respiration play an important part. Münsterberg proves by an ingeniously arranged experiment that when the two intervals compared synchronise with the same phase of the respiratory process, our measurement is much more exact. A yet further contribution to the subject is given us in the paper on the well-known periodic oscillations of attention, as illustrated in the regular disappearance and reappearance of a minimal impression or difference of impressions. Here Münsterberg argues with force that these variations are not due to a central cause (as Wundt and others suppose), but to peripheral changes, viz., periodic fatigue of the muscles engaged and consequent diminution of tension, together with the concomitant muscular sensation. It may be cordially recognised that our author has here done much to clear up the nature of attention as a psycho-physical process. Yet it may be doubted whether his theory of muscular sensations, carefully elaborated as it is, covers all that we mean by attention. Every teacher knows that there can be fixation of head and eye with a perfect absence of attention. This and other facts would have to be taken account of before we could say that attention is nothing but muscular adjustment.

The muscular sensations of which Münsterberg makes such excellent use in dealing with the phenomena of attention are turned to further account in other essays. It may be noted in passing that he adopts the now fashionable view that the muscular sense is made up of centripetal elements—viz., sensations arising from the actual contraction of muscle and movement of the part. In two important essays completing Heft II.—viz., on Lineal Measurement by the Eye, and the Space-perception of the Ear, the author seeks to show that a muscular element is an essential factor in our space-judgments. The experimental investigation of the auditory perception of direction is specially valuable. Münsterberg carried out a series of observations with the view of determining how the ear's discrimination of direction (i.e., recognition of change of direction) varies at different points in three planes. The results seem to show that we do not, as has been alleged, judge of direction, mainly at least, by noting the dissimilarity in intensity between the impressions of the two ears. The fineness of the local discrimination is surprisingly great at certain points, pre-eminently the point immediately in front of the eyes. The writer seeks with great ingenuity to explain these facts on the supposition that the ears' perception of direction consists in the representation of a head-movement, viz., that which would bring the front of the head, and so the organ of sight and (what is important in the case of the lower animals) of sense opposite the direction of the sound. He reasons that sounds of different directions produce different central excitations by their action on the nerve filaments of the semi-circular canals. With these differences are co-ordinated by a primitive reflex arrangement different movements of the head, and, after these reflex movements have been carried out, the recurrence of the particular modification of the semi-circular stimulation excites a representation of the corresponding head-movement. This answers closely to what, according to Münsterberg's view, happens in the case of visual perception. The excitation of the several points of the retina does not, on this theory, give rise to unlike sensations distinguished by qualitative differences of local colouring. We localise retinal impressions differently in the field of vision because, owing to congenital reflex nervous connexions, the excitation of a particular point calls forth a particular movement—viz., that which brings the most sensitive part of the retina opposite to the object. This theory of reflex eye and head movements simplifies matters by enabling us to dispense with all theories of original local characters or signs in the sensory impressions. But Münsterberg has by no means completed his argument. Before he could establish his conclusions securely, he would have to examine the fundamental sense of touch, and apply his theory to actual localisation. He would further need to investigate the facts of infant psychology in order to see whether these movements are, in fact, primitive reflexes. It may be added that he seems unknowingly to reintroduce the differences of local colouring, which he attempts to dispense with, by assuming, as he clearly does, that we distinguish locally the muscular sensations which accompany the action of different muscles. Such a distinction seems to be involved in the discrimination of the several directions of eye and head movements here spoken of.

Only a word or two must be added on the contents of Heft. III., the most daring investigation of the whole. Setting out from his fundamental position, that every sensation is complex, being complicated by the addition of the muscular sensations attendant on the reflex muscular action, and that consequently disparate sensations, as those of hearing and of sight, have a common element, Münsterberg bethought him of experimentally finding out whether we are not able to compare differences of intensity in different regions of sense. The subject of these experiments, who was no other than Münsterberg himself, was required to vary a movement of the hand so as to produce a difference in the range of this that should appear to him to equal a given difference in light or sound intensity. Marvellous to relate, it was found that to a given scale of intensities in one class of sensations, which were made to follow one another in a perfectly irregular manner, there corresponded perfectly a scale in another class, that is to say, to a greater difference of intensity in the case of one sense there always corresponded a greater difference in another. In view of the fact that we are not in ordinary circumstances aware of possessing any power of comparing intensities in the case of disparate sensations, at least beyond the vague comparative estimates involved in the use of common expressions such as "powerful," of "medium strength," and so forth, Münsterberg's conclusions are sufficiently startling.

We may await with lively curiosity the result of confirmatory research, for this they certainly require and will certainly provoke. Meanwhile one can congratulate the author on having struck out a brilliantly original line of research, which may possibly, as he thinks, lead to a restatement of the whole psycho-physical theory of sensorial intensity as developed by Weber, Fechners, and their successors.

JAMES SULLY.

SCIENCE NOTES.

A NEW scientific series has lately been commenced at Paris under the name of La Bibliothèque Darwinienne. The series, as the name indicates, will be mainly sociological.

SIG. EMILIO BERTANA has just published a curious and instructive volume entitled, L'Arcadia della Scienza; Castone della Torre di Rezzonico. (Parma: Luigi Bettei). The first essay deals with the Italian scientific poetry of the eighteenth century, the poesia dotta, now very justly forgotten, but in its time not without a certain popularity. The second essay treats more elaborately of one of these scientific poets, Rezzonico, the writer of a poetic Sistema dei Cieli.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

DR. G. A. SCHRUMPF'S First Aryan Reader (Nutt) contains specimens (consisting of continuous texts of some length) of the typical languages of the several main divisions of the Aryan family. The passages are given in transliteration (except those written in Greek or Roman characters), and are accompanied by translations and, for the most part, grammatical analyses. In Sanskrit there is an episode from the Rāmāyana and a Vedic hymn; in Evanic there are examples of the Old-Persian, Avestic, and Pahlavi dialects; in Greek, a Cypriot inscription; in Italic, an Oscan, an Umbrian, and an early Latin inscription; and specimens are also given of Armenian, Albanian, Old Irish, Lithuanian, Church Slavonic, and Gothic. The volume also contains a brief sketch of the history and characteristics of each of these languages, and notices of the best books for study. Dr. Schrupf seems to have done his work carefully, and to have made a judicious selection of texts. We observe that he regards the Vannic language as the ancestral form of Armenian—surely an inadmissible view, and that he classes Etruscan unhesitatingly as an Italic dialect, which, to say the least, is too confident.

Den Graeske Nominalflexion, by Dr. Alf Torp, (Christiania: Cammermeyer), is a book which no student of Indo-European comparative philology ought to neglect. Although containing only 156 pages, it is the most complete and the best arranged compendium which we have seen of the results of modern investigation into the morphology of the noun inflexions in Greek. The author is by no means a mere reporter of the conclusions of others; his judgments on disputed questions are in general remarkably sound, and he has offered several original suggestions that seem at least highly plausible. On a few points we are unable to agree with Dr. Torp; for instance, when he maintains that one of the forms of the dual in Indo-European was the uninflected stem. The absence of an index of words referred to is, however, the only serious fault we have to find in the book.

FINE ART.

Japanese Pottery. With Notes by James L. Bowes. (Liverpool: Edward Howell.)

This book, which has been produced with singular care and completeness, is a worthy sequel to the author's previous labours in the cause of Japanese art. It may, indeed, be properly called a crown to them, for though the illustrations are on a smaller scale than those of "The Ceramic Art of Japan" (in the production of which Mr. Bowes was aided by Mr. Audsley), it is quite as sumptuous, and his own studies and those of others have enabled him to make his history more accurate, and his notes more complete.

Since he first began to take an interest in the subject (and he was one of the first), the workers in the field have been many, and almost each day something has been added to our store of facts, some light has been thrown upon dark and doubtful passages of art history, so that Mr. Bowes has shared with others in the disadvantages of labouring upon half-cleared ground. To say that the ground was now clear would be too much, for a great deal yet remained to be discovered, and no doubt in course of time it will be possible to compile a work upon Japanese pottery which will be more perfect than this; but even as a text-book it is not likely to be soon superseded, and as a catalogue of the exceptionally fine and rare collection of the author it must always remain an indispensable authority.

The work consists of four parts: (1) a general account of the history of Japanese pottery; (2) an account of the various kilns; (3) a catalogue of the Bowes collection, with a careful description of each piece; (4) notes on manners and customs, folklore, fables, poetical associations, romances, and many other of those many things which have stimulated the production and inspired the decoration of Japanese pottery.

The historical section begins with a short chapter called "Mythological"; but mythological pottery is hard to get, and even Mr. Bowes has had to be contented with nothing earlier than "prehistoric"; but he has succeeded in securing some fragments of the vessels dug up out of the Shell Mounds of Omori and Okadaira, and a part of the head of one of those clay figures which it was "once upon a time" the custom to bury round the body of a deceased chieftain as substitutes for the living servants who, in still earlier times, had to share their master's grave. Mr. Bowes also gives illustrations of other specimens of prehistoric ware, taken from plates published in the well-known papers by Prof. Morse and Mr. Ernest Satow on the subject. A pot said to be of a date anterior to 660 B.C., and a dish of Gioki ware (Gioki was a priest who is said to have introduced the potter's wheel into Japan about the eighth century A.D.) are the only other specimens in the collection which claim a greater antiquity than the thirteenth century, when "Kato Shirozayemon, otherwise known as Shunkie, and also as Toshiro," settled at Owari after visiting China, and made little brown jars for the tea ceremony of chanoyu so far superior to previous efforts that he earned the title of the "Father of Pottery." Undoubted specimens of Toshiro's skill, or at least undoubted by "numerous Japanese connoisseurs," are comprised in Mr. Bowes' collection. An example of the earliest ware of Hizen (Karatzu), belonging to the fourteenth century perhaps, is another historical treasure, but scarcely so rare and interesting as that little incense box, warranted genuine by Mr. Kato, which was made by Gorodayu Shosui, who introduced the manufacture of porcelain into Japan at the beginning of the sixteenth century. He visited China, this Shosui, and he brought back with him not only the art of making porcelain, but the materials for making it, the existence of which in Japan was not discovered till the close of the century. The supply of clay he brought with him sufficed to make a few pieces only, but one of these has been secured by Mr. Bowes. When we come to later times, rare, and in some cases almost unique, pieces marking the progress of the principal kilns, such as those of Satsuma and Kaga, are not wanting. Among these is the remarkable bowl of old polychromatic Kutaru, decorated on the outside with burlesque figures of nine of the sixteen Rakan (illustrated on plate xxvi.) which has been identified as the work of Tamora Gonzayemon, the Hizen potter, who originated the manufacture of pottery in Kaga during the first half of the seventeenth century. Illustrated, also, is one of two examples of the work of Kakiyemon, who originated, not long after, the polychromatic porcelain of Arita, from which sprang that class of ware which was nearly all that our forefathers knew of the Ceramic arts of Japan. Of this "Old Jap," made for the European market, and imported largely by the Dutch and Portuguese traders, Mr. Bowes speaks with disparagement, just, certainly, when it is compared with the more refined work produced by the same factories at the same time for native use, but certainly not just when compared with other pottery. Of a collection of all the wares of all countries, this "Old Jap" holds its own by the boldness of its shapes, the richness of its coloration, and the effectiveness of its decoration. Knowing that it was for export, the decorator may have been less careful in the draughtsmanship of the designs, so that some of the subjects may be "unrecognisable to the Japanese of to-day"; but surely it is going a good deal too far to say that "in style of decoration it is altogether European," and if, as Mr. Bowes asserts, "the Japanese connoisseur fails to recognise it as having been made in his country," it does not say much for the discrimination of the Japanese connoisseur. It does not follow that, because the Japanese made a more refined article for themselves, the taste of the Europeans in admiring the less refined article is to be condemned, for they had not the opportunity of comparison, and the less refined article had artistic merits of its own quite sufficient to justify its popularity then, and even now, when the best that the Japanese can do is before us. Moreover, it is a question how far we are justified in adopting the taste of the Japanese connoisseur as the arbiter of our own. Mr. Bowes admits that it is impossible for anyone who has a feeling for art to agree in the extravagant admiration of the Japanese connoisseurs for the small jars of brown stoneware used in the ceremony of Chanoyu. When the English Philistine is accused of admiring the imitations of Hizen ware made at Worcester and Derby, he may console himself with the reflection that the Japanese once manufactured (and not for export) imitations of Dutch imitations of Chinese porcelain.

It seems almost needless to observe, in regard to one of Mr. Bowes' books, that the illustrations are numerous, well chosen, and of high excellence in execution. The coloured plates exemplify the perfection to which chromo-lithography has attained with the aid of photography, and the cuts in the text are fine and clear reproductions of the originals. The initial to each chapter represents a scene in the Genii Monogatari, and the "Notes" are introduced with a drawing by Hokusai, in which a calligraphist is represented drawing all five letters of the word at the same time, using both hands, both feet, and his mouth as brush-holders.

COSMO MONKHOUSE.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

THOSE concerned for the preservation of the antiquities of Egypt will read the report of the Society for the Protection of Ancient Egyptian Monuments with feelings of positive dismay. Of the very moderate proposals set forth by the society at its institution, not one has been adopted by the Egyptian authorities. For the report ordered of Grand Bey, and drawn up while he was engaged on other duties, deals with only a portion of the monuments, besides being very wide of the mark in the estimate of cost. Since the Egyptian Government refuses to appoint an inspector of the monuments, which, considering the length of country they cover, is indispensable, Mr. Flinders Petrie proposes that the society devote its funds to obtaining a trustworthy report on the present condition of the monuments, and at the same time requesting the gentleman making the report to notify any cases of destruction which may come under his observation. The practical knowledge of the distinguished excavator will ensure a careful consideration for his scheme.

DOCTORS BODE and BREDIUS are the joint authors of a very scholarly article on Jan Molenae, recently published in Jahrbuch der Königlich Preussischen Kunstsammlungen. It may be as well to remind some of our readers that the National Gallery contains an admirable example of this excellent artist and humourist, who is not too well known in England. Articles on a drawing by the Master E. S. in the Louvre (by Max Lehrs), on some pictures by Hans Baldung (by F. Harek), and an interesting study (by Dr. Bode) of what may be called the spirit of genre breaking out in Florentine sculpture of the fifteenth century, sustain the high reputation of this periodical for research. The illustrations are numerous and interesting.

MR. BRADLEY, whose Dictionary of Miniaturists has achieved a very gratifying reputation on the continent, has in the press a "Life of Giulio Clovis," the famous miniaturist. This Life deals not merely with the biography of the artist, but with contemporary miniaturists and the artist-life in Italy of the sixteenth century, and contains also descriptions of the works of the great miniaturist, with discussions and criticisms upon those usually attributed to him, such as the Grenville Victories of Charles V., the Munich offices, &c. Altogether it is the most complete and impartial account of the distinguished artist that has hitherto been attempted. Selections from his letters, detailed descriptions of his works, and many interesting documents connected with his career, are appended to the Life, which will be published by Mr. Quaritch.

THOSE who watch with interest the development of modern art will not need to be reminded of the loss it sustained in the death of Ulysse Butin, "le Millet des marins," as he has been called, but they may be glad to read the interesting memoir (illustrated by autographs and sketches) by M. Abel Patoux, now appearing in the pages of L'Art.

To those who only know Mr. Joseph Pennell as a realistic draughtsman with the pen, that clever artist will appear in somewhat a new light in the Portfolio this month. His illustrations to Mr. A. J. Church's article on the West Coast of Scotland seem to have been taken from water-colour drawings, and to be imbued with no little romance and poetry. His view of Duntulm Castle is impressive in its wild grandeur. His pen illustrations to Mr. McCarthy's "Charing Cross to St. Paul's" are excellent examples of his better known style.

The contents of the Magazine of Art are as various and well selected as usual. Mr. Walter Armstrong on the Grosvenor Gallery; Mr. Claude Phillips on the "Grands Prix"; Mr. Phené Spiers on Mr. Moore's Recent Book on Gothic Architecture; Mr. Du Maurier on Book-Illustration; Miss Mabel Robinson on Francis I.; some verses by Mr. Cosmo Monkhouse, illustrated by Mr. Harry Furniss; Mr. Percy Fitzgerald on Stronghurst, illustrated by Mr. Fulleylove; are the chief items in a programme which testifies to the energy of the present editor.

THE University Extension Society entertains a selected few of its students in Cambridge this month. The programme of study shows that the lectures are about equally divided between science and art. The latter receives a degree of attention altogether unusual. For the first time, we believe, an attempt is being made to make the history of the university written in its stones, legible to the students. Mr. Ernest Radford gives four lectures upon architecture of an elementary kind. These are supplemented and amplified by more special deliverances upon the buildings of Cambridge. Prof. Middleton lectures in King's College Chapel; Prof. Stanton at Ely. Prof. G. F. Brown, whose subject is of all the most interesting, speaks forth in his own college of St. Catherine upon "The Ground Plan of an Early College, and the Portraits in a small College Hall." Lectures are to be given also in the Libraries of Corpus, John's and Trinity, by their respective librarians. Mr. Seaman, of Clare, gives six lectures upon Greek art in the Museum of Archaeology.

New systems of lighting have not in this generation done much to stimulate artistic design. Ingenuity and utility have characterised our gaseliers and oil lamps, but in grace and beauty these articles have fallen far short of chandeliers and candlesticks. Much fancy and invention, however, have been brought to play in devising "fittings" for electric lighting, and those shown at the Edinburgh Exhibition quite deserve the article devoted to them in the Art Journal. So also do the Riverside Inns; but the illustrations, through doubtless correct, scarcely do justice to the picturesqueness of the buildings depicted. Miss Zimmern's paper on Bologna, and a pleasant account of Dieppe by Lady Colin Campbell combine with continuations of articles already noticed in the ACADEMY to make a readable and interesting number of this periodical, but the illustrations as a whole leave much to be desired.

THE STAGE.

STAGE NOTES.

WE hear that amongst the plays which Mr. Willard takes out with him next month to America is a version of Mr. Baring Gould's "Mehalah," prepared by Mr. William Poel and Mr. Palmer, and now somewhat altered from the form in which—already with a distinguished measure of success—it was presented some time ago at a matinée at the Gaiety.

IN another matter, likewise, Mr. William Poel is "to the fore." His article upon "The Stage in Shakspeare's Day"—read not long since before the New Shakspeare Society—finds, and indeed thoroughly deserves, a place in this month's National Review.

MR. GEORGE GROSSMITH is continuing—just now in the North of England—his series of entertainments. He was received this week at Buxton with a perfect fervour of enthusiasm. Certainly his recent platform performances show to much greater effect the variety of his talent than ever did his appearances on the stage proper; and the "Clown in Society" is making, it would seem, a large fortune by having the courage to avoid society for a while, and to circulate freely, for the time being, in the manufacturing districts and the Northern watering places.

MISS JANETTE STEER—a young actress of real talent and charm, who ought to be seen more frequently on the London stage—is now starring through the provinces with "Pygmalion and Galatea" and "The Cloven Foot."

MUSIC.

MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.

Counterpoint: Strict and Free. By Ebenezer Prout. (Augener & Co.) At the beginning of this year Mr. Prout read a paper on Counterpoint at the National Society of Professional Musicians, in which he maintained that the study of strict counterpoint was an essential part of the training of all who aspired to be thorough musicians; yet he spoke of certain modifications rendered necessary by the change of musical thought. The old contrapuntists wrote for voices: hence prohibitions, with regard to certain intervals of melody, which have no longer any raison d'être. But the birth and development of modern harmony, and the passing away of the old ecclesiastical modes to make room for scales of higher development—these are the principal causes which call for a modification of the old laws. This important fact was, indeed, first recognised by the late Sir George Macfarren, and Mr. Prout has followed in his footsteps. But his changes are reasonable. He refuses to accept certain stringent rules which only have old age in their favour. In the very first chapter of his book he clearly defines strict counterpoint. The severity of the old masters is fully maintained with regard to chords. He permits more liberty in the matter of melodic progression; but will not allow the use of chords with fixed progressions as some modern theorists have done. The student, in using only triads and first inversions, learns how to select his chords. To guide beginners, Mr. Prout gives a complete list of chords available for strict counterpoint, and also a table of root progressions. In the author's opinion it is highly desirable that harmony and counterpoint should be studied side by side, and so, before coming to the first species of counterpoint, he recommends the practice of harmonising simple melodic phrases, of which he gives examples, placing the melody in turn in each of the voices. Here, Mr. Prout is not content to say to the student "Go and do likewise," but analyses the various examples; he even gives a faulty specimen, and comments on the faults. In the chapter on the "First Species" Mr. Prout enunciates a simple rule for the avoidance of the false relation of the tritone, and for this, students who have not found Cherubini's remarks on the subject over clear, will be extremely grateful. In the chapter on four-part counterpoint, our author gives an example containing octaves by contrary motion between the extreme parts. A foot note, however, warns students not to introduce "this perfectly sound progression in an examination paper." The warning is a wise one, since some examiners would not allow it. It would be a good thing if text-books of harmony and of counterpoint could be accepted as authoritative by all examining bodies. "Strict counterpoint is a means to an end, not the end itself." The end is free counterpoint; and severe training enables the student the better to utilise this promised land when he reaches it. Mr. Prout in his preface reminds musicians that "no composer ever attained the highest eminence without first submitting himself to the restraints of strict counterpoint." Students will do well to ponder over this statement. Sometimes the name of Schubert is quoted as an exception. He was a composer of the highest genius, but the fact that shortly before his death he had made arrangements to study counterpoint with Sechter seems to show that he himself felt that he had not reached "the highest eminence." Mr. Prout has a long chapter on cadences. He has much to say on this subject, and here, as in strict counterpoint, he recommends harmonising of melodies. The numerous illustrations from the great masters add to the interest of these pages. In the following chapter on the "harmonising of chorales and other melodies"—a chapter indeed which shows in marked manner Mr. Prout's eager desire to render all possible assistance to the student—there are some remarks on the harmonising of pianoforte music. Our author quotes a passage from Haydn's great sonata in E flat, and calls attention to three "violations of the strict rules of harmony" in it. Mr. Prout is generally fair, but he will perhaps excuse us for saying that we think him here rather hard on Haydn; he notices a leading note not rising to the tonic, but does not say that that leading note is doubled, and that in the highest part it does rise according to rule. The concluding chapter on the application of counterpoint to practical composition is novel and attractive.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

MUSIC NOTES.

THE twenty-third triennial Norwich Festival will be held in St. Andrew's Hall, Norwich, on October 14, 15, 16, and 17. The novelties will be a new cantata, "L'Allegro ed il Penseroso," by Dr. C. H. H. Parry, and Prelude and Entr'Acts to "The Bride of Lammermoor," by Dr. Mackenzie. At the Thursday miscellaneous concert Mr. Hamish MacCunn will conduct his orchestral ballad "The Ship o' the Fiend," and Mr. E. German his "Richard III." overture. The principal vocalists engaged are Mme. Nordica, Miss Macintyre, Miss Damian, Messrs. Lloyd and Henschel. Mr. A. Randegger will be the conductor.

THE death of the octogenarian Bauernfeld brings to mind the discussion respecting a supposed lost symphony of Schubert's, which was caused by a letter of Sir G. Grove's to the Athenaeum in 1881. Bauernfeld, well known as a writer of comedies, was a friend of Schubert's, and in the year after the composer's death wrote an article on him in the Wiener Zeitschrift für Kunst, Literatur, Theater und Mode. In this he speaks of Schubert's "special predilection" for a symphony written at Gastein, and expresses the hope that the Musik Verein will perform "one of the later symphonies, possibly the Gastein one." Sir G. Grove still believes that a symphony is missing; and, although some critics are of a contrary opinion, certainly all musicians must hope that the supposition may prove a true one.

EDWARD STANFORD'S LIST.

A NEW BOOK FOR THE HOLIDAYS.
Just ready, at the Libraries and Booksellers.
CAMPING VOYAGES ON GERMAN RIVERS. By ARTHUR A. MACDONELL, M.A., Corpus Christi College, Oxford. Crown 8vo, cloth, with Frontispiece and 20 Maps, 10s. 6d.
The Rivers described are: The Werra, Weser, Neckar, Rhine, Moselle, Main, Moldau, Elbe, and Danube, and practical details of Outfit, Obstructions, Distances, &c., are given.
"The book will not only be useful to those who may be inclined to follow the example of the author and his friends, but will be found decidedly entertaining to those who want something fresh and novel for the summer holiday. As a guide to the rivers dealt with, to their scenery, their obstructions, their difficulties of all kinds, there is nothing so good in existence."—Times, Aug. 6th, 1890.

Now ready, FOURTH EDITION, Revised.
A PHYSICAL, HISTORICAL, and DESCRIPTIVE GEOGRAPHY. By KEITH JOHNSTON, F.R.G.S. Revised and Edited by E. G. RAVENSTEIN, F.R.G.S. Large post 8vo, with numerous Maps and Illustrations, 12s.
"Mr. Keith Johnston's text-book of geography is a work of much thought, wide research, and no inconsiderable literary skill. It contains a vast amount of information on the physical features of the countries of the world, their climate and productions, commerce and industry, political institutions, administrative divisions, and leading towns. A set of maps, coloured so as to distinguish forest regions, agricultural lands, steppes, and deserts, forms a welcome addition to this judiciously planned and carefully written text-book."—Athenaeum.

Just published, fcap. 8vo, cloth, 2s.; postage 1d.
WEATHER FORECASTING for the BRITISH ISLANDS by means of a Barometer, the Direction and Force of Wind, and Cirrus Clouds. By Capt. HENRY TOYNBEE, F.R.A.S., F.R.G.S., F.R.Met.S., late Marine Superintendent, Meteorological Office. With Frontispiece and 8 Page Diagrams.

Just ready, THIRD EDITION, Revised, 1s.
PEPPING FOREST. By Edward North Buxton, Verderer.
"Mr. Buxton goes about his work in a thoroughly practical way. His book is plentifully furnished with accurate maps, and about thirty pages are occupied with simple and clear directions as to the several walks which may be taken through the Forest. It may be safely said that any one who carefully follows Mr. Buxton's directions will obtain a perfectly new conception of the Forest and its peculiar beauties. The book is illustrated by some charming drawings of forest scenes, and by numerous delicately executed woodcuts of birds and flowers."—Times.

LONDON: EDWARD STANFORD,
26 AND 27, COCKSPUR STREET, CHANCERY CROSS, S.W.

THE UNIVERSAL REVIEW.
AUGUST 15th. PRICE 2s. 6d.
CONTENTS.
I. EIGHT HOURS A DAY by LAW. CHARLES BRADLAUGH, M.P.
II. THE LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL. A. BAUMANN, M.P.
III. THE SINGERS OF THE NINETEENTH CENTURY: G. BARLOW. (Fully Illustrated.) Author of "The Trated." A Poem. . . . .
IV. AN EPISODE IN THE LIFE OF FERDINAND LASSALLE. Illustrated. . . . . M. WALTERS.
V. JOHNSON'S BOSWELL. (Illustrated.) . . . . G. S. LAYARD.
VI. PECULIARITIES OF AMERICAN LIFE. (Illustrated.) . . . . DR. AUBREY.
VII. THE PLAINS OF PATAGONIA. . . . . W. H. HUDSON.
VIII. THE WAGES OF SIN. (Fully Illustrated.) . . . . LUCAS MALET.
IX. THE WORLD IN AUGUST. . . . . THE EDITOR.
FULL-PAGE ILLUSTRATIONS.
The Singers of the Nineteenth Century. Four Cuts.
Peculiarities of American Life. Eleven Cuts. LAURENCE HOUSMAN.
Portrait of Dr. Johnson (from an Original Sketch, taken in 1784, by James Roberts).
The Wages of Sin. Four Cuts. A. SACHERFEL-CORE.
Initials, Tail-pieces, &c.
London: SWAN SONNENSCHEIN & CO.

TO STOUT PEOPLE.
Sunday Times says: "Mr. Russell's aim is to eradicate, to cure the disease, and that his treatment is not only safe, but all doubt. The medicine he prescribes does not lower, but builds up and tones the system." Book (128 pages), with Recipe and Notes how to pleasantly and rapidly cure obesity (average reduction in first week is 5 lb.), post-free, Eight Stamps.
F. C. RUSSELL, Woburn House,
Store Street, Bedford Square, London, W.C.

PHENIX FIRE OFFICE,
19, LOMBARD STREET, E.C., and 57, CHANCERY CROSS, S.W.
Established 1782.
Moderate Rates. Absolute Security.
Liberal Loss Settlements.
Prompt Payment of Claims.
Joint Secretaries—W. C. MACDONALD and F. D. MACDONALD.
LOSSES PAID OVER £17,000,000.

FURNISH your HOUSES or APARTMENTS THROUGHOUT
ON
MOEDER'S HIRE SYSTEM.
The original, best, and most liberal. Suits all.
FOUNDED A.D. 1868.
Furnish direct from the Manufacturer, from £10 to £10,000.
Cash prices. No extra charge for time given.
Catalogues, Estimates, Press Opinions, Testimonials Post Free.
F. MOEDER,
248, 249, 250, Tottenham Court Road, W. Also for HIRE ONLY.

NATIONAL

FOR MUTUAL

PROVIDENT

LIFE ASSURANCE.

48, GRACECHURCH STREET, LONDON.

See Prospectus, page 17, for particulars of Endowment Assurance Policies combining Life Assurance at Minimum Cost with Provision for Old Age.

INVESTED FUNDS,
£4,400,000.

INSTITUTION.

ESTBD. 1835.

THEATRES.

ADELPHI THEATRE.
Sole Proprietors and Managers, A. & S. GATTI.

Every Evening, at 8, THE ENGLISH ROSE.
Messrs. Leonard Boyne, Beveridge, Shine, Abingdon, Thalberg, Rignold, Dalton, Bassett Roe, East, &c.; Mesdames Olga Brandon, K. James, C. Jeck, E. Dane, and Mary Rorke.
Preceded, at 7.15, by THE LITTLE SENTINEL.

AVENUE THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 9, DR. BILL.
Messrs. George Alexander, Benjamin Webster, G. Capel, H. Grattan, and Albert Chevalier; Mesdames Elizabeth Robins, Carlotta Leclercq, Leston, Marie Linden, Laura Graves, Edith Kenward, Lillie Young, and Fanny Brough.
Preceded, at 8.30, by MISS CINDERELLA.

GARRICK THEATRE.
Lessee and Manager, Mr. JOHN HARE.

This Evening, at 8.50, A PAIR OF SPECTACLES.
Preceded, at 8, by DREAM FACES.

SAVOY THEATRE.
Proprietor and Manager, R. D'O'VLY CARTE.

Every Evening, at 8.30, the entirely original Comic Opera, by W. S. Gilbert and Arthur Sullivan, in two acts, entitled THE GONDOLIERS.

STRAND THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 8.40, the funniest farcical Comedy ever written, entitled OUR FLAT.
Wednesday and Saturday, at 2.30.
Preceded, at 8, by BOYS WILL BE BOYS.

TERRY'S THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 9, THE JUDGE.
Messrs. W. S. Penley, Wm. Herbert, F. H. Fenton, M. Kinghorn, G. Belmore, and W. Lestock; Mesdames E. Thorne, E. Chester, H. Leyton, and C. Grahame.
At 8.15, NEARLY SEVERED.

TOOLE'S THEATRE.
Manageress, Miss VIOLET MELNOTTE.

Every Evening, at 9, a new Military Farce, in three acts, by J. H. Darnley, entitled THE SOLICITOR.
Preceded by THE BAILIFF.

REDNESS, ROUGHNESS, AND CHAPPING PREVENTED.
FAIR, WHITE HANDS AND HEALTHFUL SKIN AND COMPLEXION SECURED.

PEARS' SOAP.

This world-renowned Toilet Soap has obtained 15 International Awards as a Complexion Soap. It is specially suitable for Ladies, Children, or delicate and sensitive skins generally. Its regular use cannot fail to benefit the worst complexion.

Recommended by Mrs. LANGTRY and Madame ADELINA PATTI.

FRY'S

Lancet—"Pure and very soluble."
Medical Times—"Eminently suitable for Invalids."

PURE CONCENTRATED

Sir C. A. Cameron—"I have never tasted Cocoa that I like so well."
President Royal College of Surgeons, Ireland.

COCOA

Paris Exhibition, 1889: GOLD MEDAL awarded to J. S. FRY & SONS

MACMILLAN & CO.'S LIST.*THE PRINCIPLES of ECONOMICS.

By ALFRED MARSHALL, M.A.,
Professor of Political Economy in the University of Cambridge,
Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge, sometime
Fellow of Balliol College, Oxford.

2 vols., 8vo. Vol. I., price 12s. 6d. net.

AN INTRODUCTION to the HISTORY of the SCIENCE of POLITICS. By Sir FREDERICK POLLOCK, Bart., Barrister-at-Law, M.A., LL.D. Edin., Corpus Christi Professor of Jurisprudence in the University of Oxford; late Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge;

Author of "Essays in Jurisprudence and Ethics," "The Land Laws," &c. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

THE CONFLICTS of CAPITAL and

LABOUR. Historically and Economically Considered. Being a History and Review of the Trade Unions of Great Britain, showing their Origin, Progress, Constitution, and Objects in their varied Political, Social, Economical, and Industrial Aspects. By GEORGE HOWELL, M.P., Author of "The Handy-Book of the Labour Laws," &c. Second and Revised Edition, brought up to date. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

THE OXFORD MOVEMENT.*WILLIAM GEORGE WARD and the OXFORD MOVEMENT. By WILFRID WARD.

With Portrait. New Edition with Additions. 8vo, 14s.

This new issue contains considerable additions to the last chapter, on the relations of the Oxford Movement to modern religious thought. An alphabetical index is also added.
The Church Times says:—"There is no distinct history of the Tractarian Movement, but 'William George Ward and the Oxford Movement' gives the best picture of the chief events in its course."

ENGLISH LYRICS. By Alfred Austin.

Edited by WILLIAM WATSON, Author of "Wordsworth's Grave, and other Poems." Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

The World says: "The essentially English character of most of Mr. Alfred Austin's poetry has more than once been pointed out in these columns.....The warmth and depth of his patriotic feeling, his appreciations of the beauties of his own land, and of the characteristics of his countrymen are to be found charmingly expressed in every page of his 'English Lyrics.'"

SPORTING SKETCHES. By Diane

CHASSERESSE. With Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

The Scotsman says: "It is one of the brightest books in sport that we have seen for some time.....The chapters are delightfully written. There is not one of them that is not bright and readable."

MR. MONTAGU WILLIAMS'S REMINISCENCES.

LEAVES of a LIFE. Being the Reminiscences of Montagu Williams, Q.C. Eleventh Thousand. Popular Edition. Crown 8vo, paper covers, 2s. 6d.; cloth, with Portrait, 3s. 6d.

NEW NOVELS.*THE TRAGIC MUSE. By Henry

JAMES, Author of "The Europeans," "Daisy Miller," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo, 31s. 6d.

PLAIN TALES from the HILLS. By

RUDYARD KIPLING. 1 vol. 3rd Edition. Cr. 8vo, 6s.

A SOUTH SEA LOVER: a Romance.

By ALFRED ST. JOHNSTON, Author of "Camping among Cannibals." 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

MACMILLAN'S 3s. 6d. NOVELS.—*NEW VOLUMES.

THE SQUATTER'S DREAM. By Rolf BOLDREWOOD.

WHEAT and TARES. By Sir Henry CUNNINGHAM, K.C.I.E.

LOUISIANA; and THAT LASS o' LOWRIE'S. By FRANCES HODGSON BURNETT.

A YORK and a LANCASTER ROSE. By ANNIE KEARY.

SHORT STUDIES of SHAKESPEARE'S PLOTS. By CYRIL RANSOME, M.A.,

Professor of Modern Literature and History in the Yorkshire College of the Victoria University. Cr. 8vo, 8s. 6d.

The Plays dealt with are: Hamlet—Julius Caesar—Macbeth—King Lear—Richard II.—Othello—Coriolanus—The Tempest.

THE THEORY of LIGHT. By

THOMAS PRESTON, M.A., Trinity College, Dublin; Lecturer in Mathematics and Mathematical Physics, University College, Dublin. 8vo, 12s. 6d.

GEOMETRICAL CONICS.—Part I,

THE PARABOLA. By the Rev. J. J. MILNE, M.A., Private Tutor, late Scholar of St. John's College, Cambridge; Author of "Weekly Problem Papers," &c.; and R. F. DAVIS, M.A., late Scholar of Queen's College, Cambridge. Crown 8vo, 2s.

MACMILLAN & CO., LONDON, W.C.

CARDINAL NEWMAN.*CHARACTERISTICS from the WRITINGS of JOHN HENRY NEWMAN.

BEING SELECTIONS, PERSONAL, HISTORICAL, PHILOSOPHICAL and RELIGIOUS, from his VARIOUS WORKS.

Arranged by W. S. LILLY.

WITH THE AUTHOR'S PERSONAL APPROVAL.

Sixth Edition, with Portrait, crown 8vo, 6s.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

By C. KEGAN PAUL.

INCLUDING ONE of JOHN HENRY NEWMAN.

Second Edition, crown 8vo, 7s. 6d., on hand-made paper, and bound in buckram.

* * A Portrait of Cardinal Newman may be had ready mounted for framing, price 2s. 6d.

LONDON: KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRÜBNER, & CO., LIMITED.

BY SUBSCRIPTION.*A NEW SERIES

OF

ENGLISH TRANSLATIONS of the MORE IMPORTANT WRITINGS

OF

THE NICENE AND POST-NICENE FATHERS.

UNDER THE EDITORIAL SUPERVISION OF

HENRY WACE, D.D., AND

PHILIP SCHAFF, LL.D.,

PRINCIPAL OF KING'S COLLEGE, LONDON.

UNION THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, NEW YORK.

VOL. I.—EUSEBIUS. NEARLY READY FOR DELIVERY.

Published in conjunction with the Christian Literature Company, New York.

Prospectus and Specimen free on application to PARKER & CO., Booksellers, Broad Street, Oxford.

SPENCER BLACKETT'S NEW BOOKS.*FLORENCE WARDEN'S STRIKING STORY.

Fifth Edition, crown 8vo, stiff cover, price 1s.

"NURSE REVEL'S MISTAKE."

By FLORENCE WARDEN, Author of "The House on the Marsh," &c., &c.

POPULAR EDITION OF L. B. WALFORD'S NOVELS.

Now ready, cloth extra, 2s. 6d. each, with Frontispiece engraved in Paris from Drawings by LAMETT J. POTT.

THE HISTORY OF A WEEK.

By L. B. WALFORD.

Uniform with "Pauline," "Troublesome Daughters," "Baby's Grandmother," and "Mr. Smith."

NEW STORY BY L. B. WALFORD.

Now ready, at all Booksellers and Bookstalls, paper cover, 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d.

THE HAVOC OF A SMILE.

By L. B. WALFORD, Author of "Mr. Smith," "Baby's Grandmother," "Cousins," &c.

NEW NOVEL BY MRS. OLIPHANT.

At all Booksellers and Libraries, cloth, 2s. 6d.

"THE MYSTERY OF MRS. BLENCARROW."

By MRS. OLIPHANT, Author of "Harry Jocelyn," "Son of his Father," "Sir Tom," &c.

"The story has the characteristic marks of its author's great talent."—Scotsman.

LONDON: SPENCER BLACKETT & CO., 35, ST. BRIDE STREET, E.C.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 955.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, AUGUST 23, 1890.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper]

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

	PAGE
MEMOIRS OF DUKE ERNEST OF SAXE-COBURG, by Judge O'CONNOR MORRIS	143
DANTE'S "DE VULGARI ELOQUENTIA," by the Rev. Dr. E. MOORE	144
OLIVER'S ACROSS THE BORDER, by STEPHEN WHEELER	145
CARPENTER'S THE FIRST THREE GOSPELS, by the Rev. R. B. DRUMMOND	146
MCCARTHY'S HISTORY OF THE FRENCH REVOLUTION, by W. MARKHEIM	147
NEW NOVELS, by G. SAINTSBURY	147
CURRENT LITERATURE	149
SOME BOOKS FOR THE COUNTRY	149
NOTES AND NEWS	150
THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES	151
ORIGINAL VERSE: "A CHILD'S FANCY," by Miss MATHILDE BLIND	151
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	151
LETTERS, IN PART UNPUBLISHED, OF SAMUEL PEPYS, II., by C. E. DOBLE	152
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS	152
CORRESPONDENCE:—
Chaucer's Priores's Nun-Chaplain, by Dr. F. J. FURNIVALL;
Bellsheim's "History of the Catholic Church in Ireland," by the Rev. Dr. B. MACCARTHY; The MSS. of the New Testament, by H. C. HOSKIER; "The Memorials of St. Edmundsbury," by T. ARNOLD; The Ogam Stones in the Isle of Man, by WHITLEY STOKES; Taylor the Platonist, by W. E. A. AXON	152
SOME AMERICAN GEOLOGICAL BOOKS	154
CORRESPONDENCE:—
The Gods Zur and Ben-Hadad, by Prof. SAYCE	155
SCIENCE NOTES	156
PHILOLOGY NOTES	156
A SELECTION FROM TURNER'S LIBER STUDIUM, by J. M. GRAY	156
CORRESPONDENCE:—
The Beni Hassan Cartouches, by the Rev. CHAUNCEY MURCH; The Dahr-el-Bahari Mummies, by M. L. HERBERT MCCLURE	157
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	158
MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS	158

LAUSANNE.—Chez, M. LE PASTEUR MEYSTER, GOOD PENSION FOR YOUNG GENTLEMEN. Home life. Every facility for studies. Splendid view. Terms moderate.

FOR SALE, a fine old PAINTING (copy) of HOGARTH'S MIDNIGHT MODERN CONVERSATION. 2 ft. 1 in. by 2 ft. 6 in.—Apply at 38, Upton Road, Church Road, Kingsland, N. Also a fine old Painting on Copper-Plate, subject, TOWER OF BABEL. Stamped Pieter Stas, Antwerp, 2 ft. 2 in. by 1 ft. 7 in., 1809.

TO PUBLISHERS.—The Advertiser is OPEN to an ENGAGEMENT as Manager or other responsible position. Thoroughly conversant with all the details of Paper, Printing, Binding, Advertising, &c. First-class references.—Address, C. S., 100, Mercer's Road, Tufnell Park, N.

STAMMERERS should read a book by a gentleman who cured himself after suffering nearly forty years. Price 13 stamps.—R. BEASLEY, Brampton Park, near Huntingdon.

CATALOGUES.
FOREIGN BOOKS AND PERIODICALS
promptly supplied on moderate terms.
CATALOGUES on application.
DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

MESSRS. DRUMMOND & CO.,
14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C., are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HAUPTSTAENGL, of Munich, the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY. There is a steadily increasing demand for reproductions by this justly celebrated process for large plates and editions de luxe. For ordinary Book Illustrations, Catalogues, Advertisements, &c., Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. have the latest and most improved processes. Specimens on view. Prices on application.

BOOK ILLUSTRATION
AND
PICTURE REPRODUCTION.

The PHOTOGRAPHY Prints produced by Messrs. ANNAN & SWAN are permanent, and combine the accuracy of Photographs with the rich and brilliant qualities of Mezzotint Engravings.
ANNAN & SWAN,
7, Devonshire Road, South Lambeth, London, S.W.

BRITISH MUSEUM.
The GALLERIES will be CLOSED on the EVENINGS of MONDAY, 25th AUGUST, to THURSDAY, 4th SEPTEMBER, inclusive.
E. MAUND THOMPSON, Principal Librarian.
British Museum, 10th August, 1890.

SCHOOLS COLLEGES &c. OWENS COLLEGE, VICTORIA UNIVERSITY, MANCHESTER.

SESSION 1890-91.

PRINCIPAL—A. W. WARD, Litt.D., LL.D.

DEPARTMENT OF ARTS, SCIENCE, AND LAW.

Greek	Hulme Prof. JOHN STRACHAN, M.A.
Greek Test. Crit.	Greenwood Lecturer, Prof. A. S. WILKINS, M.A., LL.D., LL.D.
Latin	Prof. J. STRACHAN
Comp. Philology	Lecturer, Rev. E. L. HICKS, M.A.
Classical Archaeology	Smith Prof. T. N. TOLLER, M.A.
English Language	Lecturer, OLIVER ELTON, M.A.
Hebrew and Arabic	Lecturer, Rev. L. M. SIMMONS, B.A.
French Language and Literature	Lecturer, VICTOR KASTNER, B.-es-L.
German Language and Literature	Lecturer, HERMAN HAGER, Ph.D.
History	Prof. T. F. TOUT, M.A.
Logic and Mental and Moral Philosophy	Shuttleworth Prof. A. W. WARD, Litt.D., LL.D.
Political Economy	Prof. R. ADAMSON, M.A., LL.D.
Law	Faulkner Prof. and Cobden Lecturer, J. E. C. MUNRO.
Mathematics (Pure and Applied)	Prof. J. E. CRAWFORD MUNRO, B.A., LL.M., LL.D.
Physics	Reader in Com. Law, T. F. BYRNE, B.A.
Civil and Mechan. Engineering, Geomet. & Mechan. Drawing	Lecturer in Jurisprudence and Roman Law, J. S. SEATON, M.A., B.C.L.
Chemistry & Metallurgy	Beyer Professor HORACE LAMB, M.A., F.R.S.
Organic Chemistry	Lankworthy Prof. ARTHUR SCHUSTER, Ph.D., F.R.S.
Philosophical Chemistry	Prof. THOS. H. CORE, M.A.
Mineralogy	Beyer Prof. OSBORNE REYNOLDS, M.A., LL.D., F.R.S.
Zoology	Prof. HAROLD B. DIXON, M.A., F.R.S.
Botany	Prof. C. SCHORLEMMER, LL.D., F.R.S.
Geology & Palaeontology	Lecturer in Dyeing, Printing, &c., ERNEST BENTZ.
Physiography	Lecturer, C. A. BURGHARDT, Ph.D.
Physiology & Histology	Beyer Prof. A. M. MARSHALL, M.D., M.A., F.R.S.
Freehand Drawing	Prof. W. C. WILLIAMSON, LL.D., F.R.S.
Harmony and Mus. Composition	Prof. W. BOYD DAWKINS, M.A., F.R.S., F.G.S.
	Brackenbury Prof. WM. STIRLING, M.D., Lecturer.
	Lecturer, HENRY HILES, Mus. Doc.

With Assistant Lecturers in all the principal subjects.

The SESSION will be OPENED with an INTRODUCTORY ADDRESS by the PRINCIPAL on TUESDAY, OCTOBER 7th, at 11.30 a.m. There are two Halls of Residence associated with the College.

Prospectuses of the several Departments:—
I. DAY CLASSES.
II. DEPARTMENT OF MEDICINE.
III. DENTAL DEPARTMENT.
IV. PHARMACEUTICAL DEPARTMENT.
V. DEPARTMENT FOR WOMEN.
VI. EVENING CLASSES.
VII. SCHOLARSHIPS AND EXHIBITIONS.

Will be forwarded on application to the REGISTRAR.
HENRY W. HOLDEN, M.A., Registrar.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE OF SOUTH WALES AND MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

DEPARTMENT OF ENGINEERING.

The COUNCIL is prepared to APPOINT an ASSISTANT to the PROFESSOR OF ENGINEERING. The gentleman appointed will be a practical Mechanical Engineer who has had University or Technical School education. The stipend will be £120 a year, with a share of Evening Fees. Applications, together with testimonials and references, should be forwarded before SEPTEMBER 9th next to

Cardiff, August 6th, 1890.
IVOR JAMES, Registrar.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE OF SOUTH WALES AND MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

DEPARTMENT OF PHYSICS.

The COUNCIL is prepared to APPOINT an ASSISTANT PROFESSOR OF PHYSICS. The stipend will be £200 a year with a share of Evening Fees. The gentleman appointed will be expected to enter upon his work at the beginning of October next. Applications, together with testimonials and references, should be forwarded before SEPTEMBER 9th to

Cardiff, August 6th, 1890.
IVOR JAMES, Registrar.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

The Council of the University College of South Wales and Monmouthshire, as the Local Committee of the Cardiff Day Training College, invite APPLICATIONS for the post of MASTER of METHOD. The stipend will not be less than £200 per annum. A statement of duties can be obtained on application to the REGISTRAR. Applications, which should be accompanied by testimonials and references, must be sent in on or before SEPTEMBER 9th, 1890.

Cardiff, August 6th, 1890.
IVOR JAMES, Registrar.

TUDOR HALL LADIES' COLLEGE, FOREST HILL, S.E., LONDON.

Principals—Rev. Dr. and Mrs. TODD.

Head Mistress—Miss M. TODD (Girton), Cambridge.
Professors—Seeley, King's Coll.; Dr. Duleken, Rudolph Lowman, Louis Diehl, Signor Garcia, Larpent, Ferrero Churton Collins, &c.
Full list and references on application.
Large Gymnasium, Lawn-Tennis Courts, Swimming, and Riding.

THE MASON COLLEGE, BIRMINGHAM.

SESSION 1890-91.

FACULTIES OF ARTS AND SCIENCE.

The NEXT SESSION commences on TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 30, 1890. A SYLLABUS, containing full information as to the various Courses of Instruction, Lecture Days and Hours, Fees, Scholarships, &c., is published by Messrs. COXSON, New Street, Birmingham, price 6d.; by post, 8d.

Further particulars may be obtained on application to the SECRETARY, at the College.

R. S. HEATH, Principal.
Geo. H. MORLEY, Secretary.

QUEEN'S SERVICE ACADEMY, 3 and 4, ELY PLACE, DUBLIN.—The oldest, and among the most successful in the United Kingdom; over 2,000 have passed.

I. All Army Examinations.
II. Civil Service of India, Universities, &c.
III. R. I. Constabulary Cadetships.

There is not a Corps in the Services or a Department under Government that does not owe some of its Officers to the QUEEN'S SERVICE ACADEMY, DUBLIN. No attempt at cramming; unsurpassed staff of Specialists under personal direction of W. J. CHETWODE CRAWLEY, LL.D., D.C.L., F.R.G.S., F.G.S., F.R.Hist.Soc., &c.

THE COLONIAL COLLEGE and TRAINING FARMS (Limited), HOLLESLEY BAY, SUFFOLK.

For the Training of Youths for Colonial Life.
The College owns and farms a fine Seaside Estate of 1,300 acres. Prospectus on application to the RESIDENT DIRECTOR.

THE UNIVERSITY of ST. ANDREWS

GRANTS THE

DIPLOMA and TITLE of LL.A. to WOMEN.

The Subjects of Examination may be selected from any seven out of twenty-nine different subjects, the standard being the same as that for the M.A. Degree. The candidates are St. Andrews, Aberdeen, Bedford, Belfast, Birmingham, Bristol, Cardiff, Cheltenham, Cork, Dublin, Dumfries, Edinburgh, Inverness, Leeds, Leicester, Liverpool, London, Loughborough, Manchester, Newcastle-on-Tyne, and Paisley.

For Prospectus, &c., apply to the SECRETARY, LL.A., Scheme, the University, St. Andrews, N.B.

PIXHOLME, DORKING.

PREPARATORY SCHOOL FOR BOYS.

The AUTUMN TERM will begin on SEPTEMBER 27th. Inclusive Fees, 80 or 100 Guineas a year, according to age. There is a fitted Gymnasium in the house. Principal, Miss BRAHAM, assisted by a resident Oxford Graduate and other teachers. Reference permitted to Mrs. Bryant, D.Sc., North London Collegiate School for Girls, N.W.

HARROW SCHOOL.

The APPOINTMENT of RESIDENT DRAWING MASTER is VACANT. For particulars apply, stating qualifications, to the Bursar of Harrow School, at Hazelthwaite, Windermerre. A Public School or University man preferred. The appointment is worth about £300 per annum, and may be considerably increased in value.

INEXPENSIVE Sound EDUCATION at
SCHORNE COLLEGE, WINSTON.—Over 40 Army and Navy Boys (Army Sons, Medical, &c.) have been educated in either the Classical or Modern side, and the School has a good record. 30 guineas a year; reduced to brothers and orphans. Entrance fee, 5 guineas.—Address Rev. Dr. JAMES.

ST. PAUL'S SCHOOL.—An EXAMINATION for filling up about FIFTEEN VACANCIES on the Foundation will be held on the 10th SEPTEMBER NEXT.—For information apply to the BURSAR, St. Paul's School, West Kensington.

NOW READY.

NEW NOVEL by Mrs. BENNETT-EDWARDS
Crown 8vo, 350 pp., 2s. 6d.

SAINT MONICA: A Wife's Love Story.

By MRS. BENNETT-EDWARDS.

"Saint Monica" is a society novel, remarkable alike for originality and power. It may easily be understood that the excess of devotion and self-abandonment exemplified in Veronica and George Westbury require a great deal of ingenious writing up. Mrs. Bennett-Edwards has proved herself equal to the task, and must be regarded as a clever, as well as daring, manipulator, of subjects decidedly risky in treatment.—Academy.

"This is one of the many volumes to which the controversy about marriage has given rise. The volume is written with a considerable amount of power and convincingness."—Bristol Mercury.

"The heroine is admitted to be a supporter of some of the most advanced and startling theories of the day. His attitude towards this passionate and headstrong woman is one of the most curious features of a curious book."—Morning Post.

"Plenty of ability and good writing in this book."—Liverpool Mercury.

Bristol: J. W. ARROWSMITH.

London: SHIPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT, & CO., Limited.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

THE HISTORY of ANTIQUITY.

From the German of Professor MAX DÜNKER. By EVELYN ABBOTT, M.A., LL.D., of Balliol College, Oxford. In 6 vols., demy 8vo. Each Volume can be obtained separately, 21s.

PROFESSOR MOMMSEN'S HISTORY

of ROME to the TIME of AUGUSTUS. Translated by Dr. DICKSON. The Popular Edition, in 4 vols., crown 8vo, 46s. 6d.

* Also sold separately as follows:—Vols. I. and II., 21s.; Vol. III., 10s. 6d.; Vol. IV., 15s.

THE ROMAN PROVINCES. Being

the History of Rome from Cæsar to Diocletian. By Professor MOMMSEN. Translated by Rev. P. W. DICKSON. 2 vols., 8vo, with Maps, 36s.

THE HISTORY of the GREAT

FRENCH REVOLUTION. From the French of M. THIERS. By FREDERICK SHOBERL. With 41 Fine Engravings, and Portraits of the most Celebrated Personages referred to in the work, engraved on Steel by William Greatbach. In 5 vols., demy 8vo, 36s.

NAPOLEON at ST. HELENA. By

BARRY E. O'MEARA, Body-Surgeon to the Emperor. A New Edition, with Introduction, Notes, and other Additions, and with several Coloured Plates, Portraits, and Woodcuts. In 2 vols., demy 8vo, 30s.

THE HISTORY of the RISE and

PROGRESS of the ENGLISH CONSTITUTION. By Sir EDWARD CREASY, late Chief Justice of Ceylon. A Popular Account of the Primary Principles and Formation and Development of the English Constitution, avoiding all Party Politics. Fourteenth Edition. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE NAVAL HISTORY of GREAT

BRITAIN. By WILLIAM JAMES. In 6 vols., crown 8vo, with numerous Portraits on Steel, 42s.

THE FIFTEEN DECISIVE BATTLES

of the WORLD. By Professor CREASY. Library Edition, in demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. Popular Edition, in crown 8vo, 6s.

THE LIFE of LORD PALMERSTON.

By the Hon. EVELYN ASHLEY, M.P. In 2 vols., crown 8vo, with Frontispiece to each Volume, 12s.

THE LIFE of OLIVER CROMWELL.

From the French of M. GUIZOT. By ANDREW SCOBLE. Crown 8vo, with 1 Portraits, 6s.

THE LIFE of MARY, QUEEN of SCOTS. From the French of M. MIGNET. By ANDREW SCOBLE. With 2 Portraits, 6s.

THE LIVES of STATESMEN: Burke

and Chatham. By JOHN TIMBS, F.S.A. Crown 8vo, with Portraits, 6s.

THE LIVES of WITS and HUMOUR-

ISTS. By JOHN TIMBS, F.S.A. In 2 vols., crown 8vo, with Portraits, 12s.

THE LIVES of PAINTERS. By

JOHN TIMBS, F.S.A. Crown 8vo, with Portraits, 6s.

MR. FRITH'S REMINISCENCES.

A New and Cheaper Edition. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

THE GREAT TONE POETS: being

Brief Memoirs of the Greater Musical Composers. By FREDERICK CROWEST. Sixth Edition. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street,
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

F. V. WHITE & CO.'S RECENT PUBLICATIONS.

MRS. ALEXANDER FRASER'S NOVEL.

THE NEW DUCHESS. 3 vols.

By the Author of "Daughters of Belgravia," "Purple and Fine Linen," "A Leader of Society," &c. Immediately.

FERGUS HUME'S NOVEL.

THE MAN WITH A SECRET.

By the Author of "The Mystery of a Hansom Cab," "The Piccadilly Puzzle," "Miss Mephistopheles," &c. 3 vols.

The World's opinion—"...Is just what might have been expected from the author of 'The Mystery of a Hansom Cab.'"
The Morning Post's opinion—"An acquaintance with its contents will prove it to be worthy of any favourable anticipation it may have raised...Side by side with much that is powerful, and many bright gleams of humour, 'The Man with a Secret' has enough of mystery to satisfy the most exacting on this head."

III.

By ANNIE THOMAS (Mrs. PENDER CUDLIP).

THE LOVE OF A LADY.

By the Author of "Allerton Towers," "Eyre of Blendon," &c. 3 vols.

IV.

By B. L. FARJEON.

THE MYSTERY OF M. FELIX.

By the Author of "Great Porter Square," "Toilers of Babylon," &c. In 3 vols.

V.

By Mrs. FRANK PENNY.

CASTE AND CREED.

2 vols., 21s.

"We are introduced to not a few striking scenes, incidents, and characters, which will doubtless be new to the majority of readers."
"We have read this novel with unusual interest and can commend it to our readers."—Public Opinion.
"...It is a distinctly interesting and original story....A clever and enjoyable bit of work."—Court Circular.

"Mrs. Frank Penny's clever novel is one of the best of its kind.... She makes her points so skillfully, with the aid of so many striking incidents and interesting chapters, and so excellent an absence of preacher-preacher or didactic reflections, that the story is highly interesting, even to those to whom the particular motif of the work makes no strong appeal....The character drawing, both of the Indian and English personages, at once subtle and strong. The book is crowded with incident and excellently written, and the author may fairly be congratulated upon a highly interesting piece of work."—Court Journal.

VI.

By ANDRÉ RAFFALOVICH.

A WILLING EXILE.

By the Author of "It is Thyself." 2 vols., 12s.

"The story has a matter-of-fact style that adds much to its interest. It will doubtless find many readers."—Scotsman.
"The author describes the smart and the shady elements of society with the pen of a man who knows what he is writing about, and who has our ways and goings on at his fingers' ends."—Hooker.

VII.

By B. M. CROKER.

TWO MASTERS.

By the Author of "Proper Pride," "Pretty Miss Neville," &c. 3 vols. Shortly.

AT ALL BOOKSELLERS AND BOOKSTALLS.

BY FERGUS HUME.

The GENTLEMAN WHO VANISHED.

In paper covers, 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d.

BY "RITA."

THE DOCTOR'S SECRET.

In paper covers, 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d. (Second Edition.)

BY FLORENCE WARDEN.

CITY and SUBURBAN. In paper covers, 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d.

BY F. C. PHILIPS AND PERCY FENDALL.

A DAUGHTER'S SACRIFICE.

(Third Edition.) Cloth, 2s. 6d.

BY "RITA."

MISS KATE; or, Confessions of a

Caretaker. (Third Edition.) Cloth, 2s. 6d. Immediately.

F. V. WHITE & CO., 31, SOUTHAMPTON STREET,
STRAND, W.C.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO.'S BOOKS for SUMMER READING.

BY RUDYARD KIPLING,

In Uniform 8vo Volumes, paper covers,
ONE SHILLING EACH.

SOLDIERS THREE. (Fourth Edition.)

THE STORY OF THE GADSBYS.

(Third Edition.)

IN BLACK AND WHITE. (Now Ready.)

WEE WILLIE WINKIE. In the Press.

UNDER THE DEODARS. In the Press.

Other Volumes to follow.

THIRD EDITION NOW READY.

In Darkest Africa.

By HENRY M. STANLEY, D.C.L., LL.D., &c.,

Being the Official Publication recording the

QUEST, RESCUE, and RETREAT of EMIN, GOVERNOR of EQUATORIA.

The Illustrations, numbering over 150, have all been made from Mr. Stanley's own Notes, Sketches, and Photographs. There are three large Maps and fourteen smaller ones.

Ordinary Edition, 2 vols., demy 8vo, of over 500 pages each, in handsome cloth binding, price TWO GUINEAS.

The TIMES.—"Mr. Stanley's narrative of his adventures, privations, sufferings, trials, dangers, and discoveries during his heroic quest and rescue of Emin Pasha is as moving and enthralling a tale as ever was told by man. It is, moreover, told with so genuine a modesty of temper, so transparent a fidelity to fact, so generous and eager a desire on the part of the leader of the expedition to give their due meed of praise and recognition to each and all of his subordinates, not excepting the humblest of his African followers, that the critic's task becomes merely one of unstinted admiration of the almost unexampled greatness of the deeds accomplished, and the profound ethical interest of the narrative which describes them."

A SPLENDID HOLIDAY VOLUME.

FRIESLAND MERES, AND THROUGH THE NETHERLANDS:

The Voyage of a Family in a Norfolk Wherry.

By HENRY MONTAGU DOUGHTY,

Author of "Summer in Broadland."

New Edition with Additional Illustrations and matter.
Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 10s. 6d.

"A welcome and original little volume, and most agreeable reading."—Daily News.

"From beginning to end this book is full of interest, the places described being seldom visited by Englishmen. The illustrations are numerous and remarkably good, some are from pen and ink sketches made on the spot by three members of the party, others are from photographs. The book is also furnished with two good maps, on which the author's route is laid down."—Field.

NOTICE.—HARPER'S MAGAZINE,
September Number. The publication of this number is unavoidably postponed until the 4th or 5th of September.

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, SEARLE,
and RIVINGTON, Limited,
St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, Fleet Street, E.C.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 23, 1890.

No. 955, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

Memoirs of Ernest II., Duke of Saxe Coburg-Gotha. Vols. III. and IV. (Remington.)

THESE volumes are, we think, of great interest. The Duke of Saxe Coburg, though not so gifted as his eminent brother, the late Prince Consort, is a man of real parts and world-wide experience; and the accidents of his position have brought him in close relations with the chief actors on the stage of politics during the eventful period of the last forty years. The observations of an able thinker, who witnessed the inner life of Potsdam and Schönbrunn, of Windsor, and of the Imperial Tuileries, from 1850 to 1870—the epoch comprised in this book—and who was in contact with the leading minds which have directed the great affairs of Europe, are of enduring and sterling value. The work throws a fresh and vivid light on memorable passages in recent history. The judgments of the Duke are not always just; but his views usually deserve attention, and his reminiscences abound in instructive details on all that relates to the courts of the time.

The first notable topic of these volumes is the Exhibition of 1851. The Duke naturally enlarges on a great work due to Prince Albert and of European fame; but the Exhibition, with its visions of peace succeeded by a long era of wars, illustrates the vanity of human wishes. The rise of Louis Napoleon followed; and we see in this book with what anxious feelings courts and sovereigns beheld the second French empire. King Leopold of Belgium wished to revive the League of 1814-15; and the empire was viewed with dislike in Russia and England—within the circle at least of the Royal Family. But the German courts, terrified by the events of 1848, rather welcomed absolutism and its measures in France; and the conduct of Nicholas as regards the Eastern Question soon decided the chiefs of monarchical Europe. The Duke's sketch of the Czar at this period, Lord of Eastern Europe, is clear and lifelike:

"The Emperor Nicholas was really the last actual autocrat in Europe. . . . He stood a tangible being, with no frightful form, but rather beautiful and glorious, enticing and seductive, firm, bold, and like a kind of religious guardian spirit, before the adoring world; and this colossal phenomenon of an absolutely ruling mind proved on closer inspection a mere outward sham, a painted picture."

Common interests, and partly Napoleonic craft, brought England and France into the alliance of 1854. But Prince Albert, whose influence beside the throne was great—a thorough German at heart—distrusted the League; and Louis Napoleon regarded it chiefly as a means to break up the old coalition against France, and to change the boundaries of Europe in his own dynastic interests. This was frankly avowed in a conversation with the Duke, too long to quote, but of extreme interest, for it affords the clue to the foreign policy of the second French empire:

"I was the first sovereign to whom Napoleon had expressed himself with so much frankness and unreserve; and, after these declarations, I could not doubt that he really had much to find fault with in the map of Europe, and a good deal, if not everything, in the treaties of 1815."

These volumes abound in curious details about the Crimean war and the treaties that followed. Prince Albert honestly furthered English interests; but his main object in the war was to weaken Nicholas, who had laid an intolerable yoke on Germany; and he disliked Palmerston, and had little confidence in the ministry, or even in the House of Commons. Louis Napoleon discovered that the war was most costly and unpopular in France; and but for his pledges to England, he would have made peace with Russia when it became evident that the war would not promote his policy. The crooked conduct of Austria and the humiliation of Prussia at this juncture are well described by the Duke. The Prince of Prussia, afterwards the Emperor William, urged his brother in vain to take a bold course; and it now seems strange that the Queen of England should have written in this strain to a Prussian sovereign—"I should understand such language if it came from the Kings of Bavaria or Saxony. But I have until now regarded Prussia as one of the Great Powers."

The rashness of the descent from Varna, the absence of preparation in the allied armies, and the character of the siege of Sebastopol, are graphically set forth in this book; but justice is not done to the British soldiery. The result of the contest was to cripple Russia, to bring Sardinia into the league of the West—a remarkable instance of the genius of Cavour—to exhibit the vacillation of the great German Powers, and to increase immensely the influence of France. The policy of Louis Napoleon began now to appear. He thought ill of Austria for her conduct in the war; and he took up the question of Italian liberty, partly to shatter the arrangements of 1814-15, partly from real sympathy with the Italian cause, and partly to extend his own power in Europe. He went to war with Austria in 1859; and his victories did not blind him to the marked defects apparent in the military system of France:

"He wrote long-worded letters to the War Minister in Paris, in which he made bitter complaints, and added, only too correctly—'Ce n'est pas un reproche que je vous fais. Je ne l'adresse qu'au système général, qui fait qu'en France nous ne sommes jamais prêts pour la guerre.'"

The state of English opinion at this juncture is admirably expressed in thoughtful letters from Prince Albert to his brother, the Duke. The Queen had strong sympathies with the hopes of Italy; the Prince looked at the question as a German simply; the Tory party wished well to Austria, but did not seek to justify the Austrian policy; the Liberals were carried away by a zeal for "freedom," without reflecting on the natural result. The Peace of Villafranca closed the struggle, and showed again the discord and weakness of Germany. The Prince of Prussia had wished to support Austria, and to check the march of Napoleonic conquest; but his efforts proved altogether fruitless. His indignation is seen in these bitter words; and there can be no doubt that it was the experience of 1854-59 which led this able and sagacious man, in defiance of mawkish Liberal cant, to insist on raising Germany from a state of impotence, and on making the army of Prussia what it has since become:

"Everything has come to nought. But our turn will soon come; in a much more serious way, in fact, than if we had set out, in five or six weeks, with our 300,000 men from the Rhine; for, according to my convictions, the iron dies would have fallen for us; if the truce had not resulted in peace! I conclude with the proverb: Deferred for a time is not deferred for ever!"

It is characteristic of the German nature, intensely selfish and by no means logical, that the Duke looked askance at Italian unity. He thought it would weaken Austria and strengthen France; and he did not perceive that it led to German unity. He has not a word of praise to say of Cavour—the most skilful of modern statesmen; he sneered at Garibaldi as a Quixotic fool; and he insinuates that English gold had much to do with the result:

"It is far from my intention to enter into a description of these singular events, of which it might be said that the bravery displayed in them was wrapped up in English bank notes."

The French Emperor obtained Savoy and Nice as recompense for the support he had given to Italy. The clamour of Liberal England in this affair was absurd; France had a right to a reward for her services, and the protests of Lord Russell were not just. But England had begun to dislike the empire; the memories of Napoleonic conquests had revived; and the volunteer movement sprang up in reply to the insolent language of the French colonels. The alliance, never solid, became henceforward hollow; and Prince Albert described the policy of England towards France as one of alarm and distrust: "All that was left was the instinct of self-preservation. This is still strong, and incites to hatred against France."

Louis Napoleon, however, in 1861-62 appeared to have almost replaced Nicholas, and to be supreme in more than half the continent. His army was victorious, and was deemed invincible. He had made Paris an imperial wonder, and he had raised France to the height of material grandeur. He directed Italy, too, and some German states; and Austria, Prussia, and humbled Russia seemed unable to oppose his immense influence. Meetings of kings and emperors accomplished nothing. In Polish, Hungarian, and Danish questions he was believed to have a potent weapon against the old monarchies, which he held in reserve; and it was thought for a time that the second empire would, like the first, overshadow Europe. Two men brought this state of things to an end—the King of Prussia, who restored his army to what it had been in the days of Frederick; and Bismarck, who said that Prussian ascendancy was necessary to redress the balance of power, and to raise Germany from distracted impotence. The policy of “blood and iron” has not yet been finished; but if we look back at the Germany of this period, all Germans, at least, will agree with the Duke:

“Fate helped to place the right man at the head of affairs, a man of whom it was known that he was not to be restrained by petty considerations. . . . Every German happily owns that he regards the 9th of October, 1862, as a fortunate day in the history of Germany.”

Magenta and Solferino notwithstanding, Austria at this juncture seemed likely to hold her old supremacy. In the struggle between the great German Powers, Prussia, it was generally believed, would succumb; and Queen Victoria wrote thus in 1863:

“I must believe that Prussia’s position is getting worse and worse, and I am afraid she will have few voices in the assembly of sovereigns to speak in her interest.”

This was the view, too, of Louis Napoleon. He began to support Prussia, and to talk of German unity, partly from liberal convictions of his own, but in part, too, to oppose Austria, and principally in the supposed interests of France. The Danish war followed. The Duke’s notion about English opinion on this matter is false and absurd. We opposed Austria and Prussia because we respected treaties, and because England usually feels for the weak; and as for the notion that German unity was to be worked out through intrigues with France, the idea was by no means unfounded:

“It was raised to a kind of dogma in England that the German national movement was based upon an understanding with Louis Napoleon for the purpose of bestowing the Rhine provinces, and, at all events, Belgium, upon the French.”

Sadowa transformed the state of the continent. Austria lost for ever her old supremacy; Prussia became the dominant power in Germany, at the head of a great German League; and France found herself suddenly mastered on the Rhine. Bismarck has had the credit of this immense change; but it was due far more to the King and to Moltke, and the policy of Bismarck was hazardous in the extreme. The Duke took the side of Prussia in 1866; and he bears remarkable testimony to the tact of the King in not pushing his success too far, and in endeavouring to conciliate Francis Joseph—conduct which has had most fruitful results. He also dwells on the wisdom and firmness of the Crown Prince in shaping the fortunes of the new Germany; he gave proof of the power of a real statesman:

“I still see the Crown Prince entering hesitatingly and timidly into the King’s apartments. . . . At last the Crown Prince appeared again. He returned like one exhausted; but he was able to assure us that the King had yielded on the chief points at issue.”

Austria, too, resented the mediation of France; and that she did not join France in 1870 was largely due to the fact that in 1866 her dignity and even her power were respected: “The Austrian plenipotentiaries were almost in a less favourable disposition towards Benedetti than towards Prussia.”

The Duke scoffs at the policy of “compensation” adopted thenceforward by Louis Napoleon when he had been baffled by events which confounded Europe. Yet history will have to say whether Bismarck was wise in di regarding the susceptibilities of France; and Niel and the Emperor were wholly in the right in trying to strengthen the French army. The Duke has the German version of the origin of the war which laid France prostrate in 1870; but this will not convince the real inquirer. He witnessed the horrors and the capitulation of Sedan; this was his last glimpse of the fallen Emperor—“sunt lacrymæ rerum”: “I saw the Emperor, with the tears streaming down his cheeks, and incapable of speaking a single word.”

We have omitted many episodes and details in this work. The constitutional attitude of Queen Victoria, on every occasion, is very striking; and not less so is her deep love for her Consort. Prince Albert was certainly true to England; but his point of view in politics was always German, and we can understand why he was not popular. The personality of the Emperor William and the Crown Prince is grand; they were much greater men than is commonly supposed. But Louis Napoleon is the most notable figure; he undoubtedly was a farabler man than the censors of misfortune will now allow. He would have died the first of continental sovereigns but for accidents which no man foresaw; and the weakness of his later years was due to disease. These volumes refute the cant of modern theorists. The destinies of Europe during this period were shaped by leading men, not by “forces and principles.” It was Nicholas, Louis Napoleon, Cavour, Bismarck, King William, and the Crown Prince of Prussia who made the history of these momentous years.

WILLIAM O’CONNOR MORRIS.

Dante’s Treatise, “De Vulgari Eloquentia.”

Translated into English, with Explanatory Notes, by A. G. Ferrers Howell. (Kegan Paul & Co.)

THE De Vulgari Eloquentia (or Eloquentia) is probably the least known and in some respects the least attractive of the minor works of Dante. In the first place, it is written in Latin; and, as Lionardo Bruni remarked long ago, though in the Volgare Dante’s poetry is eccellentissimo sopra ogni altro, his Latin style scarcely reaches moderate excellence. It is, in fact, often very crabbed and difficult. In the next place, the subject of this work has not the same permanent interest and value which those of the Vita Nuova, the Convito, and the De Monarchia must always command. These have all been already translated into English more than once. Mr. Howell’s appears to be the first English translation of the De Vulg. Eloq. The comparative neglect of this work is further illustrated by the scantiness of its MSS. and editions compared with those of the other works of Dante. Mr. Howell points out in his Introduction that there are only three or four MSS. known to exist; and that the first edition of the original Latin was not published till 1577, more than 250 years after the author’s death, though an Italian translation of it appeared in 1529. Apart, however, from the side-lights which this—as well as, if not so much as, the other minor works—throws on the Divina Commedia, the fact that it contains the first listings of the infant science of philology, even though its intrinsic and scientific value may have been entirely superseded, cannot but invest it with a peculiar interest of its own.

Dante distinctly claims more than once to be the pioneer in this field of research (B. I. c. 1 and 9). He declares that there are no previous writers from whom he can borrow help or guidance. As he says in the Paradiso—

“L’acqua ch’io prendo giammai si corse.”

It is very interesting to note how he feels his way, strangely combining with observations more or less scientific in principle a large admixture of the most arbitrary a priori assumptions, such as indeed “lie about the infancy” of all branches of human inquiry. Further, we are constantly reminded of the difference not only between the knowledge but even between the logical processes of that distant age and others. We find many arguments that we discard at once, some as superfluous, others as futile, which are yet treated as serious and important by one of the greatest minds of the age. Thus, at the very outset, Dante not only feels bound to prove that speech is peculiar to man, and cannot exist either in angels on the one hand, or in the lower animals on the other; but even this is not thought to be securely established till possible objections are refuted which might arise from the speech of the serpent at the temptation, that of Balaam’s ass (explained as being to the animals themselves no more than a hiss or a bray), and even from the performances of trained magpies and parrots. Again, Dante of course starts with the assumption that the one original language was Hebrew. But this is supplemented by two more curious and, apparently, original assumptions respecting the confusion of tongues at Babel, viz.:

(1) That there resulted as many languages as there were divisions of labour among the workmen, and the lower the nature of their work, the ruder and more barbarous the resulting language; and (2) that those to whom “the holy language (Hebrew) remained” had taken no part in the impious work, but had discouraged it. We have already some points of contrast, if not contradiction, with Par. xxvi. Dante then limits himself to European languages, which fall under three heads, N., E., and S. The two latter are Greek and Latin; the first, though rather miscellaneous, is shown to have had one origin from the identity or similarity of the affirmative particle, viz., “jo.” The S family, though proved to have been originally one by several obvious resemblances of vocabulary, has three subdivisions, based again on the distinctions of their affirmative particles, viz., oc, oil, and si, and they are described by Dante as Spanish (= Provençal?), French, and Italian (c. 8, 9). Next, confining his attention to Italian, Dante distinguishes at least fourteen dialects, and these have sub-varieties again, some limited to very small districts, and in some cases (e.g., Bologna) to different quarters even of the same town; so that counting the primary, secondary, and subordinate variations of the vulgar tongue of Italy alone we should find that they reach not only a thousand, but even many more (c. 10).

Dante declares his main object to be the discovery of an "Illustrious, Cardinal, Courtly, and Curial language." With a view to this he explains the characteristics of the fourteen dialects in detail, rejecting their claims in succession, often in very vehement and contemptuous terms. It is curious to note that few, if any, are more peremptorily dismissed than Florentine itself; and it is scarcely less curious that he allows Bolognese to come nearest to the ideal sought for, prejudiced no doubt by the brilliant literature of the "Bolognese school." That ideal is described as a language "perceptible in every town, but abiding in none;" it belongs in a sense to all the towns in Italy, but yet does not appear to belong to any one of them (c. 16).

The fragmentary second book is literary and critical rather than philological. It is a sort of "Ars Poetica," dealing with such questions as: the subjects worthy to be treated in this ideal language; the distinctions between Canzoni, Ballate, Sonetti, Cantilene; those between Tragedy, Comedy, and Elegy—throwing light on Dante's choice of the term Commedia (of course without the later addition Divina) for his own great work—the respective merits of the several metres; differences of style and diction, leading incidentally to a list (in some respects curious) of the best classical writers in prose and verse, according to Dante's estimate, in whom the subject should most fitly be studied. He selects among "regulati poetae," Virgil, Ovid (Metamorphoses), Statius, and Lucan; and among those "qui usi sunt altissimas prosas," Cicero, Livy, Pliny, Frontinus, and Orosius, "quos amica solitudo nos visitare invitat" (ii. c. 6). His own illustrations are derived throughout from Provençal and Italian writers, the chief among whom are Bertram de Born, Arnould Daniel, Gerard de Borneil, Guido Guinicelli, Cino da Pistoia, and "Amicus ejus," under which curious disguise Dante frequently quotes his own writings, and in one instance, at any rate (ii. c. 2), as an example of what has been said by "illustrious writers of poetry in the vulgar tongue." The treatise was intended to contain at least four books (see ii. c. 4, 8, &c.); but it breaks off in the middle of a chapter (c. 14) in the second book, so abruptly as to suggest the interruption of the work by some sudden casualty or important event, after which it was never resumed. The Convito though also a fragment, is complete so far as it goes (four books out of fourteen).

In his Introduction Mr. Howell briefly refers to the date of the composition of the work—the same thorny question that arises in respect of every one of Dante's writings. In this case it assumes less formidable dimensions than in others, as the possible limits seem certainly to lie between 1305-6 and 1308-9. Mr. Howell decides for the earlier limit, Scartazzini for the later. Another very difficult and much disputed point (also used in the controversy as to date, though Mr. Howell does not appear so to employ it) is the well-known contradiction between Conv. i. 5 and De Vulg. Elog. i. 1 as to the relative superiority of Latin and the "Vulgare," that of Latin being maintained in the former treatise, and that of the "Vulgare" in the latter. It is curious, by the way, to note that the former treatise is itself written in the "Vulgare," and the latter in Latin. Various and sometimes strange theories have been held to account for, or to attempt a reconciliation of, this divergence. Mr. Howell (p. 88) contents himself with merely setting down the reasons by which Dante supports each of these views. The translation seems to be very well executed, though there are, as is natural, occasional renderings of difficult words where room might remain for differences of opinion. The notes contain many interesting illustrations from other works of Dante, and also concise and useful historical and biographical information. The only complaint one would be disposed to make is that there is not more of them. One would often be glad of further illustrations of difficult or interesting points suggested by the text, as, for instance, of some of the curious metres referred to in ii. 5, or some of the strange words (strange in themselves or their application, or both) in ii. 7, or of the various types of composition in ii. 3, and perhaps in some cases of the dialects in Book I., and so on. But general students, who merely desire to be helped over the principal difficulties, and to be told what is needful for an intelligent reading of the text, will find most that they are likely to want in Mr. Howell's notes.

E. MOORE.

Across the Border, or Pathan and Biloch. By Edward E. Oliver. (Chapman & Hall.)

It would be difficult to write a dull book about the interesting and picturesque barbarians of the Punjab border. Even the official records of our dealings with them, both those who dwell within British territory and the wild warriors of the hills beyond, are full of stirring tales of warfare and adventure; while standard works like A Year on the Punjab Frontier, by the late Sir Herbert Edwards, are as exciting as a Zulu romance by Mr. Rider Haggard.

Mr. Oliver is no cold weather tourist who, after a ride half way up the Khyber Pass, and a glimpse at the Bolan from a railway carriage, comes home to pose as an authority on each and every branch of Central Asian politics. He has served for many years in the Punjab, has made more than one journey along the border, and has evidently had access to information which, to the ordinary traveller or student, is a sealed book. Concerning himself both with Pathan and Biloch, his descriptions cover a wide field; the geographical limits being Yaghistan, the land of the unruly, to the north, and the Arabian Sea to the south. In the south, between the sea and Dera Ismail Khan, we have the Biloch, or Biluchi, a manly, courageous, and more amenable race; to the north, the turbulent, treacherous, and fanatical Pathan, who, however, with all his faults, has often earned our esteem both as friend and foe. According to his own legends, the Biloch came originally from Arabia; but other evidence points to kinship with the Turkomans, to whom he bears a striking resemblance in many ways. The Biloch tribes have attained a system of government which is aristocratic and oligarchical in its forms; and they readily acknowledge the authority of their hereditary chieftains. The Pathans, on the other hand, are split up into innumerable petty clans, each hating the other, says Sir Lepel Griffin in an official note on frontier politics, with the hatred begotten of generations of blood feuds and each yielding but small obedience even to its own headmen. Mr. Oliver quotes from Sir Charles MacGregor another point of difference. In fighting, the Biloch dismounts and picks his mare, and then dashes into the fray sword in hand. This, too, is how the soldiers of Yakub Beg of Kashgar used to fight. The Pathan fires his matchlock or rifle at long ranges, if possible from behind a rock or tree, and seldom closes with the enemy for a hand to hand fight. An Afghan with a blood feud is not above murdering his enemy as he sleeps. The Biloch, says Mr. Oliver, prefers to kill his man from the front; the Pathan from behind. Another notable characteristic of the Biloch is a sentimental passion for poetry. These warlike children of the waste are never tired of listening to the ballads and love songs of which Mr. Oliver gives us specimens, illustrated with quaint drawings by native artists. The ballad of the drowned beauty is an Eastern counterpart of the myth of Hero and Leander; only in this case it is the lady who nightly swims across the Indus to join her lover. In regard to the politics of the Biloch borderland, Mr. Oliver shrewdly remarks that there can be no better proof of the humanising influence of our policy than the difference to be seen between the Biloch who lives under British rule and the independent tribesmen. The one is thriving and contented, decently dressed, and well mounted; the other lives from hand to hand, in constant anxiety for his life, his crops, and his cattle. Much the same observation is made by Mr. Fryer, of the Indian Civil Service, in a report quoted in Ibbetson's Punjab Gazetteer.

With the Pathan tribes to the north we have had far more trouble than with the Biloch. The Pathan, a barbarian of the purest type, more turbulent than the Biloch, quite as independent, and far more bloodthirsty, hates any system of government that seeks to introduce law and order, or interferes with his blood-feuds and forays. Nevertheless, with both the transfrontier tribes and those within our border, we are gradually making headway. In the old days the independent tribes used to meet our troops on pretty equal terms. The long jezail or matchlock was as good a weapon as the British soldier's Brown Bess; and even our best frontier officers knew too little about the country or the people. Rifles and mountain guns have turned the scale as regards armament; and Mr. Oliver's book by itself would be enough to show how much better informed we now are in regard to the once unknown hills beyond British territory. At the same time a fair measure of success has been achieved in compelling the Pathans under British rule to adopt more orderly habits. Within the last few years, the number of murders annually committed in the Peshawar district has been reduced by over 50 per cent. Some little time ago The Times published a letter from an old Anglo-Indian, laudator temporis acti, who condemned competitive examinations as unsuitable for the selection of civil officers competent to manage the wild tribes of the north-west frontier. It might be noted that the deputy commissioner who has worked the new frontier regulations to such good purpose is a civilian selected by open competition; and both at Peshawar and when serving on the Afghan Boundary Commission he has shown himself a capable servant of Government, even in the most arduous situations.

Mr. Oliver's book is full of border romance. One of his stories illustrates the high esteem in which their priests are held by the bigoted, superstitious Pathans, and also the primitive judicial methods which have still to be followed on the frontier:

"Not long ago, in the Peshawur district, a man went so very far to the bad as to shoot a Mullah. It might have been an accident, or he mistook his man, or pure villany; anyhow the Mullah died, and, like many another outlaw, the murderer had to fly over the border. First he tried Buneyr, but the news had preceded him, and he was refused shelter. He then tried the Swat Valley, with no better success—the country of the Akhund would have none of him. Even the Afridis, small reverence as they pay to spiritual advisers, would have nothing to say to a ruffian whose hands were dyed with the blood of a pious man. Wearied at length of being hunted from tribe to tribe, he bethought himself of repentance. 'None of you will have me,' he said, 'I can but be a martyr; I will go and kill a Sahib.' So back he came to Peshawur cantonment, and walked down the Mall to look for a victim. Not finding one handy he turned off and went for a cavalry sergeant in difficulties with a troublesome horse, at whom he took deliberate aim. As luck would have it, the first bullet was stopped by a range finder the sergeant had on him, but before the latter could go for his assailant the Pathan got another bullet through the sergeant's helmet and made a bolt for it. A plucky native ran in, and the man was ultimately secured, tried by the commissioner the same evening, and under summary powers hanged the next morning."

A man in government service, of course, cannot always speak out his mind in regard to political questions; but Mr. Oliver is by no means reticent, and his views concerning new military roads and trade routes which ought to be opened are especially valuable. He strongly recommends the construction of a military road up the Gomal Pass and through the Zhob Valley to Pishin; and this we may hope will be one of the results of Sir Robert Sandeman's recent expedition. He also wants to see a line of railway made either through or turning the Khyber Pass to Jellalabad, and eventually to Kabul. The cost would not be excessive; and the line would greatly strengthen our defensive position.

Of the multifarious tribes—all styled Pathans—who line the north-west frontier, and have overflowed into the plains on our side, Mr. Oliver gives a wonderfully complete account. Among them are the Yusufzai tribes of the Black Mountain, against whom Lord Dufferin had to send an expedition; the Afridis of the Khyber Pass, who are now enlisted in large numbers for service in our native regiments, and who have even a corps of their own, the Khyber Rifles; the proud, priest-ridden Mohmands, the same who defeated Aurangzeb's army and captured the famous war-drum; intractable Shinwarris—"no kindness," says a border proverb, "will tame a snake, a scorpion, or a Shinwarri"—warlike Waziris and a host of others. Mr. Kipling's clever sketches give the reader an admirable idea of the types to be seen on the frontier; and the map is by far the best that has ever been published. The text is not altogether free from blunders—such as Fort Monroe for Munro; but the information has evidently been collected with considerable pains, and is put together in an attractive shape.

STEPHEN WHEELER.

The First Three Gospels: Their Origin and Relations. By J. Estlin Carpenter. (Sunday School Association.)

WITH admirable clearness of statement Mr. Carpenter, in this carefully planned work, lays before us the main results of recent criticism of the Gospels, on the freer or more rationalistic side. Mr. Carpenter, indeed, is a thorough rationalist. He not only inquires into the origin of the Gospels as he might into that of any other book—the Homeric poems or the Vedas—but he treats their contents as largely legendary, and amply recognises the influence of the "pious imagination" in their composition. Yet he writes in no destructive spirit. He believes in a substratum of authentic traditional material, which our evangelists have incorporated in their biographies and have modified to suit their own views of the nature and purpose of Christ's mission and work. The spirit and aim of his book are well expressed in its closing words:

"The sublime figure of the Christ, portrayed to us by the First Three Evangelists, was, in a certain sense, created by the Church. But if, in turn, we ask what was the moral and religious power by which the Church was created, only one answer is possible: it was the personality of Jesus, His faith, His truth, His love."

This seems to be very much the view of Strauss—at least, his later view—and to this it is possible we must all eventually come. At any rate, those who hold it can hardly assent to the statement sometimes so confidently made that the disciples were so immeasurably inferior to their Master that they could not possibly have originated the sayings they have recorded. On the contrary, some of the best things in the Gospels—notably Luke's parables of the Good Samaritan and the Prodigal Son—are evidently due to the evangelists. Still, it may be said, of course, that Christ was the inspirer of the sentiment which the evangelists illustrated and clothed in literary form.

Partly on the ground of the completeness of the portraiture of Christ, and partly on account of other clear indications of late origin, such as the baptismal formula—the only place in the New Testament in which the three persons are enumerated in that order—the mention of the Church as a recognised organisation, the assumption of conditions which could not have arisen but in the course of a long time (he might have also mentioned the recurrence of the phrase, "unto this day"), Mr. Carpenter finds our first Gospel to be the latest of the three; and this is a conclusion which may now be considered fairly established. Next to Matthew, going backwards, stands Luke, while Mark, of course, is the earliest of all. But Mr. Carpenter would, no doubt, agree that it is impossible to say that any Gospel is absolutely first or last, inasmuch as they all underwent successive modifications until they became fixed in the form in which they have reached us. Thus, if I am right in supposing the parable of the Prodigal Son in Luke to be an adaptation of that of the Two Sons in Matthew,* it is plain that Luke must have had before him a form of Matthew in which that parable was contained. This, however, presents no difficulty. Behind our Matthew was the Aramaic original, and probably, also, since "everyone translated it as best he could," several Greek versions. The same remark applies to the miraculous draught of fishes, implying the parable of the net, and to the parable of the barren fig-tree, implying the incident on the road from Bethany to Jerusalem. In this case, indeed, Mr. Carpenter takes the parable to be the foundation, but not, surely, as it stands in Luke. I would assume, first, a lesson or figurative saying of Christ suggested by a fig-tree which had disappointed his expectation; this translated into a miracle, and then, finally, Luke's parable, which is evidently a literary production. Mr. Carpenter, I presume, accepts substantially Dr. Abbot's theory of the common tradition. Is it, then, necessary to suppose, or is he right in supposing, that "among the authorities for his narrative Luke employed our Mark"? Hardly, perhaps, "our" Mark, but rather Ur-Marcus, if, indeed, it is not enough to assume his acquaintance with the common tradition, whether in its oral form or after it had been reduced to writing. However, Mr. Carpenter only speaks of probabilities; and he may be right, especially if we agree with him in placing Luke as late as the year 100 A.D.

I began with the last sentence of this book. Turning back to the beginning, we find an excellent section treating briefly but sufficiently of the early testimonies. Nor is the Fourth Gospel excluded from consideration. The second chapter treats of its relations to the Synoptics, and shows how freely the author handled the materials with which they furnished him, in his desire to set forth the great idea which inspired his work. But the most instructive part of this volume, perhaps, is that in which the author traces the formation of the Gospel legend, and the origin of the Messianic idea, and accounts for the miracles which in process of time came to be credited to the Christ. And here his studies in comparative religion stand him in good stead. The parallels between the Buddhist and Christian legends have often been pointed out, but they have never been more aptly or strikingly put than here. Some of them are well known; but the following legend, corresponding so closely to Peter's attempt to walk on the sea, is new to me. A disciple going to Jetavana (where the Teacher was staying) to hear the truth, came to a river, and seeing no boat, went down in faith into the stream.

* See my review of Wright's The Composition of the Four Gospels, ACADEMY, July 12, 1890.

"His feet did not sink in the water. Walking as on the ground, by the time he got into the middle he saw waves. Then his confidence in the Buddha became slack, he began to sink. But he made his joyful confidence in the Buddha firm, and, proceeding on the surface of the water, came to Jetavana."

In the course of his work, Mr. Carpenter makes a suggestion concerning the title "Son of Man," so frequent on the lips of the Saviour in the Synoptic Gospels, which is too important to be passed over; but having called attention to it, I must conclude this notice. Nothing can be more certain in early Christian history than the prevalence of a confident expectation that Christ would immediately appear in glory as Judge of the world, and nothing can be more certain than that that expectation was disappointed. Yet, as our Gospels are generally understood, this delusive hope rested on the authority of Christ himself, who predicted the immediate coming of the Son of Man. What, however, if in the term "Son of Man" Jesus designated neither himself nor any third person, but spoke in a purely figurative sense? In Daniel's vision, from which, no doubt, the title was derived, it is no personal Messiah that is described, but "the Kingdom of the Saints of the Most High"; and Mr. Carpenter's suggestion, accordingly, is that on Christ's lips, in those passages in which it may be supposed that we have his genuine words, the phrase has the same meaning as in Daniel, and is equivalent to the Kingdom of Heaven, or the Kingdom of God. It is a very pregnant suggestion. It is, however, to be considered that Daniel's description was confessedly symbolic, and that the phrase he uses, "one like a son of man"—i.e., "like a man," is without special emphasis; and I find it easier, therefore, to believe that "Son of Man" had by a misunderstanding become a personal title, whether in the speech of Christ or, more probably, of his disciples, than that Christ borrowed part of Daniel's phrase to describe the reality of what the prophet saw only in figure. At first sight, indeed, it might appear to be a strong point in favour of Mr. Carpenter's view that he is able to produce a case in which the one phrase actually occurs as an equivalent of the other. Compare Matt. xvi. 28—"Verily I say unto you, There be some of them that stand here which shall in no wise taste of death, till they see the Son of Man coming in his Kingdom," with the parallel passages in Mark ix. 1 and Luke ix. 27, in both of which we read instead "the Kingdom of God." It is obvious, however, that the alteration introduced here by the last of the three evangelists would be equally consistent with the supposition that neither symbolically nor personally was the title "Son of Man" employed by Jesus at all.

In conclusion, I will only add the hope that the modest form in which this work is published will not stand in the way of a recognition of its importance, as probably the best book in English on its own side of the question that has yet appeared.

ROBERT B. DRUMMOND.

The French Revolution. By Justin Huntly McCarthy. In 4 vols.—Volume II. (Chatto & Windus.)

In his second volume, Mr. McCarthy reviews some of the leading characters in the French Revolution, and some of the principal events at Paris and Versailles from the assembling of the States General to the surrender of the Bastille.

There is perhaps an unavoidable diminution of interest when one passes from such men as Voltaire, Diderot, and Rousseau to creatures like Marat and Robespierre. Louis XVI. may well have cast a look of despair down the list of deputies returned to the States General: one statesman, Mirabeau, powerless for good; a few men of business, fair-minded and sensible, Malouet and Mounier; the rest untrained. In what school could they have acquired political ability or experience? The States General had not met for a hundred and seventy-four years, and the Provincial Assemblies had been abolished in most of the provinces of France. The people wanted bread, and the Assembly gave them a Declaration of the Rights of Man.

Mr. McCarthy quotes a passage in which Arthur Young pointed out at the very beginning grave and dangerous imperfections in the conduct of the debates:

"The room" [in which they sit] "is too large; none but stentorian lungs or the finest, clearest voices can be heard. . . . In regard to their general method of proceeding there are two circumstances in which they are very deficient: the spectators in the gallery are allowed to interfere in the debates by clapping their hands, and other noisy expressions of approbation. This is grossly indecent; it is also dangerous; for if they are permitted to express approbation, they are, by parity of reason, allowed expressions of dissent, and they may hiss as well as clap, which, it is said, they have sometimes done. This would be to overrule the debate and influence the deliberations. Another circumstance is the want of order among themselves; more than once to-day there were a hundred members on their legs at a time, and M. Bailly absolutely without power to keep order."

Mr. McCarthy has not given sufficient weight to these remarks, and has considerably underestimated the amount of intimidation exercised by the mob over the proceedings of the National Assembly. He has altogether misunderstood the character of Louis XVI., and the King's motives for assembling troops in the neighbourhood of Paris and Versailles. Bailly, the president of the Assembly, quoted by Taine (La Revolution, vol. i., p. 51), says, "Le roi était de très-bonne foi; il ne comptait prendre de mesures que pour l'ordre et la paix publique."

Mr. McCarthy is too indulgent to Camille Desmoulins, whom he calls a "child of genius." He should read in Taine's masterly work the coarse appeal which Desmoulins made to the appetites of the mob:

"Since the beast is in the snare let him be beaten to death. Never has a richer prey been offered to conquerors. Forty thousand palaces, noblemen's residences and country seats, two-fifths of the property of France, will be the reward of valour."

Mr. McCarthy says of Marat: "There never was a man in his wild way more upright or more sincere." And again: "It seems certain that he was a sincere and eager man of science." How about the scientific fraud with which Marat is charged by Taine in his third volume of La Revolution, p. 162: "Un jour, mis au pied du mur, il introduit une aiguille dans un bâton de résine pour le rendre conducteur, et il est pris par le physicien Charles en flagrant délit de supercherie scientifique."

Mr. McCarthy is not satisfied with Mr. John Morley's judgment of Robespierre.

"To Mr. Morley, Robespierre is only a man of 'profound and pitiable incompetence'—a man without a social conception, without a policy. He finds a curious study in 'the pedant, cursed with the ambition to be a ruler of men.' He sees in Robespierre 'a kind of spinster' in whom 'spasmodical courage and timidity ruled by rapid turns.' Finally, Robespierre is always and ever present to Mr. Morley's mind as the man of the Law of Prairial. It is the great defect of Mr. Morley's method that it is entirely lacking in dramatic sympathy."

Here is the portrait of Robespierre drawn by the hand of Mirabeau:

"Petit homme raide et apprêté, petit esprit sec et pointu, petit caractère inquisitionnaire et acariâtre. Lorsqu'on le voit, on croit qu'il pense; lorsqu'on l'entend, on le soupçonne orateur; mais le suit-on de près, il est évident que lorsqu'il a l'air de penser il cherche, et que lorsqu'il parle il répète."

There are some good points in Mr. McCarthy's second volume; he gives dates which are a help to follow the narrative, and his portraits of Condorcet and Danton are well drawn.

WILLIAM MARKHEIM.

NEW NOVELS.

The Tragic Muse. By Henry James. In 3 vols. (Macmillan.)

The Mystery of Mrs. Blencarrow. By Mrs. Oliphant. (Spencer Blackett.)

Two English Girls. By Mabel Hart. In 2 vols. (Hurst & Blackett.)

Jack Abbott's Log. By Robert Brown. In 2 vols. (Sampson Low.)

Incurable. By Paul Heyse. Translated by Mrs. Eve. (Nutt.)

The Last Master of Carnandro. By T. A. Pinkerton. (Sonnenschein.)

Brayhard. By F. M. Allen. (Ward & Downey.)

Amyon Drecht. By J. Locke Williams. (Ward & Downey.)

The Lazy Tour of Two Idle Apprentices, and other Stories. By Charles Dickens and Wilkie Collins. (Chapman & Hall.)

We have sufficient respect for Mr. Henry James to review him frankly—the greatest compliment that can be paid to a novelist. And, therefore, we shall say at once that, to our thinking, The Idiot Asylum would have been a better title for his new book than The Tragic Muse. Such a company of, by their own showing, imbeciles in word and deed has rarely been got together by a writer of great talent. We remember long ago an innocent critic-without-knowing-it who, casting in despair a book aside, exclaimed: "I can't make out why anybody does anything!" A similar lamb of the flock might with justice make a similar remark on The Tragic Muse. There are about two people in it—Peter Sherringham, the diplomatist, and his sister, Julia Dallow, a wealthy widow—who, though the former is besotted with a mindless actress, and the latter with a backboneless coxcomb, are alive and human, it being indeed extremely human and alive to be so besotted. But the actress and the coxcomb and his mother, the correct Lady Agnes, and his sisters (one pretty and sympathique, the other plain and dense), and his friend Mr. Gabriel Nash, who is a kind of caricature of a long series of other caricatures, and the rest of them, are such things as nightmares are made of. They come, like the language that they talk, of constant imitation and re-imitation, not of real life or of anything like real life, but of thrice and thirty times redistilled literary decoctions of life. As for the language just mentioned, Mr. James, who was always clever at a wonderful kind of American marivaudage, has this time "seen himself" at his very best hitherto, and gone we hardly know how much better. Somebody "smiles like a man whose urbanity is a solvent." Somebody else had "a nose which achieved a high free curve." A third "acquitted herself in a manner which offered no element of interest;" but a fourth "remained conscious that something surmounted and survived her failure—something that would perhaps be worth taking hold of." Fancy "taking hold" of "something" which "surmounts and survives" a "failure" which is also an "acquittal without an element of interest!" It is all very well for smart undergraduates and governesses who have read Mr. Meredith without the ghost of an understanding, and Mr. Stevenson with a keen relish for exactly the things which are not good in him, to attempt distinction by this sort of thing. But Mr. Henry James really might give us something a little more like English sense and a good deal less like French-American rignarole. We cannot honestly say that there is much in the story or the characters of The Tragic Muse to redeem this fatal fault; but even if there were, it would probably still be fatal.

If Mr. Henry James has read Marivaux to his wounding and has walked on Dover pier (it was Dover, was it not?) with M. Paul Bourget to his hurt, the little book which latest bears the name of Mrs. Oliphant exhibits, on the other hand, a deficiency which study of French models might have corrected. The Mystery of Mrs. Blencarrou remains psychologically mysterious, or at least psychologically unexplained, even after the dénouement. This (there is no harm in telling it, since it is obvious to the intelligent after a very few pages) turns on the secret marriage of a widow, who outwardly unites extreme propriety of demeanour with refinement of character and affection for her children, to her steward, a stout young fellow of little education and no breeding. The revolt of the steward, who will not bear his position, and suspects that his mistress-wife is tired of him (as she is), is well indicated. But, either owing to English reticence or to a slip in art, Mrs. Oliphant has not shown us anything in her heroine which in the least accounts for her derogation. To attempt to show this might have been "ticklish" no doubt; but then the situation is ticklish and either to be left alone or boldly grasped. As it is, the history of this new Duchess of Malfy seems fragmentary. The best things in it are the sketches of the selfish young couple who discover the secret. Mrs. Oliphant is getting more and more severe on youth, who are, however, youth and need not care.

Miss Hart's Two English Girls is a pleasant enough Italian story with rather obvious motives, and with, at the end, one of those totally unnecessary executions of a heroine which a certain kind of lady novelist seems absolutely unable to refuse herself. Evelyn Grey, however, is, though amiable, a rather foolish creature, and death was no doubt much better for her than a life with a light-minded and not too honourable Italian artist. The other heroine, Beatrice Hamlyn, who ends by directly proposing to a shy lover, is much better and a decidedly pleasing person. The story so guilelessly and openly suggests its own relation to Romola that there is no need to reproach it with that following. At the same time such duplications of well-known matter are scarcely wise and not very good art.

Jack Abbott's Log is a most curious medley of an old-fashioned kind, saved from insignificance by a certain freshness which paradoxically enough belongs to the old-fashioned, and by the occasional presence of a certain "go" in the narration. We say narration advisedly, for story there is none. The usual sailor-man pays the usual visit to his old school, meets the usual old flame, has the usual experiences by sea, is wrecked as usual, and ends up with the usual ingots of gold. By this summary we do not mean that these well-known ingredients have ever been presented in the same or even in a very similar way; but that taking them separately they are very old friends indeed. Sometimes (as, for instance, in the celebrated story of the West India Regiment and "hab shoo hab stocking") they are so old that they surely have earned their dismissal to an honourable retirement. But it is not easy to dislike the book, and we shall not give ourselves the trouble to do so.

Paul Heyse needs no praise, though he may sometimes have been praised unreasonably; and it is scarcely necessary to say more about Incurable than that Mrs. Eve has translated it very well.

The most interesting thing about The Last Master of Carnandro is the use of that title as if it were borne by the head of the family. Mr. Pinkerton should have dwelt more on this, for it is not common, nor is it common for a man of Scotch descent and property, even if he be half Italian, to be ignorant of the marriage laws of his dear country. The chief moral of the book is, however, less uncommon than these two things—to wit, that to horsewhip a man within an inch of his life, unless he richly deserves it, is a mistake. With this we are prepared to agree.

Few classes of books are more "kittle" to criticise than deliberate extravaganzas; for, though the critic may be very fond of them in a general way, some particular one may lead off with the wrong foot, as it seems to him, and then he can rarely get in step with it. Being nothing if not humble, we are prepared to admit the possibility of some such mishap having happened to us with Brayhard. But we cannot say that it has amused us. It is a kind of elaborate Mark-Twainish skit on champions and giants and fairy tales, and so forth. Very much the kind of thing that some clever schoolboys write in M.S. school magazines; and it may amuse some people. If it does, then for them it is amusing. Mr. Furniss's illustrations may be commended with less allowance; but even here we think we have seen the artist's hand better in.

Amyon Drecht is rather a good shilling dreadful, the dreadfulness being thickly and slably mixed, and not more preposterous than it should be for the particular purpose, and for those who like it. Phantasms of the living and phantasms of the dead, nihilism and "disappearances," work up to a properly unhappy ending. Some people would have made it happy, which would have been just as easy on the data; but Mr. Locke Williams was, we think, right. According to our invariable habit with this kind of book, or semblance of a book, we say nothing about the plot.

Although no one of the three stories—The Lazy Tour, No Thoroughfare, and the Perils of Certain English Prisoners—which Messrs. Chapman & Hall have now, for the first time, rescued from the Osiris-like condition in which their fragments used to be scattered in the works of Dickens and the old numbers of Household Words, is exactly a masterpiece, it was very desirable to get them together in a complete state. They are too well known for much comment. But we are bound to say that, whether we may or may not rate either of their authors as high as some have rated them, the change from the work of the day to this of thirty years ago is not exactly painful to the reviewer.

GEORGE SAINTSBURY.

CURRENT LITERATURE.

Influence of Literature and Classical Education. By H. Nettleship. (Percival.) The custom of publishing detached lectures on education in small cloth pamphlets began, we believe, with Messrs. Rivington, and its continuation by Messrs. Percival is appropriate. The two lectures themselves are "popular addresses," delivered one at Toynbee Hall, the other to an educational meeting in Oxford. The style is attractive, the matter admirable; the necessary eighteenthpence will certainly not be thrown away. There is, however, one curious omission in the lecture on "classical education." Prof. Nettleship has, we believe, been a schoolmaster himself; yet he says no word of the educational value of an elementary Latin training. Of late years both public and specialist opinion have been tending in direction of such a training. The Berlin professors, the Manchester business men, the American educationalists, have alike asserted that a boy with an elementary classical training is better (ceteris paribus) than one without it. The same lesson is inculcated as we understand him, by Prof. Laurie in his Lectures on Linguistic Method. And, apart from this, we cannot see the possibility of classical studies surviving. If once they are acknowledged to be useless for the mass of boys, they will speedily be relegated to the cupboard of curiosities, to be laid on the shelf with Czech and Chinese. Apparently, Prof. Nettleship does not believe in the value of Latin as a linguistic training, for he mentions only the literary and philosophical excellence of the classics. But, whether he believes or disbelieves, the omission of the topic is curious.

Four Great Preachers—John Ruskin, Thomas Carlyle, Ralph Waldo Emerson, and Robert Browning. By Joseph Forster. (George Allen.) This book is disappointing. Its title raises expectations of something more than four lectures, loosely put together, and consisting, for the most part, of quotations. As lectures spoken from the platform they may have been good; much would depend upon the delivery of the lecturer. If Mr. Forster is a good reader or reciter, the passages from Browning's verse and from the prose of the other three "great teachers," would be exceedingly effective, and the audience might easily forgive him for not making his connecting links more elaborate. When, however, the appeal is to the eye in print, instead of to the ear, deficiencies of construction are more readily discerned. A list of the subjects upon which Mr. Forster undertakes to discourse is advertised in the present volume, and it seems to indicate that he is a wide reader rather than a profound student. The list is too long to quote in full, but it includes Goethe, Richter, Heine, Diderot, Mirabeau, Victor Hugo, Lope de Vega, and Cervantes. One man cannot, in reason, be expected to understand all the great authors of the modern world; and perhaps, on the whole, Mr. Forster is wise in allowing those of whom he treats to speak for themselves. Yet it would be unjust to leave the matter here. Mr. Forster's book has merits of its own, which ought not to be disregarded. If the author's knowledge of the four great teachers is not profound, at any rate his appreciation, so far as it goes, is cordial and sympathetic. "The spiritual and heaven-sealing genius of the American Plato," is a phrase not altogether happily chosen when applied to Emerson; but the emphasis is truly laid when Mr. Forster speaks of Emerson's "unfailing goodness," and affirms that "what we admire in Emerson is not only the intellectual elevation but the moral purity and simple childlike goodness and sweetness of the man." He quotes Thackeray's remark, that it is a great pity good men are so stupid; but, as regards Emerson, he says "no man was less goody and no man was more truly good." Mr. Forster gives sufficient evidence that he possesses critical insight to make us wish that he had exercised this faculty more. His estimate of Mr. Ruskin, for example, is worth attention. Commencing with a comparison of Mr. Ruskin with Wordsworth, he says:

"The difference between them is one of temper. One was calm, philosophical, withdrawn from the cantankerous controversies of politics and the little details of daily life. John Ruskin, with a chivalrous disregard of the wear and tear, consequent upon mingling in the dusty daily fray, breaks out here with a letter, and there with a lecture, dealing directly with the topic of the hour. He is constantly tapped by the foolishest people. There is, I must admit, a decided note of femininity in his genius; a want of manly strength and repose—a quality in which Wordsworth was nearly as great as Goethe. The voice is piping sweet, but it is a falsetto now and then—a head and not a chest voice—and reminds one occasionally of the unnatural soprano of Handel's time. Mr. Ruskin appears to me now and then to lose his balance, his common sense. I do not consider that he is always a safe teacher to ordinary men and women; but to those who can weigh, measure, and discriminate between his opinions, and as a noble and chivalrous denouncer of the infinite vulgarity and stupid greed of the age, his teachings are of unspeakable value" (pp. 8-9).

The definition of "femininity" and the reference to a head voice are curious, and the words "infinite" and "unspeakable" are used a little recklessly; but otherwise the paragraph is good and suggestive. The quotations, too, which, as we have said, occupy a considerable portion of the work, show that Mr. Forster has a delicate sense of fitness in this matter.

MR. THOMAS GREENWOOD—who is an enthusiast in the matter of collections of books freely accessible for the recreation of the many, and for the higher education of the comparatively small number who in any community will devote themselves to serious study—has issued a "third edition, entirely re-written," of his Public Libraries (Simpkin, Marshall & Co.) It is a volume of 600 pages, and contains a large mass of information on a subject which is becoming more and more important as the extension of elementary education brings into the field a daily increasing number of persons who can read intelligently and with pleasure to themselves. No doubt the elementary schools Board and Voluntary—turn out a certain number of boys and girls whose first object in life is, apparently, to lose as much as possible, and as quickly as possible, of what has been taught them by the schoolmaster. It may, indeed, be said—and the matter is worth the notice of those who exult in real or imaginary (and chiefly the latter) defects in the education of the people—that men may, and some do, come even from the universities entirely destitute of any love of knowledge and only anxious to avoid books and all that is in print of a more serious character than the Turf Guide. With the exception of a few scattered instances, the town libraries of Great Britain date from the passing of the Ewart Act in 1850. But progress was at first slow; and even in the great towns where popular instruction had made some advance, there were many quite unable to avail themselves of the books provided at the cost of the community. Some could not read, some could not keep awake after the exhausting toils of the day, some found great writers whom they were called upon to admire entirely beyond their comprehension and sympathy. Some, however, realised the truth of Carlyle's saying; and in these town-libraries found their real universities. There are men honourably known in science and in literature who would not hesitate to avow that they had gained their inspiration and information in free public libraries. Mr. Greenwood objects to the term "free" as applied to these libraries, and thinks that it has somewhat prejudiced their usefulness by leading many to regard them as either mere charitable institutions, or at least as only meant for the poorer classes. It is of course impossible to plumb the depths of stupidity to which the British Philistine of the "middle class" will cheerfully descend in his well-meant efforts to demonstrate the snobbishness of his nature, but he is usually keenly alive to his own material interests; and many "free grammar schools" will show that in educational foundations the use of the adjective has not prevented him from taking advantages which were probably not always intended for him and his. Mr. Greenwood gives a sketch of the progress so far attained in the establishment of public libraries. The most notable fact in recent years has been the awakening of London, which, formerly almost impossible to move, is now developing a remarkable local life and interest in higher education. The Act has been adopted in twenty-one of the metropolitan districts, and altogether some 209 places have decided that the provision of a public library is a part of the duty of civic authorities. Mr. Greenwood gives such information as to the methods of making known the advantages to be secured as he thinks will be helpful to those who are agitating for the establishment of new libraries, and discusses some of the problems of management. We shall not follow him into the thorny fields of cataloguing, classification, statistics (and there are none so misleading as those which relate to libraries), and the best way of utilising the often scanty space that is available for the storing of books. His manual is useful and satisfactory as far as it goes, and the mistakes we have noticed are not of a character to detract from its practical utility. We may hope that its appearance will help still further to stimulate and extend a movement that has already done much, and promises to do still more, for the spread of good literature and sound knowledge in the homes of the English people.

Bismarck Intime. By a Fellow Student. Translated by Henry Hayward. (Dean.) Not one of the least misfortunes which attend upon the Iron Chancellor in these later days is the cloud of indiscriminating panegyric and biography which is settling round him. Bismarck Intime must certainly be pronounced the worst instance of "book making" on the subject we have yet seen. The volume purports to be a translation of reminiscences of a fellow student. But it is odd that the fellow student should throw no new light on the German statesman's career, nor furnish a single new anecdote. The book is in fact nothing but a hash of stories that have already appeared garnished with commonplace reflections. It could easily have been put together from the well-known books of Dr. Busch, von Poschinger, and others, who may be said to have formed the authentic Bismarck tradition. The stories might indeed, with a little patience, be traced to their several sources, though a disregard of any order or sequence, chronological or otherwise, would throw certain hindrances in the way.

SOME BOOKS FOR THE COUNTRY.

Handbook to Lincolnshire. (John Murray.) Lincolnshire has been neglected by antiquaries. It has some fairly good village and town histories, but nothing in the way of a history of the shire that can be accepted as even tolerable. The two quarto volumes published in the last generation, which go by the name of "Allen's History of Lincolnshire," are below contempt. It would be an insult to directory compilers to compare "Allen" even with them. The author of the handbook before us was therefore in a position somewhat different from most of the others who have written for Mr. Murray's series. He has been unable, except in a few instances, to rely on trustworthy authorities, and has therefore had to work out nearly everything for himself. On the whole, the work is well done. Lincolnshire is not famed for its historic interest. Those great events which have gone to the making of England such as we find it now have, for the most part, taken place in other counties. Not a single battle of the higher order of interest was fought within its limits. But Lincolnshire is remarkable for the interest and beauty of its parish churches. There was a time when its monasteries must have added great dignity to the county; but the remains of nearly all of them have perished, or have come down to us in a condition so shattered that we cannot reconstruct the manner of their beauty before the hand of the spoiler was laid upon them. The parish churches have been wonderfully preserved, and they represent every kind of architecture from undoubted Saxon to the latest form of Perpendicular. The author, whose name we are sorry to say is not on the title-page, is evidently an enthusiast upon ecclesiastical art. We do not think that he has left out one noteworthy object of this kind. There is, indeed, little of any sort of interest which is unmentioned. We wish there had been a line to draw attention to the stone, or rather concretion, in the parish of Risby, called Sunken Church. It projects from the oolite range of hills known as the "cliff," and imaginative people have imagined that they see in it the form of a serpent or dragon. The legend runs that the priest and his whole congregation were here, once on a time, swallowed up in the earth, and that still on certain days a visitor to the spot may hear the bells ringing for Mass. Until recent days the place was constantly visited by weak persons for the purpose of practising incantations. There are a few errors here and there which we doubt not will be corrected in a new edition. We may mention one. In describing the process of "warjng," a method by which much of the worthless land on the banks of the Trent has been rendered of permanent value, the author describes the deposit left by the waters of the river as a "fine black vegetable mould." This is incorrect; it is not black or even dark, but a rather light grey. It is a deposit from the muddy waters of the Humber and Trent formed from the disintegrated soil of the glacial drift of Yorkshire, which is for a time held in suspension by the water of the rivers. This Guide will not only be found useful to travellers in Lincolnshire, but will also give much information to many of the natives to whom its ecclesiastical antiquities are as unknown as if they had never set foot in the county.

What Cheer O? By A. Gordon. (Nisbet.) The question is often asked, What is the work of the Deep Sea Mission? In this little book, named after the familiar greeting of the fishermen on the Dogger Bank, Mr. Gordon endeavours to give a succinct answer. The rise of the Mission is traced, and its progress from 1881. There is a capital description of the deep-sea trawler's life, and the hideous drunkenness and immorality which was formerly caused by the "copers," or floating grog-shops. These have been now partly suppressed by the friendly action of the different governments whose subjects trawl in the North Sea, partly undersold by the Mission ships undertaking to sell tobacco to trawlers much under the prices asked by the "coper." Theten smacks which now work in the Mission distribute books and warm clothing among the men, and furnish surgical and medical aid to the sick. In short, both the bodies and the souls of our fishermen in the wild North Sea are cured for by this excellent Mission. Mr. Gordon's book is written in a pleasant fashion, and well illustrated, so that no one need remain any longer ignorant of the condition of the 12,000 or 15,000 fishermen always tossing on the Dogger Bank. We can but wish well to the beneficent efforts of the Deep Sea Mission, and heartily recommend What Cheer O? to the notice of all who love our seas and their sailors.

Wild Nature won by Kindness. By Mrs. Brightwen. (Fisher Unwin.) In spite of the excellent tone of this little book and the kindly feelings which it would encourage towards dumb animals, it cannot be said that there is much in it. A good many birds have served as pets to the writer, and she impresses in each case the need of extreme attention and yet the danger of too much kindness in taming and rearing them. There is some affectation about Mrs. Brightwen's language, but much may be atoned by the excellence of her purpose. This is a capital book for girls in the country.

NOTES AND NEWS.

PROF. H. LOGEMAN, of Ghent, has been fortunate enough to discover a hitherto unknown Anglo-Saxon inscription at Brussels. In the cathedral of that city (St. Michel et St. Gudule), there is preserved among the sacred relics a cross which purports to be one of the largest existing pieces of the Holy Rood. This cross has a silver rim, and also silver ornamentation on its back. The rim bears an inscription in Anglo-Saxon, recording the names of two brothers who caused it to be made for the soul's rest of a third. On the back the name of the artist is given—"Drahmal * * * me worhte." Prof. Logeman proposes to publish a full account of the cross and its inscription in a Belgian periodical.

We understand that Messrs. Macmillan have in the press a complete edition of the poems of Matthew Arnold in one volume, similar to their single volume editions of Wordsworth and Tennyson, except that the text will not be printed in double columns. It will contain everything that is in the three volume edition of 1885, together with the poem on "Kaiser," which subsequently appeared in the Fortnightly; and an "Horatian Echo," which, though written in 1847, was first published in the Hobby Horse in 1887.

A SERIES of "Studies in Biblical and Patristic Literature and History," is about to be commenced by some of the younger students of theology at Cambridge. It is hoped that the first three numbers may be published at Christmas—namely, A Study of Codex Bezae, by Prof. J. Rendel Harris, formerly fellow of Clare; The Testament of Abraham, hitherto unedited, by Mr. James, Fellow of King's; and A Study of the Martyrdom of S. Perpetua, with a fresh recension of the Latin text from the MSS., by J. Armitage Robinson, Fellow of Christ's College, who is to be the editor of the series. Among future possible contributors may be mentioned Prof. Ryle, Mr. Chase, of Christ's, Mr. Walter, of Caius, and Mr. Brooke, of King's.

MR. ELKIN MATHEWS announces for publication in the autumn Dr. John Todhunter's pastoral play, A Sicilian Idyll, which was recently acted at Bedford Park, and also at St. George's Hall. The volume will have a frontispiece by Mr. Walter Crane.

MESSRS. DEAN & SON will be the publishers of the English translation of Souvenirs of the Second Empire, by the late Duc de Morny, which are said to contain much curious gossip about the celebrities of the time.

A STORY with the new science of hypnotism as its basis will be published by Messrs.

Hutchinson & Co. in the course of a few days. The title of the little book is Hypnotism; or, A Doctor's Confession, and it is understood to be the first work of a new authoress—Miss Margaret Brandon.

MR. THOMAS FRASER, of Dalbeattie, N.B., has ready for publication an illustrated volume, entitled Yarrow: Its Poets and Poetry, by the Rev. R. Borland, minister of Yarrow. The letter-press consists of biographical sketches of persons associated with Yarrow, and of all the ballads and poems inspired by the river in chronological order. The illustrations are from drawings specially made by Miss Constance W. Mangin, besides portraits. A large paper edition of the book will contain twelve additional illustrations, reproduced by a photographic process.

MESSRS. FREDERICK W. WILSON & Co., of Glasgow, will issue immediately a second edition of their Illustrated Pocket Guide from Glasgow to Belfast, published in connexion with Messrs. G. & J. Burns's Royal Mail Service.

DR. FURNIVALL went to Lincoln for his August holiday in the hope of being able to find fifty of its earliest Wills of like date (1387-1439) with those he has edited for the Early English Text Society from Somerset House. But, alas! the earliest Will in the Lincoln Probate Registry is 1505, though the first English one in the Bishops' Registers is 1399—Sir W. Thyrnynge's—while the second is 1444; and so they go on, some forty of them, to 1537. They are a disappointing lot, with only two Inventories of testator's goods, and one Will bequeathing a good list of articles. But the testamentary deficiency of the Bishops' Registers—of which the diocese has a splendid series from early times—is somewhat made up for by the few other Early English documents in the Registers of Bishops Lunley (1450-2), Chedworth (1452-72), Rotherham (1471-80), Russell (1480-96), Smyth (1496-1514), and Longland (1521-47). These comprise confessions and abjurations of heresies, vows of chastity by widows, a novice's vow on taking the veil, injunctions in 1530-31 for the reform of abuses in convents and monasteries (see Dr. Furnivall's letter printed elsewhere in the ACADEMY), an excommunication of those who are accurst, an award (by Bishop Longland, A.D. 1449) as to rights of way, &c., a contract for rebuilding Newark bridge, a letter from Paris describing a grand procession of relics, January 21, 1535 or 6, with burning of heretics, to remedy blasphemies against the Eucharist, &c. One MS. of "The Canterbury Tales" turns up in Bishop Chedworth's Register, probably of the year 1462, in the Confession of John Baron of Aymondesham, who, after acknowledging that he was conversant in times past with Hugh Leche, heretic, continues:

"Item I confesse that the said Hugh Leche held the dampnable opynyon ayen pelgrymage and worshiping of saintes, to the which opynyon I gaff faith, credence and beleve, determynyng myselff that it was better to giff pore men good, then to seke or worshiye any saynt or ymage in erthe. . . ."

"Item I confesse that I haue iij English booke, oon of the lyff of Oure Lady, of Adam and Eve, and of other sermones, the Myrroure of Synners, and the Myrroure of Matrimony; the second boke, of Tales of Canterbury; the iij boke, of a play of Saint Dionise" (Bishop Chedworth's Register, leaf 62 back).

The Canterbury pilgrimage and other Romish practises and beliefs come in for another attack in the Abjuration of William Ayleward in 1464:

"William Ayleward, smyth, of the toune of Henley, seying pilgrymes goyng toward Canterbury, sayd vnto Robert Norrys and William Assheley his scruauntes, that the said pilgrymes went offreyng their sowles vnto the devyll. . . ."

"Item he said, helde and affirmed that the blessed sacrament of the Anter is a grete devyll of hell, and a Synagoge: And that the prest can nor may make god, that made him: And that he can make as good a sacrament betwene ij yrons as the prest doth vpon his auter.

"Item he said, taught, helde and affermed that oure holy Fadre, the pope of Rome, is a great best, and a devyll of hell, and a Synagoge, and that he shall lye depper in hell ix sithes than luecyfer.

"Item . . . that Confession is ordeyned that parsons may vnderstand the lyvys of women; and after the prest knowith suche a womman, he wol haue to do with her, and afterwarde assoyle her" (Bishop Chedworth's Register, leaf 61).

All which heresies the said William Ayleward solemnly abjured.

THE annual report of Sir John B. Monckton, the town clerk, and Dr. R. R. Sharpe, the records clerk, on the corporation records of the city of London, indicates the progress made during the year in indexing, calendaring, and arranging the valuable documents and archives in the possession of the city. The second volume of the Calendar of Wills enrolled in the court of husting from 1258 to 1688 has been completed, and is now being put through the press; and an exhaustive index is being prepared. No fewer than 3500 wills in all are calendared. Among the wills in this volume are those of William Walworth, Sir John Philpot, John Northampton, Nicholas Exton, Richard Whittington or Whityngton, four times lord mayor, Dean Colet, Sir Andrew Judde, Sir Thos. Gresham, and others; while the will of Alexander Furnell, enrolled in 1440, is remarkable for being the first in the court of husting which is in English. It is proposed to write an introduction to the second volume treating of the subject matter of the whole of the wills enrolled. But little more can be attempted than to group together bequests of household chattels, wearing apparel, furs, armour, tapestry, &c., and to give a brief explanation of the nature of each, with a passing allusion to the sumptuary laws. Bequests of vestments, missals, breviaries, relics, &c., to churches, bequests to hermits and anchorites, and other objects of the bounty of charitable citizens will receive the attention they deserve.

IN response to an appeal from Mr. Goschen, the Fishmongers Company have made a grant of £52 10s., and the Leathersellers Company a donation of £50, in aid of the funds of the London University Extension Society. Sixty courses of lectures, on various branches of history, literature, and science, have already been arranged at the different centres throughout the metropolis for the Michaelmas term, which will begin early in October.

WE understand that the notice of Miss Christina Rossetti in last week's Queen was written by Mr. Arthur L. Salmon.

MESSRS. MELVILLE, MULLEN, & SLADE, of Melbourne—whose London office is at 12, Ludgate Square—have been appointed booksellers to the University of Melbourne.

DR. EUGENE OSWALD—who is known to many of our readers as the president of the Carlyle Society—has been contributing to the Allgemeine Zeitung of Munich a series of papers, entitled "Probleme einer Weltmacht," which are in form a review of Sir Charles Dilke's Problems of Greater Britain, but in substance a protest against the anti-English prejudices of the colonial party in Germany.

AN international list of libraries with more than 50,000 volumes has been prepared by P. E. Richter, of the Royal Library, Dresden. The first part, just issued (Leipzig: Hedeler), shows the following comparison: The fifty largest libraries in Germany possess about 12,500,000 volumes, against England with about 6,450,000, and North America with about 6,100,000 volumes. With each library is given, besides the number of volumes, the annual amount available for purchases, and other special features supplied for this purpose by the different librarians.

A CIRCULAR was handed round at the Conference du Livre at Antwerp by an American Swedenborgian of Philadelphia, Mr. Eugene J. E. Schreck, who is desirous of finding a lost book of Swedenborg's, containing 2,000 numbered paragraphs on Marriage. The MS. is not in the possession of Swedenborg's heirs, nor is it known what has become of it.

MR. THOMAS KERSLAKE, of Clevedon, Somerset, has printed, in a pamphlet of ninety-six pages, another of his ingenious researches into the history of the West country, which he entitles "Saint Richard the King of Englishmen, and his Territory, A.D. 700—720." As readers of his other works will anticipate, he here pours forth a flood of curious learning concerning early Teutonic settlements in Devon and Celtic migrations, as evidenced by place-names, the dedications of churches, &c. To the main paper he has added one on "The Celt and Teuton in Exeter," read before the Archaeological Institute in 1873; and also another on "Faignton, Devon," which appeared in the ACADEMY of September 14, 1889. Mr. Kerslake has printed only fifty copies of his pamphlet; but he will gladly present one to any person interested in the subject who may address him as above.

WITH reference to a note in the ACADEMY of last week, a correspondent calls our attention to the fact that Thackeray's Essay on Cruikshank was reprinted in 1885 by George Redway, "Edited with a Prefatory Note on Thackeray as Artist and Art Critic," by Mr. W. E. Church.

FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES.

AN article on Cardinal Newman, by Mr. Wilfrid Meynell, will appear in the September number of the Contemporary Review.

MR. KARL BLIND will have an essay in the forthcoming number of the Fortnightly Review on "An Old Greek Explorer of Britain and the Teutonic North"; that is, on the voyages of Pytheas, whose credibility, so much impugned by Strabo, has been rehabilitated by modern scholarship.

THE September number of the Newbery House Magazine will open with an article entitled "Agnosticism and Christianity: Elmerism and Paul Nugent," with a letter from Mr. Gladstone; and the Correspondence will contain a letter by the late Dr. Pusey on "The Court of Lord Penzance." Among the other contents are "Family Prayers," by the Rev. Dr. Augustus Jessop; an illustrated article on "Ecclesiastical Music in the Middle Ages," by Mr. W. J. Birkbeck; and the second instalment of Mr. Charles Welsh's "Notes on the History of Books for Children," treating of block-books and the earliest printed books.

MR. THOMAS STEVENS—who went to meet Mr. Stanley when the latter was coming from the interior of Africa—will contribute an article on "African River and Lake Systems" to the September Scribner's, which was suggested by several discussions of the subject while he was at Zanzibar and Cairo, notably with Mason Bey, who explored the White Nile in 1877.

AMONG the articles to appear in the United Service Magazine for September will be "The War Training of the Navy," by Sir G. Phipps Hornby; "The Clothing of the Army," by Mr. Hanbury, M.P.; "National Insurance," V. by Lord Charles Beresford, Capt. Eardley Wilmot, and Major Clarke; and "What are the Obstacles to Imperial Federation?" by a well-known Australian.

AMONG the contents of the September number of the Leisure Hour are an illustrated article on "Scheveningen," by Mr. Gilbert S. Macquoid, and a further instalment of Prof. Creighton's "Story of the English Shires," this time dealing with Leicester. Among the other continuations we may mention: "A Day in Ancient Athens, 470 B.C.," by Dr. R. F. Weymouth; Ruth Lamb's interesting account of "Edwin Waugh, the Lancashire Laureate"; and "The Continental Tourist in the Days of our Grandfathers."

MR. RICHARD LE GALLIENNE has an article in the forthcoming number of Lippincott's on "George Meredith's Nature-Poetry."

A NEW monthly periodical is announced for publication on October 1, entitled the Animals Guardian. As the name implies, it is to be devoted exclusively to the well-being of what are commonly called the lower animals, and in particular of those domestic animals which man has from time immemorial regarded in a special sense as his friends and companions. The price will be only threepence a month; and the publishing address is 32 Sackville-street, W.

Literary Opinion will reappear on September 1 in a new series, containing illustrated articles and reviews, and characterised by entirely fresh features. Mr. Stanley James Killby, the new editor and proprietor, who was until lately connected with the Publishers' Circular, will publish the paper at 138, Fleet-street.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

A CHILD'S FANCY.

"Hush, hush! Speak softly, Mother, dear,
So that the daisies may not hear;
For when the stars begin to peep
The pretty daisies go to sleep.

"See, Mother, round us on the lawn,
With soft, white lashes closely drawn,
They've shut their eyes so golden gay,
Which looked up through the long, long day.

"But now they're tired of all the fun,
Of bees and birds, of wind and sun,
Playing their game at hide and seek:
Then very softly let us speak."

A myriad stars above the child,
Looked from heaven and sweetly smiled;
But not a star in all the skies
Beamed on him with his Mother's eyes.

She stroked his curly chestnut head,
And, whispering very softly, said:
"I'd quite forgotten they might hear,
Thank you for that reminder, dear."

MATHILDE BLIND.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

IT is the practice of some editors abroad as well as at home to arrange unappetising numbers for the dead months of August and September; but M. Uzanne cannot be charged with doing this in the August Lierre. It opens with a very interesting article, abundantly illustrated, on the portraits and caricatures of Victor Hugo. Some of them will be new even to careful Hugo students; but all bear out the curious fact noticed by such students—that the earlier portraits are hardly in the least like the later. This difference—between the men who are recognisable throughout life and those who change more or less wholly—is a well-known one, but it has rarely received more remarkable exemplification than in Hugo's case. Besides ephemeral matter, the number also contains the continuation of the bibliography of theatrical parodies and a small collection of unpublished letters by people of more or less mark, including an enthusiastic description of the South Kensington Museum in its early days, by M. Feuillet de Conches.

LETTERS, IN PART UNPUBLISHED, OF SAMUEL PEPYS.*

II.

Tanner MSS., Vol. XXIV., fol. 22.

PEPYS TO THOMAS TANNER.

May 5, 1695.

I have had a Cause in Parliamt, requiring such attendance on behalfe of a Friend all the latter part of its Session, as has hardly left mee a Thought at Liberty to any other Use. Not that I could lye all this while without lookeing over your late learned Present† to mee. But it was with a Head soe otherwise filled, as left mee impatient for a second Peruseall. And this I began the very Houre after y<sup>e</sup> Prorogacion, and as I advance, have perfect amends made mee for y<sup>e</sup> Dissatisfaction soe long sustained from y<sup>e</sup> Want of it.

Your Choice of y<sup>e</sup> Subject, with y<sup>e</sup> Paynes & Patience evidenced in your handling of it, doe enough shew what the World may hope for of Publique Good, from one soe earlily fitted & disposed to the Service of it, as you are. Whereof noe Man can bee more sensible; soe should None (did it ever come within my power) with more satisfaction improve it to your Encouragem<sup>t</sup> & Benefitt, then my selfe. And pray spare not to challenge it of mee, whenever you shall have any cause to thinke mee in a condition of making this good. In the meane time I give you many thanks for y<sup>e</sup> kindnesse of y<sup>e</sup> Present; though I can't but at y<sup>e</sup> same time chide you *** you putt your selfe to, in y<sup>e</sup> cloathing it; *** with you in y<sup>e</sup> choice allsoe of *** many more ends at Once, then any thing hitherto extant upon that Subject; besides y<sup>e</sup> many Instructive Remakes, in your Preface, which are wholly your owne, & some of them such, as I could wish y<sup>e</sup> Age more worthy of.

And now that you are thus entirely & happily delivered of y<sup>e</sup> Monastica, & soe farr gone as you are sayd to bee with y<sup>e</sup> Leland, what if I should putt you in minde of a Worke I have heretofore (I thinke) mention'd to you? I meane, that of continuing Dr. Heylin's Succession of our Princes, Nobles & Bishops.

I ought not (I know) to take upon mee y<sup>e</sup> becoming a Prompter to one, who has already given soe good Proofes of his owne judgement in the choice of his Subjects. But when I consider the universall Reception this Booke has found among all Dealers with English History; together with the affinity it has to y<sup>e</sup> Study you seeme soe peculiarly affected with; y<sup>e</sup> little Compasse (comparatively) which y<sup>e</sup> Worke of it appears to mee to lye in; y<sup>e</sup> Knowledge of all y<sup>e</sup> Helps requisite towards it, & acquaintance with y<sup>e</sup> Roades leading to those Helps; & lastly, y<sup>e</sup> little Doubt to bee made of y<sup>e</sup> Entertainm<sup>t</sup> which this Worke, both for Delight & Use, must meeete with in y<sup>e</sup> World; I cannot but thinke it a Matter in its selfe very desirable; y<sup>e</sup> Business of it specially sorted to y<sup>e</sup> Genius; & what (in a Word) being well thought-on, cannot want wherewith fully to recompence the Time and Industry requisite for the accomplishing it. Give mee therefore the Liberty of recommending seriously the Thoughts of it to you; remaining with great Truth &c. *** [torn] Have you (in y<sup>e</sup> Monastique Enquiries) mett with nothing you could direct mee to, relating to y<sup>e</sup> House of y<sup>e</sup> Gray Fryers in London, now call'd Christ-Hospitall? §

Ballard Letters, Vol. I., fol. 151.

PEPYS TO DR. CHARLETT.

Sunday, May 5, 1695.

Honord Sr.—Soe long a Neglect of you, & in you a much greater of my selfe, ought to bee accounted-for; & therefore bee pleased to know, that I have in behalfe of a friend that is nearest to my selfe, & a most humble Servant of yours, beene concern'd in a most tiresome, vexatious & yet foolish Sollicitation in Parliamt for these last 6 or 7 Weekes, that has not left mee one Thought free till the houre of its Prorogation. But that being over, I am my owne Man againe, & consequently Yours; begging you, as late as it is, to accept of my thanks for y<sup>e</sup> many Favours I am in arreare in acknowledging to you, & first for your List of Benefactors, which God encrease. It answers fully the purpose of my Enquiry; only, if it were attainable without too much trouble, I could wish to know in reference to y<sup>e</sup> University, what they have given mee from Cambridge,* namely, y<sup>e</sup> very Words in w<sup>ch</sup> theyr Benefactor's Beneficences are com'memorated in generall in the publike Mention annually made of them; y<sup>e</sup> Words being (I suppose) stated with you, as they are with us. If therefore they are to bee easily had, pray finish y<sup>e</sup> Favour to mee in this particular, by letting mee have them.

If your Thoughts hold touching y<sup>e</sup> Engraving of theyr heads; I am of Opinion that y<sup>e</sup> D. of Somerset's in y<sup>e</sup> Cambridge-Print is as good a Sample for Size and every other Circumstance as you can follow; remembering only, that if you designe them in Mezzo Tinto as that is, you must not [expect] soe much Service (by §) of the Plates, as you might, if engraved in the ordin<sup>y</sup> Method. But y<sup>e</sup> Proofes, as many as you have, are then, out of all proportion (if well done) more safte and charming then the other; at least I thinke them soe. But then (I say) theyr Proofes of that perfection are comparatively but few.

I have never yet (that I remember) mett with y<sup>e</sup> head of St Simon Bennet's; but I will have my Eye after it, if it bee extant any where; & any other of y<sup>e</sup> List.

I have (by the interruption I have mention'd) beene prevented in applying my selfe any further touching y<sup>e</sup> Boy; but I suppose I shall not now bee long, without being able to say something to you about it.

You give mee mighty pleasure in what you observe to mee, touching y<sup>e</sup> Workes of that learned & good Man (whom I greatly honour) Dr. Wallis. I would bee glad One of y<sup>e</sup> larger Paper might bee layd aside & sent up to mee, by him that has y<sup>e</sup> uttering of them. I will defray the Carriage & pay y<sup>e</sup> price of y<sup>e</sup> Booke, whatever it is sett at, to the person that brings it mee. And in Generall I approve of the Advertisement you speake of, touching y<sup>e</sup> Numb<sup>r</sup> of Copys with large Paper, there being many Buyers that would bee glad to have such, if they knew how.

'Tis wonderfull what you tell mee concerning the vivacity & Force of Memory of Dr. Wallis at y<sup>e</sup> Age hee now happily beares. Indeed it seemes to mee next to incredible, & soe much I would doe towards a Proove of it by an Experiment, that though I dare not offer at y<sup>e</sup> Method you mention of compassing it, namely, by a Wager; Yet I will (if you like of it) adventure soe farr to tempt him to the Tryall, as to putt it into his power by it (if it succeedes) to doe an Act of Charity (which you are otherwise a friend to) I meane, that of putting this Hospitall-Boy into a Condition fitt for your Engraver's acceptance as an Apprentice, by making him worth Ten pounds to him besides his Clothes. And this I will doe, by making what y<sup>e</sup> Hospit<sup>l</sup> shall give (bee it any thing or nothing) up that Sum; if your Workeman shall like of it, & you concur to this method of inviting our learned Professour to y<sup>e</sup> exerting of his Strength (which would bee of lasting Report) in y<sup>e</sup> Particular you have led mee to this Enquiry after.

I am mightily pleased with your Young Man of Coventry the Bearer; † Indeed his Genius is such as I am fond of, & hope hee will meeete with some good Patron or other, (such as I thinke hee tells mee the Bp of Lichfield is likely to bee) that may support it. I have by y<sup>e</sup> help of our Friend Dr. Smith pleasur'd him in his Wish relating to St Robt Cotton's Library, & would on every other occasion bee glad to encourage & further him.

But what to say concerning Mr. Tanner indeed I am at a losse; His Labour and Appetit are usefull Antiquity shewne in his Notitia, is soe extraordinary. Not that I have yet had my Minde * Cf. Dr. Quadring's Letter, Diary and Corresp., p. 670.

† Cf. Pepys' letter introducing Humphrey Wanley to Dr. Thomas Smith, Diary and Corresp., p. 670.

at quiet enough (through the occasion I have mention'd) to goe through him with all the attention which I ought. But I am now enterd on it a second time since the Prorogation, & will not leave it, till I have done it more right. In the meane time I am greatly owing to you & to him, for y<sup>e</sup> respect hee has shewen in his chargeable Compl<sup>t</sup> to mee upon it. Nor shall I forgett to make the most I can of any Power I may bee thought to have over him, in relation to Dr. Heylin, who (as you rightly note) of all others seems to have beene yett the least beholden to y<sup>e</sup> World with regard to any of his excellent Labours, & particular[ly] that here meant, in Proportion to the use that is & may bee further made of it. . . .

C. E. DOBLE.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- DEMANCHE, G. Au Canada et chez les Peaux-rouges. Paris: Hachette. 5 fr.
GABELSBERGER, F. X., u. seine Kunst. München: Franz. 2 M.
LATZINA, F. Géographie de la république Argentine. Paris: Challamel. 6 fr.
RAAB, E. Studien zur poetischen Technik Petrarca's. Leipzig: Fock. 1 M. 20 Pf.
SCHULZE, L. F. M. Führer auf Java. Leipzig: Grieben. 9 M.
SÉVILLE, PAUL. L'architecture moderne en Angleterre. Paris: Libr. des Bibliophiles. 10 fr.

HISTORY, LAW, ETC.

- BEITRÄGE ZUR GESCHICHTE DER STADT ROSTOCK. Hrsg. v. K. Koppmann. 1. Hft. Rostock: Stiller. 2 M.
FÜRTH, FRIDR. H. A. v. Beiträge u. Material zur Geschichte der Aachener Patrizier-Familien. 3. Bd. Aachen: Cremer. 14 M.
QUELEN ZUR SCHWEIZER GESCHICHTE. 9. Bd. U. Campelli historia raetica. Tom. II. Hrsg. v. P. Plattner. Basel: Geering. 16 M.
SCHULTE, J. F. v. Die Summa d. Paucapalea üb. das Decretum Gratiani. Giessen: Roth. 6 M.
VOLLMANN, F. Ueb. das Verhältnis der späteren Stoa zur Sklaverei im römischen Reiche. Regensburg: Cöppenrath. 75 Pf.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- BARTELS, F. Pädagogische Psychologie nach Hermann Lotze in ihrer Anwendung auf die Schulpraxis u. auf die Erziehung. 2 Tl. Jena: Mauke. 3 M. 20 Pf.
FISCHER, H. Beiträge zur vergleichenden Morphologie der Pollenkörner. Breslau: Korn. 4 M.
POMPECKI, J. F. Die Trilobiten-fauna der Ost- u. West-preussischen Diluvialgebirge. Königsberg: Koch. 3 M.
PUISSEUX, P. Leçons de cinématique. Paris: Carré. 9 fr.
STOCK, O. Kantianismus u. Kriticismus. 1. Das Problem der Kritik der reinen Vernunft. Leipzig: Fock. 1 M.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- BIRT, Th. De Catulli ad Mallium epistula. Marburg: Elwert. 1 M.
FEIGE, H. Die Geschichte d. Mär 'Abhdiss' u. seines Jüngers Mar Qardagh. Hrsg. u. übers. Kiel: Haeseler. 6 M.
GUENTHER, P. De ea, quae inter Timaeum et Lycophronem intercedit, ratione. Leipzig: Fock. 1 M. 20 Pf.
HOFFMANN, O. A. Hermes u. Kerykeion. Studie zur Urbedeutg. d. Hermes. Marburg: Elwert. 1 M. 50 Pf.
KUNZ, F. Die älteste römische Epik in ihrem Verhältnis zu Homer. Leipzig: Fock. 1 M. 20 Pf.
KÖHLER, A. Ueb. die Sprache der Briefe d. P. Cornelius Lentulus Spinther (Cicero ep. ad fam. xii, 14 u. 15). Nürnberg: Ballhorn. 1 M.
MOERNER, F. De P. Papinii Statii Thebaide quaestiones criticae, grammaticae, metricae. Königsberg: Koch. 1 M. 20 Pf.
MUNK, E. D. Samaritaners Margah Erzählung üb. den Tod Moses'. Königsberg: Koch. 1 M. 20 Pf.

CORRESPONDENCE.

CHAUCER'S PRIORESS'S NUN-CHAPLAIN.

Temple Gardens, Lincoln: August 18, 1890.

Some years since I proved in THE ACADEMY, by the instance of a Hampshire convent, that the abbess at the head of it had a nun-chaplain, or secretary, reader, &c., so that none of the many proposed emendations of Chaucer's lines was needed, in which he said that his prioress had with her "another nonne . . . that was her chapeleyn and prestes thre."

The like proof may be got from Bishop Longland's Register (1521-47) in Bishop Alnwick's tower in the Old Palace at Lincoln. On October 1, 1530, Bishop Longland issued his Injunctions (leaf 109) for the reform of certain abuses in the Benedictine Convent of † Notitia Monastica (1695).

* Continued from ACADEMY, August 9, 1890, p. 111.

‡ MS. imperfect.

§ Of which Pepys was a governor. In 1699 Tanner heard that he had privately printed some letters about the abuses of Christ's Hospital (Diary and Corresp., ed. Bohn, 1868, iv. 263).

Elnestowe (Elstow, Beds), and, among other things, ordered that, under pain of disobedience, "the ladye abbesse haue no moo susters frome hensforth in hir householde, but oonly foure, with hir chapleyn. . . ."

"Also we will, commaund and inioyne to dame Katherine Wingate, the said ladye abbesse hir chapleyn, vnder payne of contempte, that nightly she rise and be att matens within the said monasterye, with hir other religious susters ther; And that frome hensforth she do not suppe or breke hir faste in the buttry of the said abbesse, nether with the stuard, nor with any other secular person or persones, vnder the said payne. And likewise We Inioyne, to alle them that hereafter shal be in the said office or room of the ladye abbesse hir chapleyn, vnder the payne aboue expressed [excommunication]."

In another set of Injunctions, on leaf 150 back of his Register, Bishop Longland enjoins a lady prioress

"and frome hensforth that ye suffre noon of your chapleyns to haue in ther keeping eny keye of the churche or cloistre dores; butt that the president of your religion, or sextene [sacristan] kepe them, and open and shitt the same dores att houres conuenient, that is to say, vij. of the clock in the mourning. And after masse, your churche dores to be shitt till evensong be doon; And streight after evensong, to shitt them for all night."

No doubt like evidence as to nun-chaplain's can be got from every late Bishop's Register in England; and I call the attention of my fellow-students of early English to this new stock of material for copying and publication, which I have not till lately known of as one of our sources. Of course, ecclesiastics' contempt of the vulgar tongue caused few documents to be drawn up in English; but all Registers about 1400 ought to have a sprinkling of them, and some ought to show local words and grammar. F. J. FURNIVALL.

BELLESHEIM'S "HISTORY OF THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN IRELAND."

Youghal: August 18, 1890.

Influenced partly by an enthusiastic review that appeared in a Dublin journal some weeks since, and in part by a reason to be mentioned hereafter, I procured a copy of Canon Bellesheim's Geschichte der Katholischen Kirche in Irland. The workers in the field of Irish Church History are so few that one is disposed rather to welcome than to criticise an accession to their number. But when we are asked to assign a pedestal in history as lofty as that occupied by the Grammatica Celtica in philology, one is forced to examine the character of the work it is proposed thus signally to distinguish.

Prefix to the book is a list of the works that deal with the subject-matter. Those who have not kept in touch with continental research will find this of some service. It is not to be concluded, however, that the compiler has consulted all his authorities at first hand. Take, for example, the following:—"Mabillon, Joh.: Museum Italicum, 2 voll. Paris 1687." As a pendant, here is an instructive parallel:—

Moran: Essays, &c., Bellesheim, Geschichte, p. 276. &c., p. 595.

"Mabillon was the first to publish a very ancient Missal which, for centuries, had been preserved in the famous monastery of Bobbio, founded in 610 by Columbanus. It came then into the Ambrosian at Milan and was published by Mabillon in 1724. The learned Benedictine judged the MS. . . . to be more than one thousand years old."*

* Museum Italicum, vol. i. p. 275. † Mabillon, Mus. Ital. i., 275.

But John Mabillon lay seventeen years in his honoured grave at the alleged date of writing and publishing! It will, accordingly, excite no surprise to find the Canon adopting (p. 595) the Cardinal's conclusion that the Missal in question was drawn up for the use of an Irish, not a continental, church.

The foregoing is fairly typical. A pretty close search has failed to discover any fresh facts or original treatment in the volume. Connected herewith lay my chief interest in the work. There is a complex problem which it was natural to anticipate a writer within easy reach of the sources would seek to solve. What, namely, in substance and arrangement, was the Irish cursus, or Divine Office? What change did our Youghal saint, Cuaran of the Wisdom, effect therein that got him the title "of the None," which still lives hereabouts in a native couplet? What is the full significance of the (seventh) chapter, de Cursu Psalmorum, of the Regula Coenobialis? These are radical questions that still await elucidation. Well, all you will here find thereabout is the erroneous statement at third hand (p. 597) that the Cursus Scottorum signified the Liturgy, that is, the Mass!

After this, it becomes superfluous to point out all the errors adopted respecting the Stowe Missal. One will suffice. The displacement of folios 28-29, whereby a Litany is introduced into the canon of the Mass, remains undetected (p. 598).

The volume, in fact, is simply a digest of material accessible in print. Allow it to be tolerably comprehensive and passably accurate, and you have strained the limits of courtesy. No MS. authority (the catalogue contains the titles of the Royal Irish Academy's published series) appears to have been consulted. Herein, unlike Moran, Malone, and others such whom he quotes from, the author has exhibited laudable discretion. At the same time, the absence of independent work is made glaringly evident in the repetition of statements and inferences long since disproved.

One error is charming in its novelty. The conclusion of the well-known (partly false) memorandum on the 16th folio of the Book of Armagh is thus rendered:

Book of Armagh, fol. 16d. Bellesheim, Geschichte, p. 274.

"Et quod scripsi finivit pro omnibus regibus Maceriae." "Und was ich schrieb, bestätigte er im Namen aller Könige mit seinem Wachssiegel."

Maceria (a stone wall: here, in a secondary sense, the enclosure formed thereby) is employed as the Latin equivalent of the Irish Caisel, i.e., Cashel, the residence of the Munster kings. But the translator evidently took cera, "wax," to be one of the factors; whence by some unknown process he evolved "wax-seal"!

A few specimens will make it clear how completely textual and chronological accuracy lie outside the compiler's horizon.

The obit of Conall, containing the vor nihili "oferavit" (!), is quoted (p. 105) with a reference to Skene. The true reading "obtulit," lay ready [to hand in Reeves (Adamnan, p. 435)].

In the passage transcribed (p. 143) from the Letter of St. Columbanus to the Fathers of the Gallican Synod, the meaningless "rescipient" is given, no notice being taken of "recipient," the suggested editorial emendation (Migne, lxxx. 266).

The charter of the abbot Beatus of Honau, we are told (p. 229), is subscribed by seven Irish-named bishops. In the note, which professes to be copied from a work published in 1778, only six are supplied. The signature of Erdonnach, the seventh, is to be found in Zeuss (Gram. Celt., xiv).

The Annals of Ulster, it is said (p. 219), begin an entry at A.D., 920, as follows: "On the Saturday before the feast of St. Martin, which was the tenth of November, &c." But in that year the Saturday in question fell, not on the tenth, but on the fourth, of the month. The true date is A.D., 921, in which St. Martin's Day (Nov. 11) was Sunday, the vigil consequently being the tenth.

Zimmer is followed (p. 632) in ascribing the transcription of the Leyden Codex of Priscian to the ninth century. But the date given by Dubthach, the scribe:—"tertio Idus Apriles, tertio anno decemno [vennalis] cicli, tertio die an [te] Pascha, tertia decima luna incipiente"—apply equally to a year in the first half of the preceding century.

An unaccountable error occurs at p. 474. Among the benefactors of the Cistercians is mentioned Roderic O'Connor, king of Connaught. His death is assigned to 1233. But it was his son, Aed, who lost his life in that year. Worse still. At foot we find "Sciant omnes. . . . quod ego, O., Dei gratia Rex Connactiae, &c." Here O., which plainly stands for Oculus, is taken by the author (apparently at second hand) to signify Roderic!

In questions demanding critical skill similar deficiencies are observable. In three places (pp. 25n, 158, 607), the chapter added to the Regula Coenobialis in Holsten's Codex Regularum is accepted as genuine. The Canon, in fact, seems unaware of any question of spuriousness connected therewith.

"Maclruain Tuinlacha, episcopus et miles Christi, in pace dormiuit," the obit constructed by Dr. Reeves ("Culdees," Tr. R.I.A. Antiq. xxiv. 126) from the entry in the Annals of Ulster, is received without question (pp. 218, 239). But as long ago as the Christmas Eve of 1887 (ACADEMY, No. 816, pp. 425-6) I made good the commentitious character of the original against a disputant not disposed to admit proof without scrutiny.

Tigernach, the annalist, is said (p. 612) to have employed Dominical Letters. But a glance at O'Connor's edition (Rev. Hib. Script. ii.) would have shown how utterly baseless such an assertion was. The ferial numbers were always used by Tigernach, as by the other chroniclers. The solar cycle of nineteen, we also learn, was unknown to him. This must be admitted. It may, however, be pleaded in extenuation that the cycle in question was first made public by Canon Bellesheim in Mainz, A.D. 1890.

I conclude with a discovery whereat I rub my eyes and exclaim utinam! The Annals of Ulster, ma's é do thoil é, are written in Latin (in lateinischer Sprache geschrieben). You will find it so stated at p. 614.

The forthcoming second and third volumes may perhaps exhibit good work. Candour, however, compels the admission that the portion now published contains no earnest thereof. B. MACCARTHY.

P.S.—The decipherment and translation attributed to me at p. 335 are without foundation. The author has been misinformed. I deem it necessary to make the correction, as my reading and version of the Note in question will shortly appear in print.—B. M. C.

THE MSS. OF THE NEW TESTAMENT.

London: August 13, 1890.

Will you allow me briefly to advert to Prof. Sanday's friendly review of my "Collation of Evan. 604, &c." in the ACADEMY of August 9?

I do not wish to enter the arena of controversy in an elaborate way. But there is one point in his article which calls for a reply, or rather for an explanation; another, with regard to which I must seriously call in question his deductions; and yet a third place, where I would be glad to clear up what I conceive to be the greatest misconception of the whole problem by the advocates, or rather the champions, of the genealogical method.

(1) My own MS. (dealt with in Appendix A) should have figured in Dr. Gregory's new list, as—to the best of my recollection—I supplied him with particulars of it in 1887, and had I known when his work would issue from the press I would have reminded him of the existence of my possession. It was purchased from Mr. Quaritch by me long after the issue of Dr. Scrivener's third Introduction, and therefore, of course, did not appear in his list.

(2) Prof. Sanday says that Dean Burgon's "defence" was quite unnecessary at my hands "on this side the water." I have attempted no defence; I have only eulogised him as a friend, a scholar, and a worker. But I cannot allow that his "defence" is uncalled for.

My reviewer stated as his own deliberate conviction that, in Dean Burgon's elaborate indictment of the Revision, he had entirely lacked "a grasp on the central conditions of the problem and a real understanding of his opponent's position" (Contemporary Review, December, 1881). I am glad Prof. Sanday has now changed his mind on this subject. But Archdeacon Farrar has not yet retracted what he dared to say in the Contemporary Review for March, 1882 (nor has he made good his assertion) that he could "furnish a reply to the [Quarterly] reviewer's allegations sentence by sentence and page by page." Bishop Ellicott, too (or, to be more correct, "Two Members of the New Testament Company"), said that in neither of his first two articles had the Quarterly Reviewer "attempted a serious examination of the arguments which they [Drs. Westcott and Hort] allege in support of their text," and in a note on the appearance of his third article, that nothing in their pamphlet required modification (The Revisers and the Greek Text of the New Testament, 1882).

Surely severe enough statements these to call for a defence, though I offered none. If necessary I can and will make one.

(3) "The misconception of the whole problem" to which I referred above I take to be this: The genealogical method, conceived for the most part on very hard and fast lines, we cannot adhere to in the form in which it has generally been presented, owing to the extraordinarily eclectic character of individual MSS., whether uncial or cursive, old or young, which renders the task of providing them each with fewer than a hundred parents next to impossible. Of these antithetic readings, found in close conjunction in a single MS., I have said in my Preface "such antagonistic readings are so common throughout these studies in all MSS. that they form an especial feature, which has never yet been properly dealt with. And it is a feature so important and yet so complex that it is desirable that a treatise should be devoted to it. I think that such an examination, if well carried out, would remove some stumbling blocks and cut away some of the undergrowth which hampers our progress at present, and which divides us often into opposing factions."

And I cannot but think that most insufficient attention has been paid to Martin's researches and demonstrations in this respect, as also to the statistical results of Burgon's laborious comparison of our oldest uncials. I fear me also that Prof. Sanday does not sufficiently appreciate the bearing of the humble endeavours to enlarge somewhat this most interesting field of research as evidenced in my own tabulated statements. H. C. HOSKIER.

"THE MEMORIALS OF ST. EDMUNDSBURY."

Dublin: August 10, 1890.

Some of your readers may have noticed in the Saturday Review for July 25, a review of a recent Rolls book edited by me, the Memorials of St. Edmundsbury. The subject-matter of the book is full of importance and interest to the historical student. Therefore, as the Saturday Review does not admit correspondence, I ask you on general grounds to allow me a reply in the ACADEMY.

I do not complain of the reviewer's acerbity of tone. There is room for much difference of opinion as to the details of such a book, and no worker who respects his work but is conscious of the distance by which he falls short of his own ideal. At the same time, since much that the reviewer has said is neither fair nor true, I should be glad, if you would grant me the opportunity, to set myself right with possible readers of the book by the following plain statement.

The reviewer, by the line that he pursues, creates—and evidently intended to create—the impression that the bulk of what I have printed in connexion with Bury has been published before, and need not have been reproduced. "The larger part of this book," he says, "consists of matter which has already appeared in print." Now there are five principal pieces in the volume—Gaufridus de Fontibus de Infantia, Samson de Miraculis, Abbo de Fleury de Passione Sancti Edmundi, Hermannus de Miraculis, and the Chronicle of Jocelin de Brakelonde. Of these, the first two have never appeared in print before; the third and fourth have never till now been printed in England; the fifth, as everyone knows, was well edited fifty years ago for the Camden Society.

The tract by Gaufridus, the reviewer says, "is in Migne's Patrologia." But this is not the case. There is no such tract in Migne's Patrologia. Of the work by Samson—the verification of which gives us a lost work mentioned as such in Hardy's Catalogue (vol. iii. p. 30)—the reviewer says nothing.

Of the two treatises not before printed in this country, the first is that of Abbo. If the reviewer thinks that because this valuable tract was printed by Surius in the sixteenth century, and recently by the Abbé Migne, it was not worth while to reprint it here, he differs altogether from the Bishop of Oxford. Dr. Stubbs, now some ten years ago, suggested to me to edit for the Rolls series a work on St. Edmund, and thought that it would be most fitly headed by Abbo's tract. With regard to the work of Hermannus, the reviewer's mind appears to be in a state of confusion. "The purely hagiographical parts of the book," he says, "are in the Collectio Amplissima of Martene," who omitted the rest "as foreign to his purpose." What this means I have not the most distant idea. Martene stopped where he did because the Parisian MS. which he was printing gave him no more material. There is no discrimination, no distinction; he breaks off with a story about a cripple, and in the next section the unabridged Hermannus proceeds with a story about a deaf woman. The most important portions of the work in a historical sense, and the curious detailed account of the attempt of Bishop Herfast to extend his jurisdiction over the monastery, come after, not before, the point where Martene breaks off. It is true that of this portion which does not occur in Martene, Dr. Liebermann has given us a scholarly and in all ways excellent edition in his Ungedruckte . . . Geschichtsquellen. But the object of that work was different from that of Memorials of St. Edmundsbury; and though I willingly admit my editorial inferiority to Dr. Liebermann, I hold that a work on Bury published in England would not have been complete without the full text of the work of Hermannus.

The fifth work remains; the Chronicle of Jocelin de Brakelonde, edited formerly for the Camden Society. Whether this should have been reprinted is of course a matter of opinion.

But considering the general object of my work—to present a tolerably complete picture of the life of the great Bury monastery, and the literary activity of the monks—Jocelin's work, throwing so much light on both, will be deemed, by some good judges at least, to have called for reprinting.

Your readers will therefore understand that out of five treatises, two were never printed before, two are now first printed in England, and the fifth is important enough to make its reproduction fairly defensible. As to minor criticisms, which involve such important points as the degree of disreputability attaching to the birth of Geoffrey of York, the meaning of the name "de Fontibus," the substitution of the reading "castellum" for "castellum," and so on, I will not, though the reviewer is often wrong and always unfair, trouble you with any further mention of them. I must, however, notice an uncivil and intemperate remark about my "fatuous note" at the foot of p. 63. Now there is no note at the foot of p. 63. If he means the note on p. 61, if his idle verbiage about "the rights of a bishop in a cathedral monastery," really refers to that, he proves that he neither understands the subject of ecclesiastical exemptions in itself, nor what I have said about them at p. xxxi. An exemption was sometimes a good, sometimes a bad thing, according to the circumstances; and to attribute to me any fixed opinion of "the advantages of the system," is ludicrously to misrepresent what I really hold.

T. ARNOLD.

THE OGAM STONES IN THE ISLE OF MAN.

Seaton, Devon: August 17, 1890.

As the Old Irish druí, gen. druad, like the Gaulish druis, gen. druidos, is a stem in d, the "droata" which Prof. Rhys (ACADEMY, August 16, 1890, p. 134) finds on an Ogam stone is an impossible form. Either he has misread, or (as is more likely) the Ogam-writer has miswritten, droata for druada. The error has arisen from the similarity in Ogmic script of druada and droata.

WHITLEY STOKES.

TAYLOR THE PLATONIST.

Armytage, Bowdon: August 18, 1890.

You ask if the bibliography of the works of Taylor the Platonist contained in the notice of him which I have contributed to the Library is complete. It would be a rash assertion to say that any bibliography is complete, but at least I have aimed at completeness. There are not many who care anything about Thomas Taylor, but there are a few here and in America. I have printed a small edition of this notice of Taylor, and shall be glad to give a copy to anyone interested who cares to write to me for it. In this way I may hear of corrections and additions until it is "complete."

WILLIAM E. A. AXON.

SCIENCE.

SOME AMERICAN GEOLOGICAL BOOKS.

Geology of the Quicksilver Deposits of the Pacific Slope. With an Atlas. By George F. Becker. (Washington: Government Printing Office.) Although quicksilver is known to occur in a great number of localities, both in the Old and in the New World, yet its occurrence in sufficient quantity to be of any industrial importance is limited to extremely few districts. The famous mines of Almaden in Spain, the ancient workings at Idria in Carniola, the almost abandoned mines of Huancavelica in Peru, and the rich but little-known deposits of Kwei-Chau in China—these, with the Californian region described in the volume under review, complete the list of the important quicksilver localities of the world. In California the metal was first detected in 1845, and deposits of its ores have since been extensively worked for a distance of about forty miles along the Pacific Slope. The economic value, not less than the scientific interest, of this quicksilver belt justified the United States Geological Survey in undertaking its systematic examination. Mr. Becker's admirable report, forming the thirteenth monograph issued by the Survey, well illustrates the comprehensive manner in which this energetic body conducts its work. One of the ablest officers of the Survey, aided by a staff of efficient assistants, carries on the field-work for several seasons; a vast number of rock-specimens are collected, sliced, and examined microscopically; elaborate chemical researches are undertaken by specialists in the laboratory with the view of throwing light on the natural reactions which have produced the ores; and, finally, in order to compare the Californian deposits with the occurrence of quicksilver ores in other parts of the world, Mr. Becker is commissioned to visit Europe and examine the mines of Spain and Tuscany. Such work conducted by such men has naturally resulted in a monograph of exceptional value to all who are interested in mining geology. Nor will the theoretical geologist be less attracted by this volume; for the author raises certain questions of deep interest, and arrives, in some cases, at conclusions likely to excite keen discussion. It is only fair, however, to admit that he invariably cites evidence of a very cogent character in support of the views which he enunciates. Some of his most interesting conclusions relate to the origin of the serpentine occurring in the quicksilver belt, most of which he believes to have been derived, directly or indirectly, from the alteration of certain sandstones. He regards some of the granitic rocks of the quicksilver region as part of the original crust of the earth, the primeval floor resulting from the consolidation of the surface of a molten globe. On many general questions, such as the origin of granite and on metamorphism, Mr. Becker's views are well worth hearing; but we prefer turning to a problem which bears more directly on the subject of this monograph—the genesis of the ores of quicksilver. The author considers that the chemical and geological evidence at his command tends to show that the original source of the mercury in the rocks of the Pacific Slope was the granite, and that from this rock the metal has been dissolved out by the action of thermal waters of volcanic origin. Hot sulphurous springs bursting through the granite appear to have carried the mercury in the form of a solution of a double sulphide of mercury and sodium, from which the mercury was finally deposited as cinnabar. It is well-known that this mineral is in course of deposition at the present day from the waters of Steamboat Springs in Nevada, and Sulphur Bank in California. The actual conditions under which the mercury existed in solution, and the source whence it was originally derived, form obscure chemico-geological problems which have been treated by Mr. Becker with marked ability.

Seventh Annual Report of the United States Geological Survey. By J. W. Powell. (Washington: Government Printing Office.) Major Powell, the able director of this Survey, commences his seventh report with a general sketch of the plan and organisation of his department, and passes thence to a specific account of the year's work in topography, geology proper, and palaeontology. Following the director come the chief officers, each with an administrative report on his own section. But as these reports bring down the history of the work no nearer than the year 1886, we prefer turning to what are termed Special Papers—a series of valuable memoirs of general and permanent interest. Among these papers we may specially mention one by Mr. J. P. Iddings on "Obsidian Cliff," a remarkable formation at the north end of Beaver Lake in the Yellowstone National Park. Stretching for a distance of about half a mile, and rising in places to a height of 200 feet, the cliff represents a great flow of lava which was poured forth over an old surface of rhyolite. Its most notable feature is the columnar structure which it presents locally—a structure which is commonly associated with basalt, but which occurs also in many other igneous rocks, though extremely rare in obsidian; in fact the conditions under which the lava has cooled so as to become vitreous are generally unfavourable to the development of columns. At Obsidian Cliff, however, there are beautiful columns of lustrous black volcanic glass, fifty or sixty feet high, and nearly vertical in position. Mr. Iddings concludes, contrary to the opinion of some other petrographers, that the spherulites and lithophysae, or hollow spheres, occurring in the obsidian are of primary crystallisation out of the molten glass, and not formed by alteration subsequently to its solidification. Of the other papers contained in this report attention may be called to Mr. Chamberlain's description of "The Rock-Scorings of the Great Ice Invasions," and to Mr. Chatard's account of "Salt Making in the United States." There are also several good papers on local geology.

Handbook of Geology for the Use of Canadian Students. By Sir J. William Dawson. (Montreal: Dawson Brothers.) It is well that each country should possess its own text-books of geology, in order that local illustrations may be introduced, and the student be thus taught the principles of the science from the rocks of his own home. Sir William Dawson, who has had great experience in teaching geology at the McGill University in Montreal, has prepared a capital little manual for special use in Canada. He first introduces the reader to the general principles of the science, dealing successively with the elements of lithology, palaeontology, physical geology, and stratigraphy. Throughout this section the examples are taken as far as possible from Canadian minerals, rocks, and fossils. Then follows a sketch of geological chronology, ascending from the Laurentian age through the long course of the earth's history up to the historic period. Finally, the physical geography and geology of the Dominion of Canada is carefully detailed, so that the scientific traveller may find here a convenient local guide. The arrangement is topographical; and some of the regions are described by the author's son, Dr. G. M. Dawson, who for many years has been doing admirable work on the Geological Survey of Canada. Looking at Sir William Dawson's work as a whole, it may be said to serve its purpose—that of teaching Canadian geology to Canadian students—in an excellent manner, though it undoubtedly admits of many improvements. Several of the definitions of rocks, for instance, will hardly satisfy the requirements of the modern lithologist. Many of the illustrations, too, are needlessly crude, and some require explanation by the addition of a scale; for instance, a student looking at figure 143 will naturally conclude that a belemnite was a bigger creature than an ichthyosaurus. The book lacks an index; but that, after all, is a matter of minor importance.

Report of Royal Commission on the Mineral Resources of Ontario. (Toronto: Printed by order of the Legislative Assembly.) With the view of eliciting information respecting the mineral wealth of the province of Ontario, and the best means of developing it, a Royal Commission was appointed in 1888. The five commissioners seem to have entered on their work with zest. They travelled through the province, took evidence from local authorities, collected specimens of minerals, and finally wrote an excellent report, forming a volume of between five and six hundred pages. The volume opens with a general sketch of the geology of Ontario, treated with special reference to economic minerals. This is followed by some useful notes on the mines and works visited by the Commission, and a discussion of the influence of commercial conditions upon mining industry. A section is devoted to mining laws, including a general review of the laws of other countries. Another chapter deals with the metallurgical works of the province; and finally some useful suggestions are offered for promoting the development of mining industry. The Commissioners recommend that a geological survey of the province, with especial regard to the occurrence of useful minerals, should be undertaken; that a museum should be established for the proper display of minerals and products obtained therefrom; that annual statistics of mining and metallurgy should be published; and that provision should be made for the scientific and technical training of those who are about to engage in the management of mines and smelting works. It is to be hoped that recommendations so sound and sensible will receive the attention they deserve, and will contribute, in due course, to the prosperity of the mineral industries of Ontario.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE GODS ZUR AND BEN-HADAD.

Oxford: August 15, 1890.

In the last number of the Zeitschrift für die alttestamentliche Wissenschaft (x. 1) an interesting article has been published by Dr. Wiegand on the god Zur, whose name, he points out, is met with in the Old Testament. The existence of the god is verified by a proper name which occurs in one of the Babylonian contract-tablets published by Dr. Strassmaier. One of the witnesses to a deed dated in the fourteenth year of Nabonidos (Strassmaier, No. 764) is called Zur-natanu, the son of Addu-taqummu. The word Zur is preceded by the determinative of divinity, showing that it is the name of a god; and as the form natanu is Syrian or Hebrew, the Assyrian form being nadanu, it is clear that Zur must be a deity of Syrian or Palestinian origin.

The name of Addu-natanu "Hadad has given" is found in a document dated in the fifth year of Nabonidos (Str. No. 201). In a cuneiform tablet (K. 2100), published by Dr. Bezold, Addu and Dadu are stated to be the names of the Assyrian Rimmon in Syria and Palestine. But we also find the name of Bin-Addu, that is to say Ben-Hadad, "the son of Hadad," preceded by the determinative of divinity, and therefore a divine name like that of Addu. In two deeds dated in the second and third years of Nabonidos (Str. Nos. 85, 187) mention is made of Bin-Addu-natanu, the son of Addiya. The determinative which precedes Bin-Addu proves that Ben-Hadad was the name of a god. He would have represented the youthful deity who in the Syrian pantheon accompanied the Sun-god.

A. H. SAYCE.

P.S.—The credit of first discovering that the Biblical Ben-Hadad is to be found in the name Bin-Addu-natanu belongs to Mr. Pinches. He pointed it out as long ago as 1883 (Proc. Soc. Bib. Arch., Feb. 1883). It is strange that so little notice has been taken of the fact.—A. H. S.

SCIENCE NOTES.

MR. DAVID SYME, of Melbourne, is the author of a new work on Evolution, which will be published shortly by Messrs. Kegan Paul, Trench, Trübner & Co. The author, while professing himself an evolutionist, puts forth a new and quite anti-Darwinian theory of the origin of species.

IN their report, presented last year, the Commissioners for the Exhibition of 1881 announced their intention of appropriating an annual sum of £5,000 to the establishment of scholarships, to enable the most promising students in provincial colleges of science to complete their studies either in those colleges or in the larger institutions of the metropolis. To assist them in preparing a scheme for the distribution and regulation of these scholarships, the Commissioners obtained the services of Profs. Garnett, Huxley, Norman Lockyer, Sir Henry Roscoe, and Sir William Thomson. To these were added two Commissioners, Mr. Mundella and Sir Lyon Playfair, the latter of whom acted as chairman. This committee has now reported that the scholarships should be of £150 a year in value, and tenable for two years, but in rare instances extended to three years by special resolution of the Commissioners; that the scholarships should be limited to those branches of science (such as physics, mechanics, and chemistry) the extension of which is specially important for our national industries; that the Commissioners shall from time to time select a certain number of provincial and colonial colleges in which special attention is given to scientific education, and give to each the power of nominating a student, of not less than three years' standing, to a scholarship, on the condition that he indicates high promise of capacity for advancing science or its applications; that the scholarships should be tenable in any university, either at home or abroad, or in some other institution to be approved by the Commissioners. The committee then considered the manner in which the scholarships should be distributed. On this point they were restricted by the present scheme to students in provincial institutions in which term, however, they suggested that colonial universities might be comprised. They thought it unnecessary to include in the scheme the universities of Oxford, Cambridge, and Dublin, in view of the large endowments of those bodies. The committee decided upon the allotment of an annual series of 17 scholarships, allocating 8 to colleges in England, 3 in Scotland, 2 in Ireland, 1 in Canada, and 2 in Australia. The present allotment—which it is to be noted, omits University College and King's College, London—is, however, experimental and temporary.

THE Clothworkers' Exhibition of fifty guineas for three years, tenable at Oxford or Cambridge by the best candidate in science at the examination for higher certificates, held in July under the authority of the Oxford and Cambridge Schools Examination Board, has been gained by Herbert Howard, of Denstone College, Staffordshire.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

MESSRS. SWAN SONNENSCHN & Co. have in preparation a translation of Prof. Seyffert's well-known Dictionary of Classical Mythology, Religion, Literature, Art, and Archaeology. It is to be edited by Prof. Nettleship, of Oxford, and Prof. Sandys, of Cambridge, and great care has been taken to secure the best possible illustrations. The English edition will contain more than 100 new cuts, and it is expected to be ready early in November. Every article is to date, Prof. Seyffert himself having promised additional matter for the English edition. It will form one large octavo volume.

PROF. F. MAX MÜLLER has given to the Open Court Publishing Company, of Chicago, the right of publishing in America the three popular lectures on "The Science of Language and its Place in General Education," which he delivered last year at the Oxford University Extension meeting, and he has himself carefully revised them for that purpose. They deal with such subjects as the difference between man and animals, the analysis of language, the cradle of the Aryas, and the importance of Sanskrit. The volume of 112 pages—which is handsomely printed and bound, though we cannot profess approval of the bluish ink adopted—further contains the paper entitled, "My Predecessors," which was contributed by the professor to the Contemporary Review about a year ago. It is here described as "an essay on the genesis of the idea of the identity of thought and language in the history of philosophy."

FINE ART.

A Selection from the Liber Studiorum of J. M. W. Turner. With a Historical Introduction by Frederick Wedmore, Practical Notes by Frank Short, and Extracts from the Writings of the Rev. Stopford Brooke and Others. (Blackie.)

THIS is a volume designed not for the collector and the connoisseur, but for the student and the practical worker in landscape art. Already excellent reproductions, both of the etchings and the finished plates of the Liber Studiorum, have been published by the Autotype Company, reproductions whose accurate fidelity left little to be desired. But the present series, which Mr. John Ward has edited, makes an effort to present, at a cost quite within the reach of the average student, the great work of Turner in something approaching to its totality, and to supplement the reproductions of the plates by such letterpress, original and selected from the best writers on the subject, as shall elucidate both their technical method and their artistic aim, and furnish clear direction as to the manner in which they may best be studied.

MR. Frederick Wedmore, so well known as a diligent student and collector of the Liber prints, who has already written much and excellently regarding them, contributes an Introduction, which tells in its author's always crisp and incisive English, what the learner needs to know of the general scheme of this great series of combined etching and mezzotint. He indicates the place which the prints occupy in relation to the other artistic work of Turner's life, and especially to the other series of landscape engravings for which he furnished the designs, and whose actual execution he more or less closely supervised. He touches on their connexion with the Liber Veritatis sketches of Claude—Turner's life-long rival—which were still being issued, in the form of Earlom's mezzotints, at the time when the Liber Studiorum was planned. He enumerates the engravers who aided the painter by adding light and shade to most of the subjects; tells us how "rightly fastidious and endlessly minute" were his directions to these associates; and refers to the mezzotinting of Turner himself upon those plates which his own hand executed throughout, and upon those which he retouched and recovered when they had become worn through printing. He deals with the various classes into which Turner divided the subjects—the "Historical, Mountainous, Pastoral, Marine, and Architectural," and rightly marks the exceptional beauty of certain of the unpublished plates. He refers with due emphasis to the virtue of the prints as compositions, as ordered and satisfying arrangements of the infinite facts of Nature; and he has his own word to say upon the imaginative scope of the entire series, in which—and personally I agree with him—he finds no undue measure of that gloom and sadness which to Mr. Ruskin and Mr. Stopford Brooke is the dominant note of the work.

There follows a chapter by Mr. Frank Short, upon "The Liber Studiorum as a School of Landscape Art," giving directions for students as to the copying of the examples. Mr. Short's independent artistic skill, evinced in those plates which have already placed him at the head of our younger painter-etchers, and his prolonged and careful study of the Liber—first under Mr. Sparkes of South Kensington, and then under Mr. Ruskin himself, issuing in his series of etched and mezzotinted copies which most closely approach the quality of the originals—render him a particularly trustworthy guide in the present matter.

His directions are very similar to those given long ago by Mr. Ruskin, when in his Elements of Drawing he first called attention to the Liber prints as a means of artistic study, and urged the copying of them upon the pupils following out his method of instruction. It is to the reproductions of the etched state of the plates that Mr. Short in the present work chiefly directs the student. The etched lines of nearly all the subjects being the work of Turner's own hand, and designed for the emphatic and synthetic expression of the most essential facts of form, to be supplemented by the light and shade of the subsequent mezzotinting, these etchings are each equivalent to a point drawing, and a very careful one, by the master—a master who was supreme in this kind of work, and whose natural power in this direction was kept in continual freshness and vigour by his life-long practice of sketching from nature with the definite line of a hard lead-pencil. The etchings, accordingly, are unsurpassable examples of vital and expressive selection in the portrayal of natural forms, and the wide range of subject which the series embraces leaves no element of landscape untouched. Mr. Short recommends that they be copied by the pupil with the utmost care; first by tracing the lines, and then—to render the work more spirited and less mechanical—by erasing the outlines till they are very faint, and afterwards restoring them with a free, but most careful and accurate, pen-line. Some twenty-four full-scale reproductions of entire etchings and some twenty other full-scale portions of etchings are given for this treatment. A careful comparison of these facsimiles with those issued by the Autotype Company—the "Isis" and the "Sheep Washing, Windsor," from both series, are now before me—shows that the latter are on the whole the more accurate, as was to be expected from their greater costliness. They approach somewhat closer to the actual quality of the original etched line, and show less tendency, when the lines become close, to run into blots; while the texture of their paper gives more of the feeling of the original prints than the smooth-surfaced kind employed in the Messrs. Blackie's publication. But it may be very safely said that the reproductions of the present series are amply sufficient for their purpose, and that they will afford valuable help and direction to the student.

As examples of the finished Liber prints, four subjects are given, reproduced by photogravure plates which have been carefully retouched by Mr. Short; and while, of course, they fall short of the beauty of the originals, or indeed of the copies from those originals that were executed from first to last by Mr. Short himself without any mechanical aid, they give a very fair idea of the subjects which they aim to reproduce, and will prove excellent examples to the pupil. These are meant to be copied in water-colour wash, laid over an outline made, in indelible ink, from the reproduction of the etched state of the subject. The selection of these four important plates is on the whole good, the "Isis," in particular, being unsurpassable as an example of noble quietude and dignity in the treatment of landscape; but I could have spared "The Falls of Clyde" had its place been taken by one of the great rocky Swiss subjects, or by such a rendering of potent and passionate sky as appears in the "Watercress Gatherers," a subject which has never yet received full justice at the hands of any of the writers on the Liber Studiorum. The plate reproductions are supplemented by thirty-six small block illustrations from other finished Liber prints; and by a study of these, in connection with the full-size and every way more adequate plate-reproductions, a very fair idea of the entire original series may be gained by the pupil. Interesting practical notes by Mr. Short, and liberal extracts from the writings of Messrs. Ruskin, Stopford Brooke, Hamerton, and Wedmore, accompany the illustrations.

The publication is one which will doubtless be shortly in the hands of many students as prizes from the South Kensington Department, and its wide dissemination can certainly be productive of nothing but good to the younger members of our English school of landscape.

J. M. GRAY.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE BENI HASSAN CARTOUCHES.

Ramlah, Egypt: July 29, 1890.

Soon after the mutilation of the celebrated Khnum Hotep tomb at Beni Hassan became known, it was suggested that, if the cartouches could be found, it would be worth while to replace them in their former positions in the tomb.

On January 24 I learned that two cartouches I had purchased from a native dealer belonged to those that had been stolen from the Beni Hassan tomb; and I hastened, on the same day, to acquaint the Egyptian government with the fact, at the same time accompanying my statement by the following words: "I am ready to tell you at any time the facts as to where I got the pieces. I feel satisfied that with this information you will be able to work back to the guilty parties." I supposed that the authorities would hasten to ask me where and from whom I purchased the pieces. In this I was mistaken.

Some days later I had an opportunity of seeing the dealer from whom I made the purchase, and I succeeded in getting a third cartouche. On February 25 I informed the Egyptian government of this third cartouche; but to this day the authorities have never asked me anything about where I got either the first two or the third of the cartouches. Had I been backed by a little official authority at the time I secured the third cartouche, I would either have got possession of the remaining cartouches, or I would have found what disposition had been made of them.

The Egyptian Government will never be able to offer a reasonable excuse for having permitted conditions to exist which admitted of the possibility of such wholesale destruction of tombs as was carried on during the summer and fall of 1889 within a radius of fifteen miles, including Beni Hassan. I saw myself scarcely less than one hundred of these pieces. They were of many shapes and varied in size from six inches to two feet square. This estimate does not include pieces in the possession of dealers whose collections I did not see but of which I heard.

The man from whom I purchased the cartouches has told me repeatedly, and in the presence of various witnesses, that he sold to the Bulaq (Ghizeh) Museum thirty-eight or thirty-nine pieces for six and a-half Egyptian pounds—pieces most of which were in his shop when I made my purchase—pieces every one of which came from the neighbourhood of either Beni Hassan or Tel-el-Amarna. I also gave the Egyptian authorities information on this point on February 25. I know not whether this affair has been looked into. Certain I am that I have never been informed that the statement made to me by the dealer as to his sale at the Museum was incorrect.

Many of your readers who are interested in the preservation of Egyptian temples and tombs will be very sorry to learn that the Egyptian government has never made a vigorous effort to discover and punish the perpetrators of these deeds. I am firmly convinced that the authorities could have known who mutilated the Beni Hassan tomb within two weeks after I informed them of my purchase. If the Egyptian government wished to know the perpetrators of the deed, they could, I doubt not, find out yet. Why no vigorous effort has ever been made is, of course, known to those who have had the authority to investigate, and may be correctly surmised by many of your readers.

Some time ago the Egyptian authorities, through the American Consul-General, requested me to return the cartouches I had purchased, as they had been stolen from the tomb. The Consul-General suggested that I should agree to return them on condition that they were restored to their places, &c. Through the Consul-General I proposed to return the cartouches on the condition that the government should make a vigorous effort to recover the remaining cartouches; that they should agree to restore the cartouches to their places in the tomb; and that the tomb should be thoroughly secured against further depredations by a strong iron door. In the hope that the cartouches in my possession would be accepted on these conditions, I brought them from Upper Egypt to Cairo. Since offering the cartouches on the above conditions, the authorities have never put forward any effort to take charge of them.

Having been really desirous to have the cartouches restored to their places ever since I learned that they had been taken from the Beni Hassan tomb, a few days ago I renewed my offer to turn them over to the authorities, this time unconditionally. In reply to this, I am told that the Archaeological Department will be very glad to get them, and that it may be possible to replace them in their former position; but no positive agreement to do so is made, nor is any intimation given that any effort will ever be undertaken to secure the remaining cartouches or discover the perpetrators of the deed.

CHAUNCEY MURCH.

THE DAHR-EL-BAHARI MUMMIES.

St. Leonard's, Malvern Link: August 18, 1890.

So much has been written about the state of the Dahr-el-Bahari mummies in the Ghizeh Museum, and of their probable decay if they remain in their present resting place, that it is only fair that English people should be made acquainted with the report on their condition drawn up a few weeks ago by Dr. Fouquet at the request of M. Grébaut, and published in the Journal Officiel of the Egyptian government.

M. Grébaut begged Dr. Fouquet to examine the mummies and report on the following queries:

(1) Whether the mummy of Seti I. had developed signs of decay since it was unrolled from its bandages.

(2) Whether the efflorescence observed on certain parts of the skin of this mummy was the result of damp.

(3) Whether this mummy in particular, and more generally all the mummies in the museum, were threatened with destruction.

Now Dr. Fouquet is singularly qualified to give an opinion on these points, as he was the medical man called in to make the anthropometrical measurements of these royal personages when they were first unrolled in June, 1886.

The following is a résumé of his answers to M. Grébaut's queries:

(1) Already on June 16, 1886, when the mummy of Seti I. was unbandaged, we observed an efflorescence on various parts of the body (on the chest, ribs, toes, &c.), where it may still be seen.

(2) A portion of this efflorescence has been removed, and has been placed in two bottles. One was kept at the museum; the other has been handed to Dr. Fouquet for microscopic examination. The result of this examination was to show that it was composed of thin scales and prisms of crystallised salts, and in no way could its formation be attributed to the effect of damp. ("Ni mycetium ni spores" are Dr. Fouquet's words.) It was, in fact, the result of the salts employed in the embalming of the mummy, and of the bitumen used at a later date to repair the damage done to the body when it was removed from its original resting-place to Dahr-el-Bahari. Dr. Fouquet further remarks: "Cette matière ne s'est formée que lentement dans le cours des siècles."

(3) To satisfy those who assert that the mummies are rapidly decomposing in the atmosphere of the Ghizeh Museum, Dr. Fouquet made several experiments to induce the growth and spread of mould (taken off paste and old cheese) on fragments of mummy and mummy cloth exposed to damp. Such experiments resulted uniformly in sterility. The mould would only spread on a piece of modern stuff tried under the same conditions.

I have Dr. Fouquet's entire report in French before me, with its careful chemical analysis of the salts in question.

It will be a great relief to all Egyptologists if the previous rumours circulated as to the condition of the mummies can be proved to be without ground.

M. L. HERBERT McCURE,

Member of the Committee of the Egyptian Exploration Fund, and Hon. Local Secretary for S.W.; Member of the Society for the Preservation of Ancient Monuments in Egypt.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

THE thirty-third annual report of the trustees of the National Portrait Gallery gives a list (with brief descriptions) of the fifteen portraits that were presented, and of the five that were purchased, during the past year. The total number of portraits in the gallery is now exactly 900. Among the donations, the most important are: Mr. Rudolph Lehman's half-length, life-sized picture of Browning, painted in 1884, which was presented by the artist himself; Sir Francis Grant's life-sized picture of Sir Edwin Landseer, with a grey dog painted by Landseer, which was dramatically purchased for presentation by M. Henri Rochefort at the recent great Landseer sale at Christie's; a replica of Mr. Edwin Long's picture of Lord Iddesleigh, the original of which was painted for presentation to his widow; a portrait of Goldsmith, described as of "the school of Reynolds"; a portrait of Sir Rowland Hill; and several sketches from life of Anglo-Indian celebrities, by James Atkinson. The total amount expended on purchases was about £340, of which £220 was allotted to a fine Raeburn—a portrait of Prof. John Playfair—and £52 to a picture by J. Eckstein, representing Sir Sidney Smith in a heroic attitude at the siege of Acre.

MR. FRANK BADEN-POWELL had the honour of submitting to the Queen, at Osborne, on Tuesday last, his large historical painting, "The Last Shot at the Spanish Armada."

THE Society for Preserving Memorials of the Dead has printed a little pamphlet, giving an account of its work in renovating the historic monuments in the parish church of Sprowston, Norfolk. Apart from other subscriptions, the council of the society has expended about £7 on this work, under the supervision of an architect. The secretary of the society is Mr. William Vincent, Belle Vue Rise, Hellesdon-road, Norwich.

SOME months back, Dr. Alfred Schmidt, a young German writer on art, made a discovery of some importance. In the central panel of a well-known altar piece in the Augsburg Gallery (Nos. 47-51), usually ascribed to Altdorfer, he deciphered the letters APT, introduced on a small heraldic shield. These evidently refer to the painter, as the donor is known to have been of the Rehling family. The name of Apt occurs frequently in the old registers of the painters' guild at Augsburg, from the second half of the fifteenth century up to the middle of the sixteenth. Manifestly by the same hand as the Augsburg picture are the "Transfiguration" of the Cassel Gallery, the small "Pietà" of the Munich Pinacothek, and the large Triptych belonging to the university, but lent for a term of years to the Pinacothek and exhibited there in one of the cabinets. These two latter pictures, formerly ascribed to Altdorfer, are now, on the authority of Dr. Schmidt, attributed to Ulrich Apt, who was born about 1460 and died in 1532.

MUSIC.

MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.

"THE GREAT MUSICIANS."—Beethoven. By H. A. Rudall. (Sampson Low.) The order in which the great musicians make their appearance in this series is somewhat peculiar: Wagner was the first, and now, at length, we get Beethoven. Mr. Rudall's "little biography" contains no new facts, no new opinions; he has merely told the story of the composer's life in a simple manner, introducing much anecdotal matter, and for the most part mentioning only compositions connected with some particular event. The author writes not for students, but for the public, and his work is both readable and reliable. He seems to incline to the belief that the "immortal loved one" was the Countess Giulietta Guicciardi and not Countess Theresa of Brunswick, as maintained by Thayer. Curiously enough, a little book has been recently published at Bonn, entitled "Beethoven's unsterbliche Geliebte," in which the authoress declares positively that the lady was Theresa, and gives details apparently unknown hitherto. Mr. Rudall gives at the end of his book a list of Beethoven's printed works, based on the catalogue in Sir G. Grove's Dictionary of Music and Musicians.

Index to Grove's Dictionary of Music and Musicians. By Mrs. Edmond R. Wodehouse. (Macmillan & Co.) The lady who has undertaken this laborious task "ventures to hope that it may be of some use" to students. It will no doubt be found of great use. The dictionary makes mention of many persons and things to which no separate articles are devoted, and these are duly noted. Remarks explanatory of details in the arrangement of this index are given in the preface. There is also a useful catalogue of the articles contributed by the various writers to the dictionary.

Compendium der Musikgeschichte. Von Adolf Prosnez. (Wien: Wetzler; London: Nutt.) This work, which treats of music from the earliest times down to the end of the sixteenth century, is principally intended for schools and academies. The author is aware that his little book is not perfect; there is nothing so difficult as to get a mass of matter in little compass, so as to give satisfaction all round. The music of ancient nations is briefly touched upon, and here the writer is not troubled with wealth of material. He believes that music first became an art among the Greeks. He reminds his readers that only the rhythmical element of the music of the Grecian dramas remains, so that it cannot be restored. Early Christian music is well described, and an excellent, though of course succinct, account of the pneuma is given. Then come the Troubadours, the Minne, and the Meistersingers, and so on, to the great schools of the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries down to Palestrina. The author is by no means inclined to under value English music. "One is accustomed," he says, "to consider the English as an unmusical nation," yet adds that in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries England produced some remarkable composers. He also calls attention to the unique character of Clavier-musik in England towards the end of the sixteenth century. The names, dates, and facts, so far as we have read, are correct, and indeed the book seems to have been compiled with the greatest care. It is an admirable school book, but it is also an excellent one for reference. In many places are to be found useful lists of works; thus, to give only one example, Burney, Fétis, Tappert, and Coussemaker, and other authors, together with titles of books, are mentioned as giving specimens of Troubadour melodies. At the end of the volume are some interesting chronological tables. This compendium deserves to be translated into English.

THE MONTHLY PACKET.

Price One Shilling

Edited by CHARLOTTE M. YONGE.

CONTENTS FOR SEPTEMBER, 1890.

TWO PENNILESS PRINCESSES. By the Editor.
CHRISTIAN'S NAME. By JOANNA HARRISON.
MARIE and BEIPPO. By MARY ASH.
CAMEOS from ENGLISH HISTORY. Cameo CCLXXXVIII.—The Sackville Riot.
THOUGHTS on SCRIPTURE TEXTS. By E. M. SEWELL.
LOOSE LEAVES from the NOTE-BOOK of a CIVIL ENGINEER. Edited by Mrs. ELIZABETH WORMLEY LATIMER.
SKETCHES of OLD NORSE LITERATURE. By Miss OSWALD.
MISS ALCOTT. A Letter from England to New York.
THE LITTLE GOOSE-GIRL. By MAUD WATFORD.
PAPERS on FRENCH LITERATURE.
DEBATABLE GROUND.

London: SMITH & KNES, 31 and 32, Bedford Street, Strand, W.C.

THE PARENT'S REVIEW

Edited by CHARLOTTE M. MASON.

Price SIXPENCE.

No. 7. CONTENTS. SEPTEMBER.
EARLY TRAINING. By the Bishop of CARLISLE.
THE WELCOME GUEST: a Chapter on Visiting. By Mrs. CAUMONT.
THE INFLUENCE of ELDER BROTHERS. By Major SEVEN CHURCHILL.
FROM MULBERRY LEAF to SATIN; a Story of Mistaken Aspiration. By E. E. KITTOS.
OUR DAUGHTERS.—III. Work for Gentlewomen as Elementary Schoolmistresses. By FRANCES ERFS.
PARENTS and CHILDREN: a Sequel to Home Education.—I. The Family. By the Editor.
THE MONTH of FRUITS. By Dr. J. E. TAYLOR, F.L.S., F.G.S., &c.
A SHORT TREATISE on READING ALOUD. By E. LEGOUVE.
MEMOIR of a CHILD FOURTEEN MONTHS OLD: Prize Essay. By A FATHER and MOTHER.
THE EVENING SKY: September, 1890. By Mrs. L. C. d'A. LIRSCOMB.
BOOKS.—BY THE WAY.—PRIZES.—NOTES and QUERIES.—PARENTS' NATIONAL EDUCATIONAL UNION.
London: W. H. ALLEN & Co., 13, Waterloo Place, S.W.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.
THREE per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS, repayable on demand.
TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS when not drawn below £100.
STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposits, and allows interest at the rate of THREE PER CENT. per annum, on each completed £1. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR
TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, OR A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.
The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post-free, Southamton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

PHENIX FIRE OFFICE,
10, LOMBARD STREET, E.C., and 57, CHANCERY CROSS, S.W.
Established 1782.

Moderate Rates. Absolute Security.

Liberal Loss Settlements.

Prompt Payment of Claims.

Joint Secretaries—W. C. MACDONALD and F. B. MACDONALD.

LOSSES PAID OVER £17,000,000.

FURNISH your HOUSES or APARTMENTS THROUGHOUT

ON MOEDER'S HIRE SYSTEM.

The original, best, and most liberal. Suits all.

FOUNDED A.D. 1868.

Furnish direct from the Manufacturer, from £10 to £10,000.

Cash prices. No extra charge for time given.

Catalogues, Estimates, Press Opinions, Testimonials Post Free.

F. MOEDER,

248, 249, 250, Tottenham Court Road, W. Also for HIRE ONLY.

Books produced at a fixed price for Printing, Paper, and Binding, and terms arranged for Publishing.

Authors advised with as to Printing and Publishing. Estimates of Cost of Printing and Binding.

ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD,

Publishers, Printers, and Binders,

FURNIVAL STREET, HOLBORN, and 27, CHANCERY LANE, LONDON.

TO STOUT PEOPLE.

Sunday Times says: "Mr. Russell's aim is to eradicate, to cure the disease, and that his treatment is the true one seems beyond all doubt. The medicine he prescribes does not lower, but builds up and tones the system." Book (128 pages), with Recipe and Notes how to pleasantly and rapidly cure obesity (average reduction in first week is 3 lb.), post-free, Eight Stamps.

F. C. RUSSELL, Woburn House,

Store Street, Bedford Square, London, W.C.

THEATRES.

A DELPHI THEATRE.

Sole Proprietors and Managers, A. & S. GATTI.
Every Evening, at 8, THE ENGLISH ROSE.
Messrs. Leonard Boyne, Beveridge, Shine, Abingdon, Thalberg, Rignold, Dalton, Bassett Roe, East, &c.; Mesdames Olga Brandon, K. James, C. Jecks, E. Dane, and Mary Rorke.
Preceded, at 7.15, by THE LITTLE SENTINEL.

A VENUE THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 9, DR. BILL.
Messrs. George Alexander, Benjamin Webster, G. Capel, H. Grattan, and Albert Chevalier; Mesdames Elizabeth Robins, Carlotta Leclercq, Leston, Marie Linden, Laura Graves, Edith Kenward, Lillie Young, and Fanny Brough.
Preceded, at 8.30, by MISS CINDERELLA.

COMEDY THEATRE.

Manager, Mr. CHAR. H. HAWTREY.
Every Evening, at 9, NERVES.
Messrs. H. Kemble, Edward Righton, and Charles Hawtrej; Mesdames Maud Millett, Sophie Larkin, Lydia Cowell, Ethel Matthews, and Lottie Vennie.
Preceded, at 8.15, by A BAD PENNY.

CRITERION THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. CHARLES WYNDHAM.
Every Evening, at 9, WELCOME, LITTLE STRANGER.
Messrs. W. Blakeley, E. Maurice, G. Giddens; Mesdames M. A. Victor, Helen Forsyth, E. Vining, F. Frances, and Vane Featherston.
Preceded, at 8, by JILTED.

GAIETY THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. GEORGE EDWARDS.
Last Nights of THE BOOKMAKER, in which Mr. Nat Goodwin will appear, with the following cast, at 8.20: Mr. William Farren, Mr. Reeves Smith, Mr. Charles Glenn, Mr. George Dalziel, Mr. Eric Thorne, Mr. Frank Wood, Mr. C. Walker; Miss Jennie McNulty, Miss Christine Mayne, Miss Adelaide Gunn, and Miss Carlotta Leclercq.

GARRICK THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. JOHN HARE.
This Evening, at 8.50, A PAIR OF SPECTACLES.
Messrs. John Hare, C. Groves, R. Cathcart, S. Brough, C. Dodsworth, and R. Harding; Mesdames Webster, F. Hunter, and Kate Rorke.
Preceded, at 8, by DREAM FACES.

GRAND THEATRE.

At 7.30, Miss GRACE HAWTHORNE and the entire COMPANY from the PRINCESS'S THEATRE, in Robert Buchanan's adaptation of Sardou's grand spectacular play THEODORA. To add realism to the drama, a den of live lions is introduced in the Circus Scene.

PRINCE of WALES' THEATRE.

Monday Evening next, at 8, CAPTAIN THERESE.
Produced under the stage direction of Charles Harris. Libretto by Alexandre Bisson and F. C. Burnand. Music by Planquette.

SAVOY THEATRE.

Proprietor and Manager, R. D'O'VLY CARTE.
Every Evening, at 8.30, the entirely original Comic Opera, by W. S. Gilbert and Arthur Sullivan, in two acts, entitled THE GONDOLIERS.

SHAFESBURY THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, E. S. WILLARD.
Every Evening, at 8.30, JUDAH.
Messrs. Willard, Royce Carleton, F. Kerr, Sant Matthews, C. Fulton, H. Cane, Harting, and Thomas; Mesdames Bessie Hatton, Gertrude Warden, A. Bowering, and Olga Brandon.
On Wednesday, August 27, will be produced a new two-act comedy sketch, by Henry Arthur Jones, entitled THE DEACON.

STRAND THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 8.40, the funniest farcical Comedy ever written, entitled OUR FLAT.
Preceded, at 8, by a Farce.

TERRY'S THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 9, THE JUDGE.
Messrs. W. S. Penley, Wm. Herbert, F. H. Fenton, M. Kingthorne, G. Belmore, and W. Lestocq; Mesdames E. Thorne, E. Chester, H. Leyton, and C. Grahame.
At 8.15, NEARLY SEVERED.

TOOLE'S THEATRE.

Manageress, Miss VIOLET MELNOTTE.
Lessee, Mr. J. L. TOOLE.
Every Evening, at 9, a new Military Farce, in three acts, by J. H. Darnley, entitled THE SOLICITOR.
Preceded by THE BAILIFF.

NATIONAL

FOR MUTUAL PROVIDENT

LIFE ASSURANCE.

48, GRACECHURCH STREET, LONDON.

See Prospectus, page 17, for particulars of Endowment Assurance Policies combining Life Assurance at Minimum Cost with Provision for Old Age.

INVESTED FUNDS,
£4,400,000.

INSTITUTION.

ESTBD. 1835.

W. H. SMITH & SON'S
SUBSCRIPTION LIBRARY,
186, STRAND, LONDON, and at the Railway Bookstalls.

1.—This Library is established in connexion with Messrs. W. H. SMITH & Son's numerous Railway Bookstalls; it embraces all the most important Works of History, Biography, Travel, Fiction, Poetry, Science, and Theology, as well as the leading Magazines and Reviews, and gives greater advantages to Subscribers than any other existing Library, from the fact that there are 500 Bookstalls in England and Wales, and to any of these Depots a Subscriber may be transferred free of charge.

2.—Subscribers can only change their Books at the Depot where their names are registered, but they may transfer the place of exchange by giving notice to the Clerk in charge of the Depot at which they obtain their Books. Of the current periodicals, one only at a time is allowed to a Subscription under Five Guineas, and Subscriptions will not be accepted for the supply of Magazines and Reviews only.

3.—The Books are delivered at the Bookstalls, carriage free. A Subscriber may exchange once a day; the Clerk in charge will obtain from London any Work in the Library which a Subscriber may desire to have. NOVELS exchanged only in unbroken and complete Sets.

4.—London Subscribers transferring their Subscriptions to a Country Depot will be entitled only to the number of volumes which the Country terms assign to the amount they subscribe; similarly, Country Subscriptions transferred to Town become subject to the London regulations.

5.—Subscriptions may commence at any date, and are payable in advance at any of the Railway Bookstalls.

6.—Messrs. W. H. SMITH & Son beg to impress upon their Library Subscribers the fact that much disappointment and inconvenience would be avoided if they would, in all cases, give to the Clerk in charge a list comprising at least twice as many titles of works as they wish to exchange.

A Catalogue of Surplus and New Books, offered at greatly reduced prices, is published Monthly, and can be had upon application at the Bookstalls. Also a Catalogue of Books in elegant bindings, for Gentlemen's Libraries.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND & CO.'S AI SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS,

POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME

PIES. Also,

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—
11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

GOLD PEN,
WITH DIAMOND POINT.

Anti-corrosive—Flexible—Durable—Adapting itself to any Handwriting.

Price 6d. each; post-free, 7d.

With White Metal Pocket Holder, complete - - - 1s.

Or, with Mordan's Best Silver Pocket-Holders—

Fluted Pattern, complete - - - - 5s. 6d.

Engine-turned Pattern, complete - - - - 6s. 6d.

Fluted Pattern, Telescopic - - - - 10s. 6d.

Other Patterns in great variety.

ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD,
27, CHANCERY LANE, LONDON.

FRY'S

Lancet—"Pure and very soluble."
Medical Times—"Eminently suitable for Invalids."

PURE CONCENTRATED

Sir C. A. Cameron—"I have never tasted Cocoa that I like so well."
President Royal College of Surgeons, Ireland.

COCOA

Paris Exhibition, 1889: GOLD MEDAL awarded to J. S. FRY & SONS

EDWARD STANFORD'S LIST.

A NEW BOOK FOR THE HOLIDAYS.

Just ready, at the Libraries and Booksellers.

CAMPING VOYAGES on GERMAN

RIVERS. By ARTHUR A. MACDONELL, M.A., Corpus Christi College, Oxford. Crown 8vo, cloth, with Frontispiece and 20 Maps, 10s. 6d.

The Rivers described are: The Werra, Weser, Neckar, Rhine, Moselle, Main, Moldau, Elbe, and Danube, and practical details of Outfit, Obstructions, Distances, &c., are given. "The book will not only be useful to those who may be inclined to follow the example of the author and his friends, but will be found decidedly entertaining to those who want something fresh and novel for the summer holiday. As a guide to the rivers dealt with, to their scenery, their obstructions, their difficulties of all kinds, there is nothing so good in existence."—Times, Aug. 6th, 1890.

Now ready, FOURTH EDITION, Revised.

A PHYSICAL, HISTORICAL, and

DESCRIPTIVE GEOGRAPHY. By KEITH JOHNSTON, F.R.G.S. Revised and Edited by E. G. RAVENSTEIN, F.R.G.S. Large post 8vo, with numerous Maps and Illustrations, 12s.

"Mr. Keith Johnston's text-book of geography is a work of much thought, wide research, and no inconsiderable literary skill. It contains a vast amount of information on the physical features of the countries of the world, their climate and productions, commerce and industry, political institutions, administrative divisions, and leading towns. A set of maps, coloured so as to distinguish forest regions, agricultural lands, steppes, and deserts, forms a welcome addition to this judiciously planned and carefully written text-book."—Athenaeum.

Just published, fcap. 8vo, cloth, 2s.; postage 1d.

WEATHER FORECASTING for the BRITISH ISLANDS by means of a Barometer, the Direction and Force of Wind, and Cirrus Clouds. By Capt. HENRY TOYNBEE, F.R.A.S., F.R.G.S., F.R.Met.S., late Marine Superintendent, Meteorological Office. With Frontispiece and 8 Page Diagrams.

Just ready, THIRD EDITION, Revised, 1s.

EPPING FOREST. By Edward North Buxton, Verderer.

"Mr. Buxton goes about his work in a thoroughly practical way. His book is plentifully furnished with accurate maps, and about thirty pages are occupied with simple and clear directions as to the several walks which may be taken through the Forest. It may be safely said that any one who carefully follows Mr. Buxton's directions will obtain a perfectly new conception of the Forest and its peculiar beauties. The book is illustrated by some charming drawings of forest scenes, and by numerous delicately executed woodcuts of birds and flowers."—Times.

LONDON: EDWARD STANFORD,

26 and 27, COCKSPUR STREET, CHARING CROSS, S.W.

THE NEWBURY HOUSE MAGAZINE.

ILLUSTRATED.

PRICE ONE SHILLING.

CONTENTS FOR SEPTEMBER.

AGNOSTICISM and CHRISTIANITY: ELSTERISM and PAUL NUGENT. WITH a LETTER from the Rt. Hon. W. E. GLADSTONE, M.P.

Difficulties Peculiar to the Church in Wales: How they are Met. By Rev. Canon GRIFFITH ROBERTS, M.A.

Family Prayers. By Rev. AUGUSTUS JESSOP, D.D.
Flemish Painters.—III. Peter Paul Rubens. (Illustrated.)

By G. S. MACQUOID.

Ecclesiastical Music in the Middle Ages. (Illustrated.)

By W. J. BIRKBECK.

"Virginie's Husband."—Chapters VI., VII. By Esmé STUART.
In the Wrong Box: a Short Story. By D. KER.

Some Anglo-Norman Epitaphs. By Rev. J. E. FIELD.

Some Notes on the History of Books for Children.—II. Block Books and Early Printed Books. (Illustrated.)

By CHARLES WELSH.

Popular Astronomy.—Chapter VII. The Sun. (Illustrated.)

By H. CLEMENTS.

Coral Reefs and their Builders. By AGNES GIBBERNE.

"Changed Lots; or, Nobody Cares."—Chapters VII., VIII. (Illustrated.) By FRANCES ARMSTRONG.

Stories of the Lives of Saints for Children.—Chapter III.

By Mrs. MOLESWORTH.

Sermon Outlines for September—Instructions on the Creed—Biblical Questions for Competition Reviews—"Useful Books" List—Correspondence;

THE late Rev. E. B. PUSEY, D.D., on "THE COURT of LORD PENZANCE," &c., &c.

GRIFFITH FARRAN OKEDEN &amp; WELSH, LONDON.

The Autotype Company, London,

Renowned for the excellence of its process of high-class

BOOK ILLUSTRATION

Adopted by the Trustees of the British Museum, the Learned Societies, and the leading Publishers. For specimens, prices, &c., apply to the Manager.

AUTO-GRAVURE

The Autotype process adapted to Photographic Engraving on copper. Copies of Paintings by Holman Hunt, of Portraits by Holl, R.A.; Ouleas, R.A.; Pettie, R.A.; Prinsep, A.R.A.; of the Fresco in Guy's Hospital; "SPRING," by Herbert Draper, &c., &c.; also examples of Auto-Gravure Reproductions of Photographs from Art Objects and from Nature can be seen at the Autotype Gallery—

THE

AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY,

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON,

is remarkable for its display of Copies of celebrated Works by

"THE GREAT MASTERS"

from the Louvre, Vatican, Hermitage, and the National Galleries of Italy, Spain, Holland, and London, including H.M. Collections at Buckingham Palace and Windsor Castle.

Albums of reference to the various Galleries are provided, are easily looked over, and of great interest to lovers of Art. Send for the new Pamphlet, "AUTOTYPE: a Decorative and Educational Art," per post to any address.

The AUTOTYPE FINE ART CATALOGUE, 186 pp., free, per post, for Sixpence.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY, LONDON.*LUX MUNDI.

Now ready, 8vo, 1s.

A PREFACE to the TENTH EDITION of LUX MUNDI, together with an APPENDIX on "THE CHRISTIAN DOCTRINE OF SIN."

JOHN MURRAY, Albemarle Street.

MACMILLAN'S MAGAZINE.

Price 1s., No. 371, for SEPTEMBER, contains:—

1. ON GREENHILL HILL. By RUDYARD KIPLING.
2. MONTAIGNE. By ARTHUR TILLEY.
3. THE MODERN SPIRIT IN ROME. By CHARLES EDWARDS.
4. THE AMERICAN TARIFF. By GOLDWIN SMITH.
5. MY DESERT ISLAND.
6. THE LAST DAYS OF HEINE.
7. A BALLAD of the WERE-WOLF. By GRAHAM R. TOMSON.
8. THE UNATTACHED STUDENT.
9. IDLENESS. By P. ANDERSON GRAHAM.
10. AT the OWEN GLENDOWER. By A. G. BRADLEY.
11. THE STORY of a REVOLUTION.

"The Opening Chapters of a New Story by Mr. F. MARION CRAWFORD, entitled "THE WITCH of PRAGUE," will appear in the OCTOBER Number of the ENGLISH ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE. A New Volume of the Magazine begins with that Number.

The ENGLISH ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE

For SEPTEMBER, profusely illustrated, price 6d., by post 8d., contains:—

1. PORTRAIT of a CARDINAL. From the Picture in the National Gallery, No. 1048. (Frontispiece.)
2. PHILIPPINE WELSER. F. MARION CRAWFORD.
3. SERVANTS. The Hon. MAUDE STANLEY.
4. POTTERS in RHINELAND. WILLIAM WOODALL, M.P. Illustrated by HARRY FURNISS.
5. OVERLAND from INDIA. (Concluded.) Sir DONALD MACKENZIE WALLACE, K.C.I.E.
6. A GLIMPSE of OSTERLEY PARK. ELIZABETH BALCH. With Illustrations.
7. EDUCATION and the WORKING MAN. LEONARD NOBLE.
8. THE BEEFSTEAK ROOM at the LYCEUM. FREDERICK HAWKINS. With Illustrations.
9. THE IDENTIFICATION of CRIMINALS in FRANCE. EDMUND R. SPEARMAN. With Illustrations.
10. SEPTEMBER. A Decorated Page. HEYWOOD SUMNER.
11. THE GLITTERING PLAIN; or, the Land of Living Men. Chaps. 19–22. WILLIAM MORRIS.

MACMILLAN &amp; CO., BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY,

SUBSCRIPTIONS from ONE GUINEA per Annum.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

Books can be exchanged at the residences of Subscribers in London, by the Library Messengers
SUBSCRIPTIONS from TWO GUINEAS per Annum.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from TWO GUINEAS per Annum.

A Large Number of Copies of the Best and most Popular Books of the Season are now in Circulation at MUDIE'S LIBRARY.

All Works of General Interest are freely added immediately on publication.

Library Catalogue for 1890, 1s. 6d. Prospectuses and Clearance List of Books on Sale, postage free.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY (Limited), 30 to 34, New Oxford Street.

BRANCH OFFICES: 241, BROMPTON ROAD, and 2, KING STREET, CHEAPSIDE.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 956.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, AUGUST 30, 1890.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper]

CHATTO & WINDUS'S NEW BOOKS.

A NEW UNIVERSITY NOVEL.

A FELLOW OF TRINITY.

By ALAN ST. AUBYN, Author of "Trollope's Dilemma," and WALT WHEELER.

3 vols., crown 8vo.

[September 10th.]

JAMES PAYN'S NEW NOVEL.

THE WORD AND THE WILL.

By JAMES PAYN, Author of "By Proxy," "The Burnt Million," &c.

3 vols., crown 8vo.

[September 20th.]

CLARK RUSSELL'S NEW NOVEL.

MY SHIPMATE LOUISE.

By W. CLARK RUSSELL, Author of "An Ocean Tragedy," &c.

3 vols., crown 8vo.

[October 6th.]

A NEW STORY OF AMERICAN LIFE.]

AUNT ABIGAIL DYKES. By Lieutenant-Colonel George Randolph, U.S.A. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 7s. 6d.

[Shortly.]

BRET HARTE'S NEW BOOKS.

A WARD of the GOLDEN GATE. By Bret Harte, Author of "A Waif of the Plains," &c. With 60 Illustrations by Stanley L. Wood. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 8s. 6d.

[October 10th.]

BRET HARTE'S COMPLETE WORKS.—A New Volume (the Sixth) is nearly ready, under the general title of "TALES of the PACIFIC SLOPE." Crown 8vo, cloth extra, uniform with the first five volumes, 6s.

OUIDA'S NEW STORIES.

RUFFINO, &c. By Ouida, Author of "Under Two Flags," &c. Crown 8vo, red cloth extra, 3s. 6d.

[October 1st.]

"THE PICCADILLY NOVELS."—New Volumes in the Press.

Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d. each.

THE BELL of ST. PAUL'S. By Walter Besant.

[Shortly.]

AN OCEAN TRAGEDY. By W. Clark Russell.

BLIND LOVE. By Wilkie Collins. With a Preface by

[Shortly.]

SOWING the WIND. By E. Lynn Linton, Author of

WALTER BESANT, and 36 Illustrations by A. Forestier.

"Patricia Kemball," &c.

NEW SHILLING BOOKS.

FATHER DAMIEN: an Open Letter to the Rev. Dr. Hyde. By Robert Louis Stevenson. Crown 8vo, printed on hand-made paper, 1s.

NOTES from the "NEWS." By James Payn, Author of "By Proxy." Crown 8vo, portrait cover, 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d.

THE CASE of GEORGE CANDLEMAS. By George R. Sims. Crown 8vo, picture cover, 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d.

HISTORY, &c.

THE FRENCH REVOLUTION. By Justin H. McCarthy, Author of "Ireland Since the Union," "England under Gladstone," &c. 4 vols., demy 8vo, 12s. each.

[Vols. I. and II. ready.]

TALES of OUR GREAT FAMILIES. By Edward Walford, M.A. Revised Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 8s. 6d.

FINGER-RING LORE: Historical, Legendary, Anecdotal. By William Jones, F.S.A., Author of "Credulities Past and Present," &c. With nearly 300 Illustrations. Second Edition, Revised and Enlarged. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 7s. 6d.

NEW VOLUMES OF "THE POCKET LIBRARY."

GULLIVER'S TRAVELS, and A TALE of a TUB. By Dean Swift. Post 8vo, printed on laid paper and half-bound, 2s.

[Shortly.]

THE RIVALS, The SCHOOL for SCANDAL, and other Plays. By Richard Brinsley Sheridan. Post 8vo, printed on laid paper and half-bound, 2s.

[Shortly.]

IRON AND STEEL.

THE CHEMISTRY of IRON and STEEL MAKING, and of their Practical Uses. By W. Mattieu Williams, F.R.A.S., Author of "The Chemistry of Cookery," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 8s.

[September 16th.]

A STRIKING TRAVEL BOOK.

A SOCIAL DEPARTURE: How Orthodocia and I Went Round the World by Ourselves. By Sarah Jeannette Duncan. With 111 Illustrations by F. H. Townsend. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 7s. 6d.

LONDON: CHATTO & WINDUS, 214, PICCADILLY, W.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

PAGE

MARSHALL'S PRINCIPLES OF ECONOMICS, by Prof. EDGORTH	165
WORTH
SYMONDS'S ESSAYS SPECULATIVE AND SUGGESTIVE, by W. WATSON	166
MRS. GUINNESS'S HISTORY OF THE CONGO MISSION, by Prof. KEANE	167
WAKEMAN'S LIFE OF FOX, by J. A. HAMILTON	169
IGNATIAN DIFFICULTIES AND HISTORIC DOUBTS, by the Rev. JOHN OWEN	170
NEW NOVELS, by G. BARNETT SMITH	170
SOME EDITIONS OF POETRY	171
NOTES AND NEWS	172
THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES	173
ORIGINAL VERSE: "IN THE CLOISTERS," by GREVILLE E. MATHERSON	173
SOME LETTERS FROM CARDINAL NEWMAN, by Dr. GREENHILL	173
LETTERS, IN PART UNPUBLISHED, OF SAMUEL PEPYS, III., by C. E. DOBLE	174
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS	175
CORRESPONDENCE:—
The Original French Editions of "The Kalender of Shepherdes," by Dr. H. Oskar Sommer; The Carlsruhe Bode, by the Rev. Dr. B. MacCarthy; The MSS. of the New Testament, by Prof. Sanday; La Goule d'Aoust, by Paget Toynbee	175
ISAAC TAYLOR'S ORIGIN OF THE ARYANS, by Prof. SAYCE	176
CORRESPONDENCE:—
Some Contributions to Pili Lexicography, by Dr. H. W. Wenzel; "A First Aryan Reader," by G. A. Schrumpt	177
SCIENCE NOTES	178
PHILOLOGY NOTES	178
THE BEGINNING OF TUSCAN SCULPTURE IN THE MIDDLE AGES, by W. M. CONWAY	178
CORRESPONDENCE:—
An Ancient Inscribed Stone on Exmoor, by Prof. Rhys; The Dahur-el-Dahari Mummies, by Frank Dillon	179
NOTES OF ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	180
MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS	180

ADVERTISER, aged Twenty-one, requires situation as ASSISTANT in LIBRARY. Nearly two years' experience.—Address C. E. S. 102, Lorrimer Road, Kennington Park, London, S.E.

TO PRINCIPALS.—APPOINTMENT

WANTED as INSTRUCTOR in ART by qualified Art Master. Holds high certificates and awards from South Kensington, and has had several years' experience in Teaching. Would accept opportunity of completing Matriculation Exam. as part remuneration. Highest references.—Y. W. BURNARD, High Street, Poole.

TO PUBLISHERS.—The Advertiser is

OPEN to an ENGAGEMENT as Manager or other responsible position. Thoroughly conversant with all the details of Paper, Printing, Binding, Advertising, &c. First-class references.—Address, C. S. 100, Mercer's Road, Tufnell Park, N.

FOR SALE, a fine old PAINTING

(copy) of HOGARTH'S MIDNIGHT MODERN CONVERSATION. 2 ft. 1 in. by 2 ft. 6 in.—Apply at 58, Upton Road, Church Road, Kingland, N. Also a fine old Painting on Copper-Plate, subject, TOWER OF BABEL. Stamped Peeter Sta, Antwerp, 2 ft. 2 in. by 1 ft. 7 in., 1869.

JOURNALISM.—An opportunity offers

itself for the PURCHASE of a TRADE JOURNAL. Is easily and cheaply worked, and would suit a Gentleman with a taste for Literature.—Apply, by letter, to GEMING, 228, Bell's Advertising Office, London.

STAMMERERS should read a book by a gentleman who cured himself after suffering nearly forty years. Price 15 stamps.—B. BRASLEY, Brompton Park, near Huntingdon.

TYPE-WRITING.

TYPE-WRITING.—MSS., Scientific, and of all descriptions, Legal Documents, Specifications, Plays, &c. COPIED with speed and accuracy. Dictations taken in shorthand or Type-writing by expert Type-writers. Special success attained in work requiring delicacy and care. Highest testimonials. Pupils taught.—Misses E. B. & I. FARRAN, 4, Southampton Street, Strand, London.

MESSRS. DRUMMOND &amp; CO.,

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C., are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HAUFSTAENGL of Munich, the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY. There is a steadily increasing demand for reproductions by this justly celebrated process for large plates and editions de luxe. For ordinary Book Illustrations, Catalogues, Advertisements, &c., Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. have the latest and most improved processes. Specimens on view. Prices on application.

BOOK ILLUSTRATION

AND PICTURE REPRODUCTION.

The PHOTOGRAPHY Prints produced by Messrs. ANNAN & SWAN are permanent, and combine the accuracy of Photographs with the rich and brilliant qualities of Mezzotint Engravings.

ANNAN &amp; SWAN,

7, Devonshire Road, South Lambeth, London, S.W.

BRITISH MUSEUM.

The READING ROOM and NEWSPAPER ROOM will be CLOSED from MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 15th, to THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 18th, inclusive. E. MAUDE THOMSON, Principal Librarian, British Museum, 26th August, 1890.

SCHOOLS COLLEGES &amp;c.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE OF SOUTH WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

DEPARTMENT OF ENGINEERING.

The COUNCIL is prepared to APPOINT an ASSISTANT to the PROFESSOR OF ENGINEERING. The gentleman appointed will be a practical Mechanical Engineer who has had University or Technical School education. The stipend will be £120 a year, with a share of Evening Fees. Applications, together with testimonials and references, should be forwarded before SEPTEMBER 9th next to

IVOR JAMES, Registrar.

Cardiff, August 6th, 1890.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE OF SOUTH WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

DEPARTMENT OF PHYSICS.

The COUNCIL is prepared to APPOINT an ASSISTANT PROFESSOR OF PHYSICS. The stipend will be £200 a year with a share of Evening Fees. The gentleman appointed will be expected to enter upon his work at the beginning of October next. Applications, together with testimonials and references, should be forwarded before SEPTEMBER 9th to

IVOR JAMES, Registrar.

Cardiff, August 6th, 1890.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

The Council of the University College of South Wales and Monmouthshire, as the Local Committee of the Cardiff Day Training College, invite APPLICATIONS for the post of MASTER of METHOD. The stipend will not be less than £200 per annum. A statement of duties can be obtained on application to the REGISTRAR. Applications, which should be accompanied by testimonials or references, must be sent in on or before SEPTEMBER 9th, 1890.

IVOR JAMES, Registrar.

OWENS COLLEGE, VICTORIA UNIVERSITY, MANCHESTER.

PROSPECTUSES FOR—

I. DAY CLASSES.
II. DEPARTMENT OF MEDICINE.
III. DENTAL DEPARTMENT.
IV. PHARMACEUTICAL DEPARTMENT.
V. DEPARTMENT FOR WOMEN.
VI. EVENING CLASSES.
VII. SCHOLARSHIPS and EXHIBITIONS (£12 to £100 per annum).
May be obtained at Mr. CORRISS'S, St. Ann's Square, Manchester, or on application to the REGISTRAR.

HENRY W. HOLDER, M.A., Registrar.

THE MASON COLLEGE, BIRMINGHAM.

SESSION 1890-91.

FACULTIES OF ARTS AND SCIENCE.

The NEXT SESSION commences on TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 30, 1890. A SYLLABUS containing full information as to the various Courses of Instruction, Lecture Days and Hours, Fees, Scholarships, &c., is published by Messrs. CORRISS, New Street, Birmingham, price 6d.; by post, 8d.

Further particulars may be obtained on application to the SECRETARY, at the College.

R. S. HEATH, Principal.
(Rev. H. MORLEY, Secretary.

CAVENDISH COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE

This College is intended for Undergraduates commencing their studies at the University somewhat below the ordinary age. The usual age of entrance at Cavendish College is 17 years. Scholarships are awarded to Undergraduates of the College in the various subjects studied in the University. Special superintendence is provided for the study of Medicine, Law, and Modern Languages. The ENTRANCE EXAMINATION for the MICHAELMAS TERM will be held on OCTOBER 8th.

The fee for board, lodging and tuition is £48 for each of the three University Terms. For further information apply to the MASTER.

TUDOR HALL LADIES' COLLEGE,

FOREST HILL, S.E., LONDON.

Principals—Rev. Dr. and Mrs. TODD.

Head Mistress—Miss M. TODD (Girton), Cambridge.
Professors—Sealey, King's Coll.; Dr. Dulcken, Rudolph Lowman, Louis Diehl, Signor Garcia, Larpent, Ferrero Churton Collins, &c.
Full list and references on application.
Large Gymnasium, Lawn-Tennis Courts, Swimming, and Ridi g

THE COLONIAL COLLEGE and TRAINING FARMS (Limited),

Hillemsey Bay, Suffolk.

For the Training of Youths for Colonial Life.

The College owns and farms a fine Seaside Estate of 1,330 acres.

Prospectus on application to the RESIDENT DIRECTOR.

PIXHOLME, DORKING.

PREPARATORY SCHOOL FOR BOYS.

The AUTUMN TERM will begin on SEPTEMBER 20th. Inclusive Fees, 80 or 100 Guineas a year, according to age. There is a fitted Gymnasium in the house. Principal, Miss BRAHAM, assisted by a resident Oxford Graduate and other teachers. Reference permitted to Mrs. Bryant, D.Sc., North London Collegiate School for Girls, N.W.

INEXPENSIVE Sound EDUCATION at

SCHORNE COLLEGE, WINSLOW.—Over 40 Army and Navy Boys, Clergy Sons, Medical, &c., have been educated in either the Classical or Modern side, and the School has a good record. 30 guineas a year; reduced to brothers and orphans. Entrance fee, 5 guineas.—Address Rev. Dr. JAMES.

Authors advised with as to Printing and Publishing. Estimates of Cost of Printing and Binding.

ALEXANDER &amp; SHEPHEARD,

Publishers, Printers, and Binders,
FURNIVAL STREET, HOLBORN, and 27, CHANCERY LANE, LONDON.

DEPARTMENT OF SCIENCE and ART,

National Art Training School, South Kensington.

VISITOR—EDWARD J. POYNTER, Esq., R.A.

PRINCIPAL—JOHN C. L. SPARKES, Esq.

The ANNUAL SESSION will commence on WEDNESDAY, Oct. 1. Art Classes in connection with the Training School are open to the public on payment of fees. The classes for men and women students meet separately. The studies comprise Drawing, Painting, and Modelling, as well as to ornament the figure, landscape, and still life. Candidates for admission who are not already registered as students of the school must have passed the Second Grade Examination in Freehand Drawing.

Admission Examinations will be held at the School on Tuesday, Sept. 23, and Tuesday, Oct. 7, at 10 a.m. and 4.45 p.m. on both days, and on subsequent Tuesdays at frequent intervals during the Session. Application for information as to fees, and for admission, should be made in writing to the SECRETARY, Department of Science and Art, S.W., or on and after Oct. 1, personally to the REGISTRAR, at the School, Exhibition Road, S.W.

By order of the Lords of the Committee of Council on Education.

BRITISH ASSOCIATION for the ADVANCEMENT OF SCIENCE,

LEEDS MEETING, SEPTEMBER 3 to 10.

PRESIDENT ELECT—

Sir FREDERICK AUGUSTUS ABEL, C.B., D.C.L., D.Sc., F.R.S., V.P.C.S.

The JOURNAL, PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS, and other Printed Papers issued by the Association during the Annual Meeting will be forwarded daily, by post, to Members and others unable to attend, on application and prepayment of 2s. 6d. to the Clerk of the Association, Mr. H. C. STRAWANSON, Reception Rooms, Leeds, on or before the first day of the Meeting.

CATALOGUES.

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS

promptly supplied on moderate terms.

CATALOGUES on application.

DULAU &amp; CO., 27, SOHO SQUARE.

FOREIGN AND ORIENTAL BOOKS.

LUZAC &amp; CO.,

Foreign and Oriental Booksellers and Publishers,
46, GREAT RUSSELL STREET, W.C.

(Opposite the British Museum).

NOW READY.

LUZAC &amp; CO.'S MONTHLY LIST.

No. VI., AUGUST, 1890.

CONTENTS:—I. New Oriental Books published in England. II. New Oriental Books published on the Continent. III. New Books published in the East. IV. Recent Continental Importations. (a) Miscellaneous, (b) Archaeology and Art, (c) Educational and Pedagogical, (d) History, Geography, Sociology, (e) Law and Politics, (f) Medicine, (g) Novels, (h) Sports, (i) Theology and Philosophy. V. A choice collection of New and Second-hand Books.

To be had, post free, on application.

Messrs. LUZAC & Co. have constantly on hand a large and choice collection of works in all branches of Literature in Europe and the Orient.

BARGAINS IN BOOKS.

LOWE (CHARLES), New Street, Birmingham OFFERS choice set of the "Portfolio," 15 vols., half-mor., £15.—Boydell's "Shakespeare Gallery," £14.—"Encyclopaedia Britannica," 8th edition, 24 vols., three original sets, samples sent.—Pex. A last 30 vols., brown cloth, cases, new, £4 4s.—Chambers's "Encyclopaedia," 10 large vols., £2.—"Cornhill Magazine," vols. 1 to 18, 25s.—"Scott's Commentary," 6 vols., 4to, full calf, gilt, 10s., cost £2.—"History of Pantheism," 2 vols. in 1, new, 4s., cost 21s.—Catalogues post free. Libraries or Parcels of Books purchased, distance immaterial.—CHARLES LOWE, New Street, Birmingham, Established 40 years.

PRICE ONE SHILLING.

MURRAY'S MAGAZINE.

CONTENTS FOR SEPTEMBER.

INVASION or STARVATION. By Capt. S. EARDLEY-WILMOT, R.N.

MARCIA. Chaps. 33-34. By W. E. NORRIS. (To be continued.)

A TRAGICAL TERTULIA. By E. ARMSTRONG.

WORLDLY WISDOM. By E. NESBIT.

EARLY DAYS RECALLED. (Conclusion.) By Mrs. ROSS.

TOWN and RIVER. By ALFRED HARCOURT.

LADY ARTISTS IN PARIS. By MARIE ADELAIDE BELLOC.

THE PRACTICAL VALUE OF CYCLING. By ALFRED J. H. CREST.

BLIND JUSTICE: a Chapter of Accidents. Part I. By ALBERT E. DRINKWATER.

CORRESPONDENCE.—NOTES.—LIBRARY LIST.

London: JOHN MURRAY, Albemarle Street.

THE NEW REVIEW.

SEPTEMBER.—Price Sixpence.

GIPSY SONG. By H.M. THE QUEEN OF ROMANIA (CARMEN SYLVA).

THE STORY OF POLICE PENSIONS. By JAMES MONRO, C.B. (late Chief Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police).

CARDINAL NEWMAN. By C. KEGAN PAUL.

THE TRADES UNION CONGRESS. By GEORGE HOWELL, M.P.

THE EMIGRATION OF LABOUR FROM BRITISH INDIA. By Sir CHARLES BRUCE, K.C.M.G. (Governor of British Guiana).

FALSE MARKING OF MERCHANDISE.—I. A LEGISLATIVE REVIEW. By ALBERT GRAY.

II. A MARK OF FOREIGN ORIGIN upon IMPORTED GOODS. By C. E. HOWARD VINCENT, C.B., M.P.

A RADICAL PROGRAMME. Part III. By the Right Hon. Sir C. W. DILKE, Bart.

FOLIOS and FOOTLIGHTS. By L. F. AUSTIN.

INDIAN CHILD MARRIAGES. (An Appeal to the British Government.) By RUKHMAI.

THE WORLD'S DESIRE. Book II. Chaps. VII., VIII., IX., X. By H. RIDER HAGGARD and ANDREW LANG.

London: LONGMANS, GREEN, &amp; Co.

Books produced at a fixed price for Printing, Paper, and Binding, and terms arranged for Publishing.

ALEXANDER &amp; SHEPHEARD, 27, Chancery-lane, London.

BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE,

No. 956.—SEPTEMBER, 1890.—2s. 6d.

CONTENTS:—THE RECESS AS IT IS AND AS IT WAS.—THE VALE OF THE MANOR AND THE BLACK DWARF, by Professor Veitch.—A PHYSIOLOGIST'S WIFE, by A. Conan Doyle.—A MORNING IN THE GRAMPIANS.—DOROTHEA, by Author of "Miss Molly."—A UNIQUE TOWN, by P. Hornern.—IN THE EVENING, by C. M. O'N.—THE TRUE STORY OF THE TREASURE-HUNT, by Wilfred Pollock.—DIARY OF AN IDLE DOCTOR.—II. ITALY IN PARIS, by Axel Munthe.—A SECRET MISSION, chaps. xvi.-xix.—"AS YOU LIKE IT" & L'AMÉRICAIN.—GOVERNMENT AND THE CROFTERS, by an Ilesman.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD &amp; SONS, EDINBURGH AND LONDON.

PRICE ONE SHILLING.

TALES FROM "BLACKWOOD."

THIRD SERIES.—No. X.

CONTENTS:—MR. COX'S PROTÉGÉ, by A. Innes Shand.—A DRAMATIC EFFECT, by the Hon. Eva Knatchbull-Hugessen.—A BUD THAT LIVED, by Paul Cushing.—DANIEL FORQUÉ, by the Honble. Stephen Coleridge.—THE GREAT UNLOADED, by Lord Wellwood (Hon. H. J. Moncreiff).

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD &amp; SONS, EDINBURGH AND LONDON.

THE FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW.

SEPTEMBER.

THE NEWFOUNDLAND FISHERIES DISPUTE. (With Map.) By Sir W. WHITEWAY, Premier of Newfoundland, and his Colleagues.
HUMAN SELECTION. By A. R. WALLACE.
GOETHE'S LAST DAYS. (With unpublished Document.) By Prof. Dowden.
A CATHOLIC ON NATURAL RELIGION. By W. H. MALLOCK.
SEXUAL MORALITY IN RUSSIA. By E. B. LAMIN.
PRO BONO PUBLICO. By J. M. BARRIE.
A CENTURY OF WOMEN'S RIGHTS. By ELIZABETH PENNELL.
JOHN HENRY NEWMAN. By W. S. LILLY.
THE ARGENTINE CRISIS—
1. ITS DEVELOPMENT. By H. B. CALLANDER.
2. ITS FINANCIAL SIGNIFICANCE. By W. R. LAWSON.
CHAPMAN & HALL, Limited.

THE NATIONAL REVIEW.

SEPTEMBER.—2s. 6d.

MATTEI & THE KNIFE. By SAMUEL KENNEDY, F.R.C.S.E.
A CHALLENGE to the MATTEISTS. By T. R. ALLINSON, L.R.C.P.Ed.
THE LEATHER INDUSTRY IN IRELAND. By G. G. CHISHOLM, M.A.
THE PROGRESS OF WEATHER STUDY. By H. HARRIES, F.R.Met.Soc.
"SECOND CLASS" CLERGY: a Reply. By the Rev. H. SUTTON.
ELECTORAL BLACKMAILING. By JOSEPH J. DAVIES.
A PRINCESS OF CONDE. By Mrs. F. M. FOSTER.
CARLYLE AND OLD WOMEN. By PAULINE W. ROOSE.
FEATHERED AND FURRED MARAUDERS. By DISCIPULUS.
RUSSIAN SECTS. By C. T. HAGBERG WRIGHT, LL.B.
A COBBLER ARTIST. By G. EYRE-TODD.
THE IMMIGRATION OF DESTITUTE FOREIGNERS. By W. H. WILKINS.
POLITICS AT HOME AND ABROAD.
CORRESPONDENCE.

London: W. H. ALLEN &amp; Co., 13, Waterloo Place.

Monthly, price Half-a-Crown.

THE CONTEMPORARY REVIEW.

CONTENTS FOR SEPTEMBER.

CARDINAL NEWMAN and his CONTEMPORARIES. By WILFRID MEYNELL.
THE ENLIGHTENMENTS OF PAGETT, M.P. By RUDYARD KIPPLING.
CARTHAGE. By EDWARD A. FREEMAN, D.C.L.
THE EDUCATIONAL SYSTEM IN PUBLIC SCHOOLS. By the Rev. J. E. C. WELLDON, Head Master of Harrow School.
THE SEAT OF AUTHORITY IN RELIGION. By R. W. DALE, LL.D.
THE DANTESQUE AND PLATONIC IDEALS OF LOVE. By J. ADDINGTON SYMONDS.
EXCAVATIONS IN JUDEA. By Professor SAYCE.
STATE SOCIALISM AND SOCIAL REFORM. By JOHN RAE.
THE ARGENTINE FILIBUSTERERS. By W. R. LAWSON.
ISBISTER & Co., Limited, 15 and 16, Tavistock Street, Covent Garden.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "FROM KITCHEN TO GARRET."
Ready this day, at all Libraries, in 3 vols.

HAVING AND HOLDING.

By MRS. J. E. PANTON,
Author of "The Curate's Wife," "From Kitchen to Garret," &c.

TRISCHLER &amp; Co., 18, New Bridge Street, E.C.

EDEN, REMINGTON, & CO.*LAYS OF COMMON LIFE.

BY WILLIAM TOYNBEE.

Crown 8vo, price 5s.

"Mr. Toynbee's muse is not afraid to grapple with the more realistic and what used to be considered vulgar topics. If he does not adorn all he touches, he certainly shows that even the most ordinary and now-a-days subjects are capable of poetic treatment. The rope dancer, the agricultural labourer out of employ, the man about town, the thought-reader, the tramp..... are here invested with true harmony and feeling."—JAMES PAYS, in Illustrated London News.

"The socially unsound factors in our community are hit off with power and pathos by Mr. William Toynbee in his 'Lays of Common Life.'.....He has evidently a great pity for the weak, and he finds for this sentiment eloquent and dramatic expression. He has the juvenal vein in him, too, and can be ironical. ....There is scarcely one of these 'Lays' that may not be read through with interest."—Graphic.

"Warmly recommended to all who agree with Schiller that pathos and tragedy tend to purify the heart.....It is surely no small service done by any writer when, with a few incisive strokes, terribly true to Nature, he makes sufferers at each extreme of social life—the poorest and the most outwardly successful—cognisant of the woe that haunts both rich and poor from evil common to all classes of our highly civilised country."—Light.

"They have a good deal of poetic merit, with no small amount of dry humour."—People.
"Quite above the common run of verses—pathetic, for the most part, sometimes amusing. Pity that the saddest stories here sketched should too truly reflect common life in London and elsewhere."—Liverpool Mercury.

"There is real originality about them, and their pathos rings true.....Most of the poems are narrative or descriptive, and some of them deal in good taste and with genuine feeling with the darker aspects of city life."—Manchester Examiner.

"Mr. Toynbee has a real touch of picturesque pathos. It runs like a thread of silver through 'Out of it'—the old, old story of woman's folly and man's guilt—and it gives a homely tenderness to 'Turned off.'"
"They have pith and sinew. ....are dramatic in conception, and forcible in execution."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

"The poems entitled 'Gay,' 'The Last Straw,' 'Gone Under,' and 'Nameless,' are very touching and admirably told."—Newcastle Daily Chronicle.

"Very clever, and a skilful elocutionist will find it worth his while to look into them carefully."—Glasgow Herald.

EDEN, REMINGTON, &amp; CO., HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN.

Just published, in Four Parts, square folio, 12s. 6d. each; or complete in portfolio, £2 12s. 6d.

A SELECTION from the LIBER STUDIORUM OF J. M. W. TURNER, R.A.

FOR ARTISTS, ART STUDENTS, AND AMATEURS.

Comprising 4 Facsimile Reproductions in Mezzotint by Photogravure; 51 Facsimile Reproductions of the Etchings, including 7 rare Unpublished Plates; and 37 Text Reproductions of the finished Engravings.

With Historical Introductions by FREDERICK WEDMORE; and Practical Notes by FRANK SHORT.

From the Times:—"Ought to have a wide circulation, not only among students and in art schools, but among all persons who love English landscape and are jealous of the fame of our greatest landscape painter."

*.* Prospectus post-free on application.

LONDON: BLACKIE &amp; SON, LIMITED, OLD BAILEY.

W. H. SMITH & SON'S
SUBSCRIPTION LIBRARY,
186, STRAND, LONDON, and at the Railway Bookstalls.

1.—This Library is established in connexion with Messrs. W. H. SMITH & Son's numerous Railway Bookstalls; it embraces all the most important Works of History, Biography, Travel, Fiction, Poetry, Science, and Theology, as well as the leading Magazines and Reviews, and gives greater advantages to Subscribers than any other existing Library, from the fact that there are 500 Bookstalls in England and Wales, and to any of these Depots a Subscriber may be transferred free of charge.

2.—Subscribers can only change their Books at the Depot where their names are registered, but they may transfer the place of exchange by giving notice to the Clerk in charge of the Depot at which they obtain their Books. Of the current periodicals, one only at a time is allowed to a Subscription under Five Guineas, and Subscriptions will not be accepted for the supply of Magazines and Reviews only.

3.—The Books are delivered at the Bookstalls, carriage free. A Subscriber may exchange once a day; the Clerk in charge will obtain from London any Work in the Library which a Subscriber may desire to have. NOVELS exchanged only in unbroken and complete Sets.

4.—London Subscribers transferring their Subscriptions to a Country Depot will be entitled only to the number of volumes which the Country terms assign to the amount they subscribe; similarly, Country Subscriptions transferred to Town become subject to the London regulations.

5.—Subscriptions may commence at any date, and are payable in advance at any of the Railway Bookstalls.

6.—Messrs. W. H. SMITH & Son beg to impress upon their Library Subscribers the fact that much disappointment and inconvenience would be avoided if they would, in all cases, give to the Clerk in charge a list comprising at least twice as many titles of works as they wish to exchange.

A Catalogue of Surplus and New Books, offered at greatly reduced prices, is published Monthly, and can be had upon application at the Bookstalls. Also a Catalogue of Books in elegant bindings, for Gentlemen's Libraries.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

NOW READY, PRICE ONE SHILLING.
THE

TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE

CONTENTS FOR SEPTEMBER, 1890.

- I. ALAS! By RHODA BROUGHTON, Author of "Nancy," &c. Part II. Chaps. I.—IV.
- II. THE BARD OF HOPE. By W. FRASER RAE.
- III. JOHN BULL ABROAD.
- IV. TO the TOWY in TIME of DROUGHT.
- V. LETTERS of a WORLDLY WOMAN. VII.—IX.
- VI. DRYDEN and SCOTT. By JOHN AMPHLETT EVANS.
- VII. "EH, BUT IT'S QUEER ALTOGETHER." By MARY H. TENNYSON.
- VIII. SYDNEY IN SEPTEMBER.
- IX. WHIST-SPOILERS. By A. STUART.
- X. HEILAND of HEIDELBERG. By ALBANY DE FONBLANQUE. Chaps. I.—IV.

NEW NOVELS AT ALL LIBRARIES

NOW READY.

NAME AND FAME.

By A. S. EWING LESTER and ADELINE SERGEANT.
In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE REPENTANCE
OF PAUL WENTWORTH."

THE RIDDLE of LAURENCE HAVILAND.

By CONSTANCE SMITH.
In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"The novel is a good deal more than a story à la mode, as anyone who has read 'The Repentance of Paul Wentworth' would naturally expect. The story is vigorous and satisfying. In style and tone it is unexceptionable, and well above the average of recent fiction."—Athenaeum.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "ANTHONY FAIRFAX."

AUDREY.

By MARGERY HOLLIS.
In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"The deceased wife's sister is at first sight an uninteresting subject for a novel; but Miss Hollis has made ingenious use of her materials. Not only has she evolved a good deal of complication from the central fact of her plot, but in her heroine she has powerfully depicted the impression upon a high-spirited girl of the slur upon her birth."—Athenaeum.

A NEW NOVEL.

AN AUSTRALIAN GIRL.

In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"It is but natural to find in the fiction of the Antipodes a freshness that is often absent in the romance of older countries, yet even in the land of its origin few novels can compete with this. Nothing but praise is due to a work which has deep human interest allied to much literary merit."—Morning Post.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "OUGHT WE TO VISIT HER?"

PEARL POWDER. By Mrs.

ANNIE EDWARDES, Author of "Leah: a Woman of Fashion," &c. In 2 vols., crown 8vo.
"Last century life, manners, and conversational style are reproduced with exquisite fidelity, and the book is in every way worthy of its writer."—Full Mall Gazette.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THAT UNFORTUNATE MARRIAGE."

MADAME LEROUX. By

FRANCES ELEANOR TROLLOPE, Author of "Black Spirits and White," &c. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.
"The stories written by this clever lady are never deficient in originality of design, in narrative skill, or in vigorous and consistent exhibition of individual characters, flavoured with strong genuine humour. This novel is, on the whole, an agreeable story, decidedly right-minded, liberal and kindly in spirit, and many scenes are highly amusing."—Illustrated London News.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street,
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

In crown 8vo, cloth, gilt, price 2s. 6d.

MUSICAL GROUNDWORK,

Being a First Manual of Musical Form and History for Students and Readers.

By FREDERICK J. CROWEST,

Author of "The Great Tone Poets," "Advice to Singers," &c.

"The subjects treated by the author are numerous, but he specially calls attention to the fact that his work only claims to be an introduction to each and all of these subjects. Mr. Crowest treats these in a lucid style, explains his themes clearly, and gives a vast amount of information in a small compass. The book besides being a capital one to put in the hands of the student, is so written as to be attractive to the reader seeking knowledge on the origin and progress of music as an art."—Musical Standard.

FREDERICK WARNE & Co., Bedford Street, Strand.

NOW READY.

NEW NOVEL by Mrs. BENNETT-EDWARDS

Crown 8vo, 360 pp., 2s. 6d.

SAINT MONICA:

A Wife's Love Story.

By MRS. BENNETT-EDWARDS.

"'Saint Monica' is a society novel, remarkable alike for originality and power. It may easily be understood that the excess of devotion and self-abandonment exemplified in Veronica and George Westbury require a great deal of ingenious writing up. Mrs. Bennett-Edwards has proved herself equal to the task, and must be regarded as a clever, as well as daring, manipulator, of subjects decidedly risky in treatment."—Academy.

"This is one of the many volumes to which the controversy about marriage has given rise. The volume is written with a considerable amount of power and convincingness."—Bris of Mercury.

"The heroine is admitted to be a supporter of some of the most advanced and startling theories of the day. His attitude towards this passionate and headstrong woman is one of the most curious features of a curious book."—Morning Post.

"Plenty of ability and good writing in this book."—Liverpool Mercury.

Bristol: J. W. ARROWSMITH.

London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT, & Co., Limited.

THE NINETEENTH CENTURY.

SEPTEMBER.—Price 2s. 6d.

A PRIVATE SOLDIER on the PRIVATE SOLDIER'S WRONGS.

By ARTHUR V. PALMER.

MUTUAL AID AMONG ANIMALS. By PRINCE KRPOTRIK.

HOW ART KAVANAGH FOUGHT RICHARD the KING. By the Hon. EMILY LAWLESS.

BEHIND the SCENES in ENGLISH POLITICS. By the late NASSAU W. SENIOR.

A POMPEII for the TWENTY-NINTH CENTURY. By FREDERIC HARRISON.

AMERICAN RAILWAYS and BRITISH FARMERS. By J. BRUCE JENKINS.

BION of SMYRNA. By W. MORTON FULLERTON.

WATER in AUSTRALIAN SAHARAS. By the Hon. T. A. BRASSEY.

ON CRITICISM: with some Remarks on the Importance of Doing Nothing. (Concluded.) By OSCAR WILDE.

RUIN of the CIVIL SERVICE. By Sir ROBERT G. C. HAMILTON, K.C.B.

A MEDIEVAL POPULAR PREACHER. By MAURICE HAWLETT.

IS CENTRAL AFRICA WORTH HAVING?

(1) By Sir JOHN POPE HENNESSY, K.C.M.G.

(2) By EDWARD DICEY, C.B.

London: KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRUBNER, & Co., Limited.

THE SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

THE ORGAN OF BOTH BRANCHES OF
THE LEGAL PROFESSION.

ESTABLISHED 1857.

Published every Friday. Price 6d.

Of the general contents of the JOURNAL the following statement will afford some idea:—

CURRENT TOPICS.—LEADING ARTICLES.—RECENT DECISIONS—CASES OF THE WEEK—CASES BEFORE THE BANKRUPTCY REGISTRARS—SOLICITORS' CASES—REVIEWS—NEW ORDERS—GENERAL CORRESPONDENCE—COURTS—PARLIAMENT AND LEGISLATION—APPOINTMENTS AND OBITUARY—SOCIETIES AND INSTITUTIONS.

ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTIONS.

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL ONLY, 26s.; by post, 28s., when paid in advance. Single Number, 6d.

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL and WEEKLY REPORTER, £2 12s., post-free, when paid in advance.

WEEKLY REPORTER, in Wrapper, £2 12s., post-free; Single Number, 1s.

The Solicitors' Journal and Reporter can be ordered from any date.

Cheques and Post Office Orders payable to H. VILLERS.

OFFICE: 27, CHANCERY LANE, W.C.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO.'S

BOOKS for SUMMER READING.

THIRD EDITION NOW READY.

In Darkest Africa.

By HENRY M. STANLEY, D.C.L., LL.D., &c.,

Being the Official Publication recording the

QUEST, RESCUE, and RETREAT of EMIN,

GOVERNOR of EQUATORIA.

Ordinary Edition, 2 vols., demy 8vo, with 150 Illustrations, and 3 Maps, in handsome cloth binding, price TWO GUINEAS.

The TIMES.—"Mr. Stanley's narrative of his adventures, privations, sufferings, trials, dangers, and discoveries during his heroic quest and rescue of Emin Pasha is as moving and enthralling a tale as ever was told by man. It is, moreover, told with so genuine a modesty of temper, so transparent a fidelity to fact, so generous and eager a desire on the part of the leader of the expedition to give their due meed of praise and recognition to each and all of his subordinates, not excepting the humblest of his African followers, that the critic's task becomes merely one of unstinted admiration of the almost unexampled greatness of the deeds accomplished, and the profound ethical interest of the narrative which describes them."

NOVELS by WILLIAM BLACK.

In uniform crown 8vo volumes, cloth extra, price 6s.

THE NEW PRINCE FORTUNATUS.

IN FAR LOCHABER.

THE STRANGE ADVENTURES of a HOUSE-BOAT.

THE PENANCE of JOHN LOGAN.

A DAUGHTER of HETH.

IN SILK ATTIRE.

KILMENY.

THREE FEATHERS.

SUNRISE.

LADY SILVERDALE'S SWEETHEART.

WESSEX NOVELS by THOS. HARDY.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION,

In uniform crown 8vo volumes, boards, 2s. each;
cloth 3s. 6d. each.

FAR from the MADDING CROWD.

THE MAYOR of CASTERBRIDGE.

THE TRUMPET MAJOR.

RETURN of the NATIVE.

A LAODICEAN.

HAND of ETHELBERTA.

A PAIR of BLUE EYES. } Very shortly.
TWO on a TOWER. } The 6s. Editions can still be had.

A SPLENDID HOLIDAY VOLUME.

FRIESLAND MERES,

AND

THROUGH THE NETHERLANDS:

The Voyage of a Family in a Norfolk Wherry.

By HENRY MONTAGU DOUGHTY,

Author of "Summer in Broadland."

Third Edition with Additional Illustrations and Text.
Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 10s. 6d.

NOTICE.—HARPER'S MAGAZINE,
September Number. The publication of this number is unavoidably postponed until the 4th or 5th of September.

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, SEARLE,
and RIVINGTON, Limited,
St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, Fleet Street, E.C.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 30, 1890.

No. 956, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

Principles of Economics. By Prof. Alfred Marshall. Vol. I. (Macmillan.)

Natura non facit saltum, the motto which Prof. Marshall has adopted, is not altogether appropriate to a treatise which advances the position of science as it were by leaps and bounds. But the adage well describes one peculiarity of Prof. Marshall's work—his hesitating to draw lines of demarcation where Nature has not. Thus, the classical antithesis between market and natural (or normal) value is here almost obliterated. The idea of a "market" is gradually extended so as to cover not only those sales at which the whole stock of a perishable commodity, like fish, must be disposed of on the same day, but also that slow adaptation of supply to demand which may extend over years and even generations. A rough and practical distinction may indeed be drawn between long and short periods. For example, suppose the demand for fish to be considerably and permanently raised; old boats would be pressed into the business, the coasting fishermen would strain every nerve; and accordingly, during a "short period," the price of the article would rise. But in a "long period," new boats would be built, new fishermen bred, and the increased organisation of the business might be attended with a decline of price. Whether the period be long or short, in general the equalisation of supply and demand is determined by the action of two opposite forces. "While demand is based on the desire to obtain commodities, supply depends on the overcoming of the unwillingness to undergo discommodities." Those who isolate one of these factors as exclusively the cause of value violate the symmetry of Nature.

"The 'cost of production principle' and the 'final utility principle' are undoubtedly component parts of the one all-ruling law of supply and demand; each may be compared to one blade of a pair of scissors. When one blade is held still and the cutting is effected by moving the other, we may say with careless brevity that the cutting is done by the second; but the statement is not one to be made formally and defended deliberately."

When Jevons says that value depends entirely upon utility,

"this statement seems to be no less one-sided and fragmentary, and much more misleading, than that into which Ricardo often glided with careless brevity, about the dependence of value on cost of production."

Another instance in which Nature is continuous, though economists have been desultory, is thus introduced.

"As in spite of the great differences in form between birds and quadrupeds there is the fundamental idea running through all their frames, so the general theory of the equilibrium of demand and supply is a fundamental idea running through the frames of all the various parts of the central problem of distribution and exchange."

"Value or Distribution and Exchange" is the significant title of the last part of the volume, the seventh book—the crowning height to which the steep paths trodden in the earlier investigations lead up. In the fifth book, the principle of supply and demand is treated generally, without respect to the incidents of particular markets. This arrangement, though undoubtedly the most scientific, is not without its disadvantages. For, as the human mind is incapable of receiving perfectly abstract ideas, it is necessary to clothe the generalities of the preliminary disquisitions in some concrete circumstances. Thus discussions relating to one and the same species of bargain—for instance, the determination of the rate of interest—must be sought in different portions of the volume. And the student may complain that he is not sufficiently assisted by the index in bringing together all the remarks relating to the same topic.

The general principle of competitive bargaining having been powerfully grasped, the specific properties of the different kinds of markets are delicately discriminated. Of this more detailed part of the work we have only space to say that the peculiar worth which high authority attributes to "middle axioms" is here fully realised. We recommend the economist who wishes to test this judgment to write out, before reading the latter part of the Principles of Economics, what he himself has to say in answer to questions like the following: What are the peculiarities in the action of demand and supply which determine the wages of the labourer, or the profits of the employer? Then let him compare the suggestions of his own memory and meditation with our author's original and exhaustive treatment of the subject. He must be a very great, or a very small, man who, in making this comparison, does not recognise his superior.

With respect to many of the transactions comprehended under the head of Distribution and Exchange, especially with regard to rent in the sense of surplus remuneration, the student will have to unlearn some doctrines which have become fashionable. He will have to learn again some of the economic classics which have become unfashionable. Prof. Marshall shows reason for believing that "even in our own generation, when as much intellectual activity has been devoted to economic studies in other countries as in England, nearly all the new constructive ideas are found to be but developments of others which were latent in the older English work." The mists of ephemeral criticism are dispelled. The eternal mountains reappear in their natural sublimity, contemplated from a kindred height.

We are referring especially to the theory of competition. With respect to monopoly, the French mathematical school have been Prof. Marshall's chief forerunners. Improving upon Cournot and Dupuit, he deduces very striking and important conclusions as to the respective interests which monopolists and consumers have in high or low prices. The same addition to price will (in general, with certain reservations) cause greater detriment to consumers in the case of commodities subject to the law of diminishing returns, including presumably many necessities, than in the converse case. An analogous paradox is true, in the abstract, of a tax imposed by a government. Theoretically it might be advantageous to tax necessities, in order to obtain the means of bountying luxuries. So far is it from being a priori true that governmental interposition can only work mischief. It is not, indeed, to be expected that a government, still less that a monopolistic company, should have regard only to the interest of the consumer. Prof. Marshall entertains a conception which we might describe as a sort of mixed utilitarianism, according to which the interest of the consumer does not "count for one," as Bentham would say, in the calculations of the monopolist, but only for a fraction, as compared with the monopolist's own interest. These are not mere theoretical refinements. Prof. Marshall applies his principles to the case of a proposed government-undertaking in India, and confutes the maxim that "an English ruler should engage in no enterprise that will not produce an income sufficient to defray the interest on the cost."

These elaborate deductions are not performed without the aid of a peculiarly powerful organon, the mathematico-economic calculus introduced by Cournot, and independently developed by Gossen, Jevons, and Prof. Walras. Prof. Marshall's example fully justifies the remark, which he makes with reference to Cournot, that mathematicians of high calibre "may use their favourite weapons in clearing a way for themselves to the centre of some of those difficult problems of economic theory, of which only the outer fringe has yet been touched."

He has solved

"a class of economic problems which cannot be safely treated by anyone of less genius than Ricardo without the aid of some apparatus, either of mathematics or of diagrams [representing the relations of economic forces]."

We should be inclined to put out of court "anyone of less genius" who may controvert the abstract theorems to which we have referred without having mastered the mathematical conceptions on which they rest. The part of the work which is thus raised above ordinary criticism is probably more extensive than the author has explicitly stated. Many passages read as if they were translations from mathematics; for instance, the Note on barter—so important in its bearing on the labour market—with the difficult distinction between "an equilibrium" and "the equilibrium" (p. 397), or the, to many readers, puzzling statement that "free competition tends to make each man's wages equal to the net product of his own labour" (p. 547). A more explicit use of diagrams and symbols at such passages might have assisted one class of readers in fully apprehending the writer's meaning, and prevented another class from thinking that they had done so, when they had not.

Prof. Marshall affords no countenance to the supposition that algebra or geometry can dispense with the analysis employed by the older economists. Mathematical reasoning is barren, unwedded with appropriate conceptions. It is remarkable that Jevons should have missed some of the very ideas which his mathematical method was peculiarly adapted to seize. We may allude to his somewhat wooden theory of distribution which Prof. Marshall long ago criticised in the ACADEMY (April 1, 1872). It was there that, as far as we know, first was stated the important principle: "Just as the motion of every body in the solar system affects and is affected by the motion of every other, so it is with the elements of the problem of political economy."

Referring to our author's earlier utterances, it may not be out of place to guard against the possibility of the reader being occasionally affected like the illiterate spectator of "Hamlet," who thought that the play was full of quotations. Some of Prof. Marshall's leading ideas have been more or less fully expressed in his earlier book, and in certain papers which, though unpublished, have not been unknown. The light of dawn was diffused before the orb of day appeared above the horizon. Must we complete the metaphor by adding that a little cloud obscures the risen sun? We allude to the painfully small print in which the author has shrouded all his mathematical disquisitions and much of his curious miscellaneous information. This type may be described as considerably more excruciating than that of the Economics of Industry. It may be hoped that in subsequent redactions of these works the author, or his publisher, will not see fit thus to aggravate the natural difficulties of the subject.

We should not do justice to the varied excellence of Prof. Marshall's work if we dwelt only on its more abstract and, so to speak, Ricardian side. Here are concrete details concerning the technique of industry, explanations of machinery as interesting as the classical description of pin-manufacture, though, it must be confessed, not so apt to fix attention by a quaint felicity of style. But the division of labour has made such advance, since Adam Smith wrote, that perhaps it is not reasonable to expect at the present day that epigrams and science should be manufactured together. Nor is our author's style deficient in the grace which is apt to attend usefulness. We dare say that the superior persons who, like Macaulay, turn with ever fresh avidity to the drier passages of Thucydides may be delighted with a diction dense with thought and fact.

There is one element in Prof. Marshall's work which we should search for in vain, or rather find in much smaller qualities, among the older economic classics—the modern element, the spirit of the age, which prompts the questions:

"Is it necessary that large numbers of the people should be exclusively occupied with work that has no elevating character?"

"How far should Government regulate the management of railways and other concerns which are to some extent in a position of monopoly, and again of land and other things, the quantity of which cannot be increased by man?"

There is reason to expect that Prof. Marshall's answers, to be given in the second volume, to these and other burning questions will be peculiarly instructive and authoritative. For, on the one hand, perhaps more decidedly than any other first-rate economist, he has declared against the pretended harmonies of economic optimism; he has broken with the "hangers on of the science who used it simply as an engine for keeping the working-classes in their place." In this course he has indeed been preceded by great thinkers—by Prof. Wagner and Prof. Walker, by Jevons and the living English philosopher who has best taught that the art of political economy does not necessarily consist in inaction. But in some sense more convincingly Prof. Marshall addresses an argumentum ad hominem—an argument adapted to the intelligence of the bourgeois economist when he reasons that, even taking no account of the inequalities of distribution, and assuming that a shilling is not more an object to the poor man than to the rich man, still it would be theoretically possible for a government by fiscal arrangements admittedly within its province, by a nicely adjusted system of taxes and bounties, to increase the welfare of its citizens. This reasoning directed to commercial interests seems particularly calculated to destroy that idol of the market place, unlimited Laissez faire. While thus recoiling from extreme individualism the author may be suspected of leaning towards a moderate socialism. He is indignant at the "moral torpor which can endure that we with our modern resources and knowledge should submit patiently to the continued destruction of all that is worth having in multitudes of human lives."

But, on the other hand, his profound study of the play of those motives which he calls "normal"—of the remote consequence of that part of human conduct which is regular and predictable—has separated him from those whom in a former work he disparages as "impetuous socialists and ignorant orators." While feeling that the "strength of Karl Marx's sympathies with suffering must always claim our respect," he perceives that the argument of the great Socialist which claims the authority of Ricardo "is really as opposed to the general tenor of his [Ricardo's] theory of value as it is to common sense." Unconsidered proposals for confiscating the interest of capital and shortening the hours of labour find no favour with the author of the Principles of Economics. He deprecates the hasty adoption of measures "which resemble the patent medicine of a charlatan, and while quickly effecting a little good sow the seeds of widespread and lasting decay." He regards the diseases of society neither in the spirit of confident quackery, nor with the stupid indifference of selfishness easily persuaded that nothing can be done. He desires with the desire of an enthusiast that the opportunity of leading a "life that is worthy of man" should be obtained by all. He deliberates upon the means to that great end with the cautious sagacity of an economist who has probably made fewer mistakes than any other equally original writer on the most difficult of the sciences.

F. Y. EDGEWORTH.

Essays Speculative and Suggestive. By John Addington Symonds. (Chapman & Hall.)

THE reader rises from these two volumes with the sense of having been in contact with a mind of much versatility and range, which has taken the art and literature of various times and lands for its pasturage, and has developed a power of assimilation not uncommensurate with the large capacities of its appetite. The actual addition which these essays make to the original thought of our time may hardly, on examination, prove to be large; in reading them we never feel the thrill, the excitement, not far removed from a kind of awe, which accompanies a sudden sensation of having broken new spiritual ground, or passed, by some happy adventure of the intellect, into a tract of mind which has hitherto remained inviolate and virgin. The footprints of former travellers are indeed everywhere visible; but in following Mr. Symonds's lead we are still grateful for a guide who can point out features of interest which the intrepid explorers, busied in naming mountains and tracking the sources of rivers, left unrecorded and unobserved.

In the essay with which the first volume opens, Mr. Symonds presents with attractive lucidity his conception of the philosophy of evolution; but, in the paper which comes next, "On the Application of Evolutionary Principles to Art and Literature," we find his use of the word "evolution" somewhat confusing, if not self-contradictory. He sets out with the implied intention of tracing a law of development in artistic and intellectual products identical with that which physical science recognises as operative in the world of material phenomena; but presently we find that he is using the term "evolution" in a sense practically undistinguishable from "growth," or from the passage of an individual organism through successive stages of maturity, decay, and dissolution. Before long, indeed, we become not a little bewildered by the protean character which the word "evolution" assumes in Mr. Symonds's hands. While on one page it seems to mean nothing more than a legitimate tendency in art and literature from the homogeneous to the heterogeneous—an inevitable subdivision involving the exchange of a normal simplicity for a no less normal complexity; on the next it appears rather to denote degeneration from primitive largeness of structure towards a loose mass of dismembered atoms, and at times the word looks like a mere synonym for a process of disintegration and dispersion, ending in exhaustion and extinction. Presently—so fluid and elusive is Mr. Symonds's use of it —the word changes colour and signifies, apparently, the dissipation of an original fund of motive force by means of innumerable minor radiations of the initial energy. And yet, again, we find it employed simply as a compendious phrase for a cycle of crescency, culmination, and decadence. Now, it is in the result of the gradually accumulated modifications of structure incidental to the reproductive process in animal life that what we commonly agree to call Evolution is seen; and similarly we require a survey of, at the very least, a series of generations of artistic or literary creators to enable us to infer the operation of an evolutionary principle in art or literature corresponding to that which is visible in the field of biology or anthropology. And just as, from the sheer necessity of limiting the elasticity of words, we do not commonly speak of the journey of a single human being from the womb to the grave as a manifestation of the evolutionary principle, whereas we may speak of the emergence of the typical Englishman from the ferment of ethnic elements which went to his making as such a manifestation, so in like manner we may talk of the progress of English fiction from Smollet and Fielding to Mr. Stevenson or Mr. Shorthouse as an evolution; but it would introduce some confusion of language to speak of the evolution of George Eliot, the author of Romola, from George Eliot, the translator of Feuerbach. Yet this latter is, by analogy, quite Mr. Symonds's way of using the word, as applied, for example, to the rise and decline of the Elizabethan drama. From Marlowe to Shirley the Elizabethan drama, in form and on the whole in spirit, is really a single organic growth, and to talk of its evolution within that period when we simply mean its passage through volcanic and explosive youth to ripened beauty and strength, and its subsequent descent into fatuous senility, is surely to confound ideas, as well as to institute analogies between classes of mental and of physical phenomena which admit of no real parallel. And if we take a more extended survey—reviewing, say, English poetry from Chaucer to Tennyson—it is permissible to doubt whether any law of succession even remotely allied to the Darwinian development-principle can be discerned; for the history of literature, taking periods as wholes, seems often in great measure like the history of party government, a record of total changes of front, periodic reversals of policy, by which one age becomes an abjuration and angry renunciation of its predecessor, to be itself abjured and angrily renounced in turn. Thus, there is room for doubt as to whether literature—a long series of oscillations as of a pendulum—is in its ultimate elements one whit more progressive than geometry. At any rate, when we reflect upon the rather slight ethical advance which literature has made during the tolerably spacious interval which separates the author of the Book of Job from the author of La Terre—two representative writers of their times—it becomes increasingly difficult, in applying the evolution-hypothesis to literature at all, to apply it in the optimistic sense which identifies it with ascent moral and spiritual.

When we pass to the other essays composing these volumes—which deal more with concrete subjects, and less with theory and speculation—we are frequently struck with the admirable order and arrangement of ideas which, individually not always of first-class importance, are made to contribute to an interesting collective result. About Walt Whitman nothing more sane and temperate in the way of appreciation has been written than the paper on “Democratic Art;” and it is serviceably illustrated by some excellent quotations from Whitman's vigorous prose, always so very much better than his—well, than what his admirers probably call his poetry. Our author treats Whitman with generous sympathy, though in reality one cannot but think that it is Whitman's specific attitude towards the facts of life—an attitude, on the whole, of immense though somewhat startling reasonableness—rather than his really abortive attempt at an artistic presentation of those facts, which fascinates his enthusiastic critic, who, moreover, cannot sanction such a violent rupture with tradition as Whitman advocates.

“Why,” says Mr. Symonds, “should we seek to break the links which bind us to the best of that past from which we came? Achilles has not ceased to be a fit subject for a poem or statue, because we discern heroism in an engine-driver.”

Throughout both of these volumes we come upon numerous passages which are not only exceedingly good in themselves, but are especially salutary at the present moment. Thus:

“From time to time critics arise who attempt to persuade us that it does not so much matter what a poet says as how he says it, and that the highest poetical achievements are those which combine a certain vagueness of meaning with sensuous melody and colour of verbal composition. Yet, if one thing is proved with certainty by the whole of literature down to our own time, it is that the self-preservative instinct of humanity rejects such art as does not contribute to its intellectual nutrition and moral sustenance. It cannot afford to continue long in contact with ideas that run counter to the principles of its own progress. . . . Poetry will not, indeed, live without style or its equivalent. But style alone will never confer enduring cosmopolitan fame upon a poet. He must have placed himself in accord with the permanent emotions, the conservative forces of the race; he must have uttered what contributes to the building up of vital structure in the social organism, in order to gain more than a temporary or a partial hearing.”

In his use of words Mr. Symonds habitually combines a scholarly precision with a laudable freedom from pedantry. We have heard his style criticised as unduly ambitious in tone, yet it has surely the merits of an efficient instrument which obediently serves its author's will. It is, however, a style not too rich in animal vigour; and it is without surprises, without those charms which startle and waylay us—those incalculable and beautiful apparitions from some unsuspected ambush of personality. But if Mr. Symonds's prose manner does not often, like one of Mr. Coventry Patmore's domesticated angels, “reward us” with that “variety

Which men who change can never know,” neither, on the whole, does it tease us with any worse monotony than the monotony which results from almost invariably sound thought, just apprehension, luminous generalisation, and masterly utterance. Between the aesthetic epicure or exquisite literary voluptuary like Mr. Pater, and the purely intellectual connoisseur of men and books and epochs, like Mr. Leslie Stephen, Mr. Symonds occupies a place perhaps scarcely so well defined as theirs, but not less necessary to be filled; and he fills it worthily, by virtue of the trained judgment and varied erudition which he always has at command.

WILLIAM WATSON.

The New World of Central Africa. With a History of the First Christian Mission on the Congo. By Mrs. H. Grattan Guinness. (Hodder & Stoughton.)

As secretary of the East London Institute for Home and Foreign Missions, Mrs. Guinness has been personally associated with more than one of the various schemes which have been organised for the evangelisation of Central Africa since the field for such work was prepared by Stanley's memorable expedition “Through the Dark Continent.” In her official position she had access to much valuable information, of which good use is made in this account of the foundation and subsequent vicissitudes of “the first Christian Mission on the Congo.” There were Christian Missions on the Congo, and especially in the native state which gave its name to that river, over three hundred years ago; and so successful were they that at one time the “Emperor of San Salvador” and all his subjects were supposed to have renounced heathendom, and embraced the Roman Catholic religion. But that, as we here learn, was only “an idolatrous and corrupt form of Christianity differing from paganism only in name,” popery being “a corrupt and corrupting religion,” a “baptized paganism,” and so forth. This early propaganda being thus ruthlessly brushed aside, the honour of being the “first” Christian Mission in the Congo basin is claimed for “The Livingstone Inland Mission,” whose history forms, if not the chief subject, at least the raison d'être of the present volume.

It is extremely instructive to watch the progress and issue of this enterprise, as here described by one of the officials connected with it from first to last. From a first attempt in an entirely new and difficult field, mistakes and disasters were of course inseparable; but while admiring the perseverance and heroic courage with which its unselfish object was pursued, one cannot but wonder at the ignorance, rashness, and lack of foresight which seemed to fly in the face of that Providence to which appeal was being continually made. Founded early in 1878, immediately after the main results were known of Stanley's great expedition, it took the title of “Livingstone,” because, in a moment of enthusiasm, Stanley had suggested that the great artery of the Lualaba-Congo should henceforth be known by that name. The suggestion fell flat; but the title remained, and later proved a source of no little confusion in the public mind between the different Livingstone Missions of the Congo and Nyassa regions.

The mission was founded on what is called "an evangelical but interdenominational basis"; and after some research it gradually appears that by "interdenominational" is meant a body open to all comers, at least to Protestants of all sects willing to work for the common good. But most of the staff appear to have been Baptists; and this circumstance probably saved the undertaking from total collapse, by facilitating its absorption in the American Baptist Missionary Union after six years of a chequered, though not altogether useless, existence. Despite tremendous misfortunes, and almost crushing calamities, with a death-roll swollen beyond the usual high average, even for Africa, much pioneering work had, at least, been accomplished in a blind, dogged sort of way.

Characteristic of this intrepid spirit was the attempt made to obtain a footing in the country by the first batch sent out to the Congo estuary in 1878, without any preliminary arrangements for their reception in this new and unknown region. After a short delay at Boma, they purchase a large canoe, and make their way over to the native settlements of Masuka and Nokki, where "they threw themselves right in amongst the heathen." Soon after they are joined by the Rev. Mr. Craven, one of the pioneers and victims of the enterprise; and he is obliged to report that "Masuka is a deadly place, this time of change very sickly, heat and cold both bringing on illness. The scorpion and serpent bring danger on land, the alligators swarm in the water, and there are other dangers too numerous to mention."

All are presently down with the fever, and Mr. Craven himself is so weak that in four days after landing he is "unable to cross the room." Then some young men, scarcely out of their teens, are sent out, or allowed to go out, with the result that might have been foreseen. Such was "the bright and beloved young brother, William Appel," who sailed in May, arrived in June, and died in July, 1882. Mr. Appel was of a heroic temperament, full of zeal and indiscretion alike, and his useless sacrifice startled even the Home Mission.

"After we had studied the letters giving details of this fresh catastrophe, we perceived that his life had indeed been in one sense thrown away, and that, with a little more prudence and discretion, it might in all probability have been preserved for many a year. Dr. Sims reported that he had, in his usual active energetic way, exerted himself after his arrival exactly as if he had been at home. Just before his fatal illness he had walked in the hot sun thirty-two miles in two days, climbing rocky and difficult paths from sea-level to a height of 1600 feet, and taking no rest afterwards. He had been advised to take less exercise, but was unwilling to be idle. The result was fever! He was taken ill at nine at night on Tuesday, July 18th, and gone before sunrise on Saturday!"

Then, to conclude this deplorable list of blunders, somebody asks, "Why not use donkeys as beasts of burden in Central Africa?" And forthwith a batch of twenty-five are shipped from Madeira, and some grand schemes are arranged, the success of which, however, depends on the still unsolved problem whether donkeys can be made to work in Central Africa.

"This alas, proved a delusive hope, and its failure shipwrecked the whole scheme! The experiment was as complete a failure as the attempt to introduce oxen [read elephants] for the journey from the east coast to Tanganyika, and after much loss of time and money it had to be abandoned. . . . One donkey after another died, till the twenty-five were reduced to half a dozen, and Mr. McCall determined to abandon the attempt to use them, and to get on without their help, which has indeed proved to be only hindrance. It was a sore disappointment, and it was not clear why the poor beasts failed. Whether the fatigue was excessive or the food did not suit them, or whether they ate something poisonous, their owners were never satisfied. But it was evident they were no use on journeys, and the hope of help from a beast of burden had to be abandoned."

To all this was added the failure of the Mission to make converts; at least none were made until it passed into the hands of the American Baptist Union. In fact, the preachers of the Gospel began at the wrong end, and started on the gratuitous assumption that the natives are not in a primitive but in a fallen or degraded state, hence are capable of rising to the Christian level, of understanding the sublime and metaphysical truths of the Christian dispensation the moment the hour of awakening arrives. This fatal error, which lies at the root of the failure of missionary work throughout the world, is put in her naive way by Mrs. Guinness, who objects to Prof. Drummond's regarding the Africans as affording a picture of primeval man, adding:

"We regard them rather as the sin-degraded descendants of originally purer, wiser, and happier races. Geography, history, and language all point to the conclusion that Africa was peopled from the north-east; that is, across the Isthmus of Suez, the Red Sea, and the Persian Gulf, from Asia, the cradle of the race. This Scripture and science alike prove. Now degradation spreads in ever-deepening shades over the continent, from north-east to south-west, until we reach the scarcely human inhabitants of the Kalahari Desert. Degradation, like death, is the wages of sin. . . . Sin reigns in Africa, and sin which, in spite of their heathenism, the people know to be sin."

These arguments need not here be discussed; but note the result. Mr. Richards, who tells us that for six years he failed to make a single convert, though afterwards more successful, visits a native village, where the people are holding a kind of pandemonium over a woman apparently suffering from rheumatism. His interference is rejected; he asks them to listen, and they tell him to go away. Then

"they became angry; but unconsciously to them, I hardly know how, I managed to interest them at last in the works of God. I told them the story of the six days' work of creation, and, after describing each day's work, asked them: 'Why not worship Him who made all these good things?' The question, 'Who makes your food grow?' seemed especially to interest them, and they acknowledged that God made everything. Again I asked: 'Why not then worship Him?' There was a grunt of approval from many. I went on, and told them about Christ the Redeemer, and asked them to close their eyes while I prayed to God. They did so. I did not forget to ask healing for the poor woman in my prayer. . . . A thunder-storm came on, and we had to make our way home as quickly as possible."

This reads like an anti-climax, and certainly betrays a strange lack of humour in the writer. But one cannot but feel that "Christ the Redeemer," with the implied doctrine of the atonement, must have been as far above the comprehension of these savages as was the cause of the thunder-storm.

It remains to be stated that, after four years of "suspended animation," or of nirvana, in the life of the American Baptist Missionary Union, the Livingstone Inland Mission resumed an independent existence last year under a new name, and apparently under better auspices. The progress of the new Congo-Balolo Mission, whose first station was established at Mulonga's on the Lokunga in April, 1889, will certainly be watched with great interest. The field of its future operations is one of the finest in all Africa; for the great and intelligent Ba-Lolo nation occupies nearly the whole of the magnificent tableland enclosed north, east, and west by the vast horse-shoe bend of the Congo. Several Englands could easily fit into this space, which has a population of certainly not less than ten millions, who may be described as typical Bantus. In physical appearance and mental capacity they are farthest removed from the pure negro, and approach nearest to the Hamitic type. Mrs. Guinness, who gives some illustrations of Ba-Lolo heads, rightly remarks that "the most casual observer cannot fail to notice the remarkable contrast between this and the negro-head. The high forehead and fine mental development, the comparatively delicate lips and lower jaw, the aquiline nose and the general intelligence are an index of the Ba-Lolo character. . . . Intelligent, industrious, and friendly, the Ba-Lolo are scarcely to be called savages. They understand division of labour; farmers, gardeners, smiths, boat-builders, weavers, cabinet-makers, armourers, warriors, and speakers are already differentiated among them. They occupy only a low plane of civilisation as yet, but they have begun to emerge from barbarism."

All lovers of human progress will wish every success to the mission, which has undertaken to instruct and elevate in the social scale the powerful Ba-Lolo nation, on whose acceptance or rejection of Western culture largely depend the future destinies of Congoland.

Some of the illustrations of this work are really atrocious, while others have done service before, though not the worse for that. There is a large and good map of Central Africa, which, however, does not show the discoveries of the Emin Pasha Relief Expedition, having been issued before those discoveries were available for general purposes.

A. H. KEANE.

"THE STATESMEN SERIES."—Life of Charles James Fox. By H. O. Wakeman. (W. H. Allen.)

It would hardly be a paradox to say that the difference between the political temper of 1890 and of 1790 may be measured by the difference between an eminent biographer and his subject, between Sir George Trevelyan and Charles James Fox. To this generation of reading politicians—a small species in a world-wide genus—the name of Fox is little more than a peg on which to hang anecdotes, and an example with which to point morals. His fame, even as an orator, is but traditional. The principles of the great Whig leader were inapplicable or out of date before his followers returned to power. His speeches are rarely quoted for their eloquence and never for their wisdom. Politics at present demand, in those who pursue the laborious calling which is termed public life, two things at any rate: domestic respectability, and a practical and business-like attention to affairs. These are almost indispensable in a modern statesman; they were not the shining qualities of Fox. It is true that we have politicians who would scarcely be reputable churchwardens or efficient railway directors: it is true also that considerable periods of Fox's life were highly domestic and decorous, and that no one could be a better man of business when he liked. But in the main the contrast is great. Fox, beginning life as one of the boy-statesmen of the pocket-borough age, was for years almost as much the chastened libertine of politics as of private life. A born rhetorician, a classicist by taste and education, he became the prince of debaters, the archetype of the political man of feeling. But, orator though he was and statesman though he was, it is as the gambler of Brooks', the mentor of Prince Florizel, the gladiator of the Westminster election, that he survives for us. We look for eloquence and wisdom to Burke, for eloquence and wit to Sheridan, for eloquence and patriotism to Pitt. Fox seems to us to have been as spendthrift of his talents as of his fortunes.

There is no way of writing his life that can very much modify this impression, which is the growth of years. Sir George Trevelyan's fascinating book does not remove it. Lord John Russell's book is not read—perhaps unreadable—and having no index can only be referred to by men of abundant leisure; but he cannot elevate Fox into a hero or a prophet even of the Whig faith. Mr. Wakeman charges himself with no mission of regeneration towards his subject, nor with any feat of paradox. For thirty years Fox's life is so nearly connected with the general political history of England that the limits of a volume in this series prove rather Procrustean; but Mr. Wakeman's work is, on the whole, adequate and satisfactory. It is brightly and pleasantly written. And if it is rather too much in the style of a minor Macaulay, this may be attributed to the fact that it is the life of a Whig statesman written with considerable Liberal sympathies; and if it presents no new portrait, it is at any rate a convenient and fairly just restatement of older and rather inaccessible materials.

Mr. Wakeman gives a very clear and interesting account of how Lord Rockingham was succeeded, not by Fox, but by Lord Shelburne, and how Fox came to leave Lord Shelburne and to coalesce with Lord North. When, under the odium of continued disaster and mismanagement in America, Lord North's administration fell, the king, still battling against the hateful necessity of accepting as his ministers the Rockingham Whigs, had applied to Shelburne to construct him a ministry out of the fragments of Lord North's party and the followers of Lord Chatham. Shelburne had declared against the concessions of independence to the American colonists; and the King hoped that he might be able to bring the war to an end, while retaining the hold of England over America. But Shelburne saw that in such a position he was certain only of disaster; by a little present loyalty to Rockingham, he would be certain to succeed him in the leadership of the great Whig connexion. He elected to support Lord Rockingham, and the King was compelled to submit to a hateful and repulsive necessity. But in the short interval before Rockingham's death, Shelburne had to avail himself of all the skill he could command to discredit Fox, who was undoubtedly the most able and popular man in the ministry and his most serious rival for the leadership. The task was all the more difficult because, to the regular Whig connexion, Shelburne himself was far from being acceptable. His own skill in intrigue, unaided by Fox's singular want of skill in political management, might have been insufficient. In the questions arising out of the conduct of the Paris negotiations, Fox was in the right and Shelburne was in the wrong; but by his own dexterity and Fox's want of finesse, Shelburne contrived to discredit Fox, to make him impossible as Lord Rockingham's successor, and to prepare for an administration of his own on Lord Rockingham's death.

But Shelburne's administration, brilliant as were its prospects, was doomed to be short-lived. He concluded the Treaty of Versailles, an achievement meritorious in itself; yet that treaty led to his fall. The conclusion of the American War had completely altered the general position of parties. It was the conduct and prosecution of the war that had been the great question on which parties had hitherto been divided. That line of cleavage was now gone. Points of approximation appeared among Lord Shelburne's opponents, widely divided as they had seemed; at the same time his own colleagues and followers began to disagree among themselves. They found his personality almost insufferable; they suspected his trickery to Fox in the previous summer; they resented his alien intrusion into the leadership of the Whigs. On the other hand, Lord North and his followers felt the Treaty of Versailles to be almost a national treachery; to Fox it was personal perfidy. Then followed a celebrated but ill-fated coalition.

"On the 14th of February everything was prepared. Fox and Lord North met at the house of George North, and arranged terms of alliance. Lord North agreed that the system of government by departments should be abolished and the direct power of the king over the administration checked. Fox acknowledged that economical reform had gone far enough, and both consented that parliamentary reform should be an open question. Upon these terms all former animosity was laid aside. An amendment to the address on the peace was drawn up by Lord North, which Lord John Cavendish was to move and Fox support; and if, as was expected, the division list showed a majority for them, they were to form a combined administration based on mutual goodwill and confidence."

When the coalition fell, Fox left office; he in a sense offed himself for the rest of his life. Throughout the French war he was the sentimentalist and not the statesman; and Pitt and the conduct of the war at large suffered for the want of a more practical leader of the opposition. Politically, Fox can hardly be said to have had a creed; he had only impulses and enthusiasms. Neither by training nor by natural endowment was he the man to have formed a faith at once capable of inspiring a party and of being practically applied to affairs. The Whiggism of the great revolution families was almost worn out; to the new Whiggism of the parliamentary reformers Fox himself contributed very little. He did not grapple with that immense mass of social and legal abuses upon which the reformers of the first three decades of this century exercised themselves. He was not a Mackintosh, nor a Wilberforce, nor a Grey. He supported reforms fathered by others; but they owed little to his assistance. He was happy in the enunciation of the most generous principles, and impotent to translate them into practice. Always himself epicurean and dilettante, he could hardly make of his public efforts a better success than he made of his private life. Impulsive and warm-hearted, prone to exaggeration, eager for combat, he denounced injustice and his opponents with sincerity and zeal. But he was indolent, he was inconsistent, and he was mentally unthrifty; and we associate with his name years of party failure, in which the Whigs learnt indeed useful but unpalatable lessons, but learnt them with little aid from their leader. It was a passage through the wilderness, with a Moses fainting to guide them, for whom there was no promised land. As Mr. Wakeman puts it:

"Fox himself steadily maintained throughout his career a consistent appeal to Whig principles as the kernel of his political faith. He rarely made a speech in the House of Commons in which he did not profess his intense, almost blind, admiration for the British constitution; but these were phrases which by the end of the eighteenth century had become little more than phrases. To a politician of Walpole's day Whig principles meant distinctly the supremacy of parliament over the prerogative, party government, and religious toleration. It was summed up in the motto of the Revolution of 1688—Civil and Religious Liberty. The British constitution had an equally distinct meaning. It meant a government in which political power was divided between the crown, the ministers, and parliament, but in which the aristocracy had the real ascendancy. But by the end of the eighteenth century the phrases understood in this sense had become unreal. No Tory, however reactionary, thought of disputing the supremacy of Parliament, the necessity of party government, or the advisability of religious toleration; and although opinions differed as to the exact limits which should be placed on the influence of the crown or of the people in the government, no one doubted that the chief control should be vested in the aristocracy. Thirty years later, on the contrary, they had again become intensely real. They had acquired a new meaning. In the cold shade of opposition the Whig party had learned the doctrines of Free Trade from Adam Smith, and of Utilitarianism from Bentham; they had seized Parliamentary Reform from the nerveless hands of Pitt; and in the mouths of Grey, and of Russell, and of Althorp, these time-honoured phrases meant the ousting of the crown from political power, the supremacy of the middle classes, the domination of commercial objects in politics, and religious equality. Fox bridges over the gulf which separates these two conceptions of Whig principles. He it is who enabled the programme of 1832 to be carried out by the same party which was overthrown by George III. in 1770. . . . The independence of Parliament, civil and religious liberty, the glorious constitution of 1688, had got to be formulae as hollow as the immortal principles of '89 sound to us now. . . . But in Fox's mouth they had a very definite meaning. They meant the crushing of the royal influence in government, the establishment of a responsible prime ministership, the reform of parliament, and the removal of political disabilities from Nonconformists. But here again, as in matters of external policy, he stopped short just where he should have gone on. In all these questions he was content to play the second part, to follow where others led. . . . It is fatal to his reputation as a serious statesman that not one of them was during his lifetime permanently associated with his name. It is to his honour as a politician that they all received his support. It was to the advantage of his party that by his support he was enabled to pass them to his followers as a legacy of which they could make better use than he had done."

J. A. HAMILTON.

Ignatian Difficulties and Historic Doubts. A Letter to the Dean of Peterborough by R. C. Jenkins. (David Nutt.)

Ecco iterum Epistolae Ignatianae! Such I suspect will be the exclamation of the theological student who chances to take up this very able pamphlet, or who glances at the subject of this article. He will probably call to mind the recent labours of the late Bishop Lightfoot on the same theme, and will remember the general verdict of the ecclesiastical organs that the Bishop's opinion was to be considered final. Briefly, that opinion was in favour of the authenticity of the version of the Ignatian Epistles known as the Medicean. Mr. Jenkins apologises for venturing to disturb the great "calm of acquiescence" with which the Bishop's conclusion has been received. I suspect he has partly overrated, partly assigned to wrong causes, this alleged acquiescence. No doubt Bishop Lightfoot's learning and the elaborate research he had devoted to the question compelled the deference of those who had not investigated it, and who were predisposed in favour of the episcopal and sacerdotalist claims which are the chief feature of the Ignatian Epistles from a controversial point of view. But much of the calm of acquiescence among critical scholars was a well-founded indifference to results which conflicted with the general consensus of ecclesiastical historians as to the organisation and polity of the Church of the first three centuries. It was not to be supposed that the agreement of all competent critics who had no ecclesiastical interests to subserve could be rudely set aside by writings whose authenticity had always been, to say the very least, an open question. Whatever Bishop Lightfoot might claim on certain textual and traditional grounds to have demonstrated would, on further consideration, be compelled to find its historical sequence and level. This inevitable course—as I venture to think it—of historical judgment has been accelerated by Mr. Jenkins's pamphlet; and now the question of this version of the Ignatian Epistles may be considered settled—not in the sense advocated—but in that opposed to Bishop Lightfoot's conclusion.

The gist of the controversy is set forth in a passage which Mr. Jenkins quotes from Dr. Richard Lipsius, the well-known professor of Jena, whose competence to pronounce on the issue is superior even to that of Bishop Lightfoot himself. In a letter to Mr. Jenkins, Dr. Lipsius says:

"I am still fully convinced that the form of these letters (which embraces the seven) cannot possibly be derived from Ignatius. The learned and acute performance of the much-lamented Bishop Lightfoot has not altered my judgment in this respect. I agree with you fully in the view that the representation of the power of the bishops is incompatible with a writing of the second century."

This general position Mr. Jenkins himself elaborates in a series of arguments, some of which no doubt have been urged before; but all of them are presented with a combined terseness and lucidity which cannot be too highly commended. The aggregate force of the whole seems to me altogether irresistible. I have not space for more than an indication of the scope of the argument, and for two quotations which illustrate most felicitously Mr. Jenkins's able method of handling it.

He rightly dwells on that feature of the Ignatian Epistles which from the commencement of the controversy aroused the suspicions of their critics, viz., their purposive or tendential character. Their incriminated—i.e., episcopal—passages bear on their very face the mark of having been introduced for hierarchical purposes. Like the forged Decretal Epistles, with which they share a most suspicious resemblance, they attempt an ex post facto justification of the episcopal or papal element after that feature had disclosed itself in the evolution of the Church. The proofs of this are patent to every unprejudiced critic. Dr. Baur, e.g., had already pointed out the very suspicious resemblance which the episcopal passages bear to one another; and Mr. Jenkins follows up his reasoning by observing—what I believe every impartial reader of the Epistles must have noted for himself—the strange and incongruous manner in which the episcopal passages are introduced, to the utter neglect and disturbance of the context. The forgery, in point of fact, is not only obvious, but it is painfully and obtrusively obvious. The claims of episcopacy are not only made, but they are asserted in an extravagant form and with a reckless insistance which in itself is sufficient to warrant suspicion. As Mr. Jenkins puts it—

"The episcopal element which, merging the individual in the community, the Christian disciple in the Church, delivers him into the hands of the bishop to be moved and moulded by him as though he were a lifeless object—a corpse—tanquam si cadaver esset. The autocracy of the bishop is to extend even to the thoughts and opinions of those under him. He is to be to them in the place of God and Christ. Nothing is to be done without him. They are to know him as they know God. He is to be to them as the type or image of God, a kind of present Deity."

Mr. Jenkins's strongest argument is that in which he elaborates the remark of Dr. Lipsius—that the representation of episcopal power in Ignatius's Letters is incompatible with a writing of the second century:

"We affirm," says Mr. Jenkins, "that the pictures of the primitive church given us by Justin Martyr, Tertullian, Irenaeus, Clement of Alexandria, Origen and (though last, not least) the recently discovered Διδάχῃ are incapable of being brought into the most distant reconciliation with that which the Ignatian Epistles place before us. There is not a single figure in them which recalls the image of Christianity as its early apologists have represented it. This contrast must appear most conspicuously to all who remember their beautiful and simple description of the earliest Christian assemblies and the primitive Christian teachers. All these we should have to surrender if we could accept the strange theory that a hierarchy closely resembling that of the Jewish Church had suddenly sprung up to supersede it; and that the Christian worship, instead of growing up out of the synagogue, had sprung from the temple."

It would be difficult to add to the argumentative force or the felicitous expression of this argument. Into further considerations as to the Ignatian Epistles, such as the comparative value of the different recensions, we need not now enter. They may possibly occupy the attention of critics for some time to come; but as to the Medicean and any other version containing the episcopal passages, Mr. Jenkins, following in the wake of other critics, may, as it seems to me, be regarded as having given them their final and unanswerable quietus. For the future they must be consigned—in company with the forged Decretals and similar hierarchical impostures—into that large limbo of ecclesiastical unveracities whence they ought never to have been permitted to emerge.

JOHN OWEN.

NEW NOVELS.

The Love of a Lady. By Annie Thomas (Mrs. Pender-Cudlip). In 3 vols. (White.)

For Value Received. By Thomas Cobb. In 3 vols. (Ward & Downey.)

Caste and Creed. By Mrs. Frank Penny. In 2 vols. (White.)

The Mysterious Stranger. By C. H. Thorburn. (Digby & Long.)

The Dead Man's Gift: a Tea Planter's Romance. By Herbert Compton. (W. H. Allen.)

Heir and no Heir. By the Hon. Albert S. G. Canning. (Eden, Remington & Co.)

Strange Crimes. By William Westall. (Ward & Downey.)

Zebel. By Lillie Crane. (Eden, Remington & Co.)

THE earlier works of Mrs. Pender-Cudlip were bright with a promise which has never been fulfilled. More than average success was predicted for the author of Denis Donne, but candour compels us to say that each of her later novels has been thinner and weaker than its predecessor. There is no merit whatever in The Love of a Lady; it is utterly and irredeemably commonplace. The characters are of the flabbiest description, and their actions are foolish in the extreme. Not one of them begets real sympathy in the reader. Kitty Daubeny, the girl artist, is undoubtedly the best of them, but even she allows herself to be made a plaything of by Rowley le Breton. This Breton is the hero of the story, if hero there be; but he is a weak creature, and dangles after an old flame in the person of Mrs. Marchant, a handsome but volatile woman, who has married for money a man twice her age. The way she keeps her former lover in tow, not allowing him to look with admiration at any other woman, would be scandalous did it not make Breton look like a fool. All this time also Breton himself is married to a lady who has been "captured" by a spiritualist medium and impossible monstrosity named Agnes Hewlett. To this extraordinary being Mrs. Le Breton writes respecting Mrs. Marchant and her husband:

"Leave that wicked syren who lured him to sail upon the treacherous sea of her false love, and then left him wrecked upon the rocky shore of desertion and disappointment, and come back to soothe the last days of your loving cousin."

The ugly and bony Miss Hewlett—who indulges an illicit passion on her own account for Rowley le Breton—does as his wife wishes her, and persuades the feeble Mrs. le Breton to leave all her wealth to her, in the hope that the young widower will marry her. This Le Breton has the sense to resist. He falls into poverty after his wife's death and takes to novel writing (a story of his being illustrated by Kitty Daubeny); but he is not successful in this line, and becomes a commercial traveller, &c., breaking more female hearts at Dublin. The fickle Mrs. Marchant at last transfers her affections—if her feelings can be dignified by that term—to Gerald Daubeny, the brother of Kitty, and things are ultimately made pleasant all round. But, speaking seriously, all this is "poor stuff." We are quite sure that in calmer moments, and after an impartial examination, Mrs. Pender-Cudlip herself must be forced to the same conclusion. It is with much regret that we say this; but there are far too many worthless novels written already for one who has done such good work to add to the number.

Mr. Cobb's For Value Received deals with a supposed murder. Suspicion strongly points to the younger son of Sir Hastings Edenbridge as the culprit. The victim is his own brother, and heir to the baronetcy and estates, so that to all appearances Arthur Edenbridge is the only person who has anything to gain by his being put out of the way. Lily Armytage, sister of the vicar of the parish, loves Arthur and is beloved by him; and much of the story is occupied by the recital of her acts of devotion to screen her lover. To obtain possession of an incriminating handkerchief she even gives a written undertaking to marry her vulgar but wealthy neighbour, one Smellie, who has discovered the handkerchief, and by its means connects the crime with young Edenbridge. Things look very black indeed when, through the efforts of the Rev. Eustace Armytage—who is a fine type of the manly country parson—the atmosphere begins to clear, and Arthur Edenbridge is exculpated of the crime; but as this is the author's secret, it would be unfair to divulge it. The incidents mentioned above by no means exhaust the interest of a story which, if not striking as regards literary talent, will yet be read with genuine pleasure. The character-drawing is fairly successful; but Mr. Cobb has still something to learn as regards the art of construction.

Caste and Creed will be a strange revelation for English men and women who are unacquainted with the bitter effects of the rigid adherence to caste in India. As Mrs. Penny remarks,

"The sad contrast between the philosophy of the Hindus' sacred books and the existing practice of their religion is startling; whilst the gorgeous pageantry of their festivals makes the simple Christian worship appear cold and unattractive."

The incidents which form the basis of the narrative are devoid neither of interest nor of important lessons. Donald Anderson, a Scotch merchant of Trichinopoly, marries a fascinating native woman of Southern India, and they have a daughter who is extremely beautiful. She is educated in England; but on her return to India, her mother makes desperate efforts to bring her over from Christianity to Brahminism. Calling to her aid one of the high officials of the temple, they attempt to coerce their unwilling victim, and at last absolutely use force to compel her to embrace the native creed. How she is rescued just in the nick of time is told with much skill and energy. Some of the immoral aspects of the idolatrous worship of the Hindus are lightly touched upon; but Mrs. Penny has successfully avoided exaggeration and false sentiment. She is to be commended for drawing attention to the condition of our Eurasian fellow-subjects in India, and endeavouring to elicit a wider sympathy and consideration for them.

It is really astonishing to note what conceptions of literature may obtain with some people. The Mysterious Stranger, for example—a romance whose action takes place partly in Canada and partly in England—is a farrago of puerilities and improbabilities.

The story opens with a ridiculous escapade on the part of a young lady, whose foolish conduct ultimately leads to a charge of murder against the hero. There is no justification for works of this kind, whose publication ought to be severely discouraged.

The story of tea-planting in the Himalayas, by Mr. Herbert Compton, is written with considerable verve, although it lacks finish. But the narrative never flags, and Denis Durand—the hero who fails at tea-planting, but picks up an enormous fortune out of a bed of sapphires—is a manly fellow whose varying fortunes will be eagerly followed. He has many narrow escapes, as regards both life and fortune; but he successfully grapples with all the villainous plots against him, and eventually wins the hand of Sibyl Adair. There are both humorous and pathetic episodes in this volume, the sketch of poor Jack Boyce and his sad farewell to life being especially touching.

Mr. Canning is a bright and vivacious writer; and his Heir and no Heir—a tale of the North of Ireland at the close of last century—will serve to pass away a pleasant hour or two. The author is happy in his delineations of character.

The only fear we have in connexion with such works as Mr. Westall's Strange Crimes is that they may engender morbid tastes. The volume before us is a gruesome record. Discussing the utility of this class of literature, the author observes of his own sketches that,

"in addition to their undoubted psychological interest, the light they throw on human nature, and the information touching the manners and customs of foreign nations which they incidentally afford, the following stories have a high moral value."

But this is begging the question. For medical and legal experts, this long array of brutal murders may have a distinct value, and they also throw an interesting side light upon French and German jurisprudence; but for the general public it is difficult to see how they can be of the least service. If they teach indirectly that the way of transgressors is hard, their repellent details can only have an injurious effect upon many minds. The stories are well-told; but the question is forced home upon us, Cui bono?

In Zebel, Miss Lillie Crane traces the career of the daughter of an English officer and an Arab woman. She possesses great beauty, and wins the heart of Sir Francis Stanmore, a Kentish baronet. A black-hearted rival, however, manages to compromise Zebel, though she is perfectly innocent; but in the end, owing to the good offices of a burlesque actress on her death-bed, the lovers are reunited, and live happily ever afterwards. The story is in no way noticeable from the literary point of view.

G. BARNETT SMITH.

SOME EDITIONS OF POETRY.

La Commedia Di Dante Alighieri. (Londra: Rivingtons.) Messrs. Rivingtons have published the Italian text of the Divine Comedy in one crown octavo volume of 500 pages. The paper and the type are good. The colophon is inscribed "Edimburgo, Impresso da T. e A."

Constable, nil mese d'Aprile 1890." To the publishers, and to the printers, our best thanks are due for this creditable and charming edition. Dante is given without the encumbrance of notes, or the distractions of commentators. The account of his death, and the simple criticism of his work, are reprinted from Villani's Storia di Firenze; and the editor has added a brief advertisement in which he says that he has followed the text of Witte, though he has not neglected other great authorities, and sometimes he has preferred the readings demanded by common sense. We believe that Mr. A. J. Butler is responsible for the text of this new edition. All English students of Dante are under obligations to him already for his excellent versions of the "Purgatory" and the "Paradise," and they are now indebted to him still further for this careful and scholarly text. We can only suggest two things which might add to the comfort of Mr. Butler's readers. The one is, that the lines might be numbered down the margins, either in tens (as Mr. Butler's other texts are numbered), or in threes, like the beautiful Berlin edition; the other is, that all speeches should be distinguished by inverted commas. Dr. Carlyle and Mr. Butler distinguish them invariably from the rest of the text in their English versions; and, for English readers at any rate, we cannot imagine why the Italian text should not be treated in the same convenient and sensible manner. Mr. Butler says, in his short preface, that the study of Dante has grown among us amazingly within the last few years. Not many readers, perhaps, are aware how large this growth has been. The Catalogue at the British Museum shows us that one English book on Dante was published in the eighteenth century; in the present century, we find thirty translations of Dante, and twenty works about him. Voltaire, who was seldom wrong in his literary judgments, said of Dante: "His reputation is always growing because no one reads him"; we may assert, with greater truth, that his reputation increases continually with the number of his readers. No English scholars, perhaps, have done more to encourage the study of Dante than Dr. Carlyle and Mr. Butler. And no writer, it may be asserted, is more persuasive than Dante; no writer has an equal power to enthral his readers. Those who have got to know him can never leave him; they would say, in his own words:

"E come agli occhi miei se fe più bella,
Così con voce più dolce e soave,
Ma non con questa moderna favella,
Dissemi."

"As to my eyes he becomes more beautiful, so with a voice more sweet and soothing, but not like this our modern speech, he speaks to me."

To his lovers, Dante becomes a daily necessity, like the cotidiana manna of the eleventh canto of the "Purgatory":

"Senza la qual per questo aspro deserto
A retro va chi più di gir s'affanna."

Schiller's Jungfrau von Orleans: with an Historical and Critical Introduction, a Complete Commentary, &c., by C. A. Buchheim. (Oxford: Clarendon Press.) The Maid of Orleans inspired Schiller with one of the noblest of his dramas; and we are glad to welcome an edition of it by Prof. Buchheim, which leaves little or nothing to be desired in the way of completeness and erudition. The text, which is that of Vollmer, is explained by a clear argument prefixed to each act. The notes are concise, clear, and full of carefully sifted learning. They will be found duly helpful for the upper classes of our public schools, and will also interest and instruct more advanced students and readers. Their utility is increased by an index, and the book is made attractive by a collection of the plums of the play—we mean the most popular quotations from it—with which it ends. It is, however, in the fifty pages of the Introduction that we find that which raises the book far above the level of an edition for students of German. Here we have an adequate narrative of the Hundred Years' War, and of the Story of Joan in both its historical and its legendary form. The play, its characters, its metres, and diction (in which Schiller shows so exceptionally the influence of the Bible and of the Greeks), its merits as an acting play, and the criticism which it occasioned, are fully discussed. And, best of all, extracts from contemporary letters of Schiller and of Goethe, and a list of the books which the poet read while preparing the drama, enable us to follow the course of his mind as he wrote it. The book is in every way equal to the other excellent classical editions which Prof. Buchheim—a little to the envy of us of an older generation—has offered to the student of to-day. We have styled this a noble play; such it is, and as such, and from its loftiness both of feeling and form, it will attract and interest the young. Its most striking feature is, however, the intense patriotic feeling which Schiller, a poet who was deeply influenced by the political cataclysms in which he lived, exhibits more strongly here than in any other of his plays, with perhaps one exception. Writing after the Austrian defeat at Marengo, and during the negotiations which ended in the spoliation of Germany at the peace of Lunéville, Schiller endeavoured to fire his countrymen with a hatred of the foreign yoke by an example drawn from the conquering nation's own history; just as a little later he tried to breathe into them a spirit of resistance in even more hopeless circumstances, by his magnificent "Wilhelm Tell." He did not live to see the result of his efforts, for he died—felix opportunitate mortis—in the spring before the disaster of Austerlitz, which was only morally relieved by our own victory of Trafalgar, which apparently crushed Europe, and actually broke William Pitt's heart. But these great dramas did bear fruit abundantly. The Germans pondered them in their hearts for a half-score of years, and quitted themselves like men under their inspiration in 1813, 1814, and 1815. If in the after life spirits can yet feel the things of earth, then, indeed, Schiller's shade rejoiced, for he himself has specially told us that he wrote this play from his heart. We have here, then, a very noble play; and it is edited with fulness, learning, and discretion.

The Odes of Horace. Translated into English Verse by J. Leigh S. Hatton. (Seeley.) It would be curious to know how many translations of Horace into English verse have been printed. The present attempt has certain merits of its own; we do not think, however, that it can take rank among the best versions, such as Conington's, Sir T. Martin's, and Mr. Rutherford Clark's. Its main defects, we should say, are its lack of any intelligible principle in the choice of metres; its tendency to omit the smaller touches which give Horace's odes their special quality; its way of eking out, by mere padding, the difference between Horace's stanzas and that of the selected English metre. As an example of the first defect, we should call attention to the six odes that commence Book III. As everyone knows, these are Alcaic odes, and masterpieces; they must have been purposely combined. But Mr. Hatton translates them into five or six different metres; and the finest of them all, the Regulus ode, "pipes and whistles in its sound":

"Till his strong unwavering purpose
Fixed the Senate's wavering will,
And he passed, a glorious exile,
From his dear friends weeping still;
Though he knew how keen the torture
And the fierce barbarian's skill."

Of the second defect, the version of the splendid Sapphic ode (iii. 27) supplies a marked instance. If there is a strong poetic touch, full of meaning, in the wail of Europa, it is surely

"Potes hac ab orno
Pendulum zona bene te secuta Laedere collum."

Mr. Hatton has only—

"Here from this elm held by thy zone on high Can'st thou not lifeless wave?"

Of the third fault, the close of Ode 6, Book II., presents a deplorable example—

"Ibi tu calentem
Debita sparges lacrima favillam Vatis amici";

which Mr. Hatton thus expands:

"Till thy tribute tear shall glisten,
Where the yet warm ashes rest
Of thy poet-friend, departed
On his great and final quest."

Of that, full half is worse than supererogatory. Yet Mr. Hatton writes at times with grace and dignity—especially, we think, in the metre of the "Dream of Fair Women." The ode called after Archytas (i. 28) he renders into heroic couplets—an odd experiment, yet not altogether a failure:

"And I, too, met my fate amid the roar
Of waters thundering on Illyria's shore,
When fierce and strong the mighty tempest met,
And in a stormy sky Orion set.
But thou, O sailor, with no churlish hand,
Scatter on these poor bones their grain of sand,
So shall the east wind rock Venusia's trees,
But leave thee safe upon Hesperian seas."

That is not amiss, but the final couplet is a bathos, "standing where it ought not":

"Whate'er thy haste, this task will keep thee not, Thrice cast the dust on me, then leave the spot."

NOTES AND NEWS.

MESSRS. LONGMANS announce, as already in the press, The Letters and Correspondence of John Henry Newman during his Life in the English Church, with a brief Autobiographical Memoir, arranged and edited, at Cardinal Newman's request, by the editor of the Letters of the Rev. J. B. Mozley.

IN October will be published the two final volumes of Mr. Lecky's History of England in the Eighteenth Century. As Mr. Lecky announced in his sixth volume, he has devoted the concluding portion of his work to a careful examination of one of the most critical and contested periods of Irish history. The recall of Lord Fitzwilliam, the extension of Irish conspiracy and its relations with France, the rise and influence of the Orange Association, the rebellion of 1798, the Legislative Union, and the failure of the measures of Catholic relief which Pitt intended to be the immediate sequel of the Union, are the chief subjects dealt with in these volumes. Mr. Lecky has had access to important manuscript materials—often of a most confidential character—which no previous historian has used, and which throw much new light on some portions of his subject.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN will publish immediately a new edition of the second volume of Prof. Mahaffy's History of Greek Literature, which deals with the Prose Writers. It will be issued in two parts, the first covering the period from Herodotus to Plato, the second from Isocrates to Aristotle.

MR. ROBERT BUCHANAN's new monthly review, announced in the ACADEMY some time ago, will make its appearance very shortly. Almost simultaneously Mr. Buchanan will issue his new poem, "The Outcast: a Rhyme for the Time."

MR. W. G. COLLINGWOOD is writing for Messrs. Methuen & Co. a book on the Life and Work of Ruskin.

MR. HARVEY, one of the four Priest-Vicars of Lincoln Minster, is preparing for the Lincoln Record Society an edition of the earliest Bishop's Register of the thirteenth century. Precentor Venables is editing a Calendar of all the Lincoln documents in the Public Record Office, London, with englishings of all characteristic bits in them. Canon Perry, of Waddington, is writing the Lives of many of the Bishops. Major-General Smith has in the press the first part of his History of the Parish of Elsham—where his family was for many generations—in North Lincolnshire; and many other antiquaries of the county are hard at work.

MESSRS. PARKER & Co., of Oxford, conjointly with the Christian Literature Company, of New York, are publishing by subscription a new series of English translations of the more important writings of the Nicene and Post-Nicene Fathers, under the editorial supervision of Dr. Henry Wace, Principal of King's College, London, and Dr. Philip Schaff, of New York. The first volume, Eusebius—notwithstanding some difficulties causing delay—will be issued, it is expected, before the close of the present month. The series will consist of about fourteen volumes in all.

MESSRS. GEORGE BELL & SONS will begin next month a cheap re-issue, in fortnightly volumes, of their well-known Aldine Edition of the British Poets. Each volume bears the name of a responsible editor, who contributes a memoir and notes; and a portrait, engraved on steel, is given where possible. The first volume, to be published on September 1, is Blake, with a memoir by Mr. W. M. Rossetti; and this will be followed by Lord Houghton's Keats. Among the other more important poets are Chaucer, in six volumes, by the Rev. Dr. Morris; and Chatterton, in two volumes, by Prof. Skeat.

A NEW edition of the second series of Obiter Dicta will be published shortly by Mr. Elliot Stock. It will be brought out in an altered shape, uniform in size and style with the first series.

MESSRS. CHATTO & WINDUS will publish about the middle of October Five Years with the Congo Cannibals, by Mr. Herbert Ward, with more than eighty illustrations by the author and others.

THE next volume in "The Story of the Nation Series," to be published immediately, will be Switzerland, written by Mrs. Lina Hug and Mr. Richard Stead, author of "Holderness and the Holdernessians."

MR. RICHARD JACKSON, of Leeds, announces for publication by subscription a handsomely illustrated volume, entitled Yorkshire by the Sea. It will consist of five chapters of letterpress—historical, topographical, and descriptive, following the coast southwards from Cleveland to the Humber, written by Mr. George Radford, author of "Rambles by Yorkshire Rivers"; and of twelve full-page etchings and twenty-five reproductions of drawings made expressly for the work by Mr. J. A. Symington. The edition will be limited to 450 copies, of which 150 will have proofs of the plates.

THE Duke of Connaught has accepted the dedication of Capt. C. A. Thimm's forthcoming work, entitled A Complete Bibliography of the Art of Fence, comprising that of the Sword and of the Bayonet, Duelling, &c., as practised by all European Nations, from the Earliest Times to the Present Day.

THE new edition of Mr. John Timbs's Book of Wonders, to be published shortly by Messrs. Dean and Son, will contain additional chapters on the Forth Bridge and the Eiffel Tower, which will be illustrated with engravings of both these monuments of engineering skill, together with a portrait of M. Gustave Eiffel.

WITH Prof. Alfred Marshall's Principles of Economics (reviewed this week in the ACADEMY), Messrs. Macmillan have inaugurated a new principle, which we believe they intend to follow in the case of all the more important works they publish in the future. The book is issued at a net price, i.e. the terms on which it is supplied to booksellers are not such as will enable them to allow a discount to purchasers.

A STUDENTS' residence is about to be established in connexion with the Chelsea centre for University Extension Lectures. The idea is to enable students, while pursuing their business occupations, to enjoy some of the advantages of college life and facilities for systematic study. Rooms to accommodate eight residents have been taken in Marlborough Buildings, now in course of erection in Walton Street, Chelsea, which will be ready for occupation in October.

WE are asked to state that Lambeth Palace Library will be closed for the usual recess for six weeks from Monday next, September 1.

THE Marcian Library at Venice has acquired an important codex of Dante, formerly in the library of Count Piloni di Belluno. It is a MS. of the fifteenth century, and contains the Divina Commedia, written in semi-Gothic characters, with marginal annotations by the same hand in Latin.

WE have received the ninth annual report of the American Dante Society, which contains the usual bibliography for the year 1889, compiled by Mr. William Coolidge Lane, and also a list of recent accessions to the Dante collection in the library of Harvard College. This bibliography will probably be the last of the series; for Mr. Lane thinks it unnecessary to continue his work, in view of the more elaborate bibliography (analysing the contents of the publications mentioned) which Prof. Michele Barbi, of Florence, is now contributing to the Buletino of the newly founded Società Dantesca Italiana. The two most important events recorded in the history of the American society are the publication of Prof. Fay's Concordance to the Divina Commedia, which—we regret to learn—has not yet proved a financial success; and the issue of Mr. Lane's Catalogue of the Dante Collections in the Harvard College and Boston Public Libraries, as No. 34 of the Bibliographical Contributions of Harvard. Both these works have already been noticed in the ACADEMY.

DR. FURNIVALL added a postscript to his letter on "Chaucer's Prioress's Nun-Chaplain," in the ACADEMY of last week, which unfortunately arrived too late for insertion, that the Injunctions of Bishop Longland for the reform of abuses in the Benedictine convent of Elstow had already been printed some years ago in the Archæologia, vol. xlvii.; and also in Wigram's Chronicles of the Abbey of Elstow (1883).

FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES.

A SHORT unpublished letter by Cardinal Newman will be included in the "Reminiscences" of the Cardinal which Mr. Kineton Parkes contributes to the forthcoming number of Igdrasil.

THE New Review for September will contain an article on Cardinal Newman by Mr. C. Kegan Paul; also "The Story of Police Pensions," by Mr. Charles Monro; "Indian Child-Marriages," by Rukhmabai; and "A Gipsy Song," by Carmen Sylva, the Queen of Roumania.

THE September number of the Bookworm will contain an article on the "Sette of Odd Volumes," by Mr. W. Roberts, with reduced facsimiles of a charming menu designed by Mr. Harry Furniss for the Sette, of the original cartouche by Mr. G. C. Haité, and the title-page designed by Mr. L. C. Henley. Dr. John S. Crone contributes an article on "Belfast Bibliography" to the same number.

A FACSIMILE in colours of the grant of arms by Clarenceux King of Arms to Thomas Northland, of the county of Sussex, gentleman, dated London, the xth day of November, xxijd year of the reign of King Edward the IIIJth (1483), will appear in the October part of the Miscellanea Genealogica. This grant is the earliest known, and the mantling and accessories of the arms in this rare instance of heraldic drawing are well deserving of attention.

A NEW serial story, by Mrs. F. Marion Crawford, entitled "The Witch of Prague," with illustrations by W. J. Hennessy, will appear in the October number of the English Illustrated Magazine.

A NEW penny monthly magazine, for young women and mothers, is to be brought out at the end of the year, under the auspices of the Huddo House Association. The Countess of Aberdeen, president of the association, who will edit the magazine, has already received many promises of support from her literary friends.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

IN THE CLOISTERS.

It may be she will never know
That I have always loved her so;
Within these cloisters cold and grey
I think of her by night, by day,
Wearily pacing to and fro.

If she but knew! When lights are low,
Amid the chanting hushed and slow,
I kneel and think of her, and say
Her name for prayers; I cannot pray—
God knows, but will she ever know?

GREVILLE E. MATHESON.

SOME LETTERS FROM CARDINAL NEWMAN.

AMONG the letters and notes which I received from Cardinal Newman between the years 1843 and 1887, there are a few which may possibly be of some interest to the readers of the ACADEMY, and which there is no reason to think that he would himself have objected to my giving to the public.

The first is almost an historical document, being the official letter which he sent to his churchwardens when he gave up the vicarage of St. Mary the Virgin at Oxford. W. J. Copeland was his curate and intimate friend, whose name appears in the Dictionary of Natural Biography, and who, before his death in 1885, had collected copious materials for a history of the great Oxford Movement, which no one was more competent to write than himself. It will be noticed that the letter was written six days before the preaching of that last sermon at Littlemore on "The Parting of Friends" (Sermons on Subjects of the Day, Sermon 26):

"MY DEAR GREENHILL,—

"I have just sent in my formal Resignation of St. Mary's to the Bishop by Copeland. In consequence, I believe it falls upon you and Mr. Thomson, as Churchwardens, to provide for the service of the church, till the appointment of a new Vicar. We should be very desirous of going on with it as usual, if you see no objection.

"Yours very truly,

"JOHN H. NEWMAN.

"Littlemore: Sept. 19, 18

The second note was written in answer to one which I sent to him very shortly after he left the Anglican Church, about returning a volume of St. François de Sales which he had lent me. I directed my note to "J. H. Newman, Esq.," with an apology for my mistake, if I had done wrong. We have lately been amused at reading W. G. Ward's joking threat to call Dean Goulburn "E. M. Goulburn, Esq.," if he (Goulburn) persisted in addressing him as "the Rev. W. G. Ward"; so that the way in which Newman replied to my apology is interesting. I do not think that he was then an ordained clergyman in the Roman Catholic Church.

"Ushaw, Durham: Jan. 13, 1846.

"DEAR GREENHILL,—

"I am much obliged to you for your thoughtfulness about the volume of St. F. de Sales. I do not want it at this moment, but by the end of this month I think I should like to have it for the purpose of packing. You would have been quite right to direct to me 'Rev'd.' Thank you for your consideration.

"Very truly yours,
"JOHN H. NEWMAN."

The following was written in answer to a note of congratulation when he was made an honorary fellow of Trinity College—

"The Oratory: Jan. 6, 1878.

"MY DEAR DR. GREENHILL,—

"I thank you for your most kind letters. It is a great gratification to me to be again a member of my dear old first college, and a second pleasure to find that gratification so understood and sympathised in on the part of my friends and of Trinity men, such as yourself.

"I should have answered you before, on the receipt of your first card, but have been thrown into great confusion by the death of one of my dear friends in this House, whose burial had not yet taken place; also by the death of James Mozley, whose family is in great grief, and with whom I am connected.

"Let me wish you all blessings of this sacred season, and assure you that "I am, sincerely yours,

"JOHN H. NEWMAN."

The next letter has already appeared in several publications, but sometimes (perhaps generally) in an incorrect form. It has also given rise to some degree of misapprehension; and therefore it is well to reprint it here, with a notice of the circumstances that led to its original publication. About fifty years ago my dear friend Charles Marriott (whom Burgoon well calls "The Man of Sainly Life") was talking with me about the "Lead, Kindly Light," and the allusion contained in the last two lines, which he said he thought might perhaps refer to the idea (which he believed Newman to entertain) of the more intimate communion of infants with the unseen world of spirits, which was lost in later years. He did not venture to pronounce positively that this was Newman's meaning, but only threw it out as a suggestion—a suggestion (as a common friend remarks) showing the characteristic mixture in himself of subtlety of mind and thought habitually in heaven. Without exactly adopting this interpretation of the lines, I never forgot it; and some years afterwards it seemed to me to receive some confirmation from a passage in a sermon on "The Holy Innocents," preached in December, 1833, that is, a few months after the date of the composition of "Lead, Kindly Light." The whole paragraph, beginning "If we wish to affect" (vol. ii. p. 64), is too long for extraction here, but the following fragments will be sufficient for our purpose:

"Then it was [that is, in childhood] that he came out of the hands of God, with all lessons and thoughts of heaven freshly marked upon him. 'This we know full well—we know it from our own recollections of ourselves, and our experience of children—that there is in the infant soul, in the first years of its regenerate state, a discernment of the unseen world in the things that are seen.' 'He [that is, a child] has this one great gift, that he seems to have lately come from God's presence.' [These] are all evidence of his being lately (as it were) a visitant in a higher state of things."

Many years later, in 1879, I determined to write to Dr. Newman on the subject (mentioning, I believe, Charles Marriott's suggestion), and ask him to tell me the exact allusion in the two lines. The following was his answer:

"The Oratory: Jan. 18, 1879.

"MY DEAR DR. GREENHILL,—

"You flatter me by your question; but I think it was Keble who, when asked it in his own case answered that poets were not bound to be critics or to give a sense to what they had written; and, though I am not, like him, a poet, at least I may plead that I am not bound to remember my own meaning, whatever it was, at the end of almost fifty years. Anyhow, there must be a statute of limitation for writers of verse, or it would be quite a tyranny if, in an art which is the expression not of truth but of imagination and sentiment, one were obliged to be ready for examination on the transient states of mind which come upon one when homesick or seasick,* or in any other way sensitive or excited.

"I fear Pusey's health is very precarious, but his mind is quite as active as ever.

"Yours most truly,
"JOHN H. NEWMAN."

On this letter, so felicitously expressed, two remarks may be made: (1) Dr. Newman does not say that he had forgotten his own meaning, but that "he was not bound to remember it"; and (2) he does not say that the meaning of the words was plain enough to all but idiots, as he might easily have done if their obvious sense were the true or only one. It will also be noticed that, in the extract from the sermon given above, the spiritual privileges of children are spoken of as known to us "from our own recollections of ourselves." So that, upon the whole, the matter seems to rest thus—viz., that while almost every person who reads these lines will apply them only to departed friends, those few who, as an additional or alternative sense, are inclined to adopt Charles Marriott's suggestion are quite justified in doing so.

The last time that I heard from the Cardinal was in March, 1887, when the handwriting gave evident signs of failing strength. The letter was written on the back of a small sheet of paper, on which were lithographed the words: "I regret to say I am too old to attempt to answer letters." I had asked him about the history of the mode of administering the Holy Communion at St. Mary's, Oxford, which was almost (but not quite) peculiar to that church, and which therefore requires a few words of explanation. The large chancel (which is separated from the body of the church by the organ-loft) has a long seat running along each side, and in front of each a broad book-board, which was covered at the time of the Holy Communion with white linen cloths. The communicants did not move from their places, but the consecrated bread and wine were brought round to each. The general effect (whether ritually correct or not) was most orderly, quiet, and reverent, completely realising Keble's words,

"The only sound
One gentle footstep gliding round."

It was in answer to my question as to the origin of this practice that I received the following letter:

"March 1, 1887.

"MY DEAR DR. GREENHILL,—

"I am very glad to answer you, though I write with difficulty. I don't think I made any innovation of ritual at St. Mary's down to a surplice for preaching in.

* When the poem was composed, in 1833, the writer was becalmed on the Mediterranean.

"I found the stationary communion with its napkins or table-cloths, as you recollect it, and so I left it. Hawkins, my predecessor, I have heard say again and again that it was a remnant of Puritan times. He spoke as recollecting two previous vicars, James and Bishop. Bishop was vicar for, I think, 20 years. I believe the custom was from time immemorial, as far as Protestants are concerned. Kindest remembrances to Mrs. Brine.

"Most sincerely yours,
"JOHN H. CARD. NEWMAN."

Some other notes and letters I have relating to mere private and personal matters, but I think I cannot be wrong in believing that the above will be interesting to many English readers besides myself.

W. A. GREENHILL.

LETTERS, IN PART UNPUBLISHED, OF SAMUEL PEPYS.*

III.

Ballard Letters, Vol. I.

FOL. 155.—PEPYS TO DR. CHARLETT.

Nov. 9th, 1698.

Deare Sr,—And lastly, y<sup>e</sup> distinguishing Favour of y<sup>e</sup> large share you gave mee of y<sup>e</sup> little Leasure at y<sup>e</sup> late being in Towne, with y<sup>e</sup> injurious Turne you mention it with tow<sup>ds</sup> y<sup>e</sup> selfe in y<sup>e</sup> most obliging Letter of y<sup>e</sup> 16th of Octobr, is what (with y<sup>e</sup> infinite & inexpressible ones before-going) I shall endlessly rest accountable to you for.

You know (to my shame) how ill a Visitor I am, & therefore can y<sup>e</sup> more safely warrant it to Mr. Isted for a Truth, that even in my neglect of wayting on him, there are few I have more obliged by my Good Manners then I have done him. Bee pleas<sup>d</sup> however to assure him, & bee assured y<sup>e</sup> selfe, that I did with great pleasure joyne in y<sup>e</sup> Vnanimous Election of him yesterday into our Society at Gresham College; & that therefore, besides y<sup>e</sup> Comands & his owne apparent Meritts, I am now by Colleague-shipp become his humble Servant & Honourer, and by y<sup>e</sup> leading mee to 't, will as an Elder Brother take upon mee to reade to him (as he favours mee wth opportunitys for it) upon y<sup>e</sup> Great Subject of this World, out of a Register I carry about mee of my owne Mistakes in it.

Dr. Wallis is truly too much for mee to speake of, or speake to; soe much I revere him, & yet soe much more is hee to bee rever'd. Give him only (I beg you) my Duty, & acknowledgem<sup>ts</sup> of both his last Favours by y<sup>e</sup> hands; to bee own'd by those who come after mee, as Debts to those that come after him; & which (I greatly thanke you) you tell mee y<sup>e</sup> stepp you have made towards our havinge some other security, besides his Good and Great Name, against his owne and Family's being foregott. But pray tell mee; Meane it you in Paynting or Sculpture, & by what Hand?

God encrease y<sup>e</sup> Number of our University-Benefactours, & of y<sup>e</sup> Virtues that should draw them thither. I thanke you for y<sup>e</sup> Tideings you give mee of some, & Good Ones; & that to my poore Ma'dline a very welcome one to mee.

Nor am I y<sup>e</sup> lesse satisfy'd wth y<sup>e</sup> reasonableness of my Wish, from y<sup>e</sup> interruptions You in particular complaine of to mee, whose Conduct is I am sure behind Noe Man's, nor Example neither, for preventing them.

My Nephew is safely returned, & allways Your Honourer & Servant.

I pray God I don't too soone match y<sup>e</sup> St. Katharin's Cause, with another, of w<sup>ch</sup> I sayd a little to you lately, & feare I shall more, but in Order to my L<sup>d</sup> Chancell<sup>r</sup>'s making it lesse. . . .

FOL. 157.—THE SAME TO THE SAME.

Yorke Buildings: Dec. 10. 1698.

Sr,—I am hastening as fast as I can againe into y<sup>e</sup> Debt, God knows when I shall stopp, if I don't doe't now that I am call'd to't, by Mr Hewer's dineing with mee to day, & telling mee, that Hee & his Bretheren at y<sup>e</sup> East India-Hous have bene accosted by One laying Claime to y<sup>e</sup> Chinese Manuscripts lately delivered there to mee upon your Title thereto, by Virtue of a Letter you had by you at Oxford, importing (as I remember) they being consign'd to y<sup>e</sup> late Dr. Bernard & your Selfe, though y<sup>e</sup> Case they came-in bore indeed noe such nor any other Direction. Mr Hewer tells mee, his Name is Dolben; but more of him hee knows not, but for y<sup>e</sup> Companys indemnity, as well as our Credits, hee says it will bee but necessary, that that Paper of Yours bee sent up hither, & that will cleare all; & possibly upon y<sup>e</sup> thus knowing his Name, you may bee able to make some conjecture touching his Pretence. And y<sup>e</sup> sooner you are pleas'd to lett us have this Letter, the sooner I perceive y<sup>e</sup> Company will know how to doe themselves Right herein, when next hee comes to them about it.

* Continued from ACADEMY, August 23, p. 152.

This being sayd, lett mee, though late, pay you my thanks for y<sup>e</sup> last of y<sup>e</sup> 18th of November, wherein nevertheless I can hardly avoyd thinkeing, that you banter mee, when you talke of my becoming a Councell<sup>r</sup> to one, that you have bred to a degree of Gravity, fitting him for doing that Office himselfe to Mee, whom Time has worne to a Condition of needing it from him, much more (for ought I see) then hee from any Body. But if without any Eye of profitting by it, hee can bee contented to passe sometimes a Noone with mee, hee shall at least learne noe Hurt from mee, and make mee more his Servant & Debtor.

I will not loose one Opportunity, for getting a Sight of my L<sup>d</sup> Chancell<sup>r</sup> Paper from my L<sup>d</sup> Feversham, & if I can gett more, I meane a Copy, I'll make it spawne another for You.

Y<sup>e</sup> letter found mee at Table environ'd (as 't had beene by prophesy) with every Person interested in y<sup>e</sup> Contents of it; Our noble Captaine I meane, Mr Shadwell, Mr Isted, & y<sup>e</sup> dutifull Servant my Nephew.

For y<sup>e</sup> first of whom, as much indeed as hee could not avoyd shewing his Resentments for y<sup>e</sup> Disappointm<sup>t</sup>; Yet I can assure you, hee is more then satisfied with y<sup>e</sup> Steadiness of y<sup>e</sup> Friends<sup>sh</sup> & Concern<sup>t</sup> for him; & this with a degree of acknowledgem<sup>t</sup> suteable to y<sup>e</sup> Character given of him by Dr. Bourchier, & very opportunely as well as obligingly repeted by you on this occasion, while I had it in my hand to spredd it in this Company. Nor did it end without something elce allsoe at y<sup>e</sup> same time produced from Oxford by Mr Shadwell, that rais'd some fresh Expectations of another Proove likely to happen there of Mr Gilby's Fortune at another Election, upon Terms next to certaine of his Succeeding. And this greatly to y<sup>e</sup> content of our worthy friend his Father-in-Law.

I should have told you, that Dr. Sloane was of our Knott too, & shared with us in all y<sup>e</sup> Pleasure attending y<sup>e</sup> Name of Dr Charlett.

To which when I have added my thanks for y<sup>e</sup> kinde remembrance of what I have to expect from you touching our learned Dr Wallis's Letter to BPP Fell,* I bidd you most respectfully Good Night, & am, &c.

FOL. 160.—THE SAME TO THE SAME.

April 27, 1699.

Sr,—I have been too long owing for y<sup>e</sup> favour of y<sup>e</sup> last of March, & yet wish its Answer (for y<sup>e</sup> little it brings you tow<sup>ds</sup> lessening y<sup>e</sup> Debt) come not still too soone.

'Tis great Pitty soe generous an Offer as that of Mr Hudson's, tow<sup>ds</sup> effecting y<sup>e</sup> D<sup>n</sup> of Christ-Church & Your soe publique designe touching Euclid,* should become unsuccessfull; but what better is to bee hoped for from our Booksellers, while they continue our Maisters? An Evil; that noe Lover of Letters should sleep, till it bee cur'd: I'm sure I would n't, if my Wakeing would doe it.

I thanke you, I have had our Parish-Clerks Worke, cu[jus ma]teriam superat Opus; y<sup>e</sup> Printer having laudably done his [part].

But what meane our Patriots to bee still chargeing of our Straw? or doe they thinke y<sup>e</sup> Booksellers alone not sufficient to undoe our Brick-Worke?

Dr Wallis is my mighty Benefact<sup>r</sup>, though by my Book-binder's being ill (who bound my former Volumes) I have had it but one day in a Condition of being look'd into, and loath I was to appeare to him (w<sup>ch</sup> I doe by this Post) with my thank's, while conscious of not haveing first done right to his Present. Which truly (lett mee now observe to you) is a Present of that value (joyn'd with its fellows) as noe one Author of any Nation, much lesse of this, within my Memory, ever could have made mee, or (I now haue too much reason to feare) ever will. And how to owne it as I ought to doe, I know not, to him; unlesse (till you instruct mee better) you could encourage mee to thinke I might live to see him once more in Towne, for then I would submit to you y<sup>e</sup> bringing it about, that I might have an Opportunity & his leave, to discharge my selfe thereof to him, by a Present of his Picture to y<sup>e</sup> Vniversity, which I should with great pleasure see done by y<sup>e</sup> best Hand, whether Sr Godfrey Kneller, Cloysterman, or any other that Mr Deane & You shall propose; to bee there lodged in perpetuum Wallisij Memoriam, & of theyr Right & my owne Obligations to this great Man; whom God send still long to live, in y<sup>e</sup> same state of Health & Vigour you now describe to mee in.

I am confounded at y<sup>e</sup> Paynes it must haue cost him, to decypher y<sup>e</sup> Letters hee has gratify'd y<sup>e</sup> World with y<sup>e</sup> Effects of, & his Keys to: but who there will bee to doe it after him, God knows; & I would I did.

I partooke in y<sup>e</sup> & my Learned Friends favours to [my] Cosen Gale, & returne both you & them my trust [than]ks for; as his Father (I am sure) allsoe will, who tells mee his purpose of sending him soone into France, & of being himselfe soone in Towne in order to it.*

Your nameing of Mr Hudson, whose Learning & Labour I greatly honour, gives mee a handle for telling you, that there is a Chare I would aske of him (if I knew how) wherein his Reading would without much new trouble, I should thinke, to him, save mee a great Deale; in reference to 2 or 3 Questions I want help in, relating to his auncient Periplus-Men. Pray tell mee, how (if at all) hee may bee accosted by mee therein.

I am not wholly unfurnished of Books of Plants, and 2 or 3 not comon Ones; but it being a Study that my Manner & y<sup>e</sup> Scene of my Life haue kept mee altogether a Stranger to (I speake it with regret) I have not beene Maist<sup>r</sup> of Dr Morrison's former Part, & thinke it too late in y<sup>e</sup> Day to bee now setting out upon a Journy of that Length.

I take great pleasure in y<sup>e</sup> expectation you confirme mee in, touching my friend Dr Hicks's Northerne Gramars, whereto I am a Well-wisher.†

My Nephew is y<sup>e</sup> most dutifull Servant, & endeav<sup>r</sup>d lately, but unsuccessfully, to make mine & his owne Compliment to Mr Isted; & shall doe it soone againe, hee being a Sprigg of y<sup>e</sup> rearing, that I have a particular Esteeme & Regard for.

I haue great hopes to see Cap<sup>t</sup> Hatton on Saturday next, when hee shall have your Note concerning him; as farr, as You can expect it from one ten times more blameable on y<sup>e</sup> same score, then hee can bee.

It remaynes only that I tell you of my meeting lately, in y<sup>e</sup> laborious Collection of Manuscripts, among Sr William Dugdale's,—part 1, p. 298—this entry Pretia rerum tempore Regis Joannis. I beseech you at your convenience lett my friend Mr Wanly bee desired to see a little more nearly, what it is, & give mee One word only, or 2, concerning it.

I haue shewen Mr Tanner (who is this moment come-in to mee) this last paragraph, & learnt from him, that Mr W. is not now in y<sup>e</sup> way; but y<sup>e</sup> trouble will bee too early to you, and time enough for mee, when ever he returns.

I thanke you for y<sup>e</sup> lamentable Letter by him, on y<sup>e</sup> same Subject with y<sup>e</sup> begin'ing of this to you; but I doubt 'tis too late for either of us to hope for better, ubj Reges non philosophantur. But I see (upon second reading) that you are growne a querulous Man, that can sigh for want of Company, when left alone with the 2 Savilian Professours, that would alone bee better then most other 2 hundreds to, &c. . . . Pray give them my most humble Services; & for Mr Deane I will endeavour to doe my Duty to him here.

April 29, 1699.

being called away on a suddaine & very unwellcome Occasion, relateing to a friend then in despayre of Life, I was pravent in finishing what the last post should have brought you; but with y<sup>e</sup> Advantage of telling you, that I haue had y<sup>e</sup> favour of our friend Cap<sup>t</sup> Hatton's Company to day, & done y<sup>e</sup> part I told you I would to him; leaveing it to himselfe to give you y<sup>e</sup> satisfaction due to you; which hee will soone doe, & in y<sup>e</sup> meane time joyn'd with mee in y<sup>e</sup> Health, as my whole little Board did. Whereof Mr Tanner had beene one, could his Visitt to Lambeth haue suffer'd mee to keep him.

As you haue Opportunity, pray give y<sup>e</sup> Honrd Dr Wallis y<sup>e</sup> occasion of my [not] sooner appearing to him with my Acknowledgem<sup>t</sup> of his Present.

C. E. DOBLE.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- KLÖTI, W. Shakespeare als religiöser Dichter. Zürich: Hübner. 1 M. 70 Pf.
REINDL, W. Luther, Crotus u. Hutten. Eine quellenmäss. Darstellung d. Verhältnisses Luther zum Humanismus. Marburg: Ehrhardt. 2 M. 70 Pf.

HISTORY, LAW, ETC.

- BRINCKMEIER, E. Genealogische Geschichte d. Hauses Leiningen u. Leiningen-Westerburg. Braunschweig: Sattler. 40 M.
FIALA, E. Beschreibung der Sammlung böhmischer Münzen u. Medaillen d. Max Dobenauer. Prag: Dominicus. 80 M.
HARTMANN, K. A. M. Die militärischen Proklamationen u. Ansprachen Napoleons I. 1796-1815. Oppeln: Franck. 2 M.
UNGER, G. F. Die Abfassungszeit der ägyptischen Festkalender. München: Franz. 2 M. 10 Pf.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- FLOURNOY, Th. Métaphysique et psychologie. Basel: Georg. 2 M. 40 Pf.
SCHIATTARELLA, R. Note e problemi di filosofia contemporanea. Turin: Loescher. 7 fr.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- DIETZE, J. Quaestiones Hyginianae. Altona: Lorenzen. 1 M. 50 Pf.
STRASSMAIER, J. N. Babylonische Texte. 9 Hft. Leipzig: Pfeiffer. 12 M.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE ORIGINAL FRENCH EDITIONS OF "THE KALENDER OF SHEPHERDES."

6 North Crescent, Bedford Square: August 23, 1890.

In my letter from Paris, published in No. 954 of the ACADEMY, I advanced the hypothesis, that the copy on vellum of "Le Compost et Kalendrier des Bergiers" in the Bibliothèque Nationale (vélins No. 518), is but the edition of April 18, 1493, by Guiot Marchant, printed on vellum with broad margins, and beautifully illuminated. I adduced the necessary evidence for the hypothesis, and conjectured the parts of the colophon, covered by Verard's design.

After my return to the British Museum, I had, through the kindness of Mr. R. E. Graves, the opportunity of seeing the "Catalogue des Livres Précieux, Manuscrits et Imprimés, Faisant partie de la Bibliothèque de M. Ambroise Firmin-Didot, Paris, Mai 1879, 8°," and found therein under No. 466 the description of a copy of the April edition, which confirms my conjectures in every respect.

The title-page of the vellum copy in the Bibliothèque Nationale runs line by line thus:

"LE KALEDRIER des bergiers nouvellemēt fait. Du quel sont adiouctez plusieurs nouvelletes cōme ceulx qui le verront pourrōt
cōgnoître.
Et enseigne les iours / heures / et minutes des lunes nouuelles / et des eclipses de soleil et de lune / la pièce salutaire des Bergiers que chascun doit sauoir. Leur compost et Kalendrier fur la main en francois et latin: tel qu'ilz parlēt
entre eulx: L'arbre des vices. L'arbre des vertus et la tour de sapiece figuree; ensemble la phifique et regime de sante

* See Oxoniensis, i., pp. 230 sqq.

† See Charlett to Pepys, Diary and Corresp., p. 682.

* Gale to Pepys, Diary and Corresp., p. 681.

† Diary and Corresp., 682.

diceulx Bergiers, queft nothomye / flebothomye / Leur astrologie des signes estoilles et planetes; et phizonomye.
Et plusieurs choses exquisies et difficiles a congnoître.

Lequel compoft et kalenrier touchât les lunes et eclipses
est approprié comme doit estre le climat de france au

jugement et congnoissance des Bergiers."

Below this title are the arms of the kings of France. In the above-mentioned Catalogue, &c., the title runs thus:

"Icy est le compost et kalédrier des Bergiers. Nouuellement refait et autrement compose que nestoit par avant. Ou quel sont adioustez plusieurs nouvelletes cōme ceulx qui le verront pourrōt

cōgnoître

Et enseigne les iours / heures /," &c., &c., exactly as the title above quoted. The place occupied by the arms of the kings of France is taken up by Guy Marchant's large device. It is obvious that Verard, to conceal the latter, had painted it out.

The two titles now exactly agree, save in the first two lines and half of the third; the long fl are replaced in the Catalogue by ss, and the "Ou" for "Du" in the third line is evidently a mistake, since O and D in black-letter type are very much alike. The lines that do not agree in the two titles have been effaced in the vellum copy, and replaced by the words which I described as written in blue ink, much larger than the text.

The colophon, as I have reconstructed it from the fragments runs exactly alike in the Catalogue, viz.:

"Finit le compost et kalendrier des bergiers Imprime a Paris

par Guiot marchant demourant au champ gaillard derriere

le college de nauarre Lan. M.CCCC. iiii. xx et xiii Le xviii iour

Dauril."

For the sake of completing my account of the two first editions of "Le Compost," &c., I subjoin a collation of the volumes—

April 18: b, A, C, D to N; b, A, F, G, H in eights; C, D, E, I, K, L, M, N in sixes.
Finishes on N<sub>5</sub> recto, N<sub>6</sub> verso, and the whole of N<sub>6</sub> being blanks.

July 18: a, b, c, d to m; a, b, f, g, h, m in eights; c, d, e, i, k, l in sixes. Finishes on m<sub>3</sub> recto, m<sub>3</sub> verso being occupied by Guyot Marchant's device, very likely the same as covered by the royal French arms on A<sub>1</sub> in the vellum copy.

Both editions have between G<sub>3</sub> and H<sub>1</sub> respectively g<sub>3</sub> and h<sub>1</sub> a folding leaf. On its recto is represented "la tour de sapience"; one-half of its verso is printed upon.

H. OSKAR SOMMER.

THE CARLSRUHE BEDE.

Youghal: August 25, 1890.

In Zimmer's Glossae Hibernicae (p. 229) the following is given from the Carlsruhe Codex of Bede:—

"Juni: δ . . . m . q . g . III . n . Coemgenivallis (Fol. 17a).

"Juli: κ . . . o . b . f . V . id Columbae & Baitheni.

"August: β . . . e b db V . kl. Bās Muirchatho, etc. (Fol. 17b)."

Here some corrections can be made offhand.
In the first item Coemgenivallis must be divided into Coemgeni Vallis [-duorum-lacuum]. He is Kevin of Glen-da-locha (Glendalough). In the second, Juli is to be read Juni. The festival of the cousins-german, Columba and Baithene of Iona, was the ninth of June. (Although not mentioned in the Glossarial Index of the Stokes edition, the latter is commemorated in the Calendar of Oengus.) In the third, db, though thus printed in the Grammatica Celtica (ed. i., xxxii.; ed. ii., xxiii.), are to be separated.

With respect to the meaning, the change in the third entry makes the significance of the letters (g, f, b) immediately preceding the several monthly reckonings quite clear. They are, assuming A as the normal Dominical Letter, the Regulars of June 3, June 9, and August 28, respectively. Elsewhere I have dealt with the excerpts as a whole in their bearing upon Irish chronology.

Perhaps some reader of the ACADEMY may be in a position to inform me—first, whether the proposed emendations are supported by the MS.; secondly, whether the (apparently) meaningless κ is found therein; finally, how are the lacunae here denoted by dots filled up in the original.

B. MACCARTHY.

P.S.—In my letter in the ACADEMY of August 23 (p. 153, col. 3, l. 12), for "date" read
"data."

THE MSS. OF THE NEW TESTAMENT.

Oxford: August 24, 1890.

Mr. Hoskier's letter leaves me nothing to retract, and nothing to which I can plead guilty—unless it be that I have the misfortune to differ from him in opinion. I am, however, obliged to him for the information which he gives in reply to my question about his MS.

I have not at all "changed my mind" since I wrote in the Contemporary in 1881. But it is possible to criticise an eminent writer in one direction, and to recognise unreservedly the value of his work in another, as well as to find not a little to admire in his personality. I do not doubt that others who agree with me would do the same.

As to his next point, I quite understood that Mr. Hoskier wished to lay stress on what he calls the "eclecticism" of the MSS. But I cannot admit that there is no difference in this respect between "uncial and cursive, old and young."
On the contrary, the eclecticism, or "mixture" as we may prefer to call it, diminishes very perceptibly in some of the oldest MSS. (e.g., B and D), and in the oldest versions and fathers.
That there should be confusion of texts was inevitable in a book so much copied as the New Testament, and we cannot be surprised if it reaches a high pitch when it has gone on for some twelve or thirteen centuries.

In conclusion, I am afraid I do not share Mr.
Hoskier's opinion as to the value of "Martin's demonstrations." Some day I may come back to these; but the question is too large to go into in a letter.

W. SANDAY.

"LA GOULE D'AOUST."

Stanhoe Grange, Norfolk: August 23, 1890.

Owing to absence from home I have only just seen Mr. Mayhew's interesting letter on the above subject (ACADEMY, August 2). I intended in my note to suggest, not that "Saint Pierre la Noele" was an impossible phrase, but that such was not the MS. reading in the passage I quoted from La Maniere de Langage.

M. Paul Meyer says the word he prints noele looks like niucle (misprinted vinicle in my letter). This is so obviously (in MS.) like uinicle that I have little hesitation in assuming that to be the actual reading, the phrase "Saint Pierre la vinicle" being a rough and ready attempt (on the part of a foreigner) at a rendering of the Latin "S. Petrus ad Vincula," in Modern French "La Saint Pierre aux liens."

Of course Mr. Mayhew is right about the etymology of convoiter, Old French covoitier (Latin cupiditate). I was concerned at the moment with the question of the intercalated nasal, and allowed myself to accept Brachet's etymology (Latin cupitare) without examination.

PAGET TOYNBEE.

SCIENCE.

"THE CONTEMPORARY SCIENCE SERIES."—
The Origin of the Aryans. By Isaac Taylor.
(Walter Scott.)

CANON ISAAC TAYLOR is always lucid, learned, and interesting; and his latest work, on the origin of the Aryans, is distinguished by all three characteristics. It embodies in a comparatively small compass the results of the various lines of research—philological, archaeological, and anthropological—which have led the majority of scholars in recent years to change their views respecting the first home of the Indo-European languages.
Ten years ago the orthodox theory was still that which saw in Asia the birthplace of Indo-European speech; to-day the advocates of the Asiatic birthplace are in danger of being reckoned among the heretics.

It is to Europe and not to Asia that we are now bidden to look if we would lift the veil which hides the origin of our Indo-European languages, and Canon Taylor's book is intended to explain the reasons for such a change of opinion. But the question is by no means simple. Those who have discussed it have too often confounded philology with ethnology, and argued as if the parent-speech of the Indo-European tongues must have been the invention of a particular race. This, however, is by no means the case. The parent-speech might have been spoken by members of more than one race, like its derivative languages in modern Europe. To discover the cradle of the Indo-European languages will not necessarily throw light on the ethnology of their primitive speakers. It will do so only if we can prove that the cradle was among a population which has remained racially pure from the earliest times of which archaeology can inform us down to the present day.

There is only one way in which a language can throw light on the question of its original home. Where history and tradition are alike silent, it is only the discovery of the amount and character of the culture possessed by its earliest speakers which can help us in our research. By comparing the derivative languages, and marking the cases in which they agree in possessing the same word to denote the same object or conception of culture, we can form an approximately correct picture of the civilisation or want of civilisation reflected in the records of the parent-speech.
But the record can be merely approximately correct. We cannot prove a negative; we cannot infer from the absence of a word in all or any of the derivative languages that such a word did not exist in the parent-speech. The presumption is, on the whole, against its having done so, but that is all.
Until it was discovered by Prince L.-L.
Bonaparte in a remote village, the Basque dialects seemed to possess no native term for "knife," and yet it was obvious that such a term must have been used even by the savages of the palaeolithic epoch if they had any language at all. All we can conclude from the fact that the ordinary Basque words for "knife" are borrowed from neighbouring dialects is that knives of metal were introduced from abroad. It has sometimes been argued that the speakers of the Indo-European parent-language had no acquaintance with the sea, because no common word for that element can be pointed out in the derivative dialects. But there is equally no common word for "lake" or "river," and yet the common possession of a word for "ship" or "boat" proves that navigable tracts of water must have been known to them. As a matter of fact, I believe that the Greek πόρος is the Sanskrit pāthas, which has the sense of "water"; if so, the word must be added to the primitive Indo-European vocabulary. Canon Taylor does not seem always to have avoided the common endeavour of his predecessors to prove a negative, and to infer that the early Indo-European community was deficient in certain elements of culture because no linguistic evidence of them now remains. But we must remember that linguistic palaeontology can do no more than paint an approximately correct picture of primitive social life; in many points it will necessarily be imperfect. It can, indeed, tell us whether the community, whose life it records, was still in the Stone Age or not; but it cannot indicate the precise stage in the Stone Age, or give an exhaustive list of the fauna and flora with which the community was in contact. This fact should be borne in mind when we compare the results obtained by its help with the results of archaeological research.

It is, however, to the anthropological rather than to the philological side of the question that Canon Taylor has devoted his chief attention, in accordance with the growing conviction of scholars that, if a definite answer is ever to be given to the question he has set before his readers, anthropology will be a better guide than philology. Prehistoric archaeology has already told us much about the early inhabitants of Europe; we can measure their skulls, can gauge their culture, can even trace their migrations. But prehistoric archaeology is still young; and those who have studied it the most deeply are the first to admit the provisional character of many of its conclusions. In several points, the results arrived at by British and continental anthropologists are in direct antagonism to one another; and the exact relation of the people of our round barrows to the brachycephalic race, or races, of the continent is still an open question.

Contrary to the opinion which is chiefly associated with the name of Penka, Canon Taylor would identify the primitive speakers of the Indo-European languages—the Aryans as we will call them for the sake of brevity—with the brachycephalic population which is associated, at all events in this country, with the use of bronze in place of stone. He further maintains that this brachycephalic population was tall and blond, and has survived in its purity among the Slavs and the Finns. Here I am unable to follow him. Slavonic craniology is still too behind-hand for us to draw any safe conclusions from it, and the assertion has even been made that Slav brachycephalism is due to an admixture of Tatar and Mongolian blood. The only part of Europe where we are at present warranted in regarding the existing population as lineally descended from the brachycephalic people of the Bronze Age is Auvergne, and the Auvergnats, so far from being tall and blond, are small and dark. Now, the Galtchas of Central Asia have skulls and features so exactly resembling those of the Auvergnats as to leave little doubt of their common origin; and since the bronze culture, including cremation, came from Asia—probably from the neighbourhood of the valley of the Euphrates—I see no way of avoiding the conclusion that the brachycephalic people of the Bronze Age were of Asiatic origin, swarthy, and of short stature. The existence of tall individuals among them could be accounted for by intermarriage with a taller race. But that any of them were blond there is no evidence at all.

On the other hand, the Berbers, whom Canon Taylor calls "swarthy" and connects with the Iberian race, are blond and tall, with blue eyes, light hair, and fair skins, as I know from personal experience. That their ancestors were distinguished by the same characteristics as far back as the sixteenth century B.C. is shown by the Egyptian monuments. In fact, the modern Kabyle is more like the so-called "Red Kelt" of Ireland than any other human being I have ever seen. Even the characteristics of the Spanish Basque, who is classed with the Iberian race, are a matter of dispute, one body of observers maintaining that, like the Berber, he is blond and blue-eyed. But how far we are at present from reaching any solid ground in European anthropology may be judged from the fact that Canon Taylor asserts the pure Teuton to be distinguished by blue eyes and golden hair. I, on the contrary, should have supposed that his eyes were grey and his hair flaxen, and I fancy that I should have with me in this opinion the suffrages of most observers. The blue eye is characteristic of the so-called "Goidelic" type, where it is accompanied by black hair.

At present, as it seems to me, there are only two certain and undisputed facts which the student has to guide him in his search for the Aryan cradleland. One is the description of the typical Gaul left us by Roman writers, the other the purity of the existing population in the south of Scandinavia. The typical Gaul resembled in all his outward characteristics the typical German; except that he was less civilised, the typical German could not be distinguished from him. As Canon Taylor agrees that the typical Gaul was an Aryan, his theory would oblige him to transform not only the Gaul, but the German also, into a Slav. History and philology, however, are alike opposed to such a transformation. Such physiologically as is the north German of to-day, such were his ancestors in the Roman age.

The case of the southern Scandinavian is equally weighty. The population of the south of Sweden and Norway shows remarkably few traces of foreign admixture, and the prehistoric remains of the country prove that it must have been similarly pure from the very first. Here, then, alone in Europe we have a people whose language will not have been changed or affected by conquest, intermarriage, or social contact. It will go back to those early neolithic days when the first settlers established themselves on the Scandinavian peninsula. No other speakers of Indo-European dialects can show such a record; and when we further remember that recent mythological investigations tend to place the earliest scenes of Indo-European mythology in Scandinavia, the conclusion seems to me irresistible that the Scandinavian has at present better claims to represent the primitive Aryan than any other member of the human race.

A. H. SAYCE.

CORRESPONDENCE.

SOME CONTRIBUTIONS TO PĀLI LEXICOGRAPHY.

London: Aug. 26, 1890.

Will you kindly allow me space to call the attention of those readers of the ACADEMY whom it may interest to the following facts about Pāli words which, I think, have not yet been sufficiently noticed?

In the Jātaka collection we find, as was to be expected, a number of words confined to the poetical part—i.e., the text proper, and not occurring in the prose tales, the work of the commentator. These words are explained in the comment on the verses, as not readily or generally understood at the time of the writer of this comment, who is clearly the same with the writer of the tales. The latter, doubtless, were told according to tradition, but in the idiom of the commentator's time. These words, it seems, belong to two different groups. First, the essentially poetical words, figurative and pregnant, which also in other books only occur in verses; to this group belong, moreover, some irregular and unusual forms of words and verbs. But the more interesting is the second group, words which had gone out of use since the time those verses originated, and which, accordingly, may help us in reconstructing the history of the Pāli language. Some of the words that I remember only having met in the verses are the following, though I cannot, at present, in each case pronounce to which of the two groups they belong. I must likewise remark that my notes of the first two volumes of the edition are not as full as of the third and fourth, but I do not think that this has caused any serious mistake.

agha "sky," iv. 322 v. 118, 484 v. 309 (see Morris, J. P. T. S., 1889).

antaka "death," iv. 396 v. 38, 478 v. 301.

abbhātita (see Morris, J. P. T. S., 1886), iii. 169 v. 30, 541 v. 113, iv. 495 v. 330.

ārethita, iv. 383 v. 11, 385 v. 15 (Morris, J. P. T. S., 1887).

upaneti, pregnant "bring to death," iv. 284 v. 18, 398 v. 41-44, 419 v. 99, 478 v. 301.

cp. jarūpanitā, iv. 47 v. 69, 398 v. 41-43. upasecana, in mamsā, iii. 327 v. 15, iv. 371 v. 270.

umhayate "smile," iv. 197 v. 77 (= ii. 131). ereti, iv. 424 v. 113, 478 v. 301 (Morris, J. P. T. S., 1887).

oka "house," iii. 430 v. 70.

ocināti, iii. 280 v. 83, iv. 135 v. 104, 440 v. 176-178 (Morris II.)

orundhati, iv. 4 v. 1, 480 v. 303 (Morris II.)
kānana "forest," iv. 116 v. 61, 494 v. 327.
kimpurisa (poet. for kinnara), iv. 438 v. 166 foll.

khiddā "play," iv. 396 v. 37, 470 v. 274.
ghatasitta, iv. 61 v. 106 (i.e., ghrtasikta).
thero, simply for "old man," iv. 403 v. 53. daka (for udaka) iii. 296 v. 99, iv. 478 v. 301).
dhūmaketu "fire," iv. 26 v. 46 (see Rigv.).
nikati "fraud," ii. 183 v. 135, iv. 11 v. 18, 435 v. 158 (see Sum., p. 80)—cf. nikaroti,
 iii. 466 v. 63.

pañkadanta "with smutty teeth," iii. 236 v.
 10, iv. 362 v. 234.

pajjam "foot-water," iii. 120 v. 147, 396 v. 33.
parikaroti (= parivāreti), iv. 352 v. 189, 405
 v. 61.

mutimā, iv. 76 v. 132.

ratesabha, ii. 320 v. 28, 29, iv. 373 v. 289.

rājisi (= rājarshi), iv. 356 v. 206-208, 409 v.
 72 (where "rājisi" metri causa).

vani "voice," iv. 404 v. 56—Ud. vi. 2 v.

vanno (= kāraṇa) iii. 73 v. 81, iv. 420 v. 104.

vivana, ii. 317 v. 26, iv. 371 v. 269 ("a forest without water").

samvari "night," iv. 441 v. 182.

samviruhati, iii. 380 v. 90, 398 v. 124, iv. 429
 v. 138.

Three of the most interesting, because clearly belonging to the historical group, are:

dumo "tree," ii. 75-, 395 v. 91, 446 v. 143,
 iii. 399 v. 125, 495 v. 32, iv. 203 v. 1, 295 v. 329 (and comm.), 341 v. 156 (and comm.), 440 v. 175, explained by rukkha, rukkhavevacana.

peta, in the meaning "a dead person," iii.
 166 v. 25, 167 v. 27, 214 v. 111, 114, iv.
 61 v. 105, 439 v. 174, though petakiccam,
 "burial," occurs ii. 272-8.

yakkha, in the meaning "a divinity," iii.
 309 v. 122, 345 v. 47, iv. 4 v. 2, 18 v. 26,
 98 v. 17, 107 v. 40, 155 v. 5, 163 v. 18.

In iv. 273 v. 146, asura has the old sense of "god," as there Sakko is thus called (asura- jetthako Sakko, says the commentator)—Ud.
 v. 5, p. 53?

Of irregular verbal forms the following are samples: of

karoti—kummi, ii. 435 v. 126; kurutu, iv.
 396 v. 33; kāsam, iv. 286 v. 30; kāhati,
 ii. 443 v. 140; akara, ii. 230 v. 166; akā,
 iv. 293 v. 49.

jahāti—hāsi, iii. 172 v. 36; hessāmi, iv.
 415 v. 85, 87; hassāmi, 420 v. 106.

passati—addam, iii. 380 v. 90, 93.

That the commentator did not always know the true meaning of a word there appears to be an example in iv. 223 v. 53, where it is said that a brāhmaṇi should avoid gottham, majjam, kirāsam. Here majjam, explained pānāgāram, is clear; kirāsa is explained dhūta-kerātika- jana, "the society of tipplers and charlatans." I do not know any etymology for the word.
 For gottham the var. lec. gives gutthi, and the comm. gotthin, which is probably the right one;
 but he explains—gunnamthita-tthānam, which would here be out of place. It apparently is = goshti, "a social meeting, conversazione."

May I mention, at the same time, that the two heroes, and part of their adventures, of Jāt. (498) iv. 390—viz., Citta-Sambhūta, are the same as in the first tale given in Jacobi's Aus- gewählte Erzählungen.

H. W. WENZEL.

"A FIRST ARYAN READER."

University College School, London: August 27, 1890.

While thanking you for your kind review of my First Aryan Reader in the ACADEMY of August 16, I beg to point out that I did not "unhesitatingly" class Etruscan among the Italic dialects. I merely say, at page 128,

"most probably Etruscan in the N.W." With regard to my considering Vannic as the prototype of the present Armenian literary language, nothing is more remote from my ideas. Mordtmann's attempts proved fruitless; and I do not see how we can bridge over the gap which separates Vannic from modern Armenian, literary or popular.

I enclose a number of L'Arménie, where I call attention to the new work of Dr. Sophus Bugge, "Etruscan and Armenian." I am also publishing in the same paper a series of articles entitled "Les études arméniennes en Europe."
 G. A. SCHRUMPF.

SCIENCE NOTES.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & Co. announce for immediate publication an English translation of Prof. Ostwald's Grundriss der allgemeinen
Chemie, by Dr. J. Walker, of Edinburgh University. This work covers the same ground as the author's classical Lehrbuch; but the treatment throughout is elementary, and, as far as possible, non-mathematical. The new modes of molecular-weight determination, van't Hoff's theory of osmotic pressure, Arrhenius's hypothesis of electrolytic dissociation, and the interesting applications of these to purely chemical problems—all receive special attention at the hands of the author.

DR. ST. GEORGE MIVART, of St. Mary's Hospital, Paddington, has been appointed professor of the philosophy of natural history in the university of Louvain.

It has been decided that the proposed memorial to the late Father Perry at Stony-hurst College shall take the form of a sixteen-inch equatorial telescope.

IN connexion with the visit next week of the British Association to Leeds, a "Handbook for Leeds and Airedale" has been issued under the editorship of Prof. L. C. Miall, of the Yorkshire College. Prof. Miall himself deals with Airedale, its scenery, historic sites, geology, and natural history. He is followed by sections on the carboniferous rocks of the Upper Aire Valley and their physical history, by Mr.
 R. H. Tiddeman; the history of Leeds, by Prof. C. Ransome; buildings and institutions of Leeds, by several contributors, edited by Mr. Sydney Lupton; the industries of Leeds and district, also by many contributors, edited by Mr. T. Fairley.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

PROF. JAMES DARMESTETER—who was the first to publish, some two years ago, the series of inscriptions on the tomb of Baber at Kabul —has now printed in the Journal Asiatique a paper on the inscription of Kandahar associated with the same Mughal Emperor. Both these discoveries are incidental results of his mission to India in 1886, when he was collecting the materials for his great work—Chants Populaires des Afghans. After more than one unsuccessful attempt, Prof. Darmesteter was fortunate enough to obtain a copy of the Kandahar inscription, through the good offices of Lieut.
 F. Archer, political agent at Quetta, who managed to enlist the interest of the native letter-writer at Kandahar. The inscriptions—for they are more than one, of different dates—are engraved on a dome-shaped structure, hewn out of the solid rock, which commemorates Baber's capture of Kandahar in 1522. Not only do they supply a gap in the history of the time, but they also furnish a curious list of the countries and cities in India that were subject to Baber's grandson, Akbar. Prof. Darmes-teter prints the text of the inscriptions, with a French translation, and copious notes. In short, as in his monograph on the Afghans, he has left little for any who may come after him to glean, except by encouraging them to add something hitherto altogether unknown to the scanty epigraphical records of Afghanistan.

BABU GAUR DAS BYSACK has contributed to the Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal a paper which is not only interesting in itself, but still more as an example of genuine archaeological research on the part of a native.
 The subject is an old temple, standing on the banks of the Ganges opposite Calcutta, which, both by the style of its architecture and by its idols and ritual, is connected with the Budd-him of Tibet. The monuments of the temple show that it was founded in 1778 by one Puran Gir Gosain, and that its endowments were guaranteed by Warren Hastings. With these slight clues, the Babu has been able to recover from historical records much curious information about the temple and its founder. Puran Gir Gosain was, it appears, a religious mendicant, through whose agency Warren Hastings conducted his first diplomatic and commercial relations with Tibet; and the temple was founded, like a monastery of the middle ages, to furnish a residence near Calcutta for Tibetan traders. In short, it remains as the sole material evidence at the present day of Warren Hastings's enlightened policy of free trade across the Himalayas. The paper is illustrated with photographs showing the architecture of the temple, and with a facsimile of the Tibetan passport granted to Puran Gir, dated 1778.

FINE ART.

THE BEGINNINGS OF TUSCAN SCULPTURE IN
 THE MIDDLE AGES.

S. Martin von Lucca, und die Anfänge der Toskanischen Skulptur in Mittelalter. By A. Schmarsow. (Breslau: Schottländer.)

THIS is the first of a series of volumes about to appear under the title of "Italienische Forschungen zur Kunstgeschichte." The author confesses that he had to print it before it was really ready for the press, which may account for the fault I have to find in it: this is its interminable longwindedness. All that there is worth saying in its 250 octavo pages might be said in 25. Page after page is filled with description of sculptures, some of which are represented by photographs, and so do not need to be described, while no description whatever gives the faintest idea of the rest which are not before the eyes. German writers sin in this matter past all endurance.
 The time comes when an unfortunate creature who has to read all their Kunst-geschichte and Kunstwissenschaft periodicals, cannot help crying out, Will no one put an end to the flood of description, and the endless analysis of unimportant details?
 May not an energetic young Kaiser be persuaded to take this matter also in hand?

The Cathedral Church of St. Martin at Lucca has a façade which most travellers in Italy remember. It consists of a great vaulted portico, entered by three large arches from the Piazza, and by three doorways opposite them from the church; above the portico are three galleries (one over the other) of small marble columns carrying round arches. The gable end of the nave, showing over the top, proves that the façade was never finished. If the architect had been allowed to have his way, it would perhaps have been completed, like the neighbouring San Michele, of which Sir Frederick Leighton recently said :

"Let no delight of mellow marbles, no glamour of age, no perfume of pleasant association, blunt your sense to the unfathomed foolishness of their [the Italians] frequent treatment of the façades of churches—witness, among others, that of San Michele at Lucca, which, towering by a third of its height above the building it masks, fitly expresses the vertical division of that building by innumerable rows of small colonnades, piled in horizontal profusion one on the top of the other."

The Duomo has a long history, which does not concern us beyond the fact that the bulk of the church was rebuilt in the eleventh century. The façade came later; and it seems probable that the great portico was built in the last years of the twelfth century, and the three galleries in the first years of the thirteenth (the lowest is dated 1204), while the decoration of the portals into the church and the wall between and above them went on from about 1230 to 1260.

The architect of the portico is unknown; but what was once probably his portrait is carved at the extreme right corner of the façade. He was succeeded by a certain Guidetto, who seems to have been the same as Guido Bigarelli of Como. We have his portrait and the date 1204 at the right end of the first gallery. Dr. Schmarsow will have it that Guido was young in 1204. He worked for a long time as architect and head mason and sculptor at Lucca. In 1246 he made the font for the Baptistery at Pisa, and in 1250 the pulpit for S. Bartolommeo of Pistoja. To him also Dr. Schmarsow ascribes on grounds of style (which the photographs do not bear out, though that may be their fault) a figure of S. Michael at Pistoja, and the sculptured lintel and tympanum of the main portal of the Lucca Duomo.

This Guido Bigarelli was one of that group of Lombard masons, most of whom were said to have come from the neighbourhood of Como, and who practically had the monopoly of the best class of building in the north of Italy at this time. They were really masons; but, of course, they had to do decorative carving, and sculpture gradually arose among them. Dr. Schmarsow finds traces of this group of workmen at Lucca, Pistoja, and many other places in that neighbourhood. Thus, at Brancoli and Berceto, there are interesting sculptures of very early date (1099 and later); at Pistoja is the signed work of Gruamons and his brother Adeodatus (1162, 1166, &c.); at Groppoli is a pulpit and a hideous figure of S. Michael; and at Pisa and elsewhere there are examples of the work of Biduinus, who also was a Lombard craftsman, though he worked under the influence of Bonannus, the artist in bronze who made the old bronze gates still at Pisa.

If only Dr. Schmarsow had kept to this one school, we could have followed him more easily; but there were others working at the same time, and he jumps backwards and forwards from one to another, till his reader becomes fairly dazed.

At Pisa there was another school (whether the workmen were Lombards or not does not appear) which stuck close to Byzantine traditions. The Baptistery itself shows Byzantine influence in its design, and still more strongly in its earliest sculpture. Nevertheless, it must be remembered that the architect of it was a Lucca man, one Diotisalvi, who had built S. Cristoforo's at home before (in 1153) he was fetched away to Pisa to superintend greater things. Then, again, there is South Italian influence to be remembered in the person of that Bonannus who made the bronze gates and figured date-palms and orange-trees upon them. Niccolò Pisano used to be thought to have come from that direction, till it was discovered that his "Apulia" was an insignificant district near Lucca. Lastly, though Dr. Schmarsow says nothing about it, there is the influence of French Gothic sculpture to be remembered. The incidents in the life of St. Martin, sculptured in the portico of the Lucca Duomo, are like feeble imitations of the sculpture at Reims or Amiens, resembling in this respect the Coronation bas-relief in the cathedral at Monza. The French influence may have come along the Rhine valley; but it was ultimately French, not German.

Now all these influences have to be divided up and taken account of in considering the very considerable quantity of sculpture with which the portico of the Lucca Duomo is decorated. There are the two piers, with their clustered columns, which separate the three great arches of the portico; there are also the three portals, with sculptured lintels and tympana; and outside (with forelegs on one bracket and hindlegs on another!) is an equestrian statue of S. Martin, which Dr. Schmarsow will no longer allow us to regard as the scarecrow Cavalcaselle represents it to be.

This work our author divides as follows. He gives to the workmen of the Como school of the twelfth century the decorative work on the piers. He gives to Guido himself the central portal. The Months and the Martin Legend he gives to Guido's school, and to a still better workman of the same class he gives the lintel and tympanum of the S. Regulus door. The great group of S. Martin on the brackets he considers to be the highest flight of genius ever attained by any of this Como group of masons. He ascribes it to the middle of the thirteenth century, and thinks that it replaced an earlier group, of which only the bust of S. Martin remains, stuck on a neighbouring bracket and called a woman in the guide-books. Finally, he ascribes the sculpture of the third tympanum and lintel to the hand of Niccolò Pisano about the year 1263.

There is one point worth notice in connexion with the Lucca Romanesque, and with it we will conclude. All that inlaying of the marble surfaces with decorative designs, all the carving of foliation in columns and in spaces in flat relief, and finally the use of columns knotted together as if they were ropes—all these habits and fancies came direct from the East, and their prototypes must be sought among the mosques and palaces of Cairo or Damascus.

W. M. CONWAY.

CORRESPONDENCE.

AN ANCIENT INSCRIBED STONE ON EXMOOR.

Foxdown, Wellington: August 21, 1890.

Some time ago I received word from Mr. Charles Elton that Mr. Lloyd W. Page had discovered an old inscription on Sir Thomas Acland's estate, on Winsford Hill, in West Somerset. Mr. Page has inserted a notice of the stone in his recently published work, entitled An Exploration of Exmoor and the Hill Country of West Somerset; and I have had the benefit of a drawing by him. But as I could not read the inscription to my satisfaction, I determined to visit the spot. Yesterday our host, Mr. Elworthy, took Mr. Elton and myself to see the stone; nor was that all, for when we reached Winsford Hill Mr. Page was there to lead us to the site.

We soon came to the conclusion that the legend is

CARATACI EPVS.

The stone is fractured close to the back of the first C and of the first E, so I would complete the reading thus: CARATACI [N]EPVS, with AT conjoint.

Among other points deserving of notice is the fact that the first A has an oblique line meeting, or nearly meeting, its second limb, so that at first sight this would seem, with the A, to form a small conjoint V. The reading of the name would then be CAVRATACI, unless one went further and supposed a letter lost at the beginning, namely S, which would go to make "Scaurataci." On the whole, however, we were inclined to think that the depression near the second limb of the first A forms no part of the writing, so that the more probable reading seems to be "Carataci Nepus."

As to the form nepus for nepos, this is countenanced by pronepos for pronepos in the Bodvoc inscription on Margam Mountain in Glamorgan. "Carataci," I need hardly say, is the genitive of Caratacus, which is the reading adopted by the best editors of Tacitus, instead of the gibberish "Caractacus." In Welsh the name became Caratauc, later Caradawg and Caradog. In Irish, on the other hand, the name is now Carthach, genitive Carthaigh, which we have in an Anglicised spelling in "MacCarthy." I mention the Irish forms, as I am inclined to think that this inscription, like the Ogam inscriptions of Devon, belongs to the Goidelic conquerors of the lands on both sides of the Severn Sea. This I infer from nepus being used just like the Irish ua or ó, "grandson, descendant," as in "the O'Donoghue" and the like. In fact, the Four Masters mention no less than four men styled Ua Carthaigh or O'Carthy, of whom three are called chief Ollaves of Connaught. To one of the three the Four Masters give no name but Ua Carthaigh; the same is also the case with their fourth O'Carthy, an abbot whose death is given under the year 1442. This kind of nomenclature is more familiar, to say the least of it, among Goidels than among Brythons; and I am inclined to guess the nationality of the Winsford Hill stone accordingly, though it would have been very gratifying to come across the resting-place of a descendant of the great Caratacus, who made such a vigorous stand against the legions of Rome.

JOHN RHYS.

THE DAHR-EL-BAHARI MUMMIES.

London: August 25, 1890.

In reference to the very interesting communication from Mr. Herbert McClure, respecting the condition of the Dahr-el-Bahari mummies now in the Ghizeh Museum, I venture to make a few observations.

Mr. McClure informs us that portions of the efflorescence had been submitted to Dr. Fouquet at the request of M. Grébant for microscopic examination and analysis, the result being that the matter was found to consist of thin scales and prisms of crystallised salts, but the particular salts were not mentioned.

Now it would be interesting to know whether the substance referred to was natron—that is, carbonate of soda. It is well known that, previous to the process of embalming, the body of the deceased was steeped in natron for seventy days. The object of this immersion seems to have been to dissolve the tissues and so leave little but skin and bone. The space occupied by the flesh was filled during the process of embalming by bitumen and various spices, the body having been previously washed, doubtless in order to remove the organic matter dissolved by the alkaline solution. Traces of the salt would probably remain, and hence the appearance of the efflorescence, which, though originally locked up by the bitumen, would, in the process of desiccation during many centuries, eventually find its way to the surface. It is probable that the mummies have gone through this process long anterior to their removal from the tomb, and the appearance of the salt now does not seem to justify any fears for their stability under the present conditions.

As regards the risk of exposure to damp, the mummies are safer when housed in the Ghizeh Museum than they could have been at Bulaq, where they would have been exposed not only to the effluvia from the river, but also to the moisture which, during high Nile, percolates through the banks.

It is satisfactory to learn that, on the authority of so able and experienced a scientist as Dr. Fouquet, the efflorescence is declared to be entirely inorganic in its nature, and not the result of any mould or fungoid growth.

As to the final disposal of these wonderful and impressive relics of the past, I may be permitted to ask whether, the laudable curiosity of the learned and a large number of the cultured classes having been gratified, it would not be more in accordance with respect for the dead if they could be once more sealed up and reverently restored to their tomb?

FRANK DILLON.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

OUR readers will be glad to hear that—in fulfilment of the hope already expressed in the ACADEMY—Mr. W. H. James Weale has been appointed to the keepership of the art library at South Kensington, vacant by the death of the late Mr. Soden Smith.

Messrs. Cassell & Co. will publish during September London Street Arabs, by Mrs. H. M. Stanley (Dorothy Tennant), containing a collection of her characteristic sketches of London street-life handsomely printed. By way of introduction, Mrs. Stanley relates some experiences of "Arab" life, furnishes information as to the mode adopted in making her sketches, and narrates various anecdotes respecting her ragamuffin models.

THE Arts and Crafts Exhibition Society have decided to admit architectural designs at their third exhibition in the coming winter, subject to certain special regulations. The designs—which may be either projects of a finished building, or details of decorative work—must show both an appreciation of the current conditions of architecture and a sense of beautiful treatment; they may be in the form of sketches, photographs, or models; all drawings must be the autograph work of the designer; the sizes recommended are imperial folio and quarto, framed close.

MR. HENRY IRVING, who recently pleaded the cause of the South London Fine Art Gallery, has received from a friend the promise of a donation of £1000, in recognition of the fact of this art gallery being the only one in all London that is permanently open on Sundays. The gallery, 207 Camberwell-road, is open every day, except Saturday, from 3 to 5 and 7 to 9.30 p.m., and has at present a special collection of valuable pictures, lent for a few weeks, including Mr. Wyke Bayliss's large painting of Caen Cathedral and Mr. Long's portrait of Mr. Irving.

THE next meeting of the Royal Society of Antiquaries of Ireland will be held at Strabane from Tuesday to Friday of next week. Visits will be paid to Baronscourt, Donegal, Killybegs, the cromlechs and "giants' graves" at Malinmore, the souterraine and old crosses at Glen Columkill, and the cliff-scenery of Slieve Liag. Among the papers to be read is "Suggestions for the Preparation of a Systematic Catalogue of the Ancient Monuments of Ireland," by Mr. William Gray, a vice-president of the society.

THE annual autumn exhibition of pictures at the Walker Art Gallery, Liverpool, under the management of a committee of the corporation, will open on Monday next, September 1.

THE new building of the Science and Art Museum at Dublin, of which Prof. Vincent Ball is the able director, was to be opened with a state ceremonial by the Earl of Zetland on Friday, August 29. The same building also contains the national library of Ireland, the trustees of which were represented on the occasion by Prof. Edward Dowden.

WE have to record the death of the veteran historical painter, Mr. Charles West Cope, who is best known for his series of eight frescoes in the peers' corridor in the Houses of Parliament, dealing with incidents of English history under the Stuarts. Mr. Cope was born at Leeds in 1811; was elected A.R.A. in 1844, after winning a prize of £300 in the national competition for cartoons at Westminster Hall; and R.A. four years later, when he was at the height of his reputation. From 1867 to 1874 he was professor of painting at the Royal Academy. He died at Bournemouth on Thursday, August 21, in the eightieth year of his age.

THE July issue of the Journal of Indian Art (London: Quaritch) is a double number, consisting of Illustrations from the Records and Relics of the Late Honourable East India Company, with a descriptive introduction by Sir George Birdwood. The plates are thirty-two in number, executed in Mr. William Griggs's finest style of photo-lithography. They include facsimiles of charters, grants of arms, historic documents, views of the old India House in Leadenhall Street, and of its palatial successor in Whitehall. Of all of these Sir George Birdwood—doubly qualified by his researches among the MS. records, and by his pious veneration for the traditions of the old Company—has written interesting notes, pointing out by the way how many valuable documents have altogether disappeared. Encouraged by his own good fortune in making finds in India (among which was an illuminated MS. of Dante, of the middle of the fourteenth century, which had been presented to the Bombay branch of the Asiatic Society by Mountstuart Elphinstone), he hopes against hope that some of these missing documents may yet come to light. In future numbers Mr. Griggs promises to give reproductions of Clive's own account of the battle of Plassey, and photographs of the early coins minted by the English at Bombay, of the great silver badge worn by the Company's watermen, &c. The price of the Journal of Indian Art is only two shillings, and it deserves to be much more widely known than, we fear, it is.

MUSIC.

MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.

From C. Woolhouse we have received:

Suite, in D major, for strings and pianoforte, by A. S. Beaumont. A march, a canzonetta, Piacevole, serenata, and "Le Contraste," make up the five movements of this Suite. The title is sufficiently elastic to allow of such a heterogeneous group; and, moreover, only the first and last movements are in the key of D. The music is clear and tuneful, and shows a practised hand. The concluding "Gavotte," however, ought not to begin with a full bar; one of the characteristic features of the old dance is thereby lost.

Fantasia on Scotch Airs, for violin and pianoforte, by J. J. Haakman (Op. 12). National melodies are welcome, but here the composer merely uses them as groundwork for some showy writing for the violin. It is little more than a drawing-room piece. Mr. Haakman has undoubtedly talent, but work of this sort will scarcely improve his reputation.

Nocturne and Capriccio, for pianoforte, by Sydney Shaw (Op. 23). The first is an expressive piece, Chopinesque in character; the treatment of the principal theme at its return is, however, somewhat commonplace. The second is cleverly written, and requires careful phrasing and nimble fingers.

Romance-Idylle and Barcarolle, for 'cello and pianoforte, by W. Noel Johnson, are two short melodious trifles. In both the 'cello part is effective, yet easy.

Sérénade Napolitaine, pour violin avec accompagnement de piano, par G. St. George, is in the composer's usual light and dainty style.

I Know the Hour, by J. J. Haakman, is a thoughtful, well-written song, and the harmonies of the accompaniment are interesting. In the fourth page the word "waited" is uncomfortably divided.

Prayer, a lyrical-legend, by Jno. E. D'Aulby, is a tuneful though sentimental song. The harmonic progressions are not always satisfactory. There is an ad libitum part for organ.

Hail Britannia and We May Laugh and We May Sing. By Dr. W. Spark. The first is an unaccompanied chorus, clear and straightforward in style. The second, a part song, is smooth and pleasant; but the opening bar for bass voice alone is scarcely happy.

From Hutchings & Romer:—

Twenty Nursery Songs and Rhymes composed by George Fox in two Books. They are arranged as vocal duets, with staff and sol-fa notations. Considerable talent and fancy are displayed in the settings of these familiar rhymes. The melodies are purposely made simple; the part-writing for the two voices is interesting; the accompaniments are easy, clear, and the harmonies good.

The Road to Angel Land, by Annie E. Armstrong, is an ordinary sort of ballad; the forte chords to the words "Grannie answers gently" are certainly out of place.

Love will Endure, by A. S. Gatty, is not a striking song. The opening section in triple time is pretty, but the one following, in common time, and still in the same key, is disjointed and heavy.

Salerno, Tarentelle, by A. H. Brewer. This pianoforte duet is lively, but conventional.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN'S LIST.

VOLUME III. of "THE ADVENTURE SERIES," JUST READY.

MEMOIRS OF THE EXTRAORDINARY MILITARY CAREER OF JOHN SHIPP.

With an Introduction by Major H. M. CHICHESTER.

Illustrated, Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

IN THE SAME SERIES AND UNIFORM IN STYLE AND PRICE.

VOLUME I.

THE ADVENTURES of a YOUNGER SON. By E. J. TRELAUNY. With an Introduction by EDWARD GARNETT.

VOLUME II.

ROBERT DRURY'S JOURNAL in MADAGASCAR. With Preface and Notes by Capt. S. P. OLIVER, Author of "Madagascar."

*• Other volumes will follow at short intervals; for List, see Illustrated Prospectus, post free on application.

PERSONAL CREEDS; or, How to form a Working-theory of Life. By NEWMAN SMYTH, D.D., Author of "The Reality of Faith," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

"The discourses are written with a vigour that rises at times into eloquence, without ever seeming unnatural or forced."—Scotsman.

THE NATURE and METHOD of REVELATION.

By GEORGE PARK FISHER, D.D., LL.D., Titus Street Professor of Ecclesiastical History in Yale University. Crown 8vo, cloth, 4s. 6d.

"Sets forth the prevalent view of the progressive historical character of revelation in a very masterly way."—Scotsman.

ROBERT BROWNING: Personal Notes. Frontispiece. Small crown 8vo, parchment, 4s. 6d.

"Every lover of Browning will wish to possess this exquisitely-printed and as exquisitely-bound little volume."—Yorkshire Daily Post.

MIREIO: A Provençal Poem. By Frederic

MISTRAL. Translated by HARRIET W. PRESTON. Frontispiece by JOSEPH PENNELL. (Vol. V. of "The Cameo Series.") Fcap. 8vo, half-bound, paper boards, 3s. 6d.

This is the first translation in verse of this celebrated poem yet offered to the English public.

THE IMMORTALS, and Other Poems. By R. WARWICK BOND. Crown 8vo, antique paper, parchment 4s. 6d.

THE PRELUDE, and Other Poems. By Harold BURROWS. Crown 8vo, antique paper, parchment, 4s. 6d.

SONG-STRAYS: a Book of Poems. By Cyfaill. Fcap. 8vo, parchment, 3s. 6d.

"It is interesting and adequate."—Speaker.

WILD NATURE WON by KINDNESS. By

Mrs. BRIGHTWEN, Vice-President of the Selborne Society. With Illustrations by the Author, and F. CARRUTHERS GOULD. Small crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

"We have no space to draw particular attention to the multitude of good things to be found in this cheerful and unaffected little book, from every page of which there breathes a sincerity which gives the reader that confidence which is necessary to the enjoyment of such stories as these."—Saturday Review.

JUST READY.

THE TWENTY-SIXTH VOLUME OF "THE STORY OF THE NATIONS."

S W I T Z E R L A N D.

By LINA HUG and R. STEAD.

Maps, Illustrations, and Index, crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s. Recently issued in the same Series,

SCOTLAND.

By JOHN MACKINTOSH, LL.D., Author of "A History of Civilisation in Scotland," &c.

"An intelligent and impartial narrative.....Arranged in a business-like way, suggestive of hard and discriminative study."—Glasgow Herald.

ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE POST FREE.

ST. NICHOLAS FOR YOUNG FOLKS.

CONTENTS FOR SEPTEMBER, 1890.

THE GREAT TRI-CLUB TENNIS TOURNAMENT. (Illustrated) ... ..	R. H. DAVIS.
THE BROWNIE'S BIRTHDAY DINNER (Illustrated) ... ..	PALMER COX.
THE TRUE STORY of a LITTLE GRAY RABBIT ... ..	E. E. THOMPSON.
A DAY in the COUNTRY (Illustrated) ... ..	LAURA G. RICHARDS.
THE ELF and the BUMBLE BEE (Illustrated) ... ..	OLIVER HERFORD.
GREAT OCEAN WAVES (Illustrated) ... ..	W. J. HENDERSON.
TWO SURPRISE PARTIES ... ..	JOHN CLOVER.
A LITTLE BROWN WITCH (Illustrated) ... ..	KATE W. HAMILTON.
JACK-IN-THE-PULPIT.—THE LETTER-BOX.—THE RIDDLE-BOX.

Price 1s. Monthly.

THE CENTURY MAGAZINE.

CONTENTS FOR SEPTEMBER, 1890.

WELLS CATHEDRAL (Illustrated by JOSEPH PENNELL) ... ..	Mrs. VAN RENSSELAER.
THE ANGLOMANIACS (Illustrated).
AN ARTIST'S LETTERS from JAPAN (Illus.)...	JOHN LA FAROE.
LOIS BENSON'S LOVE STORY ... ..	ANNE PAGE.
IN MARBLE HILLS (Illustrated) ... ..	ROWLAND E. ROBINSON.
OUR NEW NAVAL GUNS ... ..	Commander C. F. GOODRICH.
AUTOBIOGRAPHY of JOSEPH JEFFERSON (Rip Van Winkle), Illustrated.
FRIEND OLIVIA ... ..	AMELIA E. BARR.
TOPICS of the TIME—OPEN LETTERS—BRIC-A-BRAC.

Price 1s. 4d. Monthly.

LONDON: T. FISHER UNWIN, PATERNOSTER SQUARE, E.C.

THE ACADEMY:

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

VOL. XXXVIII.

Edited by J. S. COTTON.

Among the Contributors to THE ACADEMY are:

- |                          |                          |                          |                          |                           |
|--------------------------|--------------------------|--------------------------|--------------------------|---------------------------|
| Acton, Lord              | Dobson, Austin           | Hodgetts, E. A. Brayley  | Murray, George           | Simcox, G. A.             |
| Aitken, G. A.            | Dore, J. R.              | Hodgkin, Dr. T.          | Murray, Dr. J. A. H.     | Simcox, Miss Edith        |
| Alexander, S.            | Douglas, Prof. R. K.     | Hodgson, Shadworth H.    | Myers, Ernest            | Simpson, W.               |
| Allen, Grant             | Dow, J. G.               | Houghton, Rev. W.        | Myles, Rev. W. Percy     | Skeat, Prof. W. W.        |
| Allen, J. B.             | Dowden, Prof. E.         | Howlett, R.              | Napier, Prof. A. S.      | Smith, G. Barnett         |
| Arnold, Arthur           | Doyle, J. A.             | Howorth, H. H.           | Nettleship, Prof. H.     | Smith, Miss L. Toulmin    |
| Axon, W. E. A.           | Driver, Prof. S. R.      | Hunter, Sir W. W.        | Nettleship, J. T.        | Sommer, H. Oskar          |
| Bain, R. Nisbet          | Drummond, Rev. R. B.     | Ingram, J. H.            | Neubauer, Dr. A.         | Sonnenschein, Prof. E. A. |
| Ball, Rev. C. J.         | Dryden, Sir Henry        | Ingram, Prof. J. K.      | Newton, Sir C. T.        | Stephens, H. Morse        |
| Balzani, Count Ugo       | Duff, E. Gordon          | Jacobs, Joseph           | Nicholson, Dr. E.        | Stephens, Prof. G.        |
| Barnett, P. A.           | Dunlop, R.               | Jevons, F. B.            | Nicholson, E. B.         | Stevenson, W. H.          |
| Bayne, Rev. Ronald       | Earle, Prof. J.          | Jolly, Prof. J.          | Noble, J. A.             | Stewart, J. A.            |
| Beazeley, M.             | Ebers, Prof. G.          | Jones, Rev. W. H.        | Noel, Hon. Roden         | Stokes, Whitley           |
| Beeching, Rev. H. C.     | Edgeworth, Prof. F. Y.   | Keane, Prof. A. H.       | O'Grady, Standish H.     | Strachey, G.              |
| Bell, H. T. Mackenzie    | Edinburgh, The Bishop of | Keene, H. G.             | Oman, C. W. C.           | Strong, S. Arthur         |
| Benn, A. W.              | Edwards, Miss Amelia B.  | Kingsford, C. L.         | Owen, Rev. J.            | Sully, James              |
| Bennett, A. W.           | Ellis, A. J.             | Kirkup, T.               | Paul, C. Kegan           | Sweet, H.                 |
| Bensley, Prof. R. L.     | Ellis, Robinson          | Lang, Andrew             | Peacock, E.              | Swinburne, A. C.          |
| Bezold, Prof. C.         | Elton, C. I.             | Lanckester, Prof. E. Ray | Pearson, Prof. Karl      | Symonds, J. A.            |
| Blind, Karl              | Elton, Oliver            | Leach, A. F.             | Pelham, Prof. H. F.      | Symons, Arthur            |
| Boase, Rev. C. W.        | Ely, Talfourd            | Lee, Miss Jane           | Peterson, Prof.          | Taylor, Canon Isaac       |
| Bonaparte, Prince Louis- | Evans, Arthur            | Lee, S. L.               | Phillips, Claude         | Temple, Capt. R. C.       |
| Bourget, Paul [Lucien    | Field, Michael           | Lee, Vernon              | Pinkerton, Percy E.      | Temple, G. T. [Prof       |
| Bradley, Henry           | Firth, C. H.             | Le Gallienne, R.         | Pollard, A. W.           | Terrien de Lacouperie     |
| Bradley, J. W.           | Fita, Padre F.           | Legge, Prof. J.          | Poole, R. S.             | Thompson, E. Maunde       |
| Brown, Dr. Robert        | Fitch, J. G.             | Lewin, Walter            | Postgate, Prof. J. P.    | Toynbee, Paget            |
| Brown, H. F.             | Fortnum, C. Drury E.,    | Lewis, Prof. W. J.       | Powell, F. York          | Tozer, Rev. H. F.         |
| Browne, E. G.            | D.C.L.                   | Lindsay, W. M.           | Raine, Canon J.          | Tucker, R.                |
| Browne, J. W.            | Fowler, Prof. T.         | Lyall, C. J.             | Ramsay, Prof. W. M.      | Twiss, Sir Travers        |
| Browne, Prof. G. F.      | Fowler, Rev. J. T.       | Lyster, T. W.            | Rashdall, Rev. H.        | Tyler, Thomas             |
| Browne, R. C.            | Frazer, J. G.            | Macdonell, Prof. A. A.   | Reid, J. S.              | Tylor, E. B.              |
| Bryce, Prof. J.          | Freeman, Prof. E. A.     | Macdonell, G. P.         | Rhys, Prof. John         | Vambéry, Prof. A.         |
| Buchanan, Robert         | Freshfield, Douglas W.   | McGrigor, Dr. A. B.      | Rhys-Davids, Prof. T. W. | Venables, Precentor       |
| Bühler, Prof. G.         | Friedländer, Dr. M.      | Mackay, J. S.            | Richards, F. T.          | Villari, Linda            |
| Burton, Sir Richard      | Furnivall, Dr. F. J.     | Mahaffy, Prof. J. P.     | Richards, H. P.          | Vinson, Prof. Julien      |
| Bywater, I.              | Gaidoz, H.               | Mann, J. S.              | Richter, Dr. J.-P.       | Wallace, Prof. W.         |
| Caine, Hall              | Gairdner, J.             | Margoliouth, Prof. D. S. | Robertson, Prof. Edmund  | Wallace, W.               |
| Campbell, Prof. Lewis    | Galton, Arthur           | Markham, Clements R.     | Robertson, Prof. Eric    | Waters, E. Chester        |
| Canton, W.               | Gardiner, S. R.          | Markheim, W.             | Robinson, Rev. C. J.     | Watkins, Rev. M. G.       |
| Capes, Rev. W. W.        | Gardiner, Mrs. S. R.     | Martin, C. Trice         | Roby, H. J.              | Watts, Theodore           |
| Cheetham, Archdeacon     | Garnett, R.              | Marzials, F. T.          | Rolph, J. F.             | Wayte, Rev. W. W.         |
| Chester, Greville J.     | Garrod, H. B.            | Mayhew, Rev. A. L.       | Rolleston, T. W.         | Weale, W. H. James        |
| Cheyne, Prof. T. K.      | Gonner, E. C. K.         | Merk, Rev. C.            | Rudler, F. W.            | Webster, Rev. Wentworth   |
| Church, Prof. A. H.      | Grant, Col. F.           | Merry, G. R.             | Rye, Walter              | Wedgwood, H.              |
| Clouston, W. A.          | Gray, J. M.              | Minchin, J. G. C.        | Ryland, F.               | Wedmore, Frederick        |
| Collins, J. C.           | Grey, William E.         | Minchin, James Innes     | Saintsbury, G.           | West, Dr. E. W.           |
| Conway, W. Martin        | Groome, F. H.            | Minto, Prof. W.          | Salmon, Prof. G.         | Westlake, Prof. John      |
| Cotterell, G.            | Hager, Dr. H.            | Monkhouse, Cosmo         | Salmoné, Prof. H. A.     | Westwood, Prof. J. O.     |
| Cotton, H. J. S.         | Hamerton, P. G.          | Moore, Rev. Dr. E.       | Sanday, Prof. W.         | Wharton, E. R.            |
| Courtney, W. P.          | Hamilton, J. A.          | Morfill, W. R.           | Sandys, Dr. J. E.        | Wharton, H. T.            |
| Crawford, O.             | Hardy, W. J.             | Morris, Rev. Dr. R.      | Sargent, Rev. H.         | Wheeler, Stephen          |
| Creighton, Prof. M.      | Haverfield, F.           | Morris, Judge O'Connor   | Sayce, Prof. A. H.       | Wickham, W.               |
| Davidson, John           | Hawkins, F.              | Morshead, E. D. A.       | Sayle, C.                | Wicksteed, Rev. P. H.     |
| Dawkins, C. E.           | Herford, Prof. C. H.     | Muir, Dr. Thomas         | Seeley, Prof. J. R.      | Wilkins, Prof. A. S.      |
| De Vere, Aubrey          | Hessels, J. H.           | Müller, Prof. F. Max     | Sharp, William           | Wilson, C. E.             |
| Dickins, F. V.           | Hewlett, H. G.           | Murray, A. S.            | Shedlock, J. S.          | Wollaston, A. N.          |
| Doble C. E.              | Hicks, Rev. E. L.        |                          |                          |                           |

PUBLISHED AT THE OFFICE, 27, CHANCERY LANE, W.C.

To be had at all Railway Stations, and of all Newsvendors in Town and Country.

THEATRES.

ADELPHI THEATRE.

Sole Proprietors and Managers, A. & S. GATTI.
Every Evening, at 8, THE ENGLISH ROSE.
Messrs. Leonard Boyne, Beveridge, Shine, Abingdon, Thalberg, Rignold, Dalton, Bassett Roe, East, &c.; Mesdames Olga Brandon, K. James, C. Jecks, E. Dane, and Mary Rorke.
Preceded, at 7.15, by THE LITTLE SENTINEL.

AVENUE THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 9, DR. BILL.
Messrs. George Alexander, Benjamin Webster, G. Capel, H. Grattan, and Albert Chevalier; Mesdames Elizabeth Robins, Carlotta Leclercq, Leston, Marie Linden, Laura Graves, Edith Kenward, Lillie Young, and Fanny Brough.
Preceded, at 8.30, by MISS CINDERELLA.

COMEDY THEATRE.

Manager, Mr. CHAS. H. HAWTREY.
Every Evening, at 9, NERVES.
Messrs. H. Kemble, Edward Righton, and Charles Hawtre; Mesdames Maud Millett, Sophie Larkin, Lydia Cowell, Ethel Matthews, and Lottie Venne.
Preceded, at 8.15, by A BAD PENNY.

CRITERION THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. CHARLES WYNDHAM.
Every Evening, at 9, WELCOME, LITTLE STRANGER.
Messrs. W. Blakeley, E. Maurice, G. Giddens; Mesdames M. A. Victor, Helen Forsyth, E. Vining, F. Frances, and Vane Featherston.
Preceded, at 8, by JILTED.

GAIETY THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. GEORGE EDWARDES.
Last Night of THE BOOKMAKER, in which Mr. Nat Goodwin will appear, with the following cast, at 8.20; Mr. William Farren, Mr. Reeves Smith, Mr. Charles Glenn, Mr. George Dalziel, Mr. Eric Thorne, Mr. Frank Wood, Mr. C. Walker; Miss Jennie McNulty, Miss Christine Mayne, Miss Adelaide Gunn, and Miss Carlotta Leclercq.

GARRICK THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. JOHN HARE.
This Evening, at 8.50, A PAIR OF SPECTACLES.
Messrs. John Hare, C. Groves, R. Cathcart, S. Brough, C. Dodsworth, and R. Harding; Mesdames Webster, F. Hunter, and Kate Rorke.
Preceded, at 8, by DREAM FACES.

GRAND THEATRE.

At 7.30, Miss GRACE HAWTHORNE and the entire COMPANY from the PRINCESS'S THEATRE, in Robert Buchanan's adaptation of Sardou's grand spectacular play THEODORA. To add realism to the drama, a den of live lions is introduced in the Circus Scene.
On MONDAY next, THE BOOKMAKER, from the Gaiety Theatre.

PRINCE of WALES' THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. HORACE SEDGER.
Every Evening, at 8, CAPTAIN THERESE.
Messrs. C. Hayden Coffin, Joseph Tapley, Henry Ashley, Harry Parker, T. A. Shale, A. T. Hendon, George Marler, and Harry Monkhouse; Mesdames Attallie Claire, Amadi, and Phyllis Broughton.

SAVOY THEATRE.

Proprietor and Manager, R. D'OLY CARTE.
Every Evening, at 8.30, the entirely original Comic Opera, by W. S. Gilbert and Arthur Sullivan, in two acts, entitled THE GONDOLIERS.

SHAFTESBURY THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, E. S. WILLARD.
Every Evening, at 8.30, JUDAH.
Messrs. Willard, Royce Carleton, F. Kerr, Sant Matthews, C. Fulton, H. Cane, Harting, and Thomas; Mesdames Bessie Hatton, Gertrude Warden, A. Bowering, and Olga Brandon.

STRAND THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 8.40, the funniest farcical Comedy ever written, entitled OUR FLAT.
Preceded, at 8, by a Farce.

TERRY'S THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 9, THE JUDGE.
Messrs. W. S. Penley, Wm. Herbert, F. H. Fenton, M. Kinghorne, G. Belmore, and W. Lestocq; Mesdames E. Thorne, E. Chester, H. Leyton, and C. Grahame.
At 8.15, NEARLY SEVERED.

TOOLE'S THEATRE.

Manageress, Miss VIOLET MELLONTE.
Lessee, Mr. J. L. TOOLE.
Every Evening, at 9, a new Military Farce, in three acts, by J. H. Darnley entitled THE SOLICITOR.
Preceded by THE BAILIFF.

NATIONAL

FOR MUTUAL

PROVIDENT

LIFE ASSURANCE.

48, GRACECHURCH STREET, LONDON.

ESTBD. 1835.

BIRKBECK BANK,

ESTABLISHED 1851.
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.
THREE per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS, repayable on demand.
TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS when not drawn below £100.
STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.
For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposits, and allows interest at the rate of THREE PER CENT. per annum, on each completed £1.
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, OR A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.
The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post-free.
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

PHENIX FIRE OFFICE,

19, LOMBARD STREET, E.C., and 57, CHARING CROSS, S.W.
Established 1782.
Moderate Rates. Absolute Security.
Liberal Loss Settlements.
Prompt Payment of Claims.
Joint Secretaries—W. C. MACDONALD and F. B. MACDONALD.
LOSSES PAID OVER £17,000,000.

FURNISH your HOUSES or APARTMENTS THROUGHOUT

MOEDER'S HIRE SYSTEM.

The original, best, and most liberal. Suits all.
FOUNDED A.D. 1868.
Furnish direct from the Manufacturer, from £10 to £10,000.
Cash prices. No extra charge for time given.
Catalogues, Estimates, Press Opinions, Testimonials Post Free.
F. MOEDER,
248, 249, 250, Tottenham Court Road, W. Also for HIRE ONLY.

Third Edition, crown 8vo, cloth, price 1s. 6d., post-free.
LESSONS from the RISE and FALL of the ENGLISH COMMONWEALTH. By J. ALLANSON PICTON, M.A., M.P.
CONTENTS: Introductory.—Treason and Loyalty.—The Limits of Moral Force.—The Limits of Physical Force.—The Sources of Popular Enthusiasm.—"Republicanism: Form and Substance."

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD,
21, FURNIVAL STREET, HOLBORN.

REDNESS, ROUGHNESS, AND CHAPPING PREVENTED.
FAIR, WHITE HANDS AND HEALTHFUL SKIN AND COMPLEXION SECURED.

PEARS' SOAP.

This world-renowned Toilet Soap has obtained 15 International Awards as a Complexion Soap. It is specially suitable for Ladies, Children, or delicate and sensitive skins generally. Its regular use cannot fail to benefit the worst complexion.

Recommended by Mrs. LANGTRY and Madame ADELINA PATTI.

FRY'S

Lancet—"Pure and very soluble."
Medical Times—"Eminently suitable for Invalids."

PURE CONCENTRATED

Sir C. A. Cameron—"I have never tasted Cocoa that I like so well."
President Royal College of Surgeons, Ireland.

COCOA

Paris Exhibition, 1889: GOLD MEDAL awarded to J. S. FRY & SONS

See Prospectus, page 17, for particulars of Endowment Assurance Policies combining Life Assurance at Minimum Cost with Provision for Old Age.

INVESTED FUNDS,
£4,400,000.

INSTITUTION.

TO STOUT PEOPLE.

Sunday Times says: "Mr. Russell's aim is to eradicate, to cure the disease, and that his treatment is the true one seems beyond all doubt. The medicine he prescribes does not lower, but builds up and tones the system." Book (128 pages), with Recipe and Notes how to pleasantly and rapidly cure obesity (average reduction in first week is 3 lb.), post-free, Eight Stamps.

F. C. RUSSELL, Woburn House,
Store Street, Bedford Square, London, W.C.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND &amp; CO.'S AI SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS,

POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME

PIES. Also,

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—
11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

GOLD PEN,

WITH DIAMOND POINT.

Anti-corrosive—Flexible—Durable—Adapting itself to any Handwriting.

Price 6d. each; post-free, 7d.

With White Metal Pocket Holder, complete - - - 1s.

Or, with Mordan's Best Silver Pocket-Holders—

Fluted Pattern, complete - - - - - 5s. 6d.

Engine-turned Pattern, complete - - - - - 6s. 6d.

Fluted Pattern, Telescopic - - - - - 10s. 6d.

Other Patterns in great variety.

ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD,
27, CHANCERY LANE, LONDON.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & CO.'S EDUCATIONAL PUBLICATIONS.

Text-Books for the University of London, Oxford and Cambridge Local, and Higher Local, the College of Preceptors, and the Oxford and Cambridge Schools Examinations.

- Æschines.—In Ctesiphontem. By Rev. T. GWATKIN, M.A., and E. S. SHUCKBURN, M.A. [In the Press.]
- Æschylus.—Persæ. By A. O. PRICKARD, M.A. 3s. 6d.
- Cæsar.—Galic War. Book V. With Notes and Vocabulary, by C. COLBECK, M.A. 1s. 6d. Book VI. 1s. 6d.
- Cicero.—The Catiline Orations. Edited by A. S. WILKINS, Litt.D., LL.D. 3s. 6d.
- Demosthenes.—De Corona. Edited by B. DRAKE, M.A. 7th Edition, revised by E. S. SHUCKBURN, M.A. 4s. 6d.
- Euripides.—Alcestis. With Notes and Vocabulary. By M. A. BAYFIELD, M.A. 1s. 6d.
- Hecuba. With Notes and Vocabulary. By Rev. J. BOND, M.A., and Rev. A. S. WALPOLE, M.A. 18mo. 1s. 6d.
- Hippolytus. Edited by Prof. J. P. MAHAFFY, M.A., and J. B. BURY, M.A. 3s. 6d.
- Iphigenia in Tauris. Edited by E. B. ENGLAND, M.A. 4s. 6d.
- Medea. Edited by A. W. VERRALL, Litt.D. 3s. 6d.
- Greek Testament. The Gospel according to St. Matthew. With Introduction and Notes by Rev. A. SLOMAN, M.A. 2s. 6d.
- The Gospel according to St. Luke. With Introduction and Notes. By Rev. JOHN BOND, M.A. [In the Press.]
- Herodotus. Book VI. Edited by Professor J. STRACHAN, M.A. [In September.]
- Book VII. Edited by Mrs. MONTAGU BUTLER. [In September.]
- Homer.—Odyssey. XXI.—XXIV. Edited by G. S. HAMILTON, B.A. 3s. 6d.
- Horace.—Odes. Books I. and II. With Notes and Vocabulary. By T. E. PAGE, M.A. 1s. 6d. each.
- Epistles and Ars Poetica. Edited by Prof. A. S. WILKINS, Litt.D., LL.D. 6s.
- Livy. Book I. With Notes and Vocabulary. By Rev. H. M. STEPHENSON, M.A. 1s. 6d.
- Books XXI. and XXII. Edited by Rev. W. W. CAPES, M.A. With Maps. 5s.
- Books XXI. and XXII. With Notes and Vocabulary. By J. E. MELHUSH, M.A. Adapted from Mr. Cape's Edition. 1s. 6d. each. [Book XXI., ready. Book XXII., in October.]
- Lucretius. Books I.—III. Edited by J. H. WARBURTON LEE, M.A., Assistant Master at Rossall. 4s. 6d.
- Plato.—Phædo. Edited by R. D. ARCHER-HIND, M.A. 8vo, 8s. 6d.
- Euthyphro, Apology, Crito, and Phædo. Translated by F. J. CHURCH. 18mo. 4s. 6d.
- Tacitus.—The Annals. Translated by A. J. CHURCH, M.A., and W. J. BRODRIBB, M.A. With Maps. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.
- Thucydides. Book IV. Edited by C. E. GRAVES, M.A. 5s.
- Virgil.—Æneid. With Notes and Vocabulary, 1s. 6d. each. Book I., by the Rev. A. S. WALPOLE, M.A. Book II., by T. E. PAGE, M.A. Book III., by the SAME. Book VIII., by the Rev. A. CALVERT, M.A. (September.) Book IX., by H. M. STEPHENSON, M.A. Book X., by S. G. OWEN, M.A. (September.)
- Xenophon for Beginners. Selections from Book I. of the Anabasis for Beginners, with Notes, Vocabulary, and Exercises. By W. WELCH, M.A., and C. G. DUFFIELD, M.A. 1s. 6d. [In September.]
- Anabasis. With Notes and Vocabulary, 1s. 6d. each. Book I. by Rev. A. S. WALPOLE, M.A. Book III., by Rev. G. H. NALL, M.A. (In January.) Book IV., by Rev. E. D. STONE, M.A. (In September.)
- Bacon.—Essays. Edited by F. G. SELBY, M.A. Globe 8vo, 3s. 6d.
- Milton.—Paradise Lost. Books I. and II. Ed. by MICHAEL MACMILLAN, B.A. 2s. 6d.; or separately, 1s. 6d. each.
- Shakespeare. Edited by K. DEIGHTON. Hamlet (In preparation). Henry V. 2s. Julius Cæsar. 2s. King John. (In the Press.) Richard II. (In September.)
- Southey.—Life of Nelson. Ed. by MICHAEL MACMILLAN, B.A. 3s. 6d.
- Corneille.—Le Cid. Edited by G. E. FASNACHT. 1s.
- Moliere.—Le Misanthrope. By G. E. FASNACHT. 1s.
- Le Medecin Malgre Lui. By the SAME. 1s.
- Xavier De Maistre.—La Jeune Siberienne et Le Lepreux de la Cité d'Aoste. With Notes, Vocabulary, and Exercises. By S. BARLET. 1s. 6d.
- Schiller.—Maria Stuart. By C. SHELDON, D.Lit. 2s. 6d.
- Wilhelm Tell. By G. E. FASNACHT. 2s. 6d.

New, Recent, and Immediately Forthcoming Books.

- Questions and Exercises in English Composition. By JOHN NICHOL, M.A. Oxon, LL.D., and W. S. CORMICK, M.A. 18mo. 1s.
- Short Studies of Shakespeare's Plots. By Professor CYRIL RANSOME, M.A. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.
- The Plays dealt with are: Hamlet—Julius Cæsar—Macbeth—King Lear—Richard II.—Othello—Coriolanus—The Tempest.
- Chronological Outlines of English Literature. By F. RYLAND, M.A. [In September.]
- A School Hymn Book. Compiled by Miss M. A. WOODS, Head Mistress of the Clifton High School for Girls. 18mo. [In September.]
- A Shilling Book of Arithmetic for Elementary Schools. By the Rev. J. B. LOCK, M.A. 18mo, 1s.; with Answers, 1s. 6d.
- Elementary Algebra. By CHARLES SMITH, M.A. Second Edition, Revised and Enlarged. Globe 8vo. 4s. 6d.
- The Elements of Solid Geometry. By R. BALDWIN HAYWARD, M.A., F.R.S. Globe 8vo. 3s.
- Manual of Logarithms. By G. F. MATTHEWS, M.A., St. Peter's College, Cambridge. 8vo. [In September.]
- Geometrical Conics. Part I. The Parabola. By the Rev. J. J. MILNE, M.A., and R. F. DAVIS, M.A. Crown 8vo. 2s.
- Elementary Applied Mechanics. By JAMES H. COTTERILL, F.R.S., and J. H. SLADE. Crown 8vo. [In September.]
- Sound, Light, and Heat. An Elementary Text-Book. By Professor D. E. JONES, B.Sc. Fcap. 8vo. [In September.]
- Elements of Physics for Public Schools. By C. FESSENDEN, Globe 8vo. [In October.]
- Class Book of Geology. By ARCHIBALD GEIKIE, F.R.S. Second and Cheaper Edition. Crown 8vo. 4s. 6d. [In September.]
- Primer of Book-keeping. By J. THORNTON, 1s.; Key 2s. 6d.
- Indian History, Asiatic and European. By J. TALBOYS WHEELER. 18mo. 1s.
- A Short History of the English People. By JOHN RICHARD GREEN, LL.D. New and Revised Edition. With Maps, Genealogical Tables and Chronological Annals. Crown 8vo. 8s. 6d. In Four Parts. With the Corresponding portion of Mr. Tait's "Analysis." 3s. each. Part I. 607-1265. Part II. 1264-1553. Part III. 1540-1689. Part IV. 1660-1873.
- Analysis of English History. Based on Green's "Short History of the English People." By C. W. A. TAIT, M.A. New, Revised, and Enlarged Edition. Crown 8vo. 4s. 6d.
- Macmillan's Geographical Series. Edited by ARCHIBALD GEIKIE, F.R.S.
- The Elementary School Atlas. By J. BARTHOLOMEW, F.R.G.S. 4to. 1s.
- Physical and Political School Atlas. Consisting of 80 Maps and complete Index. By the same. Royal 4to. [In September.]
- Geography of the British Isles. By A. GEIKIE, F.R.S. 1s.
- An Elementary Class-Book of General Geography. By H. R. MILL, D.Sc. Illustrated. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.
- Geography of Europe. By J. SIME, M.A. Globe 8vo. [In September.]
- Geography of India. By H. F. BLANFORD, F.G.S. [In September.]
- Maps and Map-Making. By W. A. ELDERTON. [In September.]
- Macmillan's Latin Course. By A. M. COOK, M.A. Globe 8vo. First Part, 2s. 6d. Second Part, 2s. 6d.
- Macmillan's Shorter Latin Course. By A. M. COOK, M.A. Globe 8vo. 1s. 6d.
- Macmillan's Greek Course. Edited by the Rev. W. G. RUTHERFORD, M.A., LL.D., Headmaster of Westminster. Globe 8vo.
- First Greek Grammar. By the Editor. ACCIDENCE, 2s. SYNTAX, 2s. In one volume, 3s. 6d.
- Easy Exercises in Greek Accidence. By H. G. UNDERHILL, M.A. 2s.
- A Second Greek Exercise Book. By Rev. W. A. HEARD, M.A. 2s. 6d. [In September.]
- A Short Manual of Philology for Classical Students. By P. GILES, M.A., Fellow of Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge. [In the press.]

LONDON: MACMILLAN & CO., BEDFORD STREET, STRAND.

Printed by ALEXANDER & SREPHARD, Lonsdale Printing Works, Chancery Lane; Published by HENRY VILLIERS, 27, Chancery Lane, W.C.

THE SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

THE ORGAN OF BOTH BRANCHES OF
THE LEGAL PROFESSION.

ESTABLISHED 1857.

Published every Friday. Price 6d.

Of the general contents of the JOURNAL the following statement will afford some idea:—

CURRENT TOPICS.

Discussions of the legal events of the week.

LEADING ARTICLES.

Essays upon branches of law and matters of professional interest.

CASES OF THE WEEK.

Short original reports, by Barristers specially engaged for the purpose, of cases of importance decided during the current week.

SOLICITORS' CASES.

Full reports (furnished specially by Barristers) of applications against Solicitors.

PENDING LEGISLATION.

All important measures before Parliament are summarised in this department.

LEGISLATION OF THE YEAR.

Under this head careful criticisms are given of the legislative results of the Session.

REVIEWS.

New legal works are elaborately noticed in this department.

NEW ORDERS, &c.

In this department are given all new Rules and Orders; in some cases before they can be obtained by the public.

GENERAL CORRESPONDENCE.

A medium for the interchange of ideas between members of the profession.

COURTS.

Special reports of cases decided by the Railway Commission. Selected cases in the County Courts are also reported. All important decisions on Election Petitions are reported, and notes are given of decisions of importance in the Revising Barristers' Courts.

APPOINTMENTS AND OBITUARY.

Pains are taken to render these accurate and complete.

SOCIETIES AND INSTITUTIONS.

Full reports of the proceedings of the Law Societies.

A Careful Summary is given of all the Legal News of the Week, and special attention is bestowed on Furnishing Early Copies of all Court Papers.

ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTIONS.

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL ONLY, 26s.; by post, 28s., when paid in advance. Single Number, 6d.

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL and WEEKLY REPORTER, £2 12s., post-free, when paid in advance.

WEEKLY REPORTER, in Wrapper, £2 12s., post-free. Single Number, 1s.

The Solicitors' Journal and Reporter can be ordered from any date.

Cheques and Post Office Orders payable to H. VILLERS.

OFFICE: 27, CHANCERY LANE, W.C.

THE LATE CHARLES LORING BRACE.

In 8vo., cloth, price 12s.

THE UNKNOWN GOD; or, Inspiration Among Pre-Christian Races. By C. LÖRING BRACE.

Full Mail Gazette.—"A singularly able contribution to the study of a fascinating subject, throughout characterised by that large-hearted tolerance which is a characteristic of the time."

Scotsman.—"Mr. Brace has written a good book, and, although he has a particular point to establish, he has not exaggerated the value of his evidence, nor has he read into the pre-Christian literature which he examines a meaning which it never possessed. He has taken as his guides those scholars whose researches have been the most recent, and whose authority is undoubtedly of more weight. This renders this well-written book at once interesting and trustworthy."

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

Third Edition. Large Crown 8vo., cloth, 7s. 6d.

GESTA CHRISTI: A History of Human Progress under Christianity.

Academy.—"A really earnest and noble book."

Daily News.—"This really valuable book."

WORKS BY PROF. HENRY DRUMMOND.

NEW EDITION. Completing One Hundred Thousand. In Crown 8vo., price 3s. 6d.

NATURAL LAW in the SPIRITUAL WORLD. By Professor HENRY DRUMMOND, F.R.S.E., F.G.S.

Twentieth Thousand. With 6 Maps and Illustrations, 6s.

TROPICAL AFRICA. By the same Author.

Saturday Review.—"A charmingly-written book."

Academy.—"Professor Drummond is here at his very best."

Athenæum.—"A vivid and entertaining picture of the country."

LONDON: HODDER & STOUGHTON,
27, PATERNOSTER ROW.

SPENCER BLACKETT'S
NEW BOOKS.

POPULAR EDITION OF L. B. WALFORD'S NOVELS. Now ready, cloth extra, 2s. 6d., with Frontispiece, engraved in Paris from Drawing by Lalet J. Pott.

THE HISTORY of a WEEK. By L. B. WALFORD. Uniform with "Pauline," "Troublesome Daughters," "Cousins," "Baby's Grandmother," and "Mr. Smith."

FLORENCE WARDEN'S STRIKING STORY.

Fifth Edition, crown 8vo., stiff cover, 1s.

NURSE REVEL'S MISTAKE. By Florence WARDEN, Author of "The House on the Marsh," &c.

NEW STORY BY L. B. WALFORD.

Now ready, at all Booksellers and Bookstalls, paper cover, 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d.

THE HAVOC of a SMILE. By L. B. Walford, Author of "Mr. Smith," "Baby's Grandmother," "Cousins," &c.

NEW CHEAP EDITION OF M. BETHAM EDWARDS' NOVEL.

At all Booksellers and Bookstalls, picture boards, 2s.; cloth, 2s. 6d.

DOCTOR JACOB. By M. Betham Edwards, Author of "Kitty," "Forestalled," &c.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "DARBY AND JOAN."

Crown 8vo., stiff cover, price 1s.

EDELWEISS: a Romance. By Rita, Author of "Dame Durden," "Corinna," &c.

BLACKETT'S STANDARD LIBRARY.

At all Booksellers and Bookstalls.

Crown 8vo., cloth extra, with Frontispiece, 3s. 6d. each.

THE PENNYCOMEQUICKS. By S. Baring-Gould.

THE BAFFLED CONSPIRATORS. By W. E. NORRIS.

LAZARUS in LONDON. By F. W. Robinson.

LITTLE KATE KIRBY. By F. W. Robinson.

THE COURTING of MARY SMITH. By F. W. ROBINSON.

HARRY JOSCELYN. By Mrs. Oliphant.

JANE CAMERON. By F. W. Robinson.

FEMALE LIFE in PRISON. By F. W. ROBINSON.

PRISON CHARACTERS. By F. W. Robinson.

London: SPENCER BLACKETT, 35, St. Bride Street, E.C.

W. H. SMITH & SON'S SUBSCRIPTION LIBRARY, 186, STRAND, LONDON, and at the Railway Bookstalls.

1.—This Library is established in connexion with Messrs. W. H. SMITH & Son's numerous Railway Bookstalls; it embraces all the most important Works of History, Biography, Travel, Fiction, Poetry, Science, and Theology, as well as the leading Magazines and Reviews, and gives greater advantages to Subscribers than any other existing Library, from the fact that there are 500 Bookstalls in England and Wales, and to any of these Depots a Subscriber may be transferred free of charge.

2.—Subscribers can only change their Books at the Depot where their names are registered, but they may transfer the place of exchange by giving notice to the Clerk in charge of the Depot at which they obtain their Books. Of the current periodicals, one only at a time is allowed to a Subscription under Five Guineas, and Subscriptions will not be accepted for the supply of Magazines and Reviews only.

3.—The Books are delivered at the Bookstalls, carriage free. A Subscriber may exchange once a day; the Clerk in charge will obtain from London any Work in the Library which a Subscriber may desire to have. NOVELS exchanged only in unbroken and complete Sets.

4.—London Subscribers transferring their Subscriptions to a Country Depot will be entitled only to the number of volumes which the Country terms assign to the amount they subscribe; similarly, Country Subscriptions transferred to Town become subject to the London regulations.

5.—Subscriptions may commence at any date, and are payable in advance at any of the Railway Bookstalls.

6.—Messrs. W. H. SMITH & Son beg to impress upon their Library Subscribers the fact that much disappointment and inconvenience would be avoided if they would, in all cases, give to the Clerk in charge a list comprising at least twice as many titles of works as they wish to exchange.

A Catalogue of Surplus and New Books, offered at greatly reduced prices, is published Monthly, and can be had upon application at the Bookstalls. Also a Catalogue of Books in elegant bindings, for Gentlemen's Libraries.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

PRICE ONE SHILLING.

NOTICE.—The TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE for SEPTEMBER, 1890, contains among other articles of interest:—Alas! By Rhoda Broughton, Author of "Nancy," &c. Part II. Chaps. 1-4.—The Bard of Hope. By W. Fraser Rae.—Dryden and Scott. By John Amplett Evans.—Eh, but it's Queer Altogether. By Mary H. Tennyson.—Whist-Spoilers. By A. Stuart.—Heiland of Heidelberg. By Albany de Fonblanque, &c. Chaps. 1-4, &c.

NEW NOVELS AT ALL LIBRARIES

JUST READY.

By the Author of "Queenie's Whim."

LOVER OR FRIEND.

By ROSA N. CAREY,
Author of "Wee Wife," &c.
In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

NOW READY.

NAME AND FAME.

By A. S. EWING LESTER and ADELINE SERGEANT.
In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE REPENTANCE
OF PAUL WENTWORTH."

THE RIDDLE of LAURENCE HAVILAND.

By CONSTANCE SMITH.
In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"The novel is a good deal more than a story à la mode, as anyone who has read 'The Repentance of Paul Wentworth' would naturally expect. It is vigorous and satisfying. In style and tone it is unexceptionable, and well above the average of recent fiction."—Athenæum.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "ANTHONY FAIRFAX."

AUDREY.

By MARGERY HOLLIS.
In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"The deceased wife's sister is at first sight an uninteresting subject for a novel; but Miss Hollis has made ingenious use of her materials. Not only has she evolved a good deal of complication from the central fact of her plot, but in her heroine she has powerfully depicted the impression upon a high-spirited girl of the slur upon her birth."—Athenæum.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "OUGHT WE TO VISIT HER?"

PEARL POWDER. By Mrs.

ANNIE EDWARDES, Author of "Leah: a Woman of Fashion," &c. In 2 vols., crown 8vo.

A NEW NOVEL.

AN AUSTRALIAN GIRL.

In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

NOVELS BY RHODA BROUGHTON.

COMETH UP AS A FLOWER.

GOOD-BYE, SWEETHEART.

JOAN.

NANCY.

NOT WISELY BUT TOO WELL.

RED AS A ROSE IS SHE.

SECOND THOUGHTS.

BELINDA.

"DOCTOR CUPID."

Each in 1 vol., crown 8vo, obtainable separately at all book-sellers, uniformly bound in cloth, price 6s.

NOVELS BY MARIE CORELLI.

A ROMANCE OF TWO WORLDS.

VENDETTA: a Story of One Forgotten.

THELMA.

ARDATH: a Story of a Dead Self.

Each in 1 vol., crown 8vo, obtainable separately at all book-sellers, uniformly bound in cloth, price 6s.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street,
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS.

DEDICATED BY SPECIAL PERMISSION TO HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN.

Now ready, 2 vols. demy 8vo. with Portraits, Maps and other Illustrations, 36s.

THE LIFE and LETTERS of the REV.

ADAM SEDGWICK, LL.D., F.R.S., Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, Prebendary of Norwich, and Woodwardian Professor of Geology from 1818 to 1873. By JOHN WILLIS CLARK, M.A., F.S.A., Superintendent of the University Museum of Zoology and Comparative Anatomy, and formerly Fellow of Trinity College; and THOMAS McKENNY HUGHES, M.A., Woodwardian Professor of Geology.

GRAY and his FRIENDS. Letters and Relics in great part hitherto Unpublished. Edited by REV. D. C. TOVEY, M.A. Crown 8vo., 6s.

LECTURES on the COMPARATIVE

GRAMMAR of the SEMITIC LANGUAGES, from the Papers of the late WILLIAM WRIGHT, LL.D., Professor of Arabic in the University of Cambridge. Demy 8vo, 14s.

THE THEORY of DIFFERENTIAL

EQUATIONS. Part I., Exact Equations and Pfaff's Problem. By A. R. FORSYTH, Sc.D., F.R.S., Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge. Demy 8vo, 12s.

HISTORY of EQUITY as ADMINIS-

TERED in the COURT of CHANCERY. Being the Yorke Prize Essay for 1889. By D. McKENZIE KERLY, M.A., St. John's College. Demy 8vo., 12s. 6d.

THE SCIENTIFIC PAPERS of the late

PROFESSOR J. CLERK MAXWELL. Edited by W. D. NIVEN, M.A. 2 vols., royal 4to, £3 8s.

THE COLLECTED MATHEMATICAL

PAPERS of ARTHUR CAYLEY, M.A., F.R.S., Sadlerian Professor of Pure Mathematics in the University of Cambridge. In the press, demy 4to, 10 half-yearly vols. Vols. I. and II. now ready, 25s. each; Vol. III. in the press.

New Volumes of the Pitt Press Series.

VERGIL.—THE COMPLETE WORKS.

With Introduction and Notes. By A. SIDGWICK, M.A. In 2 Vols. Vol. I., Text, 3s. 6d.; Vol. II., Notes, 4s. 6d. "Mr. Sidgwick's Vergil is, we believe on the whole, the best school edition of the poet."—Guardian.

XENOPHON.—CYROPAEDIA. Books

VI., VII., VIII. With Introduction and Notes. By Rev. H. A. HOLDEN, M.A., LL.D. [In the Press.]

PLATO.—EUTHYPHRO. With Introduction and Notes. By J. ADAM, M.A. 2s. 6d.

"Mr. Adam is to be complimented on an excellent piece of work, alike in notes and introduction. The latter especially is admirably clear and sensible; the notes are full and contain valuable information on all points that call for notice."—Journal of Education.

EURIPIDES.—IPHIGENEIA in

AULIS. With Introduction and Notes. By C. E. S. HEADLAM, B.A. 2s. 6d.

"The notes are good and scholarly. The reader of this difficult play will find Mr. Headlam's edition more helpful than any previous work in English on the same subject."—Journal of Education.

HOMER.—Odyssey, Bk XXI. With

Introduction, Notes, and Appendices. By G. M. EDWARDS, M.A. 2s.

HERODOTUS.—Bk. V. With Notes,

Introduction, and Map. By E. S. SHUCKBURGH, M.A. 3s.

"Mr. Shuckburgh's new volume falls in no way below the high point of excellence which his edition of Book VI. attained. It is complete in every way. The historical and geographical index will be found very useful, and the note on the early alphabet should help to make an obscure subject clear. In fact, the whole commentary is instructive and suggestive."—Academy.

CAESAR.—DE BELLO CIVILI, Bk. I.

Edited, with Notes, by A. G. PESKETT, M.A., Fellow of Magdalene College. [In the Press.]

LIVY, Bk. V. With Notes and Introduction. By L. WHIBLEY, M.A. 2s. 6d. [Shortly.]

Complete Catalogues on application.

LONDON: C. J. CLAY & SONS, CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS WAREHOUSE, AVE MARIA LANE.
GLASGOW: 263, ARGYLE STREET.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO.'S

BOOKS for SUMMER READING.

THIRD EDITION NOW READY.

In Darkest Africa.

By HENRY M. STANLEY, D.C.L., LL.D., &c.,

Being the Official Publication recording the

QUEST, RESCUE, and RETREAT of EMIN,

GOVERNOR of EQUATORIA.

Ordinary Edition, 2 vols., demy 8vo, with 150 Illustrations, and 3 Maps, in handsome cloth binding, price TWO GUINEAS.

The TIMES.—"Mr. Stanley's narrative of his adventures, privations, sufferings, trials, dangers, and discoveries during his heroic quest and rescue of Emin Pasha is as moving and enthralling a tale as ever was told by man. It is, moreover, told with so genuine a modesty of temper, so transparent a fidelity to fact, so generous and eager a desire on the part of the leader of the expedition to give their due meed of praise and recognition to each and all of his subordinates, not excepting the humblest of his African followers, that the critic's task becomes merely one of unstinted admiration of the almost unexampled greatness of the deeds accomplished, and the profound ethical interest of the narrative which describes them."

NOVELS by WILLIAM BLACK.

In uniform crown 8vo volumes, cloth, 6s. each.

THE NEW PRINCE FORTUNATUS.

IN FAR LOCHABER.

THE STRANGE ADVENTURES of a

HOUSE-BOAT.

THE PENANCE of JOHN LOGAN.

A DAUGHTER of HETH.

IN SILK ATTIRE.

KILMENY.

THREE FEATHERS.

SUNRISE.

LADY SILVERDALE'S SWEETHEART.

WESSEX NOVELS by THOS. HARDY.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION,

In uniform crown 8vo volumes, boards, 2s. each;
cloth 2s. 6d. each.

FAR from the MADDEN CROWD.

THE MAYOR of CASTERBRIDGE.

THE TRUMPET MAJOR.

RETURN of the NATIVE.

A LAODICEAN.

HAND of ETHELBERTA.

Very shortly.

A PAIR of BLUE EYES.*

TWO on a TOWER.*

* The 6s. Editions can still be had.

NOW READY, PRICE ONE SHILLING.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE.

SEPTEMBER NUMBER.

CONTENTS.

ACROSS the ANDES. (Illustrated.) THEODORE CHILD.

THE METRIC SYSTEM. H. W. RICHARDSON.

FROM a BATTLEMENT of ROSES: a Story. S. P. McLEAN GREENE.

PORT TARASCOS: the Last Adventures of the Illustrious Tartarin. Part IV. (Illustrated.) ALPHONSE DAUDET.

RECENT DISCOVERIES of PAINTED GREEK SCULPTURE. (With 15 Illustrations.) RUSSELL STURGIS.

AIX-LA-CHAPELLE: a Sonnet. (Illustrated.) WILLIAM WORDSWORTH.

THE REVOLT of "MOTHER": a Story. MARY E. WILKINS.

MOUNTAIN PASSES of the CUMBERLAND. (With a Map.) JAMES LANE ALLEN.

HER HEART'S DESIRE: a Story. PAUL CARSON.

HAVARD UNIVERSITY in 1890. CHARLES ELIOT NORTON.

THE SOCIAL SIDE of YACHTING. J. D. JERROLD KELLEY, U.S.N. With 15 Illustrations. Drawn by T. DE THIELSTRUP.

THE STONE AXE: a Story. (Illustrated.) BARNET PHILLIPS.

THE WILD GARDEN. (Illustrated.) W. HAMILTON GIBSON.

&c. &c. Nearly 80 Illustrations.

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, SEARLE,
and RIVINGTON, Limited,
St. Dunstons House, Fetter Lane, Fleet Street, E.C.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 6, 1890.

No. 957, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

The Buke of John Mandevill; being the Travels of Sir John Mandeville, Knight, 1322-1356. A hitherto unpublished English Version from the Unique Copy (Egerton MS. 1982) in the British Museum. Edited, together with the French Text, Notes, and an Introduction, by G. F. Warner. Illustrated with Twenty-Eight Miniatures, reproduced in Facsimile from the Additional MS. 24,189. (Printed for the Roxburghe Club.)

THE ethics of "limited editions" form a subject of some complexity. Before the invention of printing the production of one hundred transcripts of a unique MS. would have been a matter for unmixed rejoicing. To-day busy students remember with a sigh that the cost of striking off a few additional copies would have been little more than the price of the paper, and in their hankering for the delights of actual possession are, perhaps, less grateful than they should be to the wealthy book-lovers, who at any rate have in some measure increased the accessibility of a rare work. The temptation to grumble becomes peculiarly great when the work in question is one of European interest, and when its editor has performed his task with the enthusiasm and learning which Mr. Warner has brought to bear on this edition of the Travels of Sir John Mandeville. There is comfort in the reflection that the results of Mr. Warner's labours will doubtless be incorporated into the edition of Mandeville promised to its subscribers by the Early English Text Society. But it seems a pity that good work should have to be done over again; and those of us who care something for such trifles as quality of print, paper, and illustration, may be inclined to wish that they could possess their Mandeville in a garb which should hit a happy mean between the somewhat unwieldy splendours of the present edition and the workaday dress in which the Early English Text Society's publications are necessarily issued.

Mr. Warner tells us in his Introduction that the beautiful illustrations, which can now rank only as a very charming accessory of his edition, were originally the cause of its inception.

"The present volume," he says, "has grown to its actual bulk from a small beginning. It originated in a desire on the part of the Roxburghe Club to possess facsimiles of some fine fifteenth-century miniatures illustrating the earlier chapters (and, unfortunately, the earlier chapters only) of Sir John Mandeville's famous work. These miniatures, of which I shall have more to say hereafter, are contained in the Additional MS. 24,189 of the British Museum.

They are unaccompanied by any text; and it was at first intended to issue the plates in like manner, or with such extracts only from one or other of the numerous MSS. or printed editions of Mandeville as might serve to elucidate them. Subsequently, however, it was proposed instead to utilise the opportunity to print in full a hitherto unpublished English version of the Travels, differing widely from that commonly known, and, like the latter, preserved in a unique MS. in the Museum. To this suggestion the Club readily agreed, and the carrying of it into effect was entrusted to me."

These remarkable miniatures, to whose beauty Mr. Warner's volume owes its existence, are beyond doubt the work of a Flemish artist of the beginning of the fifteenth century. The first, which represents a scribe seated at a desk, is drawn in silver point, a slight tinting of the flesh being the only colouring. On the twenty-seven other miniatures the outlines are drawn with a pen, and shaded in black and white with a brush. The green of trees, the blue and white of sea and sky, the flesh-tints of faces and hands, together with gold for ornaments and embroidery, are the chief colours employed. The workmanship is of the very utmost delicacy, and the general effect of each picture singularly beautiful. Of Mandeville's thirty-four chapters, the miniatures only illustrate the first six; and the majority of them represent either the band of pilgrims en route, or incidents of Christ's Passion connected with the holy relics (the cross, the spear, and the sponge) which were exhibited to the faithful at Constantinople. The facsimile reproductions of these miniatures have been very faithfully made by the Autotype Company, while in a certain number of copies the actual tones of the originals have been admirably copied by hand by Miss Jane Escombe.

Turning from these beautiful illustrations to the more serious side of Mr. Warner's work, we have first to note the presence of the hitherto unprinted English text contained in Egerton MS. 1982 (E). The version by which Mandeville is at present best known to English readers is that of Cotton MS., Titus C. xvi. (C), which was adopted by Halliwell in his edition of 1839. Both these versions are founded on a still earlier translation of the French text, which down to 1725 was the only one which had obtained the honours of print. It is the extraordinary lacuna in this earliest version, by which several leaves of the original are omitted to the utter destruction of all sense, that affords the readiest and most easily quotable disproof of the long-current belief that the English text of Mandeville came from the author's own hand. This belief was fostered by an utterly mendacious assertion of the translator of C, the untrustworthiness of which has already been exposed by the late Sir Henry Yule and Bodley's Librarian in their masterly article on "Mandeville" in the Encyclopædia Britannica. Towards this article, it may be remarked, Mr. Warner's attitude throughout his edition is one of substantial agreement; but his own thorough and independent study of his author has enabled him everywhere to complete and press home the arguments of the two encyclopaedists, and in some cases to resolve their doubts or turn their happy conjectures into absolute certainty. On this point of the relations of C and E to their French original he produces a long list of palpable mistranslations, which by themselves would be sufficient to dispose of the claims of the English versions to priority. Thus, in the Cotton MS. the word Cordeliers (through the misreading "C. ordres") is rendered as "nunnes of an hundred orders," and montaignes becomes "the hille of Ayngnes," probably through the division of the word in the French MS. The translator of E avoids these absurdities, but falls into the no less ludicrous transliteration of the French caillou agu (rightly rendered by C as "a sharpe flyntston") by "ane instrument that es called gaylounagon!" As to the comparative merits of the two versions, Mr. Warner, with an absence of bias rare indeed among editors, is inclined to award the palm of accuracy to the translation which he has not had the honour of printing for the first time. But though he is not sanguine enough to expect that his Egerton version will oust the Cottonian from its established position of popularity, he has no difficulty in showing its philological importance (it is written mainly in the Northern dialect) and its usefulness as a supplement to the recognised text.

The real character of Mandeville's work ought to be by this time generally known. Mr. Warner has zealously carried on the task of tracing his traveller's tales back to their original authorities, and the list of these now comprises more than a dozen names. Boldensele and Odoric, Carpini and Hayton, Vincent de Beauvais and Jacques de Vitry, the Historia Scholastica, the Legenda Aurea, and the Palestine Itineraries, were all laid under contribution; and Mr. Warner's suggestion that so diligent a student of the works of others could have had very little time for independent research is certainly a fair one. Who this student was can hardly as yet be stated with absolute certainty; but readers of the ACADEMY may remember the letter in which in 1884 Mr. E. B. Nicholson first made known to English scholars Dr. Borman's discovery of the passage in the Liège chronicler, Jean d'Outremeuse, identifying this forerunner of the race of arm-chair geographers with the physician, Jean de Bourgogne. The pleasure of making known this discovery in the ACADEMY was a singularly appropriate reward for the happy query in their article in the Encyclopædia Britannica, by which Mr. Nicholson and Col. Yule had already anticipated it. The passage, it will be remembered, runs as follows:

"L'an m.ccc.lxxii mourut à Liege, le xii. Novembre, un homme fort distingué par sa naissance, content de s'y faire connoître sous le nom de Jean de Bourgogne dit à la Barbe. Il s'ouvrit néanmoins au lit de la mort à Jean d'Outremeuse, son compère et institué son exécuteur testamentaire. De vrai il se titra dans le précis de sa dernière volonté Messire Jean de Mandeville, chevalier, comte de Montfort, en Angleterre et seigneur de l'isle de Campdi et du château Perouse. Ayant cependant eu le malheur de tuer, en son pays, un comte qu'il ne nomme pas, il s'engage à parcourir les trois parties du monde. Vint à Liège en 1343, etc."

The part of the Mandeville mystery which still remains unsolved is the literary relation of Jean à la Barbe to his "compère," executor, and historian, Jean D'Outremeuse. As Mr. Warner points out, the authorities on which D'Outremeuse relied for his great Myreur des Histoires, with the exception of Boldensele and Odoric, include all the works from which Mandeville's Travels were pieced together. He incorporates much of one portion of Mandeville (that relating to India and China) into his text as the travels of Ogier le Danois; and an account of Tartary, to which he alludes as already written by himself, is not to be found anywhere in the Myreur, but is given in the Travels. Mr. Warner's summary of the position of D'Outremeuse is very much to the point. It is evident, he says, that he was no more scrupulous than his compère,

"and closely allied to him as he was, it is open to question whether he may not have been rather an accomplice than a dupe. As the possessor of what very possibly had been De Bourgogne's own library, he was certainly well equipped with materials for detecting and exposing the imposture; and the fact that, as he himself states, De Bourgogne came to Liège in 1343, more than ten years before the date given by Mandeville as that of his return from travel, might have excited his suspicions. Considering, however, that D'Outremeuse was not twenty years of age in 1355, the theory that he himself was the compiler, and the other, as the Latin text has it, merely the instigator and abettor, would oblige us to assume that the work was written somewhat later than the date it bears."

As to Jean de Bourgogne himself, Mr. Warner has unearthed from the Parliamentary writs what, despite some slight discrepancies, appears to be a very noteworthy confirmation of the account by D'Outremeuse. According to his own story, the author of the Travels left England in 1322, and, according to D'Outremeuse, his leaving was the result of participation in a homicide. In the Parliamentary writs there is mention of a "Johan de Burgoyne," who, on August 20, 1321, was pardoned for his share in the attack on the two Despensers. On the recall, however, of the Despensers from their temporary banishment, the pardon was revoked in May, 1322, only four months before the date at which "Mandeville" professes to have quitted England. Despite the fact that the combination against the Despensers did not amount to homicide, the probability that the Johan de Bourgogne of the Parliamentary writs should be identified with the physician of Liège is very great, and the presence of a real John de Mandeville among the Earl of Lancaster's adherents would account for the pseudonym which the author subsequently assumed. Mr. Warner offers a further explanation of the choice of name, which seems more ingenious than probable. Another Liège author, Jean du Pin, a contemporary of Jean de Bourgogne, composed a treatise in which he imagined himself conducted in a dream through the moral world by "ung noble chevalier qui estoit nomme Mandevie," a dweller on a blanche montaigne or mons albus, which Mr. Warner thinks may have faintly suggested the statement that "Mandeville" was born at St. Albans. In the absence of any other theory by which to account for Jean de Bourgogne's choice of a pseudonym, this explanation might easily have procured acceptance; as it is, it appears redundant. Nine years before the attack on the Despensers the real John de Mandeville had been concerned in the killing of Piers Gaveston, for which he duly received a pardon in 1313. In one incident of their careers there was thus a close similarity between Jean de Bourgogne and the man under whose name his work was issued, and no further explanation of his choice of a pseudonym appears necessary.

It is perhaps not to be regretted that the interest of the questions of the authorship of the Travels, and the priority of the different versions in which they speedily became current, has left but little space in which to speak of the Notes with which Mr. Warner has illustrated his author's mendacious narrative. It would be impossible within the limits of any ordinary review to do justice to the unwearied industry and the immense acquaintance with mediæval literature which their compiler has brought to his task. Each wonderful story is traced to the original author from whom it was appropriated, the mistakes made in the process of conveyance pitilessly exposed, and the comparative literature of the legend exhaustively investigated. Many scholars have long been at work on Mandeville—in England, Mr. Nicholson and the late Sir Henry Yule; in Germany, Dr. Vogels, Dr. Schönborn, and Dr. Albert Bovenschen. To these fellow-labourers or predecessors Mr. Warner is profuse in his acknowledgments. But his own work is of a character not to be easily surpassed, and it is impossible to close this brief notice of it without reiterating the regret that the circumstances of its publication must inevitably preclude it from receiving the attention which it deserves.

ALFRED W. POLLARD.

"GREAT WRITERS SERIES."—Lord Byron.

By the Hon. Roden Noel. (Walter Scott.)

It would seem to an unprejudiced mind as if the world scarcely needed another Life of Byron. It was not a very exemplary one at best, though certainly interesting; and it appears as if little now remains to be said that could materially lighten or darken the picture as we have long known it. Since the appearance of the mischievous and malignant book of Mrs. Stowe, some twenty years ago, we have had at least twenty books, more or less, in the nature of Lives, something like fourteen editions of the Collected Works, about half that number of Selections, and countless articles of all sorts and sizes and from every possible quarter of the compass. But now again we must have him as a "Great Writer," though we had him not long ago as a "Man of Letters"; and there seems no reason in the nature of things why we should not have him figuring under different other categories, say as "Great Poet," or "Man of Fashion," if the publishers should think fit to supply us with a series under either heading, or even as a "Man of Action" in the series we have already got.

But as we were bound to have his lordship dished up for us again, there is one great advantage in having him in this series, on account of the admirable and apparently exhaustive bibliographies attached to each volume; and though he might have fallen into better hands than those of his present biographer, he might very easily have fallen into worse. Mr. Noel, besides many other qualifications for his task, has the one essential one, that he has a strong admiration for his subject, yet not so all-absorbing as to make him blind to the very serious faults which disfigured the character of his hero. Indeed, he "nothing extenuates" if he "sets down naught in malice." It may be put to his credit, too, that, while related to Lady Byron and so tempted to make light of her shortcomings, he seems to be fully alive to them, and to see her as she was, a highly repellant, priggish, puritanical, and, if conscientious in a way, still uncharitable, selfish, and very objectionable character. I don't say that Mr. Noel says all or any of this, or possibly even thinks it; but he gives the reader the materials for coming to such conclusions as he may think fit about this much-talked-of lady, and I think that at this time of day the view taken by the said reader will be anything but favourable.

But it is with Lord Byron, and not his wife, that the public is mainly concerned; and their interest in the man and his fortunes, though nothing like what it was in his own day, is still very great, and seems likely rather to grow greater than less as the years go on. Of the man himself scarcely anything need now be said, as we all get a sufficiently clear notion of him in his biographies, from Moore to Mr. Noel, for, as the latter says, "Byron, like Rousseau, was one who wished us to know a good deal about him, and took care that we should." As to the poet, our talk might be endless, whether we incline to the views of Matthew Arnold or of Mr. Swinburne, or, as may possibly be the case with most of us, take quite a different view from either. In the "storm and stress" period we are likely to be strongly Byronic, at least we of an elder generation used to be; but advancing years bring cooler heads and quieter tastes, and then we (many of us at least) take to Wordsworth or another. The old controversies used to turn upon Wordsworth and Byron, but of late 'tis with Shelley comparisons are mostly made. Well, let the quarrel go on. All three will have their readers, as all three so well deserve them; and if we are not catholic enough to take all three to our hearts, the loss is ours not theirs. The case for his hero seems not unfairly put by Mr. Noel in the following passage:—

"He is indeed very much akin to Burns, whose supreme song 'survives deep in the general heart.' Burns has the same wild irregular passion, the same humour and intermingling of grave and gay, the same character full of contradictions. But, as in Burns there is an element of coarse commonplace, in Byron there is a certain gaudy charlatanry, blare of brass, and big bow-wowishness of the life, as of the poetry—that imposes on the vulgar, for ever insensible to the delicate, subtle warble of bird or brook, to the soul-like tones of a master's violin. So Wordsworth, Shelley, Keats, and Coleridge waited, while Moore and Byron had their loud day. But Byron wrote up to them at last, giving the world his own distinctive song—though purely as a lyrical poet he is hardly equal to Burns. The writers of 'Tam O'Shanter' and 'Don Juan,' however, poured their own lives into song."

I think it would be better to say that Byron and Burns were "somewhat" rather than "very much akin"; and certainly it would be better to say that Byron was "not at all" rather than "scarcely" equal to Burns as a lyrical poet.

But there is no necessity, here and now, for going into any detailed criticism of the works of Byron, seeing the loads of literature piled up over them already; besides, the thing is satisfactorily enough done again by Mr. Noel. The chief fault to be found with his critical remarks is that they are scattered up and down the book in a somewhat chaotic fashion. He would have done well to have summed up with a general estimate of Byron's character and works in a closing chapter. But, as on the whole the book is a good one, it is perhaps unnecessary to show how it might be better. The narrative part is mostly satisfactory, especially in all that relates to the quarrel between man and wife; but we might perhaps have been left more to our imaginations for the details of the horribly sensual life led by Byron in Venice and elsewhere during his last residence in Italy; and the last chapter, which relates the journey to Greece and the death—though, of course, necessarily very interesting, for nothing in Byron's life became him like the leaving of it—is somewhat confused and unmethodic. I have said above that I do not care to find much fault where the whole effect is good; but in the mere matter of style, some exception is to be taken to Mr. Noel, who, if he is vigorous enough generally, is occasionally incorrect and very often affected. Even Lady Byron, unpleasant person as she was, seems hardly treated in having such a mass of words as the following heaped over her:—

"Strangely matched!—fire and snow—erratic comet and cold, chaste moon—the stony pillar, half a woman, looking back to embrace some lurid fume from doomed cities, now buried under Dead Sea waters—forming together what the husband wittily calls 'that moral centaur, man and wife.'"

Perhaps, however, it is a sufficient excuse for all this that Mr. Noel is a poet as well as a biographer.

JOHN O'LEARY.

Church and State under the Tudors. By Gilbert W. Child. (Longmans.)

"It is proposed in the present essay," says Mr. Child, "to investigate the relations of Church and State in England during the reign of the Tudor sovereigns, with the object of throwing some light upon the respective shares of each in what is commonly known as the 'Reformation Settlement.'"

Mr. Child has, accordingly, written some forty pages of Introduction, in which he gives his opinion about the early relations of the Church to the State in England. In about 240 pages more, he narrates the chief events in these ecclesiastical revolutions which took place from Henry VIII. to Elizabeth; and there are about 140 pages of State Papers and contemporary documents. These form the most valuable portion of Mr. Child's volume, for his facts are always more reliable than his theories. His work is too heavy for an essay, and too superficial for an history; whatever is original to the author is of questionable value; but the book may be of use to those readers who desire to learn something of what was done and said by the makers of the English Reformation, and who are able to form their own judgment about the facts which Mr. Child has collected. It might be wished, however, in the interests of these readers, that Mr. Child had arranged his materials with greater skill, and had narrated his events with more clearness and precision.

In order to make intelligible the relations of the Church to the State under the Tudors, Mr. Child has found it "necessary to give a short account of the state of these relations in far earlier times, and also a slightly fuller one of the position which they occupied during the reign of the Plantagenet and subsequent kings."

It might embarrass Mr. Child, however, to say who were the "subsequent kings" who reigned between the Plantagenets and the Tudors; and a reviewer of Mr. Child's history is bound to remark that loose phrases of this kind are too abundant in his writing. He says, for instance, that the whole island of Great Britain has been one kingdom for more than two centuries. Now history is nothing, if it is not precise; and, if we are to be precise, we should say, rather, that Great Britain has acknowledged one sovereign power since 1603; but it has only been one United Kingdom since the Act of Union in 1707. Mr. Child says, again, that Peter's Pence and the taxation of the clergy by the pope "continued from the remotest antiquity"; and not one of these three assertions is absolutely correct. Peter's Pence was a development from Ethelwulf's voluntary offerings; and those offerings were only begun in the ninth century, four hundred years after the English settlement, and nearly three hundred years after the mission of Saint Augustine. The open and regular taxation of the English clergy by the pope, as their feudal superior, was not heard of until the reign of Henry III.; that is, until after the submission of John and the momentous reign of Innocent III. "From the middle of Edward III.'s reign to the close of his successor's" is "a space of about sixty years," according to Mr. Child; most people, who know their dates, would reckon it at forty-seven years. The clergy throughout the world, says Mr. Child, speaking vaguely of the "Middle Ages," were "at all times ready to obey orders from head-quarters;" this is another of Mr. Child's fallacious generalities, and it is notoriously untrue. It is not true of the German or of the North Italian clergy in the days of Hildebrand; it is not true, to take another instance, of the English clergy in the thirteenth century. The clergy were willing enough to accept from Rome orders which coincided with their wishes, with their private, or with their corporate, interests; otherwise, during the Middle Ages, they were most unwilling to obey. So manifest is this unwillingness, that an English Roman Catholic, of modern Ultramontane views, once wrote an essay in which he proved, to his own satisfaction, that the bishops of mediæval England were nearly all in a state of mortal sin, because of their disloyal attitude towards the Pope. And this leads us to another of Mr. Child's questionable utterances. "The Catholic Church before the Reformation," he says, "was precisely that which it has continued since." To write like this is to lose those fine distinctions which make all the difference between a good and a bad criticism of history; between a masterly intelligence in historical questions and a blurred or a deceptive treatment of them.

The Church of the Western Empire before the Reformation, that is during the most vigorous periods of the Middle Ages, may be regarded as an European confederation of the national churches within the Roman Patriarchate, with Latin as its common language, with the emperor and the pope as its temporal and spiritual chiefs, and with Rome as the theoretical seat of empire and the outward symbol of its unity. The pope was a spiritual emperor, the emperor a temporal pope; and either within his own sphere was held to be God's vice-gerent; to be necessary for the maintenance of peace, for the preservation of order and of authority. This was the theory of the early Middle Ages; and it was the system for which Dante still argued in the Divina Commedia, and in his treatise De Monarchia. With the development of the papacy, with the decline of the empire, and with the fatal warfare between them, this healthy condition passed away or was forgotten. In addition to this, the analogies of feudalism began to be applied to the benefices, and to the organisation of the Church; the popes taxed the clergy, they sent out their legates, they summoned appeals into their own courts, and they discovered that they were the superiors of the emperor. In their dealings with national and with local churches, the popes assumed more and more power to themselves; the courtesies of one age became the customs of the next; the government of the church became more centralised; the struggle with Protestantism, by increasing the fears of the Catholics, increased their narrowness and their rigour; as the term "Rome" lost its temporal importance, it became a purely spiritual and sacerdotal term; and then we come to the Church of the sixteenth century. For an impartial historian, the Roman Church, after the Council of Trent—with a more absolute pope, with a more centralised and vigorous organisation, and with a policy which led straight to the Vatican decrees of 1870—is a very different thing from the Latin Churches of the Middle Age: just as the mediæval church, after Saint Gregory the Great, is a different thing from the confederation of Patriarchal Churches which we find established in the age of Constantine. No statement is more common than Mr. Child's statement, that this Catholic Church before the Reformation was "precisely that which it has continued since" and no statement can be more inaccurate to those who are resolved to look beneath the surface of things, and to understand their real significance.

It is because Mr. Child has failed to understand this that his Introduction is erroneous, and his sketch of early history deceptive. It is untrue, no doubt, that the present Anglican Church is an exact continuation of the mediæval church in England; but it is equally untrue that the Catholic Church itself has remained unchanged. Mr. Child's theory that the term "national church" is, and always was, incorrect, would require the existence, in mediæval times, of the modern papacy; and this is just what we do not find in history. Besides, the term "national church" can still be applied with propriety to the various churches within the Roman communion, in spite of the developments, the zeal, and the centralisation of the modern papacy. In history we find these national churches of Europe in communion with Rome, and with one another; we find them acknowledging the primacy of Saint Peter's see; and we find them, on the whole, one corporate body. But we can trace the growth of this polity; it is not immemorial and primitive; local customs, local powers, local rites yielded slowly and unwillingly to the jurisdiction and the usages of Rome. Above all, the secular authorities yielded slowly and unwillingly to the advancing monarchy of the popes. Even a sovereign like Edward the Confessor styled himself Christi Vicarius; and William the Conqueror repelled Hildebrand's claim for homage, and all the innovations which that great pontiff demanded and generally enforced. It was in the same spirit that the Plantagenet kings devised their anti-papal statutes; and we may remark, in passing, that Mr. Child's reasoning about these statutes, and about their effects, does not seem to be warranted by the facts of history. They were a public protest, which mark at once the growth of papal developments and the older relations between the Church and State in England. In this matter we regard the State as the conservative, and the Church as the innovating power.

Mr. Child is more accurate, and his book is more valuable, when he comes to the reign of Henry VIII. From that period, his work is less open to criticism; and he gives a tolerably just, because a commonplace and conventional, account of ecclesiastical affairs under the Tudor sovereigns. It could be wished that his account were fuller and more precise, as well as clearer in the arrangement and the style. We should like to see a more satisfactory account of the religious orders, and of their suppression; and of the mischief done by the more zealous reformers under Edward VI. Before the policy of Elizabeth can be fairly estimated, it is necessary for the historian to know the foreign relations of the English Government and the domestic condition of the country; it is even more necessary that he should understand the differences among the English Catholics, the quarrels between the secular clergy and the Jesuits, and the fatal dissensions between the royal houses and the partisans of Spain and France.

And in all these questions Mr. Child has apparently something yet to learn.

In style, Mr. Child's volume presents many blemishes. He speaks of a man who had "become an important individuality." He says, that "the baronage had almost burnt itself out" in the "long agony of the Wars of the Roses": the metaphor is unfortunate; and it is possible that the Hundred Years' War was no less fatal to the nobility than the sixteen years of intermittent civil war. The Church is described as "driven from every rag of independence of the State," and the papacy as "the band which bound together the bundle of sticks." The exchequer is said to be "chronically empty"; and the crown is too often described as a "party" in the State. This, in Lord Chatham's dignified phrase, is not "the way of writing"; and before Mr. Child proceeds to the next volume of his history we hope he will undertake a more intimate study of Catholicism and of the Middle Age. That study will probably lead him to re-write some portions of his present volume. The history which Mr. Child has planned is certainly wanted; but his history, as it stands at present, hardly satisfies the want or justifies its own existence.

ARTHUR GALTON.

Stanley: a Drama. By James L. Thorneby. (Kegan Paul & Co.)

If Mr. Thorneby's drama serves no other purpose, it comes as an opportune reminder that there is more than one Stanley known to fame; for its hero, as one may be pardoned for having feared from its title, is not Africanus but Lancastrensis, that great James Stanley, seventh Earl of Derby, who made such a noble figure on the side of the Royalists in the great civil wars. Mr. Thorneby at once wins our sympathy by this apropos resurrection, and further on another score in his manly poem.

"Would ye have lyrics? Would ye songs of love,
Or subtleties of melody and rhyme;
Or hath the theme of Duty yet a charm
For any in our land? If so it be,
Some, weary of love-lays and sophistries,
May turn a moment, willing to attend
A new matter—less pondered on that love,
Yet haply lovelier, if known aright;
... the tale of deeds done well;
Of actions buried in a world's disdain,
To blossom in the skies."

Marry, we would; for surely we are all passing weary of the "unchartered freedom" of modern song with its monotonous theme rather of license than of love. This little drama deserves welcome if only as one of the harbingers of the promised new "reign of law" in literature. We are well tired of the literary sans-culotte with his cheap and vulgar rebellion; and when we say that Mr. Thorneby writes like a gentleman we mean to pay him a high compliment, certainly a rare one. This is true of him not only in respect of Sinaitic but also of literary law; for his style, while firm and vigorous, is self-respectful with that reticence which in manners we call breeding and in art distinction. If he does not give us high dramatic passion, at least he does not substitute fustian. In truth, it is not as drama that this volume has significance. The author has a distinct power of creating character, and of writing natural dialogue. Moreover, while necessarily employing a quaint manner of speech, he avoids the danger of burlesque, even in dealing with Roundheads; and indeed, far from being "Wardour Street English," his style reveals considerable knowledge of the seventeenth-century idiom. Yet these qualities alone do not, it is needless to say, make drama; and the other vital something Mr. Thorneby lacks, or, at least, does not exhibit in his Stanley.

The real promise of the book is a poetical one. It would be worth buying if only for this lyric.

"In spring, when Love was young,
His heart was free from cure,
And lighter than the air,
And thus he sung:
'The little leaves that on the bough are hung Shall never fade again, for Love is young.'

"Then golden summer came,
And Love was in his prime,
And swiftly went the time,
And his heart was flame.

"But Autumn next drew nigh,
And Love away grew,
And found his fair untrue,
And heaved a sigh.

"And now the winter dead
Has borne Love home,
And laid him in a tomb—
For Love is dead.

'Oh, wherefore sorrow that the leaves are shed?
They can no longer bloom, for Love is dead.'

To treat so freshly a lyric theme no little hackneyed is a triumph in its way; and this is not the only song in Mr. Thorneby's book that makes one hope that he will some day print a dainty selection of others which he doubtless has by him. Moreover, lines like these which close the drama—

"Yet grief like ours,
My daughter, is more blessed than a joy
Which reaches heaven, but cannot find God there," make one wonder whether their writer is not capable of still more serious poetic achievement. Whether or not, his quaint fancy and gentle melody must always make his lyrics acceptable.

RICHARD LE GALLIENNE.

A HISTORY OF NON-CHRISTIAN RELIGIONS.
Lehrbuch der Religionsgeschichte. Von P. D.
Chantepie de la Saussaye. Zweiter Band.
(Mohr: Freiburg i. B.)

In this volume Prof. Chantepie de la Saussaye completes his masterly summary of all that is known about the religions of the world, Judaism and Christianity apart. The first volume was noticed at the time of its appearance in the ACADEMY of August 13, 1887; and on that occasion an account was given of the general plan of the work, as well as of the remarkable series of theological handbooks to which it belongs.

The second volume is in all respects equal to its predecessor, and will be read by many with even greater interest. It deals with the religions of ancient Persia, of Greece and Rome, of the Germans and Scandinavians, and of Islam. Of these the beliefs of classical antiquity receive, as they deserve, much the largest share of attention, three-fifths of the volume, or more than a quarter of the whole work, being devoted to their consideration. Such a survey, involving as it does a continual reference to the literature, the philosophy, the political history, the art, and the daily life of Greece and Rome, draws to a focus all the results of classical scholarship, including under this term archaeological, not less than philological, research. Besides the intrinsic charm of the subject, what makes these chapters exceptionally pleasant reading is that here we tread on comparatively firm ground. In the case of some other great religions, such as Buddhism and Zoroastrianism, their origin, development, and meaning are surrounded with such obscurity, and are open to such diverse interpretations, that Prof. de la Saussaye has limited himself to reporting the conflicting opinions of his authorities, without attempting to decide between them, with the result of sometimes leaving the reader's mind in a wearied and bewildered condition. But the materials for framing an estimate of Greek and Roman religion are so abundant, and have been worked up by so many generations of scholars with such surpassing industry, that on all the most important points a comparative unanimity of judgment may be said to obtain. Thus Prof. de la Saussaye has been able to draw up a clear, concise, and flowing exposition, unembarrassed by the apparatus of erudition, of ascertained and accepted facts. The author's own qualities of sobriety, good sense, and judicial impartiality are such as to put him more in sympathy with the Roman than with the Greek mind. It is not, therefore, surprising that, of the two, his account of Roman religion should be the more satisfactory. One may even go further and say that it is what the Germans would call the Glanzpunkt of his whole work. Nowhere else in so short a compass—perhaps nowhere else at all—is there to be found an equally perfect picture of that strange system in which fetichism and animism of the rudest description were organised with such consummate statesmanship as to leave the moral habits and spiritual aspirations of a great people through long centuries of growth not wholly without sanction and satisfaction. We see this system sharing in the historical evolution of the state which it served—drawing into its network the wholly alien mythology of Greece, and converting that very mythology into a new instrument of public policy; yielding for a time to the attacks of Greek philosophy, only to recover its ancient supremacy under the reforming impulse of Augustus. The movement initiated by a sceptical ruler and applauded by the sceptical Horace, whom Prof. de la Saussaye seems to rank first among the poets of his time, leads to a genuine revival of religious belief, by which the empire itself largely profits, as Caesarism becomes a form of worship enforced not only by law but by public opinion. Mithraism, with its ceremony of purification from sin by a baptism of blood, appears rather as a peaceable adjunct than as a rival of the more official creeds; and there seems good reason to suppose that Christianity itself at first received imperial support only on the implied condition that it was to live as one member of a vast eclectic system. But once admitted to a share of power, the Church by inward necessity will rest content with nothing less than sole dominion, and after a struggle of two centuries is left in undivided possession of the field.

In his instructive chapter on Islam, Prof. de la Saussaye happily allows himself to express more decided opinions of his own than elsewhere, and vigorously defends the prophet against the attacks of some modern critics. Sir W. Muir's grotesque idea that Mohammed's alleged revelations owed their origin to Satanic agency is dismissed with curt contempt as outside the pale of science. Those who would explain the visions of the Arabian reformer as epileptic manifestations are met by the fatal objection that an epileptic patient on returning to his senses has no recollection of what passed during the trance. Those who suggest hysteria are reminded that this disease saps all the mental and bodily power of its victim, while Mohammed remained to the last remarkable for extraordinary intellectual and physical energy. Our author's own view is well expressed in the following passage:

"In the character of Mohammed there are many faults, and some of a kind so particularly repulsive to us that they render it difficult to form an impartial judgment. While far above his contemporaries in religion, he shared many of their moral defects. A deceiver he was not; but he had little scruple in occasionally practising deceit. Although merciful by nature, when severity seemed politically advantageous he never spared the lives of his enemies. The firm religious conviction that he was called to be God's messenger was the all-ruling reality of his life; but this conviction never turned to fanaticism, nor did it exclude the shrewd calculation and dexterity of the politician. His prophetic consciousness never left him; it gives unity to his whole career; but his schemes, instead of being mapped out beforehand, were dictated by the requirements and suggestions of the moment. In spite of his faults, we cannot deny the deep sincerity of conviction that lasted till the end of his life. Mohammed has been reproached with excessive sensuality. Like most Arabs he was certainly fond of women and perfumes; but that is no reason for regarding him as generally corrupt. He always lived in the plainest and most frugal style; his food and clothing were very simple; sometimes he might be seen milking his ewes and sweeping out his room. God gave him the keys of the world's treasures; but he preferred poverty to wealth. We have no reason to doubt the sincerity of his declaration that only in prayer did he find unmixed happiness. His conduct in relation to women is certainly open to exception. He far exceeded the number of four wives, although that limit had been fixed by himself. We must not indeed ascribe this entirely to sensuality. Several of his wives were the widows of disciples for whom he provided in this manner; and others were the daughters of families with whom he considered it important to contract an alliance; and the hope of that male offspring which was denied him may have counted for something in many of his marriages. But such a marriage as that with Zainal, the divorced wife of his own adopted son Zaid, was even according to the ideas of his own time extremely objectionable. Neither can we approve of the use to which Mohammed often turned his revelations in Medina. Then we cannot always draw a sharp line of demarcation between inspiration, deep religious conviction and worldly-minded perspicacity. But that the prophet should mix up God in his affairs with women, or represent the measures which he took against his enemies as dictates of the Almighty, looks to us like a want of truthfulness and moral delicacy, which, however, in the case of Mohammed detracts nothing from the honest consciousness that he was an inspired prophet" (pp. 370-1).

In his list of authorities on Arabian history, Prof. de la Saussaye has omitted to mention Sir W. Muir's Early Annals of the Caliphate; nor does he include so important a work as Morivalo's Romans under the Empire among books to be consulted for that period of history. But such trifling oversights, if oversights they are, only bring into fuller relief the extraordinary comprehensiveness of scholarship exhibited throughout his review. At a time when the market is flooded with unreadable versions of obsolete German theology, it is perhaps too much to hope that this invaluable repertory of authentic information will soon be made more available for the use of English students.

ALFRED W. BENN.

Newspaper Reporting in Olden Time and To-day. By John Pendleton. (Elliot Stock.)

THE "olden time" is a phrase sufficiently vague, and yet most persons will be tempted to think that newspaper reporting is entirely a product of the modern spirit and a growth of modern days.

Mr. Pendleton opens with the Acta Diurna of Rome; but for his account of these documents he depends upon an article in the Gentleman's Magazine for 1740, attributed to Dr. Johnson, but not included in his works, which gives what professes to be translations from these newspapers of the classical period. But while the general character of the Acta Diurna is well known, the fragments published are, to say the least, of doubtful authenticity. There was very little "newspaper reporting" in ancient Rome, though the Romans, like the Chinese, had an official gazette, by means of which the authorities made known to the people such information as was considered to be for the public benefit. It is obvious that in every organised community there must have been some method by which the laws of the state and important political decisions could be communicated to the mass of the people. A really careful and thorough study of the precursors of the modern newspaper would be a valuable addition to historical literature; but it is no reproach to Mr. Pendleton to say that he has not attempted to perform a task which would require not only very uncommon erudition, but very uncommon patience and an amount of research and expenditure of time that few in this busy age will have the courage to undertake.

The earliest English example of reporting here quoted is a description of the Great Fire of London, which is vigorous as well as concise, and leaves an impression perhaps as vivid as the fuller accounts that would now be given of such a catastrophe. Mr. Pendleton is on safer ground when he comes to the more modern part of his volume, where he sketches briefly but sufficiently the struggle between the reporters and the Houses of Parliament—a fight in which the “Fourth Estate” was victorious. The most illustrious of the band of parliamentary reporters was Dr. Johnson—who was never in the gallery but once in his life! From the scanty notes supplied to him, Johnson, then only a bookseller's hack and not yet the “Colossus of Literature,” constructed debates which made the world wonder at the eloquence of the British Senate. Mr. Pendleton gossips pleasantly about “Memory” Woodfall, James Perry, and others by whom the modern art of parliamentary reporting has been created. Nor does he forget the story of the eulogium of the Irish potato attributed to Wilberforce. The gallery men are still regarded as having a keen enjoyment of a joke, but such a trick as this would be impossible now. The details which Mr. Pendleton gives as to the methods of parliamentary reporting at the present time are interesting, and will show the reader unfamiliar with the subject how elaborate and complicated are the arrangements necessary to enable him to enjoy at breakfast time the eloquent or learned or foolish remarks made by his representative in the House of Commons whilst he himself was in slumberland. In a gossip about shorthand Mr. Pendleton, while not regarding it as perfect, awards the palm of superiority to phonography, which at the time is undoubtedly the most popular stenography in the world.

Mr. Pendleton does not exhaust his subject, but he gives a fair sketch of it. He has the advantage of personal acquaintance with the ins and outs of the reporter's life; and of this exacting, fatiguing, and yet fascinating vocation he has much to say that is interesting and amusing.

WILLIAM E. A. AXON.

NEW NOVELS.

Nelly Blythe. By Jessie E. Greenwood. In 2 vols. (Ward & Downey.)

Audrey. By Margaret Hollis. In 3 vols. (Bentley.)

John Bolt. By R. W. Lodwick. In 2 vols. (Digby & Long.)

Nemesis. By Seyton Crewe. (Eden, Remington & Co.)

Stephanie. By Tom Lee. (Ward & Downey.)

The Case of George Candlemas. By G. R. Sims. (Chatto & Windus.)

The Harve of a Smile. By L. B. Walford. (Spencer Blackett.)

The Doctor's Secret. By Rita. (White.)

Quæ quibus anteferam? is a quotation which irresistibly suggests itself when one attempts the task of giving an order of precedence to a batch of novels which as a whole are distinguished by nothing but mediocrity. If Nelly Blythe is placed first on the list, it is more on account of the quantity of its matter than in deference to any principle of detur digniori, though in some respects the book is more readable than most of its fellows. The plot is painfully commonplace. Eleanore Capel-Blythe, whom one seems to have read of so often in tales of this sort, the belle of a London season, but a damsel of soul and yearnings and contempt for society shams and so forth, has no sooner been worried by her family into accepting the suit of the Marquis of Rosedale, than the inevitable artist-lover appears on the scene and secures her heart in a fortnight. However, the details are worked out with considerable skill, and there is only one small particular in which the portraiture of individuals can be considered otherwise than true to nature. The exception is in the case of the heroine herself, who, in addition to many amiable traits and many superior instincts, is credited with the possession of a rare talent for mimicry and caricature, which she exhibits on occasion to crowded drawing-rooms. The author should remember that there is no gift under heaven more subversive of friendship, more prolific of bitter hatreds, and more entirely dissociated from the sweet and gentle type of womanhood we are accustomed to view as the ideal heroine. A good deal of constructive ability is displayed in the general treatment; and by adopting the sensible plan of dealing with the story only, and avoiding all attempts at moralising, or analysis, or fine writing, the author has succeeded in producing a very fair specimen of the ordinary circulating library novel, such as readers who do not wish to be bored by much extraneous thought will peruse with pleasure.

Audrey, again, is a work which satisfactorily fulfils its raison d'être of furnishing an ephemeral dish of easily-digested light literature. It is a rather more ambitious work than Nelly Blythe; the plot is less hackneyed, and there is more attempt at mystery, which, indeed, is fairly well kept up till quite the third volume. Mr. Bevan, a self-indulgent malade imaginaire completely absorbed in the task of attending to his own ailments, is a remarkably well-conceived character; and it is a pity that he almost disappears from view towards the end of the book. Audrey Moore, whose guardian he is, has been brought up from a child in his house in a remote part of the country, with scarcely any education and no society whatever; so that it is hardly to be wondered at if she falls in love with her other guardian, named Lawrence, a man nearly twice her age, who sends her books, escorts her about London, and introduces her to a knowledge of the world. But the circumstances connected with her birth, which are carefully kept secret from her, and the private knowledge possessed by Lawrence, which prevents his coming forward to declare himself, are adroitly managed details which conduce to a highly respectable dénouement. Side by side with the main narrative are traced the fortunes of Valentine Eyre, a strong-minded young woman, reading for her medical degree, who unhesitatingly declines the proposals of a youthful country squire, but is afterwards induced to accept him under circumstances which are described with much genuine pathos and power.

To catalogue at length the shortcomings of John Bolt would be about as ungracious a task as to question to his face the credibility or the humour of an elderly gentleman's best after-dinner story. It is a tale of Old Haileybury and India, by a late member of the Bombay Civil Service, and to all appearance is the work of some genial, simple-minded old raconteur who has certainly not yet made himself master of the constitutive excellencies of modern literary style. In fact the book continually recalls the quaint simplicity of seventeenth century narrative; and this effect is not lessened by the circumstance that it is printed in thoroughly old-fashioned method, a single paragraph often extending over ten or a dozen pages, and containing within it as many separate dialogues, much as The Vicar of Wakefield used to be printed, and possibly is so printed still. There is something to be said for this method on the ground of economising space; but it certainly presents a heavy appearance to the eye, which is apt to suggest heaviness in the subject matter. The tale has the merit of being plain and unvarnished. John Bolt, a young Bombay Civil servant, is betrayed by his fiancée, Gertrude Clavering, who on the voyage out to join him elopes with Captain Douglas to Bengal. Twenty years after he falls in love with the faithless one's daughter, who—“matre pulchra filia pulchrior”—becomes an old man's darling, and nearly drives her husband wild with groundless jealousy. There are good descriptions of Indian life, and to some readers the naïveté of the book may appear delightful; but nothing can excuse the careless way in which the proof sheets have been examined. The errata slip prefixed to each volume does not nearly exhaust the orthographical errors that might be quoted, such as “beleive,” “assauge,” “effiminate,” and (oh, horror!) “mischevious” (vol. i., p. 262).

Let not the fact that Nemesis is explained as being “A Moral Story” lead readers of a serious and devout turn to suppose that Mr. Seaton Crewe has produced anything in the style of Mrs. Barbauld or Miss Edgeworth, or has attempted to demonstrate the connexion of early piety with a happy but premature death. That there is a moral, and an unexceptionable one, may be admitted, but this is not made clear until the penultimate chapter; and, in the meantime, the manner in which the story is told may appear a little shocking to people who do not understand or appreciate unrestrained freedom in the handling—whether as illustration, or as metaphor, or as theme for discussion—of all and every subject, sacred or profane, that may come to hand, from the Almighty down to fleabites. As indicated by its title, it is a tale of terrible retribution overtaking a man in middle life for a sin committed in early youth. Mr. Crewe is overflowing with irony, humour, and satire; and if his vein sometimes approaches last century coarseness, and sometimes finds vent in a flippancy with regard to sacred subjects more transatlantic than English, it cannot be denied that his book has a telling style and considerable literary merit.

Stephanie is an American novel, though by no means distinctively American in type. It is, indeed, nothing more than an agreeably written every-day story, not constructed with very strict attention to probabilities, but containing some well-executed characters. Stephanie's mother, the Princess de Kropotoff, marries as her second husband an American gentleman named Moore, who already has a grown-up daughter, Violet. Bertram Montgomery, upon whom Stephanie has bestowed her affection, unfortunately falls in love with Violet; and the step-mother's scheme for defeating the match, and securing Stephanie's happiness by a union with Bertram, forms the groundwork of the tale, but is not very ingeniously conceived. The chief personages of the story, together with Mr. Klein, a little idiotic ladies' man, are all fairly interesting.

In The Case of George Candlemas a praiseworthy attempt is made by Mr. George R. Sims to electrify his readers with a spectacle of farce, burlesque, and melodrama, all rolled into one. Probably no one but such an experienced master in the art of piling up stage effects by means of perplexing situations and accumulated mystery could have imagined such a mass of grotesque complications as are contained in the novellette under notice. Sir Arthur Strangeways appears first on the scene, burning with a desire to distinguish himself as an amateur detective, and put Scotland Yard to shame. Unluckily, the case upon which he first tries his hand is one in which, unknown to himself, he is personally implicated; and as the man he is tracking, and who has mysteriously disappeared, exactly resembles him in appearance, he falls into the hands of a professional detective, and is arrested as being his own murderer. The clearing up of the mystery by help of a balloon, a sporting "welsher," and a hollow oak tree, which conveniently holds the missing man prisoner for a week or so, is a fitting sequel to the extravagances that have preceded.

It would have been more gratifying both to her readers and her reviewers if Mrs. Walford had on this occasion given us one of those longer works, of the kind which have won for her her reputation. A paper-covered booklet seldom contains much matter worthy of either remembrance or comment. In The Havoc of a Smile Gregory Pomfret, the ugly duckling of the Pomfret family, despised by his mother and sisters, and altogether neglected and uncared-for, is taken up, out of mere kind-heartedness and pity, by Beatrice Andover, a handsome young heiress who has come to stay in the house, and proceeds to lose his heart to her, until rudely awakened from his dream. All that can be said of this short and slight tale is that it is worthy of the author, so far as it goes: the characters are skilfully drawn and the action is easy and natural.

"Every truth is born into the world amid yells of hatred," as the author of The Doctor's Secret somewhere remarks; and it is indisputable that the phenomena of mesmerism, after a century of contempt, have been acknowledged to admit of some sort of scientific generalisation, a circumstance of which novel-writers have not been slow to make use. But the latter would do well to confine themselves to the region of ascertained fact, and to recollect that when they get to dual existences, astral bodies, occult mesmeric influences, and the like, the legitimate border-line is passed, and fiction becomes lowered to the level of the ghost story and the fairy tale. It is to be regretted that a powerful and clever writer like Rita should allow her passion for the weird and impressive to run away with her, and should waste her vigorous descriptive talents upon a tissue of wild improbabilities. In The Doctor's Secret we follow with wonderment the mysterious career and fate of Madame Damaris Weimar, as related by John Marchmont, her medical man, but without a spark of the interest that is kindled by belief and appreciative sympathy.

J. BARROW ALLEN.

TWO BOOKS ON EDUCATION.

Lectures on Linguistic Method. By S. S. Laurie. (Cambridge: University Press.) Such a clatter has been raised of late years in the interests of the teaching of what is misnamed science, and blundering English opinion has been so unfairly prejudiced against the teaching of letters—except in the sense of commercial correspondence—that any authoritative expression of opinion on the other side is worth noting. Not but what any real teacher in the Kingdom and any real "educationist" would undoubtedly pronounce against the ridiculous pretence of filling young heads with disconnected "facts" which goes by the name of science-teaching in this country. But it still remains true that there is a general tendency to discourage serious linguistic study—a tendency easy to understand, but not the less deplorable because the direction of educational matters among us falls more and more into the hands of people whose interest in education is quite secondary to some other purpose, political, social, or commercial; to whom cultivation, conduct, ability, and the like are of far less importance than a general smattering of a great number of sciences, which seem more in the line of "practice." For a thorough statement of the genuine humanistic case no book known to us is so satisfactory as this of Prof. Laurie's. Making allowances for the superficial differences of the practical problem, these lectures should stand in the same relation to the current question of the relative merits as instruments of education of science and language as Mark Pattison's contribution to Essays and Reviews stood to the proper ordering of the chief university studies of his day. We may freely confess a prejudice in favour of anything that Prof. Laurie writes. We come to it expecting the results of a peculiarly ripe experience in pedagogic matters, set forth with the precision that marks the true man of science, and in the style of the practised man of letters. In this little book we get all that we expect; and to those who know anything of the author's previous works, this will be enough. It is pleasure and profit all through, and concerns not merely the teacher, but every one, truly, who likes a charming book on a subject of general interest. For the book itself—it is a series of eight lectures delivered first at Cambridge in 1889, and is a very thorough and plain discussion of the uses of language as an instrument in education, its disciplinary and training power, right methods, its use in teaching as literature, the method of teaching foreign tongues, and the like, in strict sequence. To summarise the subject matter would be impossible, except by transferring the author's own lucid abstract; but the point in which the book is especially strong is just that which in a plea for the humanities is particularly necessary. Prof. Laurie settles beyond all doubt, as it seems to us, the relative and supreme importance of language study as real, as strictly in contact with and strictly limited by things, and as being the best conciv-able instrument, if properly used, for setting minds in right relation to the facts that are most vital. In details, most striking and convincing are his reasons for deferring the study of grammar till the pupil has reached his twelfth year, and his protest against the premature employment of comparative philology in teaching language. And not the least useful part of the book is the short appendix of two pages on Method, or the rules of the art of instruction. We differ from Prof. Laurie on two points only. We cannot make out why he prefers "vocabulary" to "word," nor why he thinks Tennyson's flabby "May Queen" useful in any educational sense at all. So few of the many books on teaching are written by real teachers, so much of the educational work of the country is done by amateurs, that it is well to call attention to this masterly little series of essays. Our elementary schools and the teaching done in them are often left to be weighed and estimated by otherwise harmless men who have never taught a class in their lives. And when the best of our elementary teachers go up for a month to Oxford, they are lectured by some aspiring lecturer on right method in teaching who never taught in his life! From an atmosphere which tolerates imposture of this kind, it is entirely bracing to be invited in Prof. Laurie's company to see things as they are and as they should be.

Notes on American Schools and Colleges. By J. G. Fitch. (Macmillan.) Dr. Fitch, like Prof. Laurie, is—to use a phrase quoted by himself—a "perpetual inspiration." This holiday book of his is a most valuable addition to the list of his contributions to the history of modern education; and it will certainly be recognised as an authoritative record of an interesting, if chaotic, state of things in countries working out for themselves the right method of teaching and training. The author's serene superiority to prejudice leaves him free to judge fairly between ourselves and our cousins; and even the fact that Dr. Fitch himself has had so much to do with creating educational tradition—in elementary schools at least—in England does not prevent him from frankly pointing out where our relatives have surpassed the record made by ourselves. We rise from the reading of his book with the conviction that we are, after all, a good deal better than we thought. Taking the whole subject of education—lower, middle, and higher—as a system, we still have the better of it, though how long that may be it would be rash to prophecy. State initiative and variety in America, coupled with the almost universal uniformity which each State imposes within its own borders, leads on the one hand to a very confusing general system, and on the other to many iron-bound and cemented conditions which English teachers would never tolerate for a single year. We are often told how little we ourselves, and how much other people, spend on education. Some astounding misstatements and miscalculations to this effect from the pen of Dr. Hale in the Forum Dr. Fitch disposes of with all completeness. The American writer had set against the amount contributed by the imperial exchequer of England to assist public elementary education the whole sum spent by one American State on all its educational institutions of all kinds and grades. Dr. Fitch repeats and enforces his contention that classification is freer in England than in America. He points out how the rigid prescription of subjects to be taught, and even of books to be used, is the rule in the latter country; and how other conditions—for instance, the elective character of the school superintendent and the prescription of books—lead, like most other things in America, to the most shameful jobbery and tyranny. So much unfair and ungrateful criticism has been passed on Dr. Fitch's view of these matters, by some of his own countrymen who have been most deeply indebted to him, that it is satisfactory to feel that all impartial public opinion sides with him. It may not be possible to agree with Dr. Fitch in admiring the peculiar though superficially attractive system which makes the high school a continuation school from the elementary school; and we think that Prof. Laurie agrees with us in being inclined to prefer graded schools, in which there is a different plan and curriculum from the beginning, but each complete in itself. The State law of Massachusetts, we are told, requires a "high" (we should say an "elementary higher") school wherever there are five hundred inhabitants. This must be a counsel of perfection, but it would be well for us if we were bold enough in England to affirm even the desirability of such a scheme. Alas, we are too much afraid that there would be no one to black our boots a month after its initiation. How little our reformers care for pedagogic warning may be gathered from the reflection that both of the great English political parties profess themselves in favour of "free" elementary education, while the highest pedagogic authorities have pronounced against it. Dr. Fitch draws from certain figures he presents the probably just inference that the adoption of such a scheme does not favourably influence attendance. Every School Board in England that remits fees knows it, America knows it, Scotland knows it; and yet we shall probably be embarked on "free" elementary schools as soon as one party will allow the other to confer on the country this gift of the Greeks. A word may be added about the wisdom of the American rule which requires that a school "superintendent" (who corresponds generally to our "Inspector," but is more human) should be a teacher emeritus, or at least of some experience. It is monstrous that in England men should be made Inspectors who have never taught a class for half an hour. This is the real grievance that English elementary teachers have, and we hope to hear soon that some courageous Vice-President has enacted that before appointment to the inspectorate a man shall produce evidence of having taught efficiently somewhere, no matter where. We have only one fault to find with Dr. Fitch. Who would have thought that his American visit would have so corrupted his English that he should write "favor," "honor," "endeavor"?

SOME CLASSICAL SCHOOL BOOKS.

Cicero pro Roscio: with Introduction and Notes. By St. George Stock. (Oxford: Clarendon Press.) We cannot discover whether Mr. Stock is aware that Cicero wrote another speech in behalf of another Roscius; but the pro Roscio which he has chosen for his labours he has certainly adorned with a very useful commentary. The speech pro Roscio Amerino is offered by Oxford passmen for Moderations, and Mr. Stock brings to bear upon its elucidation the cunning of a practised teacher. He clears up the known difficulties; he warns the passmen of unsuspected pitfalls; he supplies many neat translations; and what more can be expected of an edition of this size? Many of the notes are models of well-digested information (as, for instance, on § 24, or on the mos majorum in § 100). It is very true also that "it imparts a new interest to Cicero's speeches" to compare his practice with what he had been taught to regard as the theory of rhetoric; and Mr. Stock has done well in prefixing to his commentary some account of the de Inventione. A careful consideration of the rules it gives, and the extent of Cicero's conformity to them, should alone suffice to lift the student's work up to a higher level of intelligence. Mr. Stock's own style is sometimes rather florid; but with his help "the small but well-armed tribe of examiners" may be met and defeated on its own ground.

The Annals of Tacitus, I.-VI. Edited by W. F. Allen. (Gien.) Prof. Allen, as the preface tells us, died very suddenly at the end of 1889, and his book, therefore, appears without the author's final touches. It is, however, as it stands, a very creditable piece of work. We should judge that Prof. Allen had paid less attention to the minute study of Tacitean Latin than to the history and usages of the reign of Tiberius; but in dealing with the latter class of subjects, his commentary leaves little to be desired for a "college series." The work is compact, and very full for its size; and the introductory matter puts students in quite the right position for understanding and enjoying what they are about to read. It was a happy thought, too, to supply the place of the missing parts of Bks. V.-VI. by extracts from Dion Cassius, Suetonius, and Juvenal. Not only is the gap thus to some extent filled; but the reader is made, on the one hand, to realise that Tacitus is a very different historian from Dion or Suetonius, and, on the other hand, to feel that there is a good deal in common between his style and the manner of the satirist. Juvenal and Tacitus alike are nothing if not graphic, biting, incisive. Where strict truthfulness ends and decorative treatment begins is a problem for the readers of either. It is curious that Prof. Allen did not point out the confusion which underlies the name Epidaphne in II. 83.

Platon's Gorgias. Für den Schulgebrauch herausgegeben von A. Th. Christ. (London: Williams and Norgate; Wien und Prag: Tempsky.) This is in some ways a very good school-book. It is small and cheap; it is well printed, with a large and handsome type. But it gives far less help to readers than we are accustomed to expect from either German or English school-texts. It contains an analysis of the dialogue, similar to that of Bonitz, and a descriptive index of proper names; but there are no notes whatever. The text is in the main that of Schanz. The introduction is a well-written account of the position of the art, or rather the knack, of rhetoric in the time of Gorgias.

NOTES AND NEWS.

MESSRS. LONGMANS announce for publication in the spring Persia and the Persian Question, in two volumes, by the Hon. George Curzon, author of "Russia in Central Asia and the Anglo-Russian Question." This book will be both a description of the travels of the author in all parts of Persia in 1889-90, and also an attempt to supply the want of an authoritative work upon Persia as a nation, and as a factor in the politics of the East. In the former aspect, it will contain an account of the principal provinces, cities, ancient ruins, and post or caravan routes in the country. In the latter, it will contain chapters upon Persian government, administration, resources, revenue, trade, the Persian army, British relations with Persia in the past and present, British and Russian policy in Persia as affecting the Central Asian problem, the future development of Persia, &c. Tables of distance and dates will be added, as well as a bibliography of all the principal works upon Persia in the chief European languages. The volumes will contain a large number of illustrations, chiefly from photographs and sketches made by the author.

THE Rev. T. A. Eaglesim, of the Birmingham Oratory, has undertaken the preparation of a shilling life of Cardinal Newman for the Catholic Truth Society—a body in which the late Cardinal took much interest. It was to a deputation from the Conference of this society, held in Birmingham at the beginning of July, that the Cardinal's last address was given.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN is about to publish a new theological work by the Rev. Dr. E. H. Bradby. As indicated by its title, The Books of the Bible Dated, it attempts to explain, by the light of Biblical criticism, the real chronological order of the various Scriptural writings. Where required, brief notices are given of the authorship and character of each book.

The Dawn of the English Reformation, by Mr. Henry Worsley, is announced for early publication, by Mr. Elliot Stock. This work, which is founded on fresh research among important documents, will deal fully with the causes which led to the Reformation, and give the history of its development.

A VOLUME by the Rev. Dr. Maclaren will be issued by Messrs. Alexander & Shephard in a few days. Under the title The Holy of Holies it will contain a series of discourses on the 14th, 15th, and 16th chapters of John's Gospel.

MESSRS. SWAN SONNENSCHNEIN & Co. will issue shortly a selection of some of the popular sermons of the late Bishop Lightfoot. The volume will form one of the "Contemporary Pulpit Library."

MESSRS. WILLIAM PATERSON & Co. are about to issue a new series entitled "The Treasure-House of Tales by Great Authors." The first four volumes will contain tales by Leigh Hunt, Lord Beaconsfield, Douglas Jerrold, and Mrs. Shelley. These tales, for the most part, have hitherto been uncollected, and will be quite new to the present generation of readers. Each volume will be prefaced by a memoir or critical notice—that of Mary Shelley written by Dr. Richard Garnett, of the British Museum; Leigh Hunt by Prof. W. Knight, of St. Andrews; Lord Beaconsfield by Mr. J. Logie Robertson ("Hugh Haliburton"). There will also be portraits of the several authors, which have been specially etched for the purpose by M. Ad. Lalauze.

MESSRS. DIGBY & LONG will publish immediately The Author's Manual, by Mr. Percy Russell, author of a volume of Australian tales and sketches entitled "A Journey to Lake Taupo," which was noticed in the ACADEMY of May 24. The object of his present book is to provide a practical guide to all departments of literary work, with special reference to poetry, fiction, and the drama. It is divided into two parts, dealing separately with journalism and book-producing.

IN the forthcoming number of the Universal Review there will be an article by Archdeacon Farrar entitled "About the Abbey." The paper will contain illustrations of various interesting portions of Westminster Abbey; among others, one of a secret staircase built in the thickness of the cloister wall, which has been but very recently discovered and opened. Dr. Richard Garnett will contribute to the same number a paper on Beckford's "Dreams."

MESSRS. A. BROWN & SONS, of Hull, will issue in a few days a work on Holy Trinity Church in that town, by the Rev. J. R. Boyle.

MESSRS. F. V. WHITE & Co. will publish this month two novels: B. M. Croker's Two Masters, in three volumes; and Margaret Byng, by F. C. Philips and Percy Fendall, in two volumes.

MESSRS. SWAN SONNENSCHNEIN & Co. announce a new novel by Mrs. J. Kent Spender, entitled Lady Hazleton's Confession, for publication in the early autumn.

MR. C. W. OLLEY, of Belfast, will shortly publish a new novel by Mr. John Shaw entitled An Actor's Daughter.

DR. LEON KELLNER, of Vienna, has just finished his "History of English Syntax," the first ever written, for his revised edition of the Rev. Dr. Richard Morris's Historical Outlines of English Accidence.

PROF. CARL HORSTMANN has completed the text of his first volume of the Minor Poems of the Vernon MS. in the Bodleian. He has the second volume at press; and when that is finished he will edit a third volume of prose, containing only those treatises of which the Vernon has the best text, englishings of Bonaventure's Stimulus Conscientiae, Edmund's Speculum, De Spiritu Guidonis, the complete "Abbey of the Holy Ghost," with its charter, and two Homilies on the Psalms Qui habitat and Bonum est confiteri.

DR. R. VON FLEISCHHACKER's edition of the late fourteenth-century englishing of Lanfranc's "Cyrurgie" is being read carefully for the Philological Society's New English Dictionary as the sheets appear. It takes back the whole set of surgical words from the Tudor period of the first printed medical books to about 1400 A.D., a date at which we are surprised to find "julep" in existence, and "pharmacy" too; though the latter—as "farmacie" and "Farmasye"—then meant "laxatives purgynge the colere and brent humours." The Dictionary much needs the publication of the earliest English MSS. of treatises on all our arts, trades, &c.

THE success of the Rev. Stopford A. Brooke's proposal to purchase Dove Cottage as a national memorial to Wordsworth may now be regarded as certain. About £660 has already been paid or promised towards the total sum of £1000 which is required to purchase the cottage and garden, and to put the place in good repair. The hon. treasurer is Mr. George S. Craik, 29 Bedford Street, Covent Garden.

THE eighth meeting of the International Congress of Americanists will be held in Paris from October 14 to 18. Questions relating to history and geography, archaeology, anthropology and ethnography, linguistics and palaeography, have been drawn up by the organising committee for the consideration of the congress. Communications regarding the forthcoming meeting should be addressed to M. Désiré Pector, 184, Boulevard Saint-Germain, Paris.

THE season for Norway being over, the enterprising Orient Company has arranged a pleasure cruise in the Chimborazo through the Mediterranean, as far as the Crimea, lasting about one month and a half. On the homeward voyage, a visit will be paid to the volcanic island of Santorin, in the Levant. As before, the guide-book for the cruise has been compiled by Lieut. G. Temple, who has given special attention to describing the battles of the Crimean War, and has illustrated their scenes from his own sketches. At the end, there is an excellent chart.

THE Lancashire folk-speech possesses a larger literature than most of the English dialects, and some of high quality; but the taste for it locally is much smaller than when Edwin Waugh, Ben. Brierley, and Sam. Laycock—to name only the chiefs of a band of writers—cultivated the folk-speech with great success, and made really artistic use of the peculiarities and characteristics of the people who had not then come under the levelling influences of the elementary schools as we now have them. What will be the ultimate effect of the School Board on the provincial dialects of England is not yet clear; but in the first instance it has apparently loosened their hold—at least in Lancashire—on the affections of the masses as a means of literary expression. Mr. J. T. Clegg, of Rochdale, who writes under the pseudonym of "Th' Owd Weighver," thus comes at the end rather than at the beginning of a renaissance which for more than thirty years has given dialect songs and sketches to the public of Lancashire. His Reound bi th' Derby (Rochdale: Wrigley) contains some genuine humour and some genuine poetry; but it suffers from prolixity, and as under the circumstances was almost inevitable, is to some extent an echo of the singers in the dialect of a past generation. In "Th' Owd Gam'" we have, however, an original note, which the author would do well to cultivate.

PRECENTOR VENABLES writes that the work he has undertaken with reference to the Lincoln documents was not accurately described in the ACADEMY of last week. The simple fact is that "I am editing the 'Louth Park Abbey Chronicle,' recently discovered—or, rather, I may say, re-discovered—for the Lincolnshire Record Society, with an appendix of documents relating to that foundation, gathered from the stores of the Record Office, rendered into English. But for these last I am indebted to the careful research and accurate knowledge of Mr. R. E. G. Kirk."

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

MESSRS. METHUEN will publish next spring an important work entitled The Colleges of Oxford: their History and their Traditions. The Rev. Andrew Clark, Fellow of Lincoln, is the editor, and the chapters are contributed by various well-known members of the university. The editor's aim is to make the story of each college descriptive of some characteristic phase of academical history.

PROF. WILLIAM WALLACE, Whyte's professor of moral philosophy at Oxford, has written a Life of Schopenhauer, which will be published as the October volume in the "Great Writers Series."

As the council of King's College, London, has decided not to fill up the chair of public reading and elocution, vacant by the resignation of Prof. A. D'Orsey, the duties will be undertaken by the Rev. H. C. Shuttleworth, Dr. Swete's successor in the professorship of pastoral theology.

THE history of the Oxford University Extension movement has been chronicled in a pamphlet, written by Mr. M. E. Sadler, secretary to the delegates, and Mr. H. J. Mackinder, reader in geography. Their appeal for pecuniary support from the State was endorsed at the recent conference by a majority of 107 votes to 12.

THE fourth annual series of vacation science courses at Edinburgh, organised by Prof. Patrick Geddes, was concluded last week. The characteristic of this scheme is that there were only four courses of twenty lectures each, arranged so that a student might easily attend two parallel courses. Prof. Geddes himself lectured on sociology, the principles of biology, and botany. The lectures were delivered, as in former years, at the marine laboratory at Granton; but the majority of the students, who numbered more than forty, resided at the University Hall, in Edinburgh, the new portion being reserved for women.

THE following is the list of provincial and colonial universities and colleges to which the Commissioners of the Exhibition of 1851 propose to award scholarships in science of £150 per annum, tenable for two years, as mentioned in the ACADEMY of August 23:—Scotch Universities—to Edinburgh and Glasgow, one scholarship each; and one in alternate years to St. Andrews (including Dundee University College) and Aberdeen; English provincial colleges—to Mason College, Birmingham; Bristol University College; the Durham College of Science, Newcastle; the Yorkshire College of Science, Leeds; Liverpool University College; Owens College, Manchester; Nottingham University College; and Firth College, Sheffield; one scholarship each; Welsh University Colleges—one scholarship in alternate years between Aberystwith, Bangor, and Cardiff; Ireland—two scholarships in each year between the Queen's Colleges at Belfast, Cork, and Galway, and the Royal College of Science, Dublin; Canada—one scholarship in alternate years to McGill College, Montreal, and Toronto University; Australia—two scholarships in each year between the universities of Sydney, Melbourne, Adelaide, and New Zealand.

IN view of the measure which the senate will shortly be called upon to discuss with regard to the creation of new universities in France, the ministry of public instruction has prepared a return showing the number of students who at present attend the different faculties. The total is 16,857, of whom 15,316 are Frenchmen and 1471 foreigners, as against only 9,863 fifteen years ago. Out of this total, 5,843 students attend the faculty of medicine, 4570 law, 1834 literature, 1590 pharmacy, 1276 science, and 101 Protestant theology. Rather more than half (8653) are students of the Paris faculties, and of the 1271 foreign students 1078 are in Paris. With regard to the nationality of the foreign students, there are 989 Europeans (313 Russians, 159 Roumanians, and 121 Turks), 201 Americans (of whom 173 come from the United States), 68 Africans (of whom 51 are Egyptians), 12 Asiatics, and one Australian. The great majority of these foreigners are studying medicine, as 907 belong to that faculty, while 240 are studying law, 58 science, 39 pharmacy, 24 literature, and 3 Protestant theology.

THE Revue Bleue for August 16 prints the inaugural lecture on "Semitic Antiquities," recently delivered by M. Clermont-Ganneau at the Collège de France.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

SUNDOWN.

BRIGHT sets the sun across the slumbering sea,
Touching with gold the ripples every one,
Gilding the sails that flap so lazily,

Bright sets the sun.
And hark! the winds and waters have begun
To breathe their serenade, fair moon, to thee—
To woo thy placid smile now day is done;
And at thy cloudy casement we can see
Thy form appearing, like a maiden won,
While o'er the world of waters far and free
Bright sets the sun.

ARTHUR L. SALMON.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE Expositor for September contains two really interesting biographical sketches: one of the late Prof. Elmslie by his friend, Prof. Harper of Melbourne; and the other of Cardinal Newman, by Mr. A. W. Hutton. The other articles are by Prof. Cheyne on Ps. lxxviii., by Prof. Bruce, on Heb. x. 25, &c., by Prof. Beet, on the New Testament Doctrine of the punishment of sin, and by Principal Dykes on "The Light of the World."

MR. SYDNEY YOUNG's paper on the barber surgeons of London in the Antiquary is amusing, though most of the facts to be found in it occur elsewhere. The engravings with which it is illustrated add to its interest, though we cannot say much in their favour as works of art. Mr. R. C. Hope continues his paper on Holy Wells. As he is, we believe, the first person who has endeavoured to compile a catalogue of the wells in this country to which spiritual powers are supposed to attach, we should be unjust were we to blame him for omissions. The Rev. E. M. Cole contributes a good paper on the Intrenchments on the Yorkshire Wolds. It is a subject of great ethnological interest, and Mr. Cole treats it with becoming modesty. The "Notes on the Month" contains a protest against the scheme of restoring the interior of Westminster Abbey. We trust that this wild notion will not be any more heard of. The idea of removing certain monuments because they are ugly, or because they commemorate certain people who it suits some persons not to consider great, is too painful to contemplate. We should have thought it impossible that such an iconoclastic notion could ever get beyond the newspaper stage had not recent events shown that nearly anything is possible where our old architecture is concerned. The same spirit which has permitted ignorance to have its way at St. Albans will certainly hand over Westminster to the destroyer if it be not carefully watched.

THE COMING PUBLISHING SEASON.

CLARENDON PRESS ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Theology, &c.—"Nouum Testamentum Domini Nostri Iesu Christi Latine, secundum Editionem S. Hieronymi," Ad Codd. MSS. fidem recensuit I. Wordsworth, Episcopus Sarisburiensis, in operis societatem adsumto H. I. White—Partis I., Fasc. II. "Euangelium secundum Marcum," "A Concordance to the Septuagint," edited by the late Dr. Edwin Hatch, and the Rev. H. A. Redpath, Fasc. I.; "The Peshito Version of the Gospels," edited by the Rev. G. H. Gwilliam; "Studia Biblica et Ecclesiastica," vol. iii., edited by Prof. Sanday; "Helps to the Study of the Prayer Book,"

Greek and Latin.—"A Grammar of the Homeric Dialect," by D. B. Monro, second edition; "Plato, Republic," Greek text, edited by Profs. Jowett and Lewis Campbell; "The Inscriptions of Cos," by W. R. Paton; "The Nicomachean Ethics of Aristotle," critical text, edited by I. Bywater; "Purves' Selections from Plato," new edition, by Evelyn Abbott; "The Memorabilia of Xenophon," edited by J. Marshall; "Noctes Manilianae," by Robinson Ellis; "Horace, The Satires, Epistles and De Arte Poetica," edited by the Rev. E. C. Wickham; "The Annals of Tacitus," edited by the Rev. H. Furneaux, vol. ii.; "Virgil, Æneid, vii-ix, and x-xii," edited by the Rev. T. L. Papillon and A. E. Haigh; "The Georgics of Virgil," edited by C. S. Jerram.

Oriental.—"Thesaurus Syriacus," editit R. Payne Smith, Fasc. IX.; "A Catalogue of the Turkish, Hindustani, and Pushtu MSS. in the Bodleian Library," by Dr. H. Ethé, Part II.; "A Catalogue of the Armenian MSS. in the Bodleian Library," by Dr. S. Baronian; "A Collotype Reproduction of the Ancient MS. of the Yasna, with its Pahlavi Translation, A.D. 1323, in the possession of the Bodleian Library,"; "Lessons in Tamil," by the Rev. Dr. G. U. Pope, second edition.

General Literature.—"The Arthurian Legend," by Prof. Rhys; "Melanesian Anthropology," by the Rev. Dr. R. H. Codrington; "The Prince of Machiavelli," edited, with Introduction and Notes, by L. A. Burd; "Catalogue of Rawlinson MSS. D. in the Bodleian Library," by the Rev. W. D. Macray; "Hymns and Chorales for Colleges and Schools," selected and edited by John Farmer.

Modern Languages.—"A Finnish Grammar," by C. N. E. Eliot; "Specimens of Mediaeval French," edited by Paget Toynbee.

History, Law, &c.—"The Landnáma-Bók," edited by the late G. Vigfusson and F. York Powell; "The Gild Merchant: a Contribution to English Municipal History," by Dr. C. Gross, in two vols; "Early-English Land Tenure," by Prof. P. Vinogradoff, vol. i.; "A History of England from the Accession of Henry IV. to the Battle of Bosworth Field," by Sir James H. Ramsay, in two vols; "A History of Sicily," by Prof. Freeman, vols. i. and ii.; "A History of America," by E. J. Payne, vol. i.; "Italy and her Invaders," by Dr. T. Hodgkin, vols. i. and ii., new edition; "A Historical Geography of the British Colonies," by C. P. Lucas, vol. ii.; "A Geographical Study of the Dominion of Canada," by the Rev. W. Parr Greswell; "Two of the Saxon Chronicles Parallel," a revised text, edited by the Rev. C. Plummer, on the basis of an edition by Prof. J. Earle; "The Song of Lewes," edited with Introduction, Notes, and Translation, by C. L. Kingsford; "Bentham's Fragment on Government," edited by F. C. Montague; "Law and Custom of the Constitution," part ii.—The Executive, by Sir W. R. Anson; "The Land-Revenue Systems and Tenures of British India," by B. H. Baden-Powell.

The English Language and Literature.—"Bosworth's Anglo-Saxon Dictionary," part iv., edited by Prof. T. N. Toller; "Principles of English Etymology," second series, "The Foreign Element," by Prof. Skeat; "A New English Dictionary, founded mainly on the Materials collected by the Philological Society," vol. ii., part 3 (beginning with clo), edited by Dr. J. A. H. Murray; and vol. iii., part 1 (beginning with the letter e), edited by Henry Bradley; "Stratmann's Middle-English Dictionary," new edition, re-arranged, revised, and enlarged, by Henry Bradley; "Synopsis of Old-English Phonology," by the Rev. A. L. Mayhew; "A Translation of the Beowulf in English Prose," by Prof. Earle; "Chaucer's Canterbury Tales," edited by Prof. Skeat, 2 vols.; "Chaucer's Prologue to the Canterbury Tales," edited, for beginners, by Prof. Skeat; "Shakespeare's Henry the Eighth," edited by W. Aldis Wright; "Bunyan's Holy War," &c., edited by Edward Peacock; "Bacon's Essays," edited by the Rev. S. H. Reynolds; "Selections from Swift," edited by Henry Craik; "The Worldly Wisdom of Lord Chesterfield," edited by Dr. G. Birkbeck Hill; "Shelley's Adonais," edited by W. M. Rossetti; "Scott's Lady of the Lake," edited by Prof. Minto.

Mathematics, Physical Science, &c.—"Mathematical Papers of the late Henry J. S. Smith, Savilian Professor of Geometry in the University of Oxford," with portrait and memoir, in two vols.; "A Treatise on Electricity and Magnetism," by the late J. Clerk Maxwell, new edition; "An Introduction to the Mathematics of Electricity," by W. T. A. Emtage; "A Manual of Crystallography," by Prof. Story-Maskelyne; Translations of Foreign Biological Memoirs, III.: "Contributions to the History of the Physiology of the Nervous System," by Prof. Conrad Eckhard, translated by Miss Edith France; a translation of Prof. Van't Hoff's "Dix Années dans l'Histoire d'une Théorie," by J. E. Marsh; Count H. von Solms-Laubach's "Introduction to Fossil Botany," translated by the Rev. H. E. F. Garnsey, and edited by Prof. I. Bayley Balfour.

Sacred Books of the East.—Vol. xxx., The Grihya-Sūtras, translated by Prof. Oldenberg, Part ii.; Vol. xxxii., Vedic Hymns, translated by Prof. Max Müller, Part i.; Vol. xxxvii., The Contents of the Nasks, as stated in the Eighth and Ninth Books of the Dinkard, translated by Dr. E. W. West; Vols. xxxix., xl., The Sacred Books of China: Tào Teh King, translated by Prof. James Legge.

Anecdota Series.—Collations and Extracts of the Kāṇva text of the Satapathabrāhmaṇa, i.-iv., by Prof. J. Eggeling; Firdausi's "Yūsuf and Zalikhā," edited by Prof. H. Ethé; "A Collation of the Greek text of portions of Aristotle with Ancient Armenian Versions," by F. C. Conybeare; "Collations from the Harleian MS. of Cicero" (2682), by A. C. Clark; "The Elucidarium," edited from a dated Welsh MS. of the fourteenth century, by Prof. Rhys, and J. M. Jones; "A MS. Work of Bishop Bale" (Seld. supra, 64), edited by R. L. Poole.

Rulers of India Series.—"Asoka: and the Political Organisation of Ancient India," by Prof. Rhys-Davids; "Aurangzeb: and the Decay of the Mughal Empire," by Sir W. W. Hunter; "Lord Clive: and the Establishment of the English in India," by Prof. Seeley; "Warren Hastings: and the Founding of the British Administration," by Capt. L. J. Trotter; "Ranjit Singh: and the Sikh barrier between our Growing Empire and Central Asia," by Sir Lepel Griffin; "Mountstuart Elphinstone: and the Making of South-Western India," by J. S. Cotton; "Lord William Bentinck: and the Company as a Governing and Non-trading Power," by Demetrius Boulger; "Lord Clyde: and the Suppression of the Great Revolt," by Major-General Sir Owen Tudor Burne; "Earl Canning: and the Transfer of India from the Company to the Crown," by Sir Henry S. Cunningham; "The Earl of Mayo: and the Consolidation of the Queen's Rule in India," by Sir W. W. Hunter.

MESSRS. GRIFFITH, FARRAN, OKEDEN AND WELSH'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Coloured Story-Books for the Young.—"Told by the Fireside," original stories by E. Nesbit, Helen Milman, L. T. Meade, Mrs. Worthington Bliss, Mrs. Molesworth, Rowe Lingston, M. C. Lee, Mrs. Mackay, G. Manville Fenn, Alice Weber, E. M. Green, Edward Garrett, Theo. Gift, Mrs. Gellie, the Rev. Forbes E. Winslow, Emma Marshall—illustrated with 16 coloured and 80 black-and-white pictures by Mrs. Seymour Lucas; "Over the Sea: Stories of Two Worlds," edited by A. Patchett Martin, told by Mrs. Campbell Praed, "Tasma," Mrs. Patchett Martin, Miss M. Senior Clark, Countess De La Warr, F. E. Weatherly, Hume Nisbet, H. B. Marriott Watson, with 8 coloured and 40 black-and-white illustrations by H. J. Johnstone, T. J. Hughes, R. Carrick, Emily J. Harding, Marcella Walker, A. J. Wall, Miss C. M. Watts; "Hearts and Voices: Songs of the Better Land," with 8 coloured illustrations by Henry Ryland, and 30 black-and-white by Ellen Welby, Charlotte Spiers, May Bowley, and G. C. Haité; "John Chinaman at Home," description verified by Rowe Lingstone, illustrated in colour by R. A. Jaumann.

Books for the Young, Illustrated in Black-and-White.—"Stories for Somebody," by Edith Carrington, profusely illustrated by Dorothy Tennant (Mrs. H. M. Stanley); "When we were Children," by E. M. Green, with 50 illustrations by W. Burton; "The Little Ladies," by Helen Milman, with 50 illustrations by Emily J. Harding; "Young People and Old Pictures," by Theodore Child, with numerous engravings from pictures by the old masters dealing with child life; "Christmas Rhymes and New Year's Chimes," by Mary D. Brine, illustrated by J. C. Shepherd, J. McDermott, C. A. Northam, A. Ledyard, D. Clinton Peters; "A Treasury of Pleasure Books for the Young," being a collection of nursery favourites, illustrated by A. Chasemore, W. Gibbons, E. Morant Cox and John Proctor.

Illustrated Story Books.—"Cutlass and Cudgel: a Tale of the Old South Coast," by George Manville Fenn, illustrated by H. Schönlund; "Steady and Strong; or, a Friend in Need," by R. M. Freeman, illustrated by A.

Foorde Hughes; "In the Enemy's Country," by A. H. Drury, illustrated by H. Petherwick; "The Slave Prince," by Archdeacon Chiswell, illustrated by A. W. Cooper; "The Miller's Daughter," by Anne Beale, illustrated by Marcella Walker; "Crooked S," by Austin Clare, illustrated by John Leighton. "Poor and Plain: a Story for the Elder Girls," by Mrs. Seymour, illustrated by A. Hitchcock; "Cathedral Bells," by Vin Vincent, a new edition, illustrated by W. Rainey.

The Girls' Own Favourite Library.—"The Girls' Own Poetry Book," edited by E. Davenport; "The Queen of the Rancho," by Mrs. Hornibrook and J. L. Hornibrook, illustrated by John Proctor; "At All Cost," by C. Holroyd, illustrated by A. M. Fenn; "Winning her Way; or, Left in Difficulties," by E. Malcolm Turner, illustrated by A. Hitchcock.

The Coronet Library.—"The Log of the 'Bombastes,'" by Henry Frith, illustrated by Walter W. May; "The Rajah's Legacy; or, the Secret of a Hindoo Temple," by David Ker, illustrated by A. W. Cooper; "The Little Colonists; or, King Penguin's Land," by Theo Gift; "Claude and Claudia," by Mrs. Herbert Martin, illustrated by Caroline Paterson; "True of Heart," by Kay Spen, illustrated by A. H. Collins; "Rollica Reed," by Eliza Kerr, illustrated by Annie S. Fenn.

Instructive and Useful Books.—"Triumphs of Modern Engineering," by Henry Frith, illustrated; "The Way to Win: How to Succeed in Life," by John T. Dale; "Gleanings for the Curious from the Harvest Field of Literature," collated by Dr. C. C. Bombaugh.

The Half-crown Historical Library.—"True Stories from French History," compiled by N. M. Paul, illustrated; "True Stories from Italian History," by F. Bayford Harrison, illustrated; "Castles and their Heroes," "Heroes of the Crusades," and "Tales of the Saracens," by Mrs. Alexander (Barbara Hutton), illustrated.

Miscellaneous.—"The Letters of S. G. O.," a series of Letters on Public Affairs written by the Rev. Lord Sidney Godolphin Osborne, and published in the Times, 1844-1888, edited by Arnold White; "Political and Social Letters of a Lady of the Eighteenth Century," being the Correspondence of the Hon. Mrs. Osborn during the years 1721-1771, edited by Emily F. D. Osborn, with four photogravures, printed on hand-made paper; "XVI. Lay Sermons and Clerical Lectures": "The Conduct of Life," by Sir John Lubbock; "Music," by Canon Barker; "The Health of the Mind," by Dr. Benjamin Ward Richardson; "What is a Gentleman?" by the Rev. Freeman Wills; "Relations of the Church and Stage," by Edward Terry; "Physical Training," by Herbert Gladstone; "The Religious Aspect of Science," by William Lant Carpenter; "Sentiment," by Arnold White; "The Evening," by the Rev. Arthur Mursell; "Moral Courage, as Exemplified in the Lives of Bishops Patteson and Selwyn," by Miss Patteson; "The Drama in Blue and White," by Henry Arthur Jones; "On the Side of the Angels," by the Rev. Freeman Wills; "Cleanliness next to Godliness," by Dr. Benjamin Ward Richardson; "Is the Game worth the Candle?" by the Rev. R. Cynon Lewis; "Earth to Earth," by Dr. Danford Thomas; "Caught in the Tropics": a Sequel to "In Pursuit of a Shadow," by a Lady Astronomer; "Sonnets," by R. E. Lofft; "The Life of Benjamin Franklin," written by himself, now first edited from original MSS. and from his printed correspondence and other writings, by John Bigelow, in 3 vols; "Belle-rue": a religious novel, by the author of "Shiloh"; "The History of the Rat-Tailed Grey; or, The Curate in Charge," by W. J.

Hodgson, illustrated; "Betrayed by a Shadow," by Raven Dean; "The Newberry Classics," a New Edition of the Poets: The following volumes will be published during the autumn—Longfellow, Scott, Mrs. Browning; "Songs for Elementary Schools," a companion volume to "Hymns for Elementary Schools," set to music by S. C. Cooke, A. Scott Gatty, and Sir John Stainer, words by Edward Oxenford; "Notation": an Intelligent Method of Teaching Numbers, for Infant Schools, by H. L. Wilson; Sixpenny Edition of "The Three Lieutenants," by W. H. G. Kingston; "The Life of our Lord, for the Little Ones," by W. Chatterton Dix.

MESSRS. HUTCHINSON & Co.'s ANNOUNCEMENTS.

"The Life and Reminiscences of E. L. Blanchard," with notes from the diary of William Blanchard, by Clement Scott, in 2 volumes; "The Australasian Dictionary of Biography," comprising notices of eminent colonists from the inauguration of Responsible government down to the present time, by Philip Minnell; "The Poets and Poetry of the Century," edited by A. H. Miles, in 8 volumes; "Nut-shell Novels," by J. Ashby Sterry; "Mount Eden," a romance by Florence Marryat; "Love and Mirage, or, the Waiting on an Island," by M. Betham Edwards; "Wedded," by Robert Overton; "A Handy Guide to Australasia," with maps, by G. Collins Levey; a cheap edition of Dean Vaughan's works in 10 volumes; "Demonstrations of Arithmetic," by Clement Davies; "The Low Backed Car," with original photogravures and wood engravings, by William Magrath; a fine paper edition of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," with the original illustrations, by George Cruikshank; "From Middy to Admiral of the Fleet," the Story of Commodore Anson, by Dr. Macaulay; "Up North in a Whaler," by E. A. Rand.

NOTES FROM THE LINCOLN REGISTERS.

I.

IN the list of those who are accurst in the Province of Canterbury, entered in Bishop Gray's Register, leaf 173, are "all bei pat vseth eny wychecrafte, or gyfe berto feyth or credence;" and the William Ayleward of Henley, named in the last number of the ACADEMY, confessed (in 1464) to having used a charm for chincough:

"Item he knowledged that he cam before Bishop Askhow, sumtyme bishop of Sarum, for he vseth a charme for children that had the Chynkow; And he wold take a gad of Stele, and put it in watir fire hote, and with his lengist fynger he wold put iij dropes in the sick child's mowthe; And then he wold inioyne the fader and moder of the child to say v tymes pater noster &c., & as many Ave marias, &c.: the which he forswore, as he said."—Bishop Chedworth's Register, leaf 61.

There are several professions of future chastity by widows, of which the following—by Joan Boleyn, about 1440 A.D.—is a specimen, from Bishop Alnwick's Register (1436-50), leaf 54:

"In þe name of the Fader, þe son, and þe holy goste, I, Johan Boleyn, a wydowe, and not wedded, ne to man sured, behote and make avowe to god and to oure lady and all þe company of heven, in þe presence of you, worshipfull fader in god, Sir William, by þe grace of god, Bysshop of lincoln, for to be chaste of my body / and truly and deuotely shall kepe me chaste frome þis tyme forwarde, as long as my lyffe lastys, after þe rule of seynt poull / and with my nawn hand I con-sygne and conferme his."

We may well take next the profession of Sister Constance (and two other sisters, Petronell and Anne) of the Benedictine Monastery of Little Marlowe, Bucks, in August, 1527, from the Register of Bishop Longland (1521-47), leaf. 85:

"IN THE NAME OF GOD, AMEN! I, suster Constance / petronell / Anne / In the presence of almighty god and our blessed lady seint mary, patrone of this monastery, and all anngelles, and seintes of heven, and of you, reverend fadour in god, John, bishope of lincoln and ordynary of this diocesse / And in the presence of all this honorable witnes / vowe, offerre, and fuly gyve my self to serue allmighty god duryng my lyffe naturall, in this monastery of lyttle marlowe, dedicate in the honour of god and our blessed lady seint Mary.

"And for this intent and purpose, I here renounce for ever, and utterly forsake, the world and propriety [ownership] of temporall substaunce and goodes of the same, And all other wordly delights and pleasures, takyng upon me wilfull poverty / vowing also and promysing ever to lyve in pure chastite duryng my lyffe, To chaunge my seculer lyffe into regular conversacion and religyouse maner / Promysing and vowing dewe reuerence and obedience vnto you, Reuerend fadour in god, John, bishophe of lincoln, and your successors byshoppes / And vnto my lady, and another Dame Margaret, nowe prioressse of this monastery, and to her successors, prioresses of the same /

"And vtterly from hensforth I forsake myn own propre wyll, and nott to folowe the same, butt to folowe the will of my superior in all lawfull and canonycke commandements / And to obserue this holy ordre and religion, accordyng to the holy rule of Seint benedecte, and all the laudable constitutions of this monastery, by the gracious assistance of our lord Jhesu christe. In wytnes whereof, I doo putt a signe with myn own hande to this my profession.

"Relique vero due sorores, vota et professiones sua, eisdem verbis emisserunt / Et quibet ipsarum, propriam suam professionem signo crucis subsignavit tunc ibidem. Presentibus, Magistris luca longland, armigero / Michaele Smale, henrico White, artium magistris / dominis hugone Mathewe and Johanne Roggers, capellanis, ac alijs quamplurimis, &c."

As I do not know how many other of Bishop Longland's English Injunctions have been printed in the Archaeologia, I forbear for the present to make extracts from these for Nun-cotton and Studley, and pass on to what surprised me most in the Registers, a Rector's Lease in 1569, not only of his parsonage-house, glebe, tithes, and offerings, but of his church and rectory too, which, I assume, included the advowson. This late lease is stuck into Bishop Chedworth's earlier Register of 1452-72, and begins on leaf 43 of the second numbering. The indenture is dated April 1 in 11 Elizabeth, and is made between "William Clarke, parson of the church and rectorie of Benyngworth [now Benniworth] in the countie of Lincoln, clarke, of thone partie, and William Heneage, of Beningworth aforesaid," gentleman. It witnesses that

"the said William Clarke, upon dyverse good considerations him speciallie moving . . . for him & his successors, parsones of the same church & rectorie, doth demyse . . . vnto the said William Heneage, his executors & assignes, all that his church, rectorie, & parsonage of Beningworth aforesaid, & all the mansion place of the said rectorie & parsonage, with all houses, barns, stables, & other edifices . . . Together with all the glebe landes . . . rentes, tithes . . . ffree chappells, oblacions, offerings, frewtes, obventions . . . To haue & to hold . . . the premises . . . to the said William Heneage his executors & assignes, from y<sup>e</sup> feast of St. Mark the Evangelist next ensuewing the date hereof, vnto the full ende and terme of Three score and seuen yerres. . . . Yeldinge and payinge therefore yearlie to the said Sir William Clarke & his successors, parsones of the said church & rectorie of beningworth aforesaid, Twenntie and fower pounds of good and lawfull englysh money at ij termes in the yeare (that is to say) at the feast of St. Martyne in wynter [Martlemas Day], & St. Mark the Evangelist, by even porcions."

Here then, is a layman, for £24 a year, put into full possession of all the rector's property and dues as rector, the latter retaining only the spiritual duty or cure of souls. This he covenants with his lessee to fulfill as follows:

"That he, the said William Clarke, his successors & assigns, at their owne proper costes and charges, during the said terme, shall (eyther by them selves or by some other honest, able, and sufficient parson) serve & keep the Cure ther. to syng and say devyne service dayley, & to minister the devyne Sacraments, and to preache or cause to be preached yearleie in the said parish church, fower seuerall Sermons according to gods hollic word, to the parishioners ther inhabiting during the terme aforesayd."

On asking the Dean of Lincoln whether he had ever heard of a like curious case, he kindly hunted up for me a somewhat similar one in the late Hugh Pearson's Memorials of the Church and Parish of Sonning (Reading, 1890), at p. 158. On the death of a vicar, Robert Chambers, Vincent Tribe was instituted July 12, 1568, on the presentation of William Barker, lessee of the rectory . . . not by the Dean, as heretofore.

"A new system in the tenure of church property was introduced by Queen Elizabeth, viz., the leasing for terms of lives or years, of lands or titles hitherto held in person by Church dignitaries. . . . William Barker, we conclude, was the first lessee of the Great Tithes of Sonning, under the Dean, on a lease for lives; and it would appear that the right of presentation to the Vicarage was included in this lease, and so continued for about a hundred years."

The Henneages now own the advowson of Ben-niworth. Whether they brought the reversion of it after their 70 years' lease, or continued to hold it wrongfully, I cannot say. If any reader of the ACADEMY can give me a parallel to Clarke's lease of his church and house as well as his tithes and glebe, &c., he will oblige me,

F. J. FURNIVALL.

LETTERS, IN PART UNPUBLISHED, OF SAMUEL PEPYS.*

IV.

Ballard Letters, Vol. I.

FOL. 164.—PEPYS TO DR. CHARLETT.

June 25, 1699.

Reverend Sr,—My Cosen Gale (who's Relation is drawn much closer to mee by y<sup>e</sup> Character you give him) brings mee fresh Prooves of a Truth I knew but too well before, I meane your partialitys for mee, unless I knew as well how to retaliate 'm. Hee indeed seems at his first visitt (w<sup>ch</sup> was yesterday) to invite mee to thinke, you doe not wholly flatter his Father or mee concerning him; but I will know more of him, before I quite believe you.

Mr Isted found him with mee in a larger Circle of Philosophers then I have had about mee at once a great While, & all your Honourers. At whose returne from Oxford (whither I finde hee is going, & brings this my thanks for yo<sup>r</sup> last by my Kinsman) I will doe my Cosen y<sup>e</sup> Honour to bee made more known to him.

Your very talke of Yorke-Stayres obliges mee; what therefore would y<sup>e</sup> seeing our Reverend Dr Wallis & you there, doe? Therefore pray make it more then Talke, if you can.

Pray lett not Mr Wanly bee too much press'd with my Demands; for I know his hands & Eyes are full; & of what should not bee interrupted; & therefore I shall contentedly stay his Leasure, without thinking my selfe ill used. And see most respectf<sup>ly</sup> Adieu. . . .

FOL. 165.—THE SAME TO THE SAME.

Clapham: October 29th, 1700.

Reverend Sr,—As impatient as I am to bee among my old Friends againe (as you know who call'd them) My Books; my Friends on this side y<sup>e</sup> Water are obstinately bent to prevent it, as long as there is one Mouthfull of serene ayre to bee hoped-for this Season; & therefore to render my stay in it y<sup>e</sup> lesse burthensome to mee, have putt mee upon severall little excursions of late into y<sup>e</sup> Neighbourhood, that must excuse my noe sooner acknowledging (as I now most thankfully doe) and answering, your too kinde Letter of y<sup>e</sup> 6th instant, & a later of y<sup>e</sup> 15th. Bee assured, that I won't bee 3 Days in Towne (& that at farthest can't now bee 10 Days off) before I fall to worke with Sr Godfrey Kneller, with y<sup>e</sup> Materialls you have given mee, to procure his compliance wth what we have to aske of him; y<sup>e</sup> state of my owne present Health making mee as sollicitous to secure to my selfe y<sup>e</sup> Honour of doing it, as that of my Reverend & Learned Friend y<sup>e</sup> Doctor's makes it unfit, with respect to his Satisfaction (since hee is pleas'd to take it soe) to yours, & to y<sup>e</sup> Vniversity's, that any Time should bee lost in y<sup>e</sup> having it done. And a most welcome pleasure it would bee to me, to thinke, that what I doe herein could passe for y<sup>e</sup> least Instance of that Veneration, which I should be glad to have opportunities of sheweing greater marks of, towards him. Nor should this (as you know) have been to doe now, had not the Hopes you & I had entertain'd of tempting him some time or other downe by Water to York-Stayres kept mee under an Expectation (by yo<sup>r</sup> Favour) of getting it done here.

Nor would I despayre of what you have in wish, & perhaps in view, abt K. Alfred's head from Dr Ratcliffe; but I have a word to say to you first upon it, if you would employ mee to him in it. I have not yet seen yo<sup>r</sup> Book of Verses, and soe can make you noe present Returne upon yo<sup>r</sup> Complim<sup>t</sup> therein to our 2 Painters.

I know not which of your Misreckonings to finde fault with most; that of our Learned Doctor's, in placing mee on soe neare a Levell in any respect with our late great Chancellor y<sup>e</sup> Lord Somers (y<sup>e</sup> first Meernas of y<sup>e</sup> Age), or Yours, in thinkeing mee a fitt Man to bee ask'd Questions upon anything that has pass'd the Thought of y<sup>e</sup> most learned Professor & my most honour'd friend Dr Gregory. Nevertheless, leaving the former's to be answer'd-for among y<sup>e</sup> venerable Frailty's of his Age & Goodnesse of Nature, I cannot bee so squeamish or remisse in y<sup>e</sup> Labour, as not to take another Post (having a little forraigne Worke extraordinary for this) to see whither it bee possible, for any one usefull Thought to occur to mee, that could escape Dr Gregory, upon a Subject soe Noble, & of which hee is soe absolute a Maister.

FOL. 168.—THE SAME TO THE SAME.*

Clapham: November 5th, 1700.

Reverend Sr,—I have (because you will have it soe) taken on mee y<sup>e</sup> overlooking my learned friend Dr Gregory's Scheme; but (as I expected) must send it you back as I receiv'd it, findeing noe roome for Animadversion upon any word of it, as to y<sup>e</sup> Scientifick Part at least; whatever, as a Stranger, I might take leave to aske, touching its Aptnesse for Execution, under y<sup>e</sup> Number of Students it seems limited to, & those of each Classe suppos'd all of equal Sufficiencys at their Outsett, & noe lesse equal Addition, Application, & Tractableness in their Progress.

I dare not nevertheless doubt, but this has had its full Consideration with him, who can best judge of it; & that other Point too, of its being to bee executed all in English. Which, though my selfe doe most entirely acquiesce in y<sup>e</sup> present Necessity of; yet how farr it may elcewhere bee thought, to affect y<sup>e</sup> Honour of y<sup>e</sup> Vniversity, your selves are most concern'd to determine.

But as little Qualify'd as I truly am, for offering Ought upon a Scheme, digested with y<sup>e</sup> thoughtfulness & Skill of its learned Author, legible in every Line of it. The Termes nevertheless wherein you require my Opinion & Advice concerning it, joynd with y<sup>e</sup> Dignity of its Subject & Quality of y<sup>e</sup> Persons for whom 'tis calculated are soe forcible; that I cannot omitt my observing to you, my misseing Two Things, which (as much as they may indeed bee thought imply'd therein) seem yet to Mee, to meritt being noe lesse expressly provided for in it, then any other y<sup>e</sup> most weighty Article (that of y<sup>e</sup> Elements excepted) of all its noble Contents: I say, seeme soe to Mee; whose greatest Concernment for its Successse, is owing (I must confesse) to y<sup>e</sup> Consideration last mention'd, & which You have ledd mee to, of its being primarily destin'd to y<sup>e</sup> Service & Improvement of y<sup>e</sup> Youth of our Nobility & Gentry, y<sup>e</sup> choicest & once brightest Ornament of our Nation; and which, if now Otherwise (as they indeed seeme most to complaine, whom I take to have most to answer for it) would still bee soe, were they not (as I feare they at this day mostly are) too soone betray'd to y<sup>e</sup> more Grosse, Contagious, & Destructive Pleasures wayteing them without Doors, for want of an early Ins[t]itution, in y<sup>e</sup> Variety of generous Exercizes & Accomplishments you are here preparing for them; pleasant in y<sup>e</sup> Acquireing, easy in y<sup>e</sup> Retayneing, ever Vsefull, ever Delightfull, suted to y<sup>e</sup> Dignity of their Characters & Fortunes, & (to crowne all) lying allways within their owne Reach, fitt for Self-Entertainment & Home-Execution.

* Draft printed (in modern spelling) Diary and Corresp., pp. 723 sqq. It has seem'd worth while to reprint it here, as it is not included in Bohn's edition.

To which what I would now recomend to yo<sup>r</sup> giving y<sup>e</sup> same Regard to, with y<sup>e</sup> Particulars therein, is, first, Musique. A Science peculiarly productive of a Pleasure, that Noe State of Life, publick or private, Secular or Sacred; Noe Difference of Age or Season; Noe Temper of Minde; or Condition of Health, exempt from present Anguish; Nor, lastly, Distinction of Quality, renders either Improper, Vntimely, or Vnentertainyng. Wittnesse, y<sup>e</sup> Unversell'd Gusto wee see it follow'd with, wherever to bee found, by all whose Leasure and Purse can beare it; while y<sup>e</sup> same might to much better Effect, both for Variety and Delight, to themselves & friends, bee ever to bee had, within their owne Walls, & of their owne composures too as well as others; were y<sup>e</sup> Doctrine of it brought within y<sup>e</sup> Simplicity, Perspicuity, and Certainty comon to all other the Parts of Mathematick Knowledge, and of Which I take this to bee equally capable, with any of them; in Lieu of that fruitlesse Jargon of obsolete Termes; & other unnecessary Perplexity's & Obscurity's, wherewith it has been ever hitherto deliver'd; and from Which, as I know of Nothing eminent, or even tolerable left us by y<sup>e</sup> Ancients; soe neither have I mett with One Moderne Maister (forreigne or domestick) owneing y<sup>e</sup> least Obligation to it, for any their now Nobler Compositions; but on y<sup>e</sup> Contrary, chargeing all (& justly too) upon y<sup>e</sup> Happinesse of their own Genius only, joynd with y<sup>e</sup> Drudgery of a long & unassisted Practice. A Condition not to bee look'd-for, from y<sup>e</sup> more Generous & Elevated Spirits of those wee are here concern'd for; and therefore most deserving, as well as most needeing, y<sup>e</sup> Ability's & Application of our present most learned Professor, to remedy.

My other Want is, what possibly may bee thought of lesse Weight, but what nevertheless holds noe lower a Place with mee on this Occasion (whither for Ornament, Delight, Solid Vse, or Easinesse of Carriage, both at Home & Abroad) then any One other Quality a Gentleman can beare about him; though None lesse thought-on, or (which is more) of lesse Difficulty in y<sup>e</sup> attayning; as requiring a small Portion only of y<sup>e</sup> Worke of y<sup>e</sup> Second, assisted with as little as that of y<sup>e</sup> Fifth Classe, I meane Perspective: not barely as falling within y<sup>e</sup> Explication of Vision, or serving only to y<sup>e</sup> laying downe of Objects of Sight; but with y<sup>e</sup> Improvement of it, to y<sup>e</sup> enabling our Honourable Student gracefully to finish & embellish y<sup>e</sup> same with its just Heightenings & Shadowings, as farr as expressible in Black & White: thereby, when in forreigne Travell, to know how by his owne Skill, to entertaine himselfe in taking y<sup>e</sup> Appearances of all hee meets with of Remarkable, whether of Palaces or other Fabricks, Ruines, Fortifications, Ports, Moles, or other publique Views, convertible to y<sup>e</sup> Delight or Service of Himselfe, his Friends, or Country at his Returne. And when at Home to give himselfe y<sup>e</sup> Pleasure & Benefit (on all Occasions of Surveyeing, Building, or other) of being his owne Surveyour & Designer; & with it, of Judging, Correcting, & Improving y<sup>e</sup> Performances of Others, upon y<sup>e</sup> same Subject.

These, I say, are What (with y<sup>e</sup> Freedome you force on mee) I give you as my Conceptions upon this Scheme. Wherein, as Over-weening as I may probably appeare in y<sup>e</sup> Points I thus propose yor tacking thereto; I perswade my selfe, I shall be forgiven as to y<sup>e</sup> Former (Musick I meane) by all that know how long & neare a Wittnesse I have heretofore had y<sup>e</sup> Honour to bee, of y<sup>e</sup> Effects of y<sup>e</sup> like Institution, upon that Noble & yet (I feare) unparallel'd Lord, y<sup>e</sup> Earle of Sandwich: both as to y<sup>e</sup> whole Cours of y<sup>e</sup> Sciences Mathematicall, under y<sup>e</sup> Direction of y<sup>e</sup> severall then most learned Professours, Dr Ward, Dr Pell, Sr Jonas Moore, & (as I remember) y<sup>e</sup> still Illustrious & my most Reverend Friend Dr Wallis; & more particularly, to that One Article of it which I am here advancing, of Musick; from y<sup>e</sup> then noe lesse celebrated Maisters therein, Dr Gibbons & Dr Child. Without y<sup>e</sup> Actuell Solace of which, more or lesse, I dare not undertake for his having pass'd One entire Day through all his different Scenes of Life, at Land & Sea, to y<sup>e</sup> very Houre, wherein through a Sea of Blood & Fire in the Service of his Prince & Country, hee exchang'd it for that of a State of Harmony, more unspeakable & full of Glory.

Nor is it Lesse I have to quote from y<sup>e</sup> Performances of y<sup>e</sup> same Noble Lord in support of y<sup>e</sup> Latter: as being myselfe Maister of Instances in great Variety, both for Delight & Vse, done by his owne hand; as well of Surveys & Descriptions relating to his private Estate & Buildings, with other publique Views, both at home & abroad, on Shore: as Draughts, Platts, & Carts of Coasts, Harbours, & Ports (our owne & forreigne), performed to his peculiar Honour, & lasting Benefit of his Country, dureing his Vacancys at Sea.

Whereto lett mee add another, though of a lower Quality, of this very Day's Growth, & relating to a Young Gentleman,* a Servant of your Owne: One neither wholly Αμαθη, nor I dare say you thinke him vulgarly furnish'd with other y<sup>e</sup> Ingredients of good Literature qualifying him for usefull as well as delightfull Travell, Who being still on his Tour, begun with y<sup>e</sup> Jubilee, does most sensibly lament to mee (as I doe, on his behalfe, to my Selfe) y<sup>e</sup> Disappointments & Displeasures hee daily suffers, from his Unpreparednesse (oweing to the Suddainesse of his Setting-forth) in this single Article of Drawing: as preventing him in y<sup>e</sup> Collection (hee tells mee) hee should otherwise have had y<sup>e</sup> Pleasure of bringing home with him, of Views most valuable, & such as are hitherto either wholly wanting among us, or lesse accurately performed, then for theyr Worth they ought to bee.

With which, I leave you to thanke yor Selfe for this Impertinence of Mine, & bidding you most respectfully Adieu, rest, &c.

FOL. 173.—THE SAME TO THE SAME.

Clapham: Saturd. Sept. 12, 1702.

Reverend Sr,—To y<sup>e</sup> trouble of my last, I here give you the additional one I then promised you; & 'tis to tell you, that though I have had y<sup>e</sup> surprising Demand enclosed from Sr Godfrey Kneller, of an opportunity of seeing y<sup>e</sup> Picture once more at his House, which I have therefore this morning hasten'd to him (though actually putt-up in its case) in order only to his overlooking & putting his last hand to it: Yet I have his assurance, that hee will see dispatch it this very day, that my Servant shall certainly have it, to putt on board the Waggon time enough on Monday Morning, soe as to bee at Oxford on Tuesday. And accordingly you will then bee attended by my Workeman, to whom for y<sup>e</sup> University's ease & my owne I have comitted y<sup>e</sup> Care of seeing it carefully fixed in its place, & in every thing adjusted, with a false Cover to bee made of its Case & fastened to y<sup>e</sup> Back of y<sup>e</sup> Picture, as it ought to bee, for y<sup>e</sup> Preserving it from y<sup>e</sup> Wall. For what more I may have to say, I shall (it being late) refer you to what you may please to expect further from mee on this Subject, by y<sup>e</sup> hand of my sayd Messenger, remayning, &c.

C. E. DOBLE.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

QUELLIEN, N. La Bretagne armoricaine. Paris: Maisonneuve. 3 fr.
ROUSSELOT, P. Pédagogie historique, d'après les principaux pédagogues, philosophes et moralistes. Paris: Delagrave. 2 fr. 25 c.

* J. Jackson.

HISTORY.

MONUMENTA Zollerana. 8. Bd. Ergänzungen u. Berichtign. zu Bd. I.—VII. 1085—1417. Berlin: Mooser. 25 M.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

BÖHRINGER, A. Kant's erkenntnis-theoretischer Idealismus. Leipzig: Fock. 1 M. 50 Pf.
BRUNNHOFER, H. Giordano Bruno's Lehre vom Kleinsten als die Quelle der prästabilierten Harmonie v. Leibnitz. Leipzig: Rautert. 1 M. 20 Pf.
DR GREGORIO, A. Monographie de la faune éocénique de l'Alabama, et surtout de celle de Claiborne de l'étage parisien. Turin: Loescher. 184 fr.
KELLER, F. C. Ornithographia rossica. 2. Bd. 3. Lfg. Leipzig: Voos. 4 M. 75 Pf.

PHILOLOGY.

BLUMER, J. Zum Geschlechtswandel der Lehn- u. Fremdwörter im Hochdeutschen. Leipzig: Fock. 1 M. 50 Pf.
PORTA linguarum orientalium. Pars XIII. Delectus veterum carminum arabicorum. Carmina selegit et ed. Th. Noeldeke. Berlin: Reuther. 7 M.

CORRESPONDENCE.

DISCOVERY OF GREEK TEXTS OF THE THIRD CENTURY B.C.

Queen's College, Oxford: Sept. 3, 1890.

Your readers will be glad to hear the following news.

Among the many curiosities lately brought from Egypt by that indefatigable excavator, Mr. Flinders Petrie, were sundry Greek papyri, which he very kindly brought down here and submitted to our examination. After a week's work, we are able to classify them as follows:

(a) Fragments of the Phaedo of Plato, very carefully written, and dating, like all the other documents, from early in the Ptolemaic era. They reach from 67 E to 69 and from 79 to 83 in the marginal paging. The text shows considerable variations from our best MSS.

(b) Fragments of the Andrope of Euripides, containing portions of the latter part of the play, not comprised in any of the extant fragments.

(γ) A will, and several official copies of wills, executed in the reign of Ptolemy Philadelphus, giving lists and descriptions of slaves.

(δ) Numerous private letters on various subjects, some few complete, the rest lacerated, but full of curious indications of life and manners.

(ε) A fragment of a speech or essay on the duties of comrades, illustrating them from the behaviour of Achilles to Patroclus. We have not yet been able to identify the author. The date of all the other documents being prior to 240 B.C., this work also is probably of the classical epoch.

We hope to publish the first two of these texts in the autumn, and the rest as soon as they have been properly sorted and studied.

The interest of this early collection of Greek MSS., not only to the scholar but to the palaeographer, is such that we have made this announcement at the earliest moment.

A. H. SAYCE.
J. P. MAHAFFY.

THE EXMOOR AND BALLAQUEENY INSCRIPTIONS.

Oxford: August 30, 1890.

Referring to my letter in last week's ACADEMY, I am sorry to say that, owing to an error in the printing of the name on the Winsford Hill stone, one A has been omitted. It should be CARATACI—that is, of course, with the conjoint character for AT expanded—not CARATCI.

Now that I am writing, I may as well revert to the Ballyqueeny inscription, and Mr. Whitley Stokes's letter on it in the ACADEMY of August 23. I adhere to my reading

III///// . . III.

but I cannot feel positive, like him, as to dreada being an impossible form. How does he know that it must be a stem in d? It seems to me that there is nothing to prevent a stem originally in t assuming the Old Irish form of dru, genitive druad. I do not recollect, for instance, ever seeing any later form of the Ogmie Dunacati written with a t or th. If he thinks the Gaulish form, which he gives as druis, genitive druidos, demonstrates that the Irish one was also a d stem, I cannot quite agree with him. It differs in vowel, according to his own admission; and how can we be certain about the final consonant of the stem, or at any rate so certain as categorically to pronounce the reading of the Ogam an "impossible form"? Then he suggests that "the error has arisen from the similarity in Ogmie script of druada and droua." That means, I suppose, that he who cut the Ogam should have made four notches instead of three for the vowels, and two scorings instead of three for the consonants following; and that his apparently careful spacing of the vowel notches was also wrong; that is to say, the workman having wrongly written o, and rightly written a after it, wrongly wrote a t next (instead of d) by way of compensation for having wrongly written a previous letter which is not the immediate neighbour of the t. That may be so, but it does not look very probable, not to mention that I do not exactly see why it should be assumed that ua is older than oa in the word in question. If the Ogam engraver has committed an error, that error consists, it seems to me, in his making t do duty for th, the antecedent of the th of manuscript Irish; but that kind of error is so common in Ogam inscriptions that some milder term would be more justly applicable to it. Lastly, suppose it granted that Mr. Stokes is right in regarding the word as a d stem, the amount of the engraver's error in point of sound would be expressed by the difference between the sound of t reduced to a spirant and d similarly treated; and this was possibly no greater than the difference between th in "thin" and th in "this," consonants which the ordinary orthography of English does not trouble itself to distinguish.

J. RHYS.

AN OBSCURE PASSAGE IN "THE PEARL."

London: September 1, 1890.

In "The Pearl" (Early English Alliterative Poems, ed. Morris, 1869) lines 689-692 appear in the MS., and in Dr. Morris's edition, as follows:

"Of þys ry3twys sa3 salamon playn
How kyntly oure con aquyle;
By wayes ful stre3t he con hym strayn,
And schewed hym þe renge of God a whyle."

I do not know whether it has hitherto been pointed out that the reference here is to the book of Wisdom, ch. x. verses 9, 10—

"But wisdom delivered from pain those that attended upon her. When the righteous [i.e., Jacob] fled from his brother's wrath, she guided him in right paths, shewed him the kingdom of God, and gave him knowledge of holy things."

The second line seems unintelligible as it stands. Dr. Morris glosses oure by "prayer"; but I know of no evidence for the existence of the word, and the rendering does not seem to yield any good sense. Unless some better suggestion can be offered, I would propose to read—

"How kyntyse onoure con aquyle—

i.e., "How wisdom obtained honour." The spelling kyntyse occurs in the Alliterative Poems, and the author uses quayntyse in the sense of "wisdom." Possibly oure might be a misspelling for ore, mercy, favour. This would suit very well so far as the sense is concerned, but ore is not elsewhere used by the author; and metrically onore seems better, as the final e was not sounded in the dialect of the poems. Perhaps in line 691 ho should be substituted for he.

HENRY BRADLEY.

DANTE'S "DE VULGARI ELOQUENTIA."

Stanhoe Grange, Norfolk: August 23, 1890.

In connexion with Dr. Moore's remarks (ACADEMY, August 23, pp. 144-5) on the above work, it is interesting to note that Dante's practice was occasionally at variance with the principles he laid down in the De Vulgari Eloquentia. After remarking that an author must carefully sift (cribrare) his words, he continues:

"sola vocabula nobilissima in cribro tuo residere curabis. In quorum numero, nec puerilia propter sui simplicitatem, ut Mamma et Babbo, Mate et Pate; nec muliebria propter sui mollietatem, ut dolciada et placcvole; nec silvestria, propter asperitatem, ut greggia, et caetera; nec urbana lubrica et reburra, ut femina et corpo, ullo modo poteris conlocare." (Lib. 2. Cap. vii. ed. Giuliani.)

Of the nine words here proscribed, five, viz. mamma, babbo, greggia, femina, and corpo, occur in the Divina Commedia, most of them frequently. In addition to these, Dante uses the words pappo and dindi, which are the "vocabula puerilia," respectively, for pane and dunari ("bread" and "money").

It should be observed, however, that, in the passage quoted, Dante is speaking more especially of those who write tragice, so that, perhaps, his inconsistency is more apparent than real; for he himself entitled his poem a comedy, the style of which he describes (Epist. Cuni Grandi de Scala § x. ed. Giuliani) as being "modest and lowly."

PAGET TOYNBEE.

SCIENCE.

DARMESTER'S MONOGRAPH ON THE AFGHANS.

Chants Populaires des Afghans. Recueillis par James Darmesteter. (Paris: Imprimerie Nationale.)

In his Letters on India Prof. Darmesteter has already recorded in a popular form the main impressions and conclusions gathered during a residence of some months on the Afghan frontier; and the texts now published for the first time may be regarded in part—so the author tells us—as furnishing pièces justificatives to his earlier essays. But the present volume is far from having only the relative significance of a commentary or a supplement, for in dealing exhaustively and minutely with the complicated problem of the Afghan language the author has raised a striking monument of genius and sagacity; and his solution, though it reverses the judgment of his chief predecessors in the same field, will probably rank among the settled acquisitions of science—nisi machinis validioribus propulsa in aeternum persistet inconcussa.

The author's first task is to determine and disengage the phonetic elements which have passed into the language from Persia on the one hand and India on the other. From both sources Afghan has naturally received a considerable Arabic admixture, so that on the whole the borrowed element is threefold—Persian, Hindustani, and Arabic. As a general rule the sounds common to Persian and Arabic are retained, while those peculiar to the latter either disappear or undergo modification; but the most important fact which results from this preliminary enquiry is that the so-called cerebrals are no genuine feature of the Afghan system:

"Ou a parfois fait intervenir, sans les étudier dans leurs origines, les cérébrales afghanes dans le problème de l'origine des cérébrales indiennes. Les cérébrales indiennes, si rares dans la vieille langue et qui se sont tellement développées dans la période moderne, sont-elles dues, comme le croyaient les premiers fondateurs de la grammaire comparée, à l'influence des idiomes dravidiens où la cérébrale abonde? Ou bien la cérébrale est-elle également connue dans les langues aryennes et est-elle un son aryen primitif? A l'appui de cette thèse on a fait valoir la présence très développée de la cérébrale en afghan. Sans entrer dans le fond du débat, je crois que l'afghan doit être mis hors de question et l'on peut dire, en règle générale, que tout mot afghan qui contient la cérébrale est un mot emprunté à l'Inde."

When thus reduced to its native simplicity, the consonant system of the Afghans is seen to be essentially identical with that of Persian, and essentially different from the Hindustani system—a fact which induces the author to start from the old Iranian rather than from Sanskrit in his inquiry into the origin of the sounds of modern Afghan. Having restored, therefore, with the help of Persian and Zend the phonetic system of old Iranian, he takes the sounds one by one, and examines their treatment at the Afghan stage both singly and in groups in a long list of words common to Afghan and old Iranian. We have not space to follow the process in detail, but a single instance will suffice to show the importance of its results for the student of Zend. M. Darmesteter thus comments upon the Avestic vazdvare, meaning "fat" or "fatness," the Afghan vázda:

"Vazdvare, traduit en pehlvi vazdvarih, ce qui est une simple transcription, paraphrasé nivaki 'le bien' (vazdvare aihesh vahishtahé, 'les biens du Paradis,' Vendidad IX. 166), est traduit par Neryosengh pivartâ (tanvô vazdvare 'la graisse, l'embonpoint du corps,' Yasna, XXXI. 21). L'afghan vient ici donner une confirmation inattendue à la tradition contre les traductions vagues de l'école étymologique. Les noms propres Vohuvazdah-Ashavazdah et Kerevazda (Garsivaz) sont des dénominations rentrant dans la famille de M. Legras et M. Lemaigre."

Of equal importance are the considerations which tend to show that the kh and g (a soft guttural), characteristic of Pukhtu or the dialect of the North, are a recent transformation of the sh and zh which are still preserved in Pushtu or the dialect of the South.

The conclusion, then, of the author's survey of the whole body of phonological evidence is decisive against the theory of Trumpp, who recognized in Afghan a dialect holding, as it were, an independent position between the Iranian and the Indian groups, but nearer to the latter than to the former:—

"Nous concluons que la phonétique et le lexique de l'afghan s'expliquent comme si l'afghan était dérivé du zend ou d'un dialecte très voisin du zend. L'afghan serait donc, pratiquement, au regard du zend ce que le persan est au regard du vieux perse: il ne nous manque que le pehlvi correspondant. Mais ce pehlvi est moins nécessaire, la corruption phonétique et, comme on verra, la corruption morphologique étant moins avancées en afghan qu'en persan. L'afghan nous offrirait donc pour le zend ce témoin moderne qu'on lui cherchait en vain et que l'on pouvait désespérer de jamais trouver, et les tribus sauvages de la passe de Kaibar, les fanatiques Musulmans des monts Sulaiman, auraient conservé sur les lèvres, mieux que les Parsis de Bombay, la parole des mages antiques et de Zoroastre."

The evidence of morphology, though less precise, tends in the same direction. It is true that in the matter of declension Afghan appears to resemble the Indian dialects more closely than Persian, having preserved distinctions both of theme and of gender, and two cases, direct and oblique; but these distinctions were also marked in Zend and old Persian, and on the other hand the differences between the Afghan and the Indian declension are real and profound, such as those exhibited in the formation of the genitive, and in the syntactical expression of relation by means of particles. In a similar way the resemblances between the Indian and the Afghan conjugation afford no real ground for disturbing the conclusion as to the origin of Afghan. For example, the fact that on both sides the past is expressed passively proves nothing, seeing that Pehlevi employs the same construction, which was also inherited—though subsequently obliterated—by Persian, while the striking resemblance between the Afghan past participle in alai and the Hindi form in il implies no historical connexion between Afghan and Prakrit, but points simply to the fact that a phonetic change regular in the former is also admitted sporadically by the latter.

In the second chapter the author sketches the history of the Afghans, that is to say, so far as it can be pieced together from the fragmentary notices which have passed here and there into the main currents of tradition, for, as a whole, the Afghans have no history.

"Les Afghans n'ont pas d'histoire, parce que l'anarchie n'en a pas. Pour qu'il y ait histoire, il faut un centre national, et les Afghans n'en ont jamais eu: à présent même, après la fondation de deux empires afghans, celui des Ghaljais et celui des Durrânis, il n'en ont pas encore. Les Afghans de l'Inde et ceux du Yaghistan n'ont pas les yeux fixés vers Kâbul et l'Emir comme vers leur centre national. Au milieu du XV<sup>e</sup> siècle, quand une famille afghane, celle des Lodis, donna une dynastie à l'Inde, la masse des tribus continua à végéter dans ses montagnes. . . . L'histoire nous donne bien de temps en temps des données sur l'histoire de telle tribu ou de tel aventurier: elle ne donne qu'un mot en passant sur le gros des tribus."

The historical traces left by the Afghans in one respect all lead to the same conclusion, namely, that as they now are so they have ever been—"des mercenaires, des pillards, des capitaines d'aventures et au besoin même des gendarmes." For the evidence brought together from varied sources the reader must be referred to the book itself. We would only, in passing, call special attention—as to a happy hunting-ground for the Biblical paradoxer—to the legendary accounts of the descent of the Afghans, on the one hand from certain nobles of Pharaoh, who, after escaping the overthrow at the Red Sea, migrated to India, and established themselves in the mountains of Sulaimân, or, on the other, from a grandson of Saul, King of Israel. According to the latter legend, which will be seen to bring Afghan history into still closer connexion with "revelation," Solomon's self would once have occupied the rocky brow of the Afghan Olympus.

It is at the outset unlikely that the references, if any, to the Afghans on the part of the classical writers would be either clear or copious. "Ils avaient trop peu d'importance politique : la grande histoire se passait dans la plaine et dans les villes, dans la basse vallée de l'Etymandros." M. Darmesteter admits the possibility that the so-called highland Indians (rois d'opéïous 'Ινδοὺς καλουμένους), whom Arrian connects with the Arachosians as forming part of the host of Darius at the battle of Arbela, were Afghans; or rather the possibility that they came from the quarter now occupied by the Afghans:—

"Mais si même les montagnards indiens du satrape d'Arachosie sont les montagnards d'Arachosie, c'est à dire du pays habité aujourd'hui par les Afghans, cette identification purement locale reste assez sterile et ne nous apprend rien sur la continuité d'un élément Afghan, d'Alexandre à nos jours. Il est assez naturel que les montagnes afghanes fussent habitées par des montagnards des le temps d'Alexandre: cela ne prouve pas que les Afghans purs soient les descendants de ces montagnards. Il nous faudrait au moins une continuité dans les noms ethniques."

Now it is precisely such a bond of continuity that appears to be furnished, as Lassen long ago suspected, by the Πάκτυες of Herodotus, who would accordingly represent the modern Pakhtûn. Their geographical position, as it may be inferred from the passage of Herodotus (iv. 44), is all in favour of the hypothesis; the difficulty lies in the etymological equation, for we have seen that the form Pakhtûn, Pukhtûn, is not primitive, but a modification of the earlier and still surviving Pashtûn, Pushtûn. Prof. Darmesteter solves the equation by substituting for the root of Pashtûn itself the form parshiti or **parshitu*, to which it must be referred in the earlier language, if the popular explanation of the name as meaning "highlanders" be accepted as the true one.

"Dans cette explication, Pashtûn serait dérivé de pusht—par suffixe ân (anciennement âna), et signifierait 'montagnard, Highlander,' par opposition aux gens de la plaine, aux Tâjik du temps. Mais le mot devenu pusht en persan et en afghan est dans la vieille langue parshiti ou **parshitu*. Si donc les Pactyes sont nos Afghans, il faut admettre, ce qui n'est pas inadmissible, que Πάκτυες est une transcription imparfaite pour Παρστυες ou plutôt Παρσθτυες et que le kt des Grecs représente le son exotique rsh."

And in this way we are prepared to recognise with little difficulty the reappearance of the Afghans in the Παρστυῆται (? for Παρστυῆται) described by Ptolemy as the most northern of the four tribes inhabiting Arachosia.

With regard to the literature, a broad distinction in point of character must be drawn between what is written and what is preserved orally. The former kind, which, beginning with the heretic communist Bâyezid Ançari in the sixteenth century, may be said to have its roots in the rich soil of theological controversy, is eminently learned and artificial; but, moulded and penetrated by Persian influence, its value as an expression of the manners and genius of the Afghans is comparatively slight. On the other hand—

"La littérature véritable des Afghans, la seule que le peuple comprenne et apprécie et qui, à son tour, donne de lui une peinture réelle, c'est la littérature orale, et pour en prendre la forme la plus saisissable, parce qu'elle est fixée par le rythme, ce sont ses chansons."

